Yet while we thus prize the Bible, we cannot accept the view that God so wrought in the production of the Book as to keep out all human error. Marks of divine inspiration there are, but there are also traces of human ignorance and error. God and man wrought together in producing the Bible and God did not in all cases, if indeed in any case, so control man as to insure a perfect work. Human imperfection manifests itself in the Bible, cropping out here and there in various forms. Sometimes there is needless repetition. Read the first chapter of numbers. You will find there a long descriptive clause occurring twelve times when one time would have been enough. Then read the second chapter of the same book, and you will find twelve verses occupied with giving information that was given in the first chapter. While there are many redundancies of expression instances could perhaps be given of deficiencies, leaving in the reader's mind a desire for information which a perfect human writer would have given. Then there have been discovered by close readers inconsistent statements which force the conclusion that there is error in at least some of them. Compare the 14th verse of the first chapter of Numbers with the 14th verse of the second chapter of the same book and see what you see. Compare 2 Kings 8: 25 with 2 Kings 9: 29 and see what you see. Compare Solomon's prayer at the dedication of the temple as given in 1 Kings, 8th chapter, with the same prayer given in 2 Chron., sixth chapter, and see how the concluding portions compare. Compare the 19th chapter of 2 Kings with the 37th chapter of Isaiah and see what you think as to the authorship of the chapter.

The Bible is valuable not because it is inspired but because of the valuable truth it contains. An inspired book might conceivably be false or might contain only unimportant truth. The Bible contains unspeakably important truth, vital truth; this gives is so great a value that the slight admixture of incidental error cannot materially detract from its value. The clay of human error does not damage the golden nugget of divine truth, if we have learned to distinguish the one from the other. But if we take all parts of the Bible as equally the word of God, we will have to choose between the ethics of the Old Testament and the ethics of the new; between the psalms of hate in the book of Psalms and the the Sermon on the Mount.

We think it not only a safe rule but also a necessary rule in reading after Bible authors as well as others to obey Saint John's directions: "Believe not every spirit; but try the spirits whether they are of God." Admission of a man or his writings to a high place in the esteem of men is not a sure guarantee of his freedom from error.

Mere errors in names and dates found in the Bible should awaken question as to the correctness of the traditional theory of inspiration, though these errors are unimportant in themselves.

We agree with Brother Burgess that mere clerical errors in copying are not in the aggregate numerous enough or important enough to say much about. But we think it very important that the ethical teaching accepted be purely Christian.

A LITTLE REJOINDER.

From what has been presented, we may clearly infer that all that has been said by certain divines concerning some parts of Scripture being inspired and other parts not inspired is not only without authority but is manifestly repugnant to the Scripture view of the subject. The claim of inspiration made by the sacred writers refers, not to one portion of Scripture alone, but to every portion alike.

The Bible doctrine is, that not a part of Scripture, but "all Scripture, is given by inspiration of God." 2 Tim. 3: 16. If the Old Testament was inspired, so was the New, and vice versa. If the prophetical part was inspired, so was the historical, the didactic, and all the rest. There is no restriction, limitation, or exception, in the words of Christ: "And the Scripture cannot be broken" (John 10: 35); nor in the words of Peter: "Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost'' (2 Pet. 2:21); nor in these words of St. Paul: "Not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth but which the Holy Ghost teacheth'' (1 Cor. 2:13); nor in these words of Jesus: "He will guide you into all truth'' (John 16:13). This dividing of the sacred work in portions inspired, and portions not inspired, finds no word, or even hint, to favor it in all the Bible. Nor can it find any support in the primitive and purer ages of the church. It is an invention of later times —it is a brood that was hatched amid the humid atmosphere of the dark ages, and has been new baptized in the many waters of modern rationalistic philosophy.

I have read part of a number of books on the inspiration of the Bible; as a rule good men do not contradict themselves, and I have not seen "erroneous statements concerning unimportant matters,'' in any one of them. I am sure that the dividing of the Bible and the headlines of the chapters are not inspired, some things that Paul said seem not to be, but we have from his own pen, "If any man be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things I write unto you are the commandments of God.'' 1 Cor. 14:37.

I am sure that there are some differences of opinion in regard to the methods of inspiration, but we need not discuss that here.

It may be that I am "one that has not studied the Bible'' and have not reached those "logical processes.'' However, I am sure that I have with me quite a devout host of worthies, such as Adam Clarke, LL.D., F.A.S.; Thomas N. Ralston, D.D.; Richard Watson; T. H. Lewis, D.D.; Buck in his "Theological Dictionary;'' last and best of all I put your own witness on the stand, Jesus. What about the Bible? "O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken.''

I feel like offering this prayer, "Blessed Lord, who hast caused all Holy Scriptures to be written for our learning; grant that we may in such wise hear them, read, mark, learn and inwardly digest them, that, by patience and comfort of thy Holy Word, we may embrace, and ever hold fast, the blessed hope of everlasting life, which thou hast given us in our Savior Jesus Christ.'' Amen.

I have been reading for some time about this change coming over the churches through these "advance thinkers,'' such, I guess, as Dr. Percy Stickney Grant, who, I guess, has reasoned for himself; at least, he does not believe the whole Bible, not even the creed of his church.

I may overdraw this; but when I hear men say they don't believe the Bible, I at once think of Hume, Paine, Voltaire, R. G. Wells, and this great host that say that Moses is a lie and that "Darwin in his theory of evolution'' is true. Yours sincerely,

H. S. B. Thompson.

TEAM WORK.

* * *

By Rev. J. S. Williams.

I believe we all agree that team work is indispensable. I beg to suggest a threefold plan: 1—United prayer, 2—Every one winning another to Jesus, at least in a year, 3—Every one giving what he can to the church, a tenth if possible.

United Prayer.

Many promises and incidents in the Bible, and many incidents in history and in our own lives encourage us to believe, in the plain and old-fashion way, that our Father will do wonderful things for us and through us, when we ask Him. Let's ask Him together. Each day at twelve o'clock, let's join our prayers for blessing—these interests especially:

1—That Europe be set right; that the smaller nations and the weaker races be protected; that a just peace be established; that the causes of war be rooted out; that America may see her duty and do it.

2—That we enforce the laws in our own land; that the drink evil and the drug evil be wiped out.

3—That a revival spread through our own church and all churches; that our church be an army of soul winners, and a school of training for Christian service; that all our undertakings may succeed gloriously, especially our new College.

Every One Winning Another to Jesus.

We do now agree, each one, to try to win another to Jesus, don't we! To this end we will pray for the conversion of individuals and families—those whom we are trying to save, and whom others are endeavoring to save. If two hundred of us would each win a soul every year for ten years, and each soul won would do like wise, we would have 204,800. If five hundred of us would do that, we would in ten years have 612,000. If one thousand of us would do that, the result would be 1,224,000 souls won to Jesus in ten years. Ten thousand of us would win 12,240,000 in ten years. Twenty thousand of us would win 24,480,000 in ten years. One hundred thousand of us would win 122,400,000 in ten years. Two hundred thousand of us would win 244,200,000 in ten years. This is what our church is for. This shows what we are a denomination can do and ought to do. This campaign might be worked out in months instead of years. The above results might be wrought in ten months. Winning a soul could be a daily affair rather than an annual event.

Every One Giving What He Can.

We will also pray together, beginning now, that adequate funds may be had immediately for all our departments. We especially pray for the sum needed for College building now. The thousands of dollars needed might be divided as follows:

Two might give $5,000 each. Five might give $2,000 each. Ten might give $1,000 each. Twenty might give $500 each. Forty might give $250 each. One hundred might give $100 each. Two hundred might give $50 each. Five hundred might give $20 each. One thousand might give $10 each. Five thousand might give $2 each.

In other words, if every one would give what he could, the money would be in hand. And we all pray that it may be in hand. The ten groups above suggested might each give $10,000. These ten groups total 6,877 individuals, who might give a total of $100,000 at once, or in the near future. Doubling this estimate gives us $200,000. Multiplying it by three gives us $300,000, given by 20,631 individuals. Jesus said, (Matthew 18:19) If two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven. Suppose one thousand or ten thousand of us agree, will it not be done for us and through us?

I am your friend, J. S. Williams.

"PETER'S PENCE.'' COLLEGE PENCE.

O! that College! We must have it, by the voluntary contributions of all our members. I do not say gifts. One does not give money when he buys a farm with it or a jewel. He merely exchanges a value for a greater value.

To get the college, in working condition, worth six hundred thousand dollars, we must have $150,000 more. That is six dollars from each of our members. That is five cents per member for 120 Sundays or 10 cents per member for 60 Sundays or $6 each cash. No one will deny our ability to do that. And certainly there are more of us who will give double that than there are who cannot be found or dead or who will give nothing. The Catholic Church built St. Peter's at Rome, one of the finest edifices on earth, by penny contributions of its adherents, called Peter's Pence. In the same way it supports the costliest religious establishment in existence. And its people love the church and obey its leaders because they perpetually sacrifice for it.

If our people, our church, do not sacrifice these 10 cents per Sunday for 60 Sundays it will be because our priests, our preachers, do not bring it to their attention, do not themselves feel the need of the college; do not exhort the people to make the sacrifice to buy the blessing that the college would be. Ministers, let us do the thing. This $6 per head can be raised. It must be raised. It will change our church work from a hard pull up hill to a smooth draw on a level. Our people without a college will drift away from us. With it, we will grow and prosper as a church. Ministers, undertake the task of raising the $6 per capita. Get some person in each church to do it and each of you help him. It is the work of God. The best thing you can do.

Meeting of Officers of Missionary Societies.

The meeting of the officers of the Woman's Foreign Foreign Missionary society was held at the home of Miss Velna McCulloch, February 14, at 1:30 P. M. The reports from the various officers were very encouraging. This meeting was followed by the meeting of the officers of the Woman's Home Missionary Society.

The following officers were present at these meetings: Mrs. Geo. R. Brown, Mrs. W. C. Hammer, Dr. Harris Glascock, Mrs. S. W. Taylor, Mrs. Minnie P. Harrell, Mrs. J. W. Boyles, Mrs. H. C. Nicholson, Mrs. J. M. Stone, Mrs. H. A. Garrett, Mrs. C. W. Bates, Misses Ila Stafford, Velna and Pearl McCulloch.

Plans were made for the annual meeting, which will be held at West End church, Greensboro, April 17, 18, 19. The program committee are: Mrs. G. R. Brown, Mrs. W. C. Hammer, Mrs. J. M. Millikan, Rev. N. M. Harrison, Misses Esther Ross and Pearl McCulloch. Pearl McCulloch, Reporter.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

Since last writing I have visited Reidsville, Draper, Burlington and Graham. One of the most faithful and best working little bands to be found anywhere is in the Methodist Protestant church in Reidsville. They have done good work from the very beginning of that young church. Rev. J. D. Williams, the pastor, has the love and confidence of all his members. They speak of him as a great preacher, and they are co-operating with him in every way. Plans are already laid for a revival, to begin early in April, the pastor to do the preaching. They expect to pay 100 per cent on all budgets.

At Draper I was surprised to find our church so far away from the center of things, but I was delighted to see the people fill the church to its capacity for the preaching service. It reminded me of a statement made by Emerson,—"If a man preaches a better sermon or makes a better mouse-trap than his neighbor the community will make a beaten path to his door." Brother Morgan is popular with his people and is doing a great work in that community. They hope to pay out on budgets.

Burlington is one of our most progressive churches. One is always delighted with a visit to Burlington. The activities of the church there remind one of a bee hive. They are indeed Busy Bees. Brother Taylor is leading them on to greater things as the months slip by. They are now looking toward the erection of a new church in West Burlington, a lot having already been purchased for the purpose. There is never any question about Burlington paying the budgets. They have the habit.

It was delighted with the progress that has been made at Grham since I had the privilege of visiting that church some time ago. They have a good working plant, and though the evening was one of the coldest of the winter a splendid audience was present for the service. Pastor and people seem hopeful and the work is going fine. They expect to pay all budgets.

Stewardship Month.

When you read this February will be almost gone. I am hoping that all of us have at least looked into the Word to find out God's will concerning the use of our money. I also trust that every church has made some effort to raise a part of the annual conference budget during February. Please send whatever amount you have to Rev. S. W. Taylor, Burlington, N. C. He is in need of funds to meet current bills.

Dr. T. H. Lewis.

We have very little stewardship literature of our own, but I am glad to note that Dr. T. H. Lewis, President of the General Conference, has prepared a message on this great theme. This message has been put into pamphlet form and is being offered at 2c per copy. Pastors should order them in lots of 50 or 100 or more from Mr. H. C. Staley, 1025 Calvert Building, Baltimore, Md., and distribute them among your people. It is a splendid message, and it will pay you over and over again to put it into the hands of your people.

Easter Day.

When you read this Easter Sunday will only be about five weeks off. Every local church should plan for great things on Easter Sunday. The Board of Home Missions has prepared a special program for all our churches and Sunday schools on that day. Order at once the supplies you need from Dr. C. H. Beck, 613 West Diamond St., N. S., Pittsburgh, Pa., and get ready for a great day in the Lord's service. Easter is home mission day in the Methodist Protestant Churct, and surely every local church in the North Carolina Conference will take an offering on Easter Day for home missions. Get ready to make a splendid offering to help others.

All our Sunday schools should also plan for Decision Day on or near Easter Sunday. See 1923 Hand Book, page 34. Order copies of the Hand Book for your workers from Rev. E. A. Sexsmith, 1620 W. North Avenue, Baltimore, Md.

Our College.

Every Methodist Protestant in the North Carolina Conference should say "Our College" over and over until he realizes that it is truly "Our College," and until he is willing to make a financial sacrifice to see it pushed on to completion.

The time has come to quit saying, "They ought to do so and so." It is our business to do it. The business of every one of us.

The time has also come to quit saying, "Well, whenever they do something the people will respond." That something is being done now in the erection of one of the best college buildings in the State. What we ought to do now is to put two dormitories there just as quickly as possible that will be in keeping with Roberts Hall. Let no one hold back any longer. Our actual cash is needed right now to push the work.

Dr. R. M. Andrews is leading well. It is Our College and we need to fall in line.

District Rallies.

According to direction of the Annual Conference, we are planning to begin at once a series of district rallies.. Rev. Lawrence C. Little and I will be together, insofar as possible, in these rallies. Our first one will be held in or near Albemarle Saturday and Sunday, February 24 and 25, the second one with the Yarborough and Anderson people March 3 and 4, and the third one perhaps at Whitakers for the first district March 10 and 11. Will make further announcements next week.

Yours in the Master's service,

A. G. Dixon.

February 20, 1923.

Zoar, Mecklenburg Circuit.—Pastor Carson preached two fine, inspiring sermons last Sunday, one in the morning and one in the afternoon.

We were glad to have Misses Ethel Furr, R. A. Drye, and Myrtle Hargette and Mr. Jesse Hartis, with us from Stallings Sunday.

Our pastor announced Sunday that he was going to begin a week's meeting at Zoar the third Sunday in next month. So let us pray, dear readers, that there may be much lasting good done during these few days of meeting.

Graham Church.—The attendance at Sunday school yesterday was good considering the cold weather, and sickness in the community. The attendance at the preaching service was very good, and collections good. Three of the Sunday school classes will meet Wednesday night.

We had our president, Rev. A. G. Dixon, with us for the evening service. He made a very impressive talk to the Christian Endeavor society, which was highly appreciated, and we feel that it will do much good. He also preached a very impressive sermon to a good-sized congregation, which was appreciated. The choir did some good singing.

On last Wednesday night the good people of Graham church decided to spring a valentine surprise on the pastor and his family, so they did and a surprise it was, as we had not got even a hint of such a thing. I believe the people of Graham can keep a secret. About 7:30 we heard the sound of many feet on the sidewalk, some laughing and talking; soon they were filling the hall and dining room. Well, it was a pounding, not a fist and skull, neither a hot-air pounding like we sometimes get, but it was one of these old-time Methodist poundings, of just the things a preacher likes best. We will not undertake to call the names of those present, as there were so many, neither the articles, as they were so numerous, but our table was filled with good things, and many things placed around on the floor. We found that we had nearly a barrel of bour, 47 pounds sugar, syrup, can goods, potatoes, meal, coffee, cereals, and many other things. The next morning we found a 48-pound sack of flour on our back porch.

We tried to seat the crowd in the parlor, but could not for the multitude; some were standing in the room and some in the hall. We had a song, after which Brother Amick made a brief talk, expressing their appreciation of the service that their pastor had rendered. Then we had a piece read by Miss Eunice Rich, which was very appropriate. The pastor tried and tried and tried, to get out a few words of appreciation, but we never could command words to fully express our appreciation. Our class leader, Brother Suits, spoke in a very impressive way of the work done, and the prospect of the future. Then our faithful Sunday school superintendent spoke of their high appreciation of the sermons, and work done by the pastor, and encouraged all present to give full and perfect co-operation. This is what it takes to build up a church. We had another song and a prayer by C. P. Holt. Many said it semed like a real prayer meeting. We want to thank each and every one that was here and also those who sent things. We feel like we cannot repay them unless it is by giving them better service, and by the Lord's help we expect to do this. We are looking forward to a good year this year.

C. L. Spencer, Pastor.

SOME RESULTS OF THE JOINT MEETING.

The meeting was called by the writer that we might get a concensus of opinion as to what our aim should be. We were being often asked if the college would open this fall; what courses it would offer; what accommodations there would be for the student body, etc., etc. I could not answer these. I therefore asked the members of the board of trustees, the members of the board of education and a number of other friends of the college to attend a meeting where these questions would be discussed frankly.

It was also the purpose of the writer to have a light lunch served and to have a number of speeches by which college sentiment might be accentuated and vitalized. Both these objects were secured. While weather conditions kept away a great number of people who had signified their intention of being present. we had a goodly number, and we decided that we would not try to open the college before 1924; that we would finish up the canvass, securing subscriptions sufficient to meet the conditions of the Wills gift, and that we would build two dormitories between now and the fall of 1924.

In order that these objectives may be obtained we are planning to put on a campaign within a few weeks to carry out this request and are asking of every loyal friend of Christian education to rally to our support at once and to stay with us unto the end. It is impossible for any one person to do this alone; he must have the co-operation of our people. But if there was a person who could secure this amount of money without the earnest assistance of our leaders, it would do the church but little good to have such an institution. In other words, if the college should be handed our church on a "silver waiter," the church would not support it after it was given to it. We must build it in order to be benefited by it when it is built.

We expect to have a fuller detailed description of our plan for putting on the canvass in the Herald next week. We bespeak for the canvass the cordial support of all. We believe it will be well for every church to with hold every proposed plan for local improvement until this measure is secured. There is nothing of more vital importance before our church in North Carolina. Its success means so much that we cannot afford to delay it by any deed or misdeed of ours.

The following is the program of speeches:

"The Dream That Came True," Rev. J. F. McCulloch.
"Christian Character Our Main Asset," Mr. J. Norman Wills.
"The Denominational College," Rev. P. S. Kennett.
"A Privilege and a Duty," Mr. T. T. Hicks.

The following responded to the toast, "Our College:" Dr. Dixon, Prof. J. H. Allen, Mrs. J. S. Williams, Rev. J. E. Pritchard, and Rev. N. G. Bethea.

There were men there from as far away as Greenville, S. C., Whitakers, Pleasant Hill, Charlotte, etc., so you may know there is some interest in the college on the outlying charges in the district.

Friendship, Stanly Circuit.—Despite the terribly cold weather we actually had a good crowd at church today. We hope when spring comes and the folks that are sick get well, our attendance will be better.

Death visited a home in our community. The parents and relatives have our deepest heart sympathy.

Rev. A. Ridge delivered an excellent sermon today. I trust that these rich and wonderful sermons will touch and soften the heart of the sinner, that it will cause them to live a better and more consecrated life. for we know not the day nor the hour in which the son of man cometh, but be prepared and ready to meet God.

Death of a Darling Babe.

Death visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. V. Hatley and took their sweet baby girl, about three years old. Letha was a darling girl and loved everybody, it seemed like her voice was like the sound of a musical bell, her face had the expression of a beautiful flower, which is love's truest language. On the fifth of February at eight o'clock in the morning she crossed from a dark river to a country that is free. Her sweet voice is missed, as she went about the home singing, "I want to see Jesus, don't you?" and "I'll be satisfied." But she has only paid the debt that we all owe. One great scholar has said, "God moves in a mysterious way, His wonders to perform."

Vina Harwood.

Pensacola Church, Democrat Circuit.—We have just closed a ten days' meeting at the Pensacola church with Brother B. M. Williams as pulpit help. It would be a waste of time to say that he did good preaching, as everybody that knows him knows that he always does that. Brother Williams made a deep impression upon the people, not only the Methodist Protestants, but Baptists as well. I am sure I can voice the sentiment of the entire town of Pensacola and say to Brother Williams, Come again.

The meeting was a success; while we did not have a great number of conversions, there were about 15 children that came forward and accepted Christ.. Jesus said, Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven. I think we ought to impress upon the minds and hearts of the children to give their hearts and lives to Christ and the church while they are young. May the Lord bless these children and make them a bright and shining light in the world for good.

We received one member into the fellowship of the church, the church was greatly revived and we are expecting something worth while to be accomplished this year.

We begin our revival this afternoon at Democrat; we are expecting Brother L. W. Gerringer from our Asheville church and also Brother Wesley Sprinkle of the Baptist church, Asheville, to be with us. Pray for us.

Yours in His name. L. S. Helms,
Pastor.

Ten Days With Brother Helms and His Pensacola People.—It was the writer's privilege to spend 10 days in special meeting at Pensacola. He preached 16 times during this time. The people seemed to appreciate my efforts. We did not see the visible results we had hoped for; but hope some good was accomplished. About 20 children decided for Christ, some were reclaimed and the church seemed to be revived.

It was a source of pleasure to be associated with Brother Helms.

We wish to especially thank the following for their kindness while among them: J. U. Beaty, Jake Boling and family, W. H. Arrowood and wife, Mr .and Mrs. Dolin and others.

The people of other denominations showed kindness by their presence and co-operation. Especially we would like to mention Prof. Fox and his corps of teachers. It was a pleasure to speak to the students each day.

Brother Helms seems to be delighted with his work. His people seem to be pleased with him. He is a hard worker. If this writer is not fooled Democrat charge will be heard from later. May God bless pastor and people.

B. M. Williams.

THE KINGDOM—ITS WORKERS.

Have you not heard it said by those opposed to foreign missions, "If God wants workers in heathen lands He will send them," intimating it will be by some sort of compulsion which relieves all others, not so impelled, free from responsibilities?

The fact is, God does call and send workers, as multitudes who have labored and are now laboring in many lands prove, but God calls all His followers to share in the great work, because without the help of all the conquest of the world cannot be made.

The gospel's "Go" does not mean "Stay." "Preach the gospel to every creature" does not restrict us to our own country, where all can hear the gospel, while two-thirds of the race are without it.

The burden of proof is on every Christian to show his or her right to stay at home, if not providentially hindered from going abroad at the call of the church.

How can we claim, "Lo, I am with you alway," if we do not, as able, obey Christ's command, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations," because the "Lo" is conditioned upon our compliance with the "Go."

To carry out the thought of the opposers of foreign missions is to make God responsible for the conditions existing in the heathen world today, and that more workers have not gone there with the gospel's uplifting agencies, because God did not send because He did not want them there.

Such a conclusion is utterly untenable in the light of facts. Nothing is clearer than that God has evinced His purpose and has done His part, for Christ offered Himself a sacrifice to sin and rose again for our justification.

Our part, however, has not been done. The church has been slow, very slow to respond to God's call, coming from the great needs of heathen people, and has failed to a great extent in the discharge of its high duties.

"Repentance and remission of sins" has not been preached "unto all nations."

None can say, We did not respond, either by going or by helping to support those who went, because God did not send us, for all through the centuries God had commanded, "Go," "Go," and that certainly means help, help the work of the kingdom.

"Ye shall be my witnesses" . . . "unto the uttermost part of the earth." That surely includes every disciple of Jesus Christ, and that alone limits our sphere of Christian service in the world.

The fact is, a local church is simply a missionary society, and every member of that church, that society, by solemn obligation, expressed in his or her church vows, must support all the work of his or her church, and foreign missions, preaching the gospel to the heathen, is the chief part of the work assigned to it, not by any human authority but by God Himself as revealed in His word and the operations of His church from the beginning.

What is needed today throughout the church is the duplication of the spirit, the devotion and the actions of God's people in olden times, of whom the Word says, "The people offered themselves willingly"—"Then the people rejoiced, for that they offered willingly, because with perfect heart they offered willingly to the Lord."

One has well said of Gideon and his men, "Those who were so eager that they would not stoop down on their knees to drink," so determined and anxious were they to obey.

We do most for ourselves and for others when we obey Christ's command for the extension of His kingdom over the earth.

THE STEWARDSHIP CAMPAIGN.

By Dr. Crates S. Johnson, Forward Movement Secretary.

The observance of February as Stewardship Month is an inheritance from the Interchurch World Movement and has been adopted by most of the denominations, some changing the time from February to a more convenient season. We Methodist Protestants have adhered to February, although many pastors will devote March to the stewardship campaign this year. The time is of secondary importance; the main thing is to set aside a definite time for the teaching of Christian stewardship.

As a part of the forward movement program this department offers its services to all pastors and churches who will observe this period of stewardship presentation. A beautiful poster, "The Earth Is the Lord's," has been sent to all pastors. If any pastor did not receive a copy for each of his churches, please advise this office, and copies wil be sent as needed. Several pastors have commented upon the beauty and effectiveness of this poster.

Many Churches to Hold Stewardship Campaign.

Many pastors are accepting the offer of the Forward Movement secretary made in these columns recently, and we are sending such literature as we have and such suggestions as we believe will be helpful. We are sending to all who are interested enough to write, such publications as, Cushman's "The New Christian;" McConaughy's "Money, the Acid Test;" "Giving God a Square Deal," Drake; "Thanksgiving Ann," by Kate Hamilton; "The Jarring of Jacob Shapleigh," by Calkins; "The Stewardship of Money," by F. B. Meyer; "Stewardship and Church Efficiency," by C. E. Guthrie; "The Church Treasurer Who Got Mad," by A. C. Peterson; "The New Emphasis," by H. F. Rall, and other like publications. We offer suggestions regarding study classes, young people's meetings, etc. We have acquainted the brethren with the special arrangement made with the Layman Co. of Chicago, by which it is possible for pastors to obtain their tithing literature at 75 per cent discount, if ordered through this office. We invite correspondence and will go the limit to help any pastor who will fall in line with this great progressive movement that is gaining in every quarter.

Stewardship Reading Contests.

Rev. E. T. Kirkley, Delta, Pa., is putting on a Stewardship Reading Contest. This is a splendid plan. Many churches have had fine results. One enrolled 80 tithers. Another had its spiritual tone raised. "The contest put stewardship on the map," writes another. Pastors or societies may arrange their own contests and credit points. Here is a great vehicle of instruction and conviction with popular features to make it attractive to young and old. A descriptive leaflet telling all you will want to know about the plan will be sent on application.

Pastors Announce Plans.

Rev. J. L. Nichols, Westminster, Maryland, says: "Glad to get the poster, 'The Earth Is the Lord's'." Have been teaching stewardship and tithing for years and enjoy it. Have had some rich experiences along this line. The church bulletin announces these themes anent the stewardship period: The Lord's Share, The Lord's Steward, The Profit and Loss.

Rev. J. A. Wade, Magnolia, Ark., is presenting stewardship under four sermon themes: The Stewardship of Life, Making and Spending Money, Saving and Giving, Rendering an Account of Our Stewardship.

Rev. J. R. Kesterson, Ellsworth, Ill., will preach four special sermons on phases of stewardship the last half of February and the first of March.

Rev. W. L. Heitz, Liberty Center, Ind., will make stewardship the subject of prayer-meeting discussions at both of his churches.

Other pastors, who have advised of their plans for the stewardship period are: Geo. E. Smith, Moriches, L. I., N. Y.; R. I. Farmer, Steubenville, Ohio; T. M. Gladden, New Brighton, Pa.; B. M. Williams, Weaverville, N. C.; O. B. Roberts, Fowlerton, Ind.; T. W. Colhouer, Uniontown, Pa.; J. F. Bryan, Philadelphia, Pa.; Otis Jones, Forest, Ind.; J. W. Rice, Newark, Ohio; A. W. Ewell, Laurel, Dela.; T. L. Karrison, Kansas City, Kans.; H. S. Willis, Otsego, O.; Wm. L. Hoffman, Seaforrd, Dela.; I. M. Page, Empire, O.; C. F. Stroup, Yale, Mich.; L. C. Momberg, Newcomerstown, O.; E. Lester Ballard, Cumberland, Md.; R. L. Hethcox, Creswell, N. C.; L. W. Gerringer, Asheville, N. C.; H. L. Powell, Mebane, N. C.; E. W. Simms, Worton, Md.

We would be glad to hear from hundreds of others who will unite to make this a signal year in stewardship growth. Enroll all who will tithe or set aside a definite proportion of their income for the Lord's work.

NOTE BOOK.

The first services were held in the new chapel at Mt. Lookout, Cincinnati, Ohio, on Sunday, February 11. This is our new church in Cincinnati, and these services were the first held by the new congregation as a separate and independent church. Previous to this time a part of the membership had met with the Hyde Park church. This, however, was too far away to get anything like a full attendance.. At this first formal service, there were 76 in Sunday school, 56 in the morning preaching service, 50 in the evening service. The offering in the Sabbath school was $10; for current expenses $65; and for building fund, $100. This church is sure to outgrow its meeting place in the very near future, and the question of beginning the permanent church is already demanding consideration. Rev. T. Leroy Hooper, the pastor, has made a fine impression upon the congregation and community, the membership is enthusiastic and determined, there is a large community in which ours is the only church, and we see no reason why this church shall not rapidly become a strong and influential agency for good.

FOR A BETTER AMERICA.

This is the ''annual thank-offering'' period for the Board of Home Missions in the Methodist Protestant Church. At this period the Board of Home Missions prepares a special Easter Program to be used by the Sunday schools throughout the church exalting the fact of the resurrection of our Lord, and calling especial attention to that part of the Great Commission referring to the work in the homeland. At this time our Sunday schools for many years made a ''free-will'' offering for the support of the work of the Board of Home Missions, sending the funds so secured direct to the office of the Board, no reference being made to it in connection with the report on account of the assessment for the General Conference budget, and no credit on budget being either asked or expected.

The Easter Service is now being used as an opportunity of securing a substantial credit on the budget, and the ''annual thank-offering'' for the Board of Home Missions from every Sunday school, so far as we know, is being credited as allowed by the present interpretation of the law. The contributions are placed to the credit of the Board of Home Missions, and are immediately available for our work, being charged against our allotment.

The samples of programs prepared for 1923 have been sent by mail to all the pastors and Sunday school superintendents whose names and addresses are on file in this office. If any pastor, or any superintendent has failed to receive the copy intended for him, it is either because it was lost in the mails in transit, or because his name and address are not on file here . In either case, it will be a favor to the Board of Home Missions if all such persons will communicate with the secretary and ask for a sample program. Please do this at once. It is our desire to have a complete file, and to reach every minister and every Sunday school superintendent in the entire denomination.

The program issued this year is a worthy successor to the long line of fine programs which have been prepared under the direction of this board. The music was written by Rev. W. B. Judefind, our well known author and publisher of Baltimore, and was prepared especially for this program. Every song is new, and has never before appeared in print. Much of the literary material is also new, having been prepared for us. The orders are coming with a rush this year, 269 having been received up to Friday, February 16. The title, ''Easter Angels,'' indicates the character of the entire program. We want you to see it, and we want every Methodist Protestant Sunday school to use this program, and to make its ''annual thank-offering'' for the work of the Board of Home Missions. Every school that omits its Easter service and offering will prevent that much work's being done in our very important home mission fields. Who can measure the loss to the church and kingdom of that one withheld offering?

In addition to the program, several leaflets have been prepared and sent to the pastors and superintendents, and two large posters showing cuts of many of the churches where the work of the board is being done. All are in the mail, and all should reach you at a date earlier than the receipt of this paper. If any one desires duplicates of the posters a limited number could be supplied. Send at once, however, to be sure to secure the number needed.

Plan for this ''annual thank-offering'' service. Appoint your committees at once, if you have not already done so, decide upon the hour, and help to make this Easter Day the greatest in the history of the Methodist Protestant Church.. Let us keep before us the high purpose and appeal of service, and let us labor to secure the larger credit on the budget of work for the kingdom. Let us forget what we do for ourselves, and do our utmost for the benefit of those who need our help. Yours for ''a better America.''

''THE WOMAN'S MISSIONARY RECORD.''

Does this, the most valuable of our magazines, about our own missionaries, come to your home, and then do you read it? If not, will you see that it is a welcome guest in the home next month? You surely do not realize what instructive information you and the homefolk are missing.

It is a real pleasure to sit down and read the ''Woman's Missionary Record.'' By all means read it for yourself. We fail to do our duty in the great work, unless we do get the information through its columns.

At the Executive Committee meeting of the Home and Foreign Missionary societies, which met in Greensboro last week, your state Record agent was instructed by the president of the North Carolina Branch to ask the subscribers of the ''Woman's Missionary Record'' in North Carolina to look more closely about their subscriptions. Will you, right now, take up your last ''Record'' and look for the date printed on the label along by your address? You are due our faithful editor, Mrs. Amos, that courtesy. If you see the date with ''21'' or ''22,'' you know at once that you owe Mrs. Amos 75c for each year (or 50c for the year before the price was justly advanced to 75c) that the Record has been received by you.

Of course, you were just so busy that you had overlooked this but then, Mrs. Amos is a very busy person also. Besides, she must have money to run the Record.

If you find your subscription has expired, will you see your local Record Agent at an early date, and have her send Mrs. Amos the money for your arrears, and be sure to send enough for the renewal? You would not think of giving up this splendid Record, we are sure.

Should you for some really good reason not be able to continue your subscription, please do not allow the Record to continue coming to your address, for you can easily notify Mrs. Amos or your postmaster that you are not a subscriber longer, then she would not expect pay.

Our goal is ''The Record in every home in every auxiliary.'' How about it? Will your auxiliary be on the Honor Roll of subscriptions when we meet at West End church in April? Sincerely yours,

Mrs. J. M. Stone,
State Record Agent.

NOTICE TO MISSIONARY SOCIETIES.

I now have the Missionary Picture Sheet, containing the pictures of each of our missionaries in Japan, China and India, with information concerning the location of each. They are very attractive and I want each society in the North Carolina Branch to get one or more. They are ten cents each plus postage of four cents. Be sure to get these before the branch meeting.

I also have leaflets to use in making your monthly programs. If you need any write me for them. The price is two cents for each leaflet.

I cannot furnish mission study books. It is too near the end of the year to order a supply and I do not have any on hand.

To Furnish Room in Dormitory.
Mrs. T. A. Hunter, Greensboro	140.00
Mr. J. R. Dickens, Enfield	140.00

We are glad to add the name of Brother J. R. Dickens to the list of those furnishing a room in our new dormitory. Mrs. Hunter gave her name some time ago and remits this week.

Don't forget that our beds in the new dormitory are thirty-six inches wide and regular length.

The work is progressing nicely on the dormitory and everything is being put in readiness to move into it just as soon as completed.

Every one is well and we are all keeping warm these cold days.

Miss Burton takes up her work in the school room this week after being sick for two weeks.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK

FED AND FEEDING.

Mal. 3: 10-12.

(Stewardship Paper Number Four.)

The effect that feeding others has upon the one that feeds can only be made clear as we undertake to feed the hungry in body. Many have been the experienecs of saints of today and in years gone by that the nearest they have ever been to heaven was when they had helped some one that was in need when done from the right motive. Then when we think of the many that are needing spiritual food and though we may not come into personal contact with them we may share what we have in the giving of our substance, and they shall be enabled to know that the delightsome land spoken of here is not the prosperity that we enjoy from a temporal standpoint but within our own hearts that there is that which can be better felt than told.

While the prodigaal went away and spent his substance in riotous living, the elder son did not enjoy anything because he lived to himself so much that he never so much as asked his father for a kid that he might make merry with his friends. Now there are greater blessings to come in this life if we will not misapply what we have. There are two extremes given here. The one of ''blowing in'' and the other of never making merry with what we have to the extending of our blessing to our friends and thus widening our influence so that from our friends we may reach across to theirs and from them on until what we have is going to those we shall never see until through the wisdom of God given to them in eternity they shall recognize us as their benefactors.

All nations shall call us blessed only so far as we reach out to them a helping hand and we cannot do that in the proper way only so far as we do for the Kingdom the things we have opportunity of doing and there has never been such an opportunity as is presented today.

Our chance of helping the hungry is only going to be enlarged as we come up to the standards as laid down here in God's truth. Our prosperity as a nation has been great and is still great, but can we expect to hold where we are today and lavish so much upon ourselves selfishly? God forbid.

In the Kingdom of God they who do for others are fed themselves, for we are told that the liberal soul shall be made fat and there is that scattereth and yet increaseth. Why, O, why, do we not, with all the light that is before us and knowing how God has always dealt generously with his people in the past when they did not forget His part, why, I say, do we not cultivate a more liberal spirit? The plain promise that is made here of prosperity to those who bring the tithes into the store house is still being fulfilled.

Now let me say, as we bring this series to a close that if at any time I can be of any help to any reader of these lines in helping you to decide on a definite plan for your dealings with the Kingdom, let me know, please. If I have left anything hazy, for these articles have been written during busy hours snatched here and there during a ''flu'' epidemic, when much visiting was required—but if anything is not plain, let me know either through the Herald or by private correspondence and it will indeed be a pleasure to help in any way possible.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 25.

What Are Some Temptations to Lie, and How Can We Overcome Them? Prov. 12: 17-22.

Daily Readings.

Mon. Profit in lies. Lev. 6: 2-5.
Tues. Mistaken affection. Gen. 27: 1-13.
Wed. Hatred. Prov. 10: 9-19.
Thurs. Spite. Psa. 31: 11-18.
Fri. Pride. Matt. 6: 1-5.
Sat. Covetousness. 2 Pet. 2: 1-3, 17-20.

We are beset with temptations of all kinds and lying is no exception. So ever be on the watch for so-called white lies or half truths, which if persisted in will tend to create less respect for the truth. For a liar has no respect or regard for the principles of truth and honor.

Every little half truth or lie told when there is a thought of momentary gain damages the soul's integrity, and weakens one's self-respect and one's soul. What is the value of all gain without self-respect?

Making promises with no thought of keeping them, or with a mental reservation that they may not be kept, is lying and hurtful to the soul. Wasting time that belongs to your employer that should be used for the interest of his business is lying. When applying for a job some people think it justifiable to leave the impression that they can do the work when they have had no experience in it. . A form of lying. Cheating at school is lying to the teacher, yourself and everybody else. Worse still, it is forming loose principles which will be detrimental to later life.

Your pledged word should be a most solemn thing. In our homes, schools, and colleges such regard and respect should be placed upon truth and honor that those leaving would have nothing but contempt for untruthfulness in any form.

You remember the story in the Bible of how Ananias and his wife were both struck dead because of a lie. They sold a possession and kept back a part of the price, thinking no one would ever know. God knew their hearts. Then in Proverbs 12: 22, ''Lying lips are an abomination to the Lord.'' Think for a moment how God regards what we say. It is of great importance, for He knows. One hurls himself against God when he lies.

A liar harms not only himself, which would be bad enough, but think of the homes broken up, family disagreements and numbers of misunderstandings caused by the destructive power of lying. Sometimes a hot temper uncontrolled causes one to speak sharp, wicked, poisoned lies that pierce the heart like a sword. Tell the truth, whatever happens, for, ''Oh what a tangled web we weave, when first we practice to deceive.'' If you tell one lie, often for fear of being found out you add lie to lie.

One's words are a revelation of what is on the inside truth or deceit. So watch your words, be careful and whatever happens, speak the truth.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SUMMER CONFERENCE.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Young People's Work it was decided to hold the Summer Conference for young people June 12-22. This is after the close of the schools and colleges, and before the opening of some of the summer schools. It is also before the real hot weather starts in, before the Pastors' Summer Conference, and before the revival meeting season commences. It seemed to be the best time for the conference.

It was also decided to hold the conference at Weaverville College Weaverville, N. C. Weaverville is a small country town nestled in the mountains of western North Carolina seven miles from Asheville. It is beautifully situated, and is an ideal place for such a conference as we are planning to have. The wonderful views from the campus, revealing the great handiwork of the Almighty, will in itself lend grently to the spiritual atmosphere of the conference.

The fifty-seven-acre campus, beautiful in its topography, with valleys and hills and winding paths, is covered with buildings, tall chestnut trees, mountain flowers of all descriptions, athletic field, and tennis courts.

The three buildings on the campus are: administration building and two dormitories, one for boys and one for girls. These two dormitories are about two hundred yards apart.

In the administration building are the class rooms, and an auditorium seating about 600 people. In the girls' dormitory are: the president's apartment, who makes his home there during the summer; a reception room, and the dining room and kitchen. This building will be in charge of Mrs. J. M. Millikan, Greensboro, and Mrs. J. S. Williams, Asheville. The boys' dormitory has in it only sleeping quarters, and a big reading room. This building will be in charge of Rev. T. M. Johnson, Mebane, and Rev. E. G. Lowdermilk, Brown Summit.

It is our plan to make this the most profitable conference for our young people ever held in North Carolina. Most carefully and prayerfully is the course of study being planned.. The list of teachers and speakers is the fullest we have ever had. Some of those outside of the state who we are hoping will be with us are: Rev. H. L. Feeman, D.D., Adrian, Mich.; Rev. E. A. Sexsmith, D.D., Baltimore, Md.; Rev. K. K. Haddaway, Dean at Western Maryland College, Westminster, Md.; Mrs. H. W. Maier, Columbus, Ohio. Our program is in the process of making and the full list of speakers and teachers cannot yet be given.

All of this for the period of ten days, including good substantial board, we are able to offer our young people for only $15. After investigation we find that this is about half, and less than half in some cases, than the other conferences in that part of the country are charging for the same period. This price will put it in the range of young people from every church in the conference. It would be a wonderful day for our church in North Carolina if every Sunday school and every Christian Endeavor society in the conference would see to it that it is represented at this young people's conference. That is not an impossibility. It can be done. By God's help let us do all in our power to see that it is done.

We realize that it is more than just a leap from Weaverville to the other extreme of our conference, but that distance can easily be covered by a Ford. Where there are five young people to the car, each equally sharing the cost, the round trip can be made for not more than three dollars each. Fifiteen dollars' worth of gas and oil will carry a Ford a long way.

It is our plan, where the young people go in the Ford, and I do not mean to exclude those who do not drive a Ford, we want you too, to report to me their intentions of going and how. These will be grouped in squads according to districts, and each squad of cars, leaving from a central point, will be in charge of one of the ministers who is familiar with the roads.

Those who do not have cars will not be left out. We have arranged to have buses, carrying twenty-five or thirty, each, to meet the young people at central points and take them on through to Weaverville. The round trip by bus will not exceed eight dollars, and possibly will come within five dollars.

We feel that his wonderful program, and list of speakers, and trip will bring two hundred young people to Weaverville. We have them in our conference, they are interested in the church, and I am sure with the proper encouragement they will be there. If they are there in that number it will be the greatest day for our church we have ever seen. If they are there in that number next year we will have more efficient Sunday schools, more awake Christian Endeavor societies, more active churches, more of our general interests paid, more candidates for the ministry and the mission fields. If we pray, and work to answer our prayer they will be there.

I am sure that these big-hearted, broad-minded, God-fearing people of the North Carolina Conference, who are so wonderfully manifesting their interest in the young people, will do all in their power to make this conference a wonderful success, by a big attendance, by their prayers, and in any other way they can.

President Young People's Board.

Thomasville W. F. M. S.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the M. P. church of Thomasville held its annual Thank-offering service on last Sunday evening at 7:30. Mr. J. Norman Wills of Greensboro was the speaker and he gave a delightfully instructive talk on missions. Miss Myrtle Perry sang an appropriate solo. The Thank-offering collection amounted to $36. This society has kept up its monthly payments on its budget and will end up the year in fine shape.

Kathleen Hall, President.

Sandy Ridge, West Thomasville Circuit.—Our pastor the second Sunday in February preached a splendid sermon at 11 o'clock, after which he administered the Lord's Supper. He stayed over Sunday night and preached another fine sermon. There has been some drop-off in our Sunday school and prayer meeting on account of the bad weither and some sickness. All the sick are improving except Grandmother Wood; her condition does not improve much.. We must submit to God's [illegible]oweth and doeth all things well. [illegible] to plant our feet on higher planes of Christian living. We must live such lives before the unsaved ones that they may see and know that it pays to serve Jesus, and may we ever look to Him for help, strength to do our part toward helping to keep our church alive.

We hope that we will be able to attend quarterly meeting at Spring Hill the first day in March. We are anxious to hear Brother Dixon and to meet some of Brother Moose's good members that he has been talking to us about and to get acquainted with them so we can all work together for a prosperous year.

Blanche Wood, Reporter.

TOOTH-PICKS AND DEMIJOHNS.

Behold, how great a commotion a little pair of pants causeth! Brother Powell visiteth the scenes of his boyhood. This causeth him to think of his first pair of pants. In his innocency he expatiateth on this pair of pants. I read it. It bringeth most exquisite delight to me, for it causeth me to think of my first pair of pants—a wonderful transition in a boy's life, from dresses to pants. So I was transported, in imagination, to the days of my childhood and boyhood, and wrote of things as they were in those far-away days, never dreaming that any one would be disturbed thereby. But we never know what a dose of medicine will do until after we have taken it. So I am sorry to know that what I wrote in my simplicity and innocency has caused an unrest, uneasiness, or commotion, in the solar plexus, or some other part of the physical domain. For this I am truly sorry, and want to quiet the unrest as much as possible. And to this end will say, of course "it would never do in the world" to use quill tooth-picks in this advanced and enlightened age of germs and sanitation. But 50 and 60 years ago, before the advent of germs, and the discoverey, or invention, of sanitation, the quill pick was entirely permissible. In some respects it was preferable, as it cost no money (and money was almost as scarce as hen's teeth in those days) and would last far longer. All a fellow had to do was to go to the goose pasture and pick up a quill, and get out his "barlow" knife and whittle him out a pick, put it in his vest pocket and go on his way rejoicing. He was ready for all occasions—equipped for months, and perhaps years to come. And while in the pasture, if he saw fit, he could pick up two quills, one of which he could use to make a quill pen, to write to his sweetheart, or to write any other kind of manuscript he desired. But now he must use steel or gold. I suspect the Constitution of the United States and the Declaration of Independence were written with a quill pen. It might be unwise in these days of germs to use a quill pen. I am not chemist and biologist enough to know whether it would be safe to use quill pens or not, so I take the side of safety and use a metal pen. And even this may not be absolutely safe, as the tetanus germs might be lurking about on the point—perhaps a half million. So it is a dangerous world to live in, since germs made their advent.

Perhaps it would be wise to ask the next Legislature to make it a felony for any one to use a wooden tooth-pick the second time, without first dipping it in some kind of antiseptic solution, and not drop them about carelessly, but bury them or burn them. We can't be too careful in these days of germs.

I wish to say further, that I was never fortunate, or unfortunate, enough to see the demijohn passed around at an old-time corn shucking of 50 or 60 years ago. Neither did I ever see any fighting or drunken carousing. Neither did I ever see any unseemly "frolicking" into the small hours of the night. Never saw any "hugging-set-to-music" performances. Everything was done "decently and in order." Just as much decorum about the amusements as many things performed in the church today. And while the girls wore dresses long enough to constitute clothing, they did not drag or sweep the ground. In fact I've never seen or heard of any one being so foolish—except the fashion-mongers—as to advocate dresses touching the ground.

As to the superabundance of milk, it may be so in some places, but not in this "neck of the woods." What if there is plenty, what good does it do when the price is out of reach of some—60 to 80 cents per gallon? Surely some who have been disturbed by our reminiscences have not read of the milk troubles in New York and in other places caused by the Milk Trust. Plenty of milk, but babies lacking milk because of the extortionate prices. Plenty of coal, but many having to go cold because of extortionate prices. When sugar was 25 to 30 cents per pound there was plenty of sugar to go round, but the profiteers, the extortion hogs had it "cornered." What good does it do to put plenty of fodder in the rack, if it is so high the horse can't reach it? I say again, 50 and 60 years ago the poorest of the people could have a sufficiency of milk for the babies and children, but it isn't so today. Everybody knows this that goes about and observes or reads. Plenty of milk for some, who are financially able to buy it, but little or none for many others. Of course this is modern improvement. People starving and freezing in tenements in a stone's throw of the millionaire. Modern improvement! Up-to-date! The millennium dawning! Rosy hues in the Orient, and rainbows spanning the heavens! Plenty, plenty, for some, and little or none for those of a light pocket. While I am unalterably and eternally opposed to Socialism and Bolshevism, some of these modern improvements(?) have a tendency to foster these anarchistic and revolutionary movements. But we desist. We don't want to cause any more distress in the region of the solar plexus. We have been trying to administer an anesthetic; but the effect may be opposite to that intended, for some systems become furious and uncontrolable. So I'm hoping for the best, and that the patient will soon become normal, in these days when the country is struggling back to "normalcy."

WORRY.

Civilization makes trouble. Some one has wisely said, "To have anything is to have trouble." And the more one has the more trouble he has. The covetous are always courting trouble. "For the love of money is the root of all evil: which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows."

There is, however, a deeper cause of worry than covetousness. A practical denial of God's rights in this world is the fundamental cause of the anxious burdens that crush men's souls. Too much credit is given to self-assertiveness in the acquisition of knowledge, property and reputation. There is a persistent forgetfulness that "every good and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." The failure to recognize the kind, fatherly Hand in all gains and losses fosters both conceit and misery. The victor over worry will be able to say with Job: "The Lord gave, the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

Faithlessness contributes largely to the world's fund of unholy anxiety. Unbelief is the parent of trouble as well as sin. Weak, frail humanity is prone to undertake the impossible. To attempt to go alone in the midst of the thousand and one snares and pitfalls is the height of folly. Not one such ever escapes fearful disaster and everlasting ruin. Nothing, save the higher wisdom and power, can deliver from the many ills that beset us on every side.

The losses through worry are incalculable. To simply lose one's peace of mind is a calamity in itself. One's capabilities are greatly impaired by mental distress. No one can put forth the best and most effective effort who is worrying either about past failures, present contingencies, or future consequences. The inevitable contagion of worry affects most seriously the happiness of other people. It often acts like a wet blanket in stifling the joy, hope, and aspiration of those who come in contact with it. And then worry is suicidal It saps the will-power, the energies and the vitality. But worst of all worrying drives its victims farther away from God, sinks them deeper in the quicksand of despair, and draws them nearer the abyss of everlasting night.

The most effective and far-reaching remedy for worry is the gospel of Jesus Christ. Worry is one of the multitudinous progeny of sin, especially of the sin of unbelief. It is the inward environment rather than the outward that causes distressful anxiety. The thoroughly saved man is always happy. No adverse condition in life can seriously affect his joy in the Holy Ghost. Like Paul he can say, "I am exceeding joyful in all our tribulation."

The appropriating of the spirit of Christ by the exercise of a victorious faith will surely remove every occasion for worry. The spirit of humility will guard against every assault of self-conceit. The spirit of forgiveness will put the quietus upon real or fancied injuries. The spirit of resignation will impart relief in the hour of adversity or affliction. And the spirit of hope will make bright and inviting the vistas of the future.—The Word of Life.

HARMFUL ACCUMULATIONS.

"Yes," said an elderly man to his friend, "all my life I have had a hobby for collecting autographs. I have spent hours of time writing letters and waiting in front parlors and business offices. I've collected quite a few —thousands, in fact. No; I don't know as they'll do me any good—or anybody else, for that matter—aside from the thrill of actual contact with something some big man or woman has touched or handled. Autographs, I guess," he continued with a chuckle, "are like some other things in this world—the more you have of them the poorer you are."

It is possible that all who have made a specialty of autograph-hunting or some other hobby equally fascinating, would not concur entirely in the old man's statement to the effect that the more you accumulate the poorer you are. But there can be no question that the shrewd deduction does apply to a good many things in this world. Men have toiled and worried and schemed to acquire certain things, only to discover in the end that the more they have of them the worse off they are.

"I don't believe I ever worked harder at anything in my life than I worked trying to acquire the tobacco habit," said a traveling man half facetiously to a group of friends gathered at a public dinner. "I was just a lad then, and like so many boys, I thought I couldn't really be a man until I could use tobacco without embarrassing results. But my stomach rebelled. I kept on trying. Much to my chagrin and mortification other boys succeeded without half my effort. Indeed it was months before I ever really felt sure of myself with the weed. Well," he added whimsically, "now I see it in a different light. I was foolish, but I didn't know it. I'm trying just as hard now to quit as I once tried to learn. I don't know whether I shall succeed or not, but I hope I shall."

How many of us have had similar experiences! Think of all the hours we have wasted cultivating friendships of which afterwards we have been ashamed! Think of the principles sacrificed and the conscientious scruples thrown to the winds for the sake of being called "a good fellow" or "a real sport"! The sad thing about many of the friendships formed in this world is the fact that we have gone in for quantity instead of quality. Therefore the more such friendships we make the poorer we are. Equally sad is the fact that this realization sometimes never comes to us until we are so far along in life that we can never recover from our moral impoverishment.

It has often been said that the greater part of man's maturer years he devotes to efforts to throw off foolish habits he spent his youth in acquiring. Perhaps, at the time they were acquired these habits seemed harmless enough, but in time the accomplished one learns that they only impoverish and burden him. There is no need of going over the long list of them, for we know them all. Often they are legion; dishonesty, idleness, self-indulgence, extravagance, procrastination, avarice. Little by little they grow upon us until they fill our lives. Is there any picture more pathetic to contemplate than the picture of some unfortunate staggering under the burden of his own foolishness, or going out of the world poorer because of the very things he has gathered about him?—Forward.

THE BETTER WAY.

By Mrs. Louis Thompson.

Weary and worn I stumble on O'er paths I do not know.
With tired feet I climb to tread
The way that I must go.
I cannot see beyond the turn
That hides the onward way.
It may be dark, it may be bright—
It is not mine to say.

I fain would choose a smooth road
Where sparkling waters bow;
Sweet birds should sing and roses bloom
The way that I would go.
I would not climb with weary feet
To tread the upward way,
But walk the pleasant valley road—
If it were mine to say.

Oh foolish heart! the way that winds
Down through the flowery vales
Can never reach the sunlit heights
Where God's own peace prevails.
Pitfalls may hide beneath the flowers
Along the valley way;
I might not choose the better road—
If it were mine to say.

There's One can gide us safely on O'er just the path that's best—
Through sun or shade, through calm or storm,
To His Eternal Rest.
Then take my hand in Thine, dear Lord,
And guide me all the way!
I thank Thee that the way I go
It is not mine to say.

CONCERNING THE TONGUE.

Did you ever keep your tongue for one day, allowing it to speak no unkind, untrue, no unclean word: allowing it to utter no word about another's business, no judging, condemning, or critical word? Did you ever take an inventory of your words at the end of the day?

It was the Greeks who said: "The boneless tongue, so small and weak, can crush and kill."

Said the Turks: "The tongue destroys a greater horde than does the sword."

The Persians claim: "A lengthy tongue means an early death." And: "Don't let your tongue cut your head off."

This from the Hebrews: "Though your feet may slip, never let your tongue."

The sacred writers say: "If a man claim to be religious and bridle not his tongue, this man's religion is vain." "If a man offend not in word, that same is a perfect man." "Who keeps his tongue, doth keep his soul."

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

Rev. S. W. Taylor Honored.

The Burlington Ministerial Association, in their regular monthly meeting last week, held the annual election of officers for the association. Rev. S. W. Taylor, pastor of the Burlington Methodist Protestant church, was elected president of the association thus being signally honored by the association of Burlington ministers representing all denominations in the city. Rev. Mr. Taylor has become very popular among the pastors of the other churches in Burlington, and the honor thus bestowed upon him is an expression of their confidence and regard for their fellow-pastor.

If we remember correctly, Rev. J. E. Pritchard, former pastor of the Burlington church, was chosen president of the Burlington Ministerial Association during his pastorate here. The Methodist Protestant church in Burlington is recognized as one of the leading denominations in the city in several respects, and we feel proud of that fact. C. B. Way.

Canaan, Denton Charge.—There has been right much "flu" and other sickness among the members of our church, so our attendance was not quite as large as usual last Sunday. We had 47 in Sunday school and collection for Children's Home was $3.27.

Our pastor, Brother Trogdon, was with us last Sunday and preached a fine sermon at 11 A. M. He used as his subject, Jesus, as he appeared to Peter when he was fishing and commanded him to go forth and be fisher of men. Brother Trogdon made a wonderful application here, when he so forcibly explained how Jesus Christ is pleading with every Christian to put forth his best efforts to win souls for Him. When we look our folks over at Canaan we see but a very few who are, in a true sense, soul-winners for God.

Rev. J. S. Riddle of Uwharrie circuit preached for us at three P. M. He delivered a good sermon on the subject, "Take a step farther for God." If there ever was a time when the people of this community ought to take a step for God it is now.

I have been reading some mighty good reports from other churches. I wonder if any of you people have grumblers in your church. We have them down here. They don't go to church because they don't like their neighbor who goes, because they don't like the preacher, because they don't like the superintendent of the Sunday school or the teachers. They are holding malice in their hearts against their neighbors. Such people are hindering the progress of the church in any community. Such people need a good case of religion that will make them love their neighbor as themselves.. Then they will drop these pettish whims and notions and start for heaven. Brethren, I ask that you join me in prayer for the faithful of our church and those that are not doing the Master's will.

Sunday was our regular preaching day. Brother Hunter preached a good sermon to a very large congregation; also communion service was Sunday.

We have our bell up now and a hundred-dollar improvement on our church and are expecting to have the church painted before long. We hope the people that do not attend Sunday school will listen to the bell ring on Sunday morning and feel it their duty to go to church. Best wishes to the Herald and its readers. Reporter.

February 12.

Hope Church, Chatham Circuit. — As our pastor, Rev. W. M. Pike, did not come Sunday for our regular preaching service, I will write a few lines in interest of Hope church.

Another member of Hope M. P. church gone. On last Friday night, February 9, death came to the home of Mr. Franklin Jones and took him, the only and last member of the family. He was 63 years, nine months and some days old, and was never married. He joined Hope church some fifteen years ago. He was not so punctual at church for the past several years on account of his aged mother, who preceded him in October. This left him living alone. Mr. Jones was not sick long, but realized his end was drawing near and that he was ready for the call when it should come. He leaves five nieces and five nephews to mourn his death, and his friends and neighbors will greatly miss him. The funeral service was conducted Sunday afternoon at two o'clock at Hope church, by Rev. Richard S. Fountain and Brother Lonnie Smith, a door neighbor of Mr. Jones. It was his request that Mr. Smith and Rev. Tom Andrew hold the funeral service, but Mr. Andrew did not get there for some reason, and Mr. Fountain did. We will all miss him very much. Hope he is better og; for Brother Smith said, it is a family reunion in heaven for him, as he is the last member of the family.

Mrs. R. K. Brewer.

Whitaker's Charge.—Reporter from Whitakers church will write of the interesting things of that church. There has been unusual interest at Speight's Chapel, two new Christian Endeavor societies have been organized there recently. The Juniors have their meetings on Sunday afternoon immediately after Sunday school, with Miss Barnes as superintendent. The senior society hold meetings on Wednesday evening, Miss Flannagan president and Mrs. H. L. Speight advisory. We are expecting these societies to train the young life into leadership for the future church. This ought to give a nucleus for this church.

We take this opportunity to expresss our sincere appreciation for the almost daily tokens of kindness received from the good people here. The gifts are incessant and lest we take up too much space and worry somebody, we shall not give the names and the articles donated. It is our desire, however, that we shall be given sufficient strength and wisdom to lead out into larger and richer fields spiritually. God will bless the gift if given in the name of a disciple. H. Freo Surratt.

Henderson.—There are just a few things of importance to mention this week. Some time ago Brother E. C. Kittrell, who moved his membership to our church from Rehoboth church on Granville circuit about two years ago, authorized the pastor to say to our church through the missionary societies, that if the church would raise $600 he would furnish another $600, so the church could have a missionary of its own. A committee has been appointed to confer with Brother Kittrell and this committe will report back to the society this afternoon. We feel that this a wonderfully liberal offer by Brother Kittrell.

Another thing of interest is the canvass for $7,500 for our new Sunday school building, which canvass is to be conducted next week. The pastor has been made general overseer of the drive and a committee of five will assist him in planning for it. So this is to give notice to our members that the drive will start Monday, February 26, and is to be finished in one week. Our Sunday school has entirely outgrown its quarters and we must build in order to grow.. For several years the sentiment has been growing and we feel that it is strong enough now for us to build.

We are very sorry indeed that Mr. and Mrs. R. R. Satterwhite do not improve much. Some days they seem better and the next day they are worse. Both of these are among the finest people we have and we are sorry they are so afflicted. J. E. Pritchard.

Burlington.—Last Sunday was a great day for the Burlington Sunday school and church. Dr. A. G. Dixon, president of the annual conference, and Mrs. A. G. Dixon, were the speciaal guests of our church in Burlington, each one speaking to us.

Beginning in the Sunday school, we had splendid services throughout the day. Dr. Dixon arrived a few minutes before the Sunday school was dismissed, and he was called on to make a five-minutes speech, which he did in his usual pleasing style. We had a slight increase in the Sunday school attendance, there being 267 present. The Sunday school orchestra rendered one of the most beautiful selections that have been heard in several weeks.

Dr. Dixon preached at the 11 o'clock service Sunday morning, using as a subject, "The Spirit of Liberality." The text was selected from the 6th chapter of Judges, the verse that reads, "And they stood every man in his place." Dr. Dixon spoke first of the principles of stewardship, declaring the great truth that God is the owner of all our possessions. Then the methods of stewardship were discussed in the sermon. These, Dr. Dixon declared, were: (a) strict record of income; (b) set aside a 10th of income; (c) use nine-tenths in service. Concluding his sermon, Dr. Dixon spoke of the general and annual conference budgets, and gave figures to illustrate how a small amount each week contributed by each of the 25,000 Methodist Protestants in North Carolina would more than pay both budgets, these small amounts used in the illustration being seven cents, 10 cents and .5 cents per week for each member. The first amount would total $91,000; the second, $110,000; the third, $325,000. The sermon was closed with a plea for the college.

In the afternoon at three o'clock the initial service for the new church in West Burlington was held at the Union street school building. Brother Taylor conducted the service, and Dr. Dixon preached a most helpful sermon from the text, Luke 24:32, the discourse being based on the scripture relating the appearance of our Lord following his resurrection when he walked with the two disciples as they journed from Jerusalem to Emmaus and communed with them, finally revealing Himself to them as they sat at meat. Only six preachers were present for the service, including Dr. Dixon, Pastor Taylor, Rev. D. I. Garner, Rev. C. L. Spencer, Rev. Paul S. Kennett and Rev. M. Ivey Crutchfield. No organization was formed, as it was deemed advisable to defer the organization until a later date. It was decided to have services every third Sunday afternoon at three o'clock, and Rev. Paul S. Kennett will preach at the next service which will be the third Sunday in March. There were 30 persons present at the service Sunday afternoon.

The three Christian Endeavor societies held their meetings Sunday afternoon and night with the usual interest and attendance. Mrs. Dixon was present at the senior society meeting and made a five-minutes talk on the Christian Endeavor pledge.

At 7:30 the Woman's Foreign Missionary society of our church rendered their annual Thank-offering program, which consisted of special music by the Sunday school orchestra and an address by Mrs. A. G. Dixon. Mrs. W. N. Thompson, president of the society, presided. Mrs. Dixon's address was one of the best and most interesting that we have heard in a long time. For 45 minutes she held the attention of the large congregation that gathered for the service. Mrs. Dixon quoted the familiar scripture verse, St. John 3:16 as the basis for her address, and spoke first of the love of God that prompted the gift of his only begotten Son for the salvation of the world, and the creation of man, the fall of man, the birth of Christ, the ministry and death of Christ, thus manifesting that great love of the Father.. Then she related many incidents of human events where Christianity had been applied in the spread of the gospel through the sacrifice and work of the missionaries. Mrs. Dixon also told of the noble work that is being done in Japan and India, and related experiences of preaching the gospel to the peoples of foreign lands. Closing her address, Mrs. Dixon made an earnest plea for the mission work in Japan, China and India. The offering was first taken in the form of pledges, which amounted to nearly $100, and when the collection plates were passed through the congregation, the total amount was raised to about $134. The members of the society were well pleased with the success of the service and the large offering obtained.

The regular monthly business meeting of the church was held on Wednesday night of last week, following the prayer service. The prayer service was conducted by Prof. C. C. Haworth, superintendent of the Burlington graded schools. In the business meeting several busines matters were discussed, among them being the indebtedness of the Hut, which is about $1200. A budget of indebtedness, including some other items, making a total of $1800, will be presented to the church on the first Sunday in March, at which time pledges will be made to raise the amount.

The regular services will be held next Sunday, except the evening preaching service. That service has been suspended on acocunt of the Alamance County Sunday School Convention, which will be in session at that time in the First Christian church here. Ten delegates were elected in the Sunday school Sunday morning to be the official representatives of our Sunday school at the convention.

C. B. Way, Reporter.

Lincolnton.—The Sunday school attendance is just splendid, regardless of the weather. We must admit that Lincolnton has its part of the mud, although a large congregation welcomed the pastor here last night (February 11). In spite of Brother Phillips' physical condition, he was enabled to preach, and delivered a wonderful message. Surely there will be fewer "double-faced" people around here than ever before, as that was his subject last night. He made it so very plain that even the children could understand just what double-faced means, so probably they won't be like the little boy who looked so curiously at the visitor wondering where her other face was.

The Young People's Meeting was very interesting yesterday as it was consecration day. We are glad to see at least some of the young people who are not ashamed to stand up before their friends and confess Christ and express their desire to live a more consecrated life.

The Junior society is very interesting; they seem to become more interested every meeting they have and of course that is just what is expected of them. They are planning a good time Wednesday evening. A valentine party has been planned at the home of Miss Hester Johnson, vice president.

The church is looking forward to the revival meeting that is expected to begin March 11. We trust that many souls will be swept into the kingdom, and Christians strengthened by the work that shall be done. The Christian Endeavor society has already done some work in behalf of a revival, but not as much as we are expecting to do. So pray for our success.

Granville Circuit.—In spite of much sickness, bad weather and worse roads, the work on Granville is pressing forward. In many respects the year is starting off the best yet. This is particularly true in church attendance, and more especially true with attendance at the afternoon services. The first winter on this charge we had no preaching services in the afternoons, as had been the custom. But for three winters we have been preaching twice a month the year round. And the winter congregations have, if anything, been better than ever. All of which is a refutation that we must go into winter quarters in the country.

The Sunday schools at Union and Rehoboth continue active. Indeed, there are many signs of better work than they have ever done. One of the most hopeful signs is the presence of many more parents with their children. They have quit sending them; they are bringing them. But there's room for improvement. We won't be satisfied down this way until every member of the church is in the Sunday school. At Rehoboth the children have been started in catechetical classes and a number of them are engaged in a contest in memorizing portions of Scripture, using the "String of Pearls." During Christmas the young folks at Union gave the pageant sent out by the Board of Education. The offering was $16.

The Christian Endeavor societies are active. The attendance is especially good at Rehoboth. The Union society is raising money to furnish a room in the Boys' Dormitory at the Children's Home.

All three—or six—missionary societies are doing good work, especially when the handicap of bad roads is counted. The Rehoboth sciety is having additions to its membership at each meeting, and is doing splendid work. The Union society had its Thank-offering service on the second Sunday afternoon, presenting the pageant, "Light and Thanks." This was so good that it is to be reproduced at Mt. Carmel on the fourth Sunday night in this month, and at Rehoboth on the first Sunday morning in next month. The offering at Union was $18, with some more to come in. The Mt. Carmel society has raised its quota for home missions, and is well on the way over the top in its foreign work.

Our finances are a bit behind, but I suppose most of the other charges in the conference are as far behind, if not farther, than we are. But Granville never fails to come out, and it will not fail this time.

While there are many things to discourage, and the work moves all too slowly, there are many things to give us hope. Three years ago there was not a single missionary or Christian Endeavor society on the charge, and only the Rehoboth Sunday school was evergreen. The whole charge was in a decided slump. Things are much better now, as the foregoing report indicates. All honor to the faithful ones who have helped to make it so!

C. W. Bates, Pastor.

Whitakers. Whitakers Charge.—Owing to the sickness and death of my mother, it has been some time since I have written. But our people have not been sleeping or resting on their oars. Of course all our services have not been so well attended on account of the cold, bad weather. And too, there has been quite a lot of sickness here as well as elsewhere. One of our new families (Mr. Frank Avent's) has been quarantined for some time. Their little daughter Emily was taken with diphtheria about three weeks ago, but we are glad to say she pulled through all right, and after fumigating the house on Friday she broke out with measles on Sunday. She is up from that, though still shut in. We will all be glad when they can get back with us.

On last Friday night some of our people gave the two missionary pageants that came out in our "Woman's Missionary Record" in December and January. We are indebted to Miss Sallie Barnhill for working up this service. One of the pageants was "Thy Will Be Done." This was gotten up with six of our intermediate girls, Wilma Hull, Margarite Hunt, Mary Belle Arnold, Ruth King, Spencer Cutchin and Mary Lee Johnston. The girls all did fine. The other pageant was the Thank-offering one. This was rendered by Mrs. Surratt representing "America," Miss Dean as "Thank-offering," Miss Sallie Barnhill, "Africa," Miss Lowry, "India," Mrs. Elmer Cutchin, "Japan," and Miss Carmen Cutchin, "South America." This, too, was fine. Owing to the extreme cold weather, and it not being thoroughly advertised, our crowd was small, but the offering was $12.45. This goes on the support of a Bible woman in the foreign field. Our Woman's Foreign Missionary Society has decided to undertake this as something definite to work for. Several have asked that the pageant be repeateed, so we may repeat it one night this week.

Yesterday our pastor did something a little unusual, preaching from "Pilgrim's Progress." He chose as a basis for his sermon, "Doubting Castle," and showed us very clearly how easy it was to get out of the "King's Highway" and the road would lead us to this castle. Last night he gave us the pictures of this wonderful book. The church was filled last night, and we hope these pictures will be a warning to us all not to leave the narrow road we start out to travel.

Our Ladies' Aid and Woman's Foreign Missionary societies meet this afternoon with Mrs. Dr. Cutchin.

We hope the bad weather will soon be over and everybody can get down in earnest on our church work. Am glad to say our church has paid all of our annual conference budget. We are a month ahead on this claim this year. Best wishes to all readers.

February 19.

Saxapahaw Charge.—Something has recently happened on Saxapahaw charge to cause me to break my long silence. It was our preaching day at Orange Chapel last Sunday. At the conclusion of our service, I was agreeably surprised to find my conveyance loaded with almost all sorts of good things to eat—Irish potatoes, dried apples, canned apples, peach preserves, and one box handkerchiefs were some of the things left. The donors were: Mr. and Mrs. Foust Thompson, Mr. and Mrs. T. E. Williams, Mrs. Carl Edwards, Mrs. Daisy Lewis, and Miss Sallie Lewis. Previous to this Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Crawford gave me several pounds of nice honey, Mr. and Mrs. Foust Thompson, apples and candy, and Brother T. E. Williams, one beautiful neck-tie. My vocabulary is too limited to express to them my appreciation for these gifts. My desire is to prove worthy of these gifts.

The other churches have been very kind in conveying me to and from some of the appointments. It is a pleasure to serve the good people of Saxapahaw charge in my feeble way. There are some as good people on this charge as can be found anywhere. I am very sorry, indeed, that I cannot devote more time to the work.

Sickness and inclement weather have hindered our church work greatly, but we are praying for a good year for the Master.

H. L. Isley.

Pilot Church, Pinnacle Circuit.—Despite weather conditions and the "flu" epidemic, our Sunday school keeps going. Though the weather has been rough, a faithful few will come, cold or hot. We are running an evergreen Sunday school, there having been only one Sunday that there was no school this year.

Rev. W. D. Reed third Sunday evening gave us a most interesting sermon, the subject being, "The Ten Virgins."

Mrs. J. S. Dezarn and Mrs. J. M. Ashburn, who have been real sick are slowly improving, we are glad to say.

J. A. Allen,
Reporter.

Cid, Uwharrie Circuit.—It is always good news to me when I get the Herald, to read its good advice and the good, spiritual work that is going on at different places.

Our Sunday school is still going on: there is great room for better attendance, but thank the Lord for the faithful few.

Rev. J. S. Riddle filled his place at Cid Sunday and delivered a most excellent sermon. He brought to us some most excellent points, and I hope it will sink into many hearts. His health is not so good, we are sorry to note. We people paid him up for the first quarter, and besides gave him a little pounding.

The friends of Mrs. T. C. Crutchfield of Greensboro will be sorry to hear that she has been confined to her rooms for over three weeks, but at present somewhat convalescent.

The friends of Mrs. Lee Tysinger were grieved to hear of her death, but she was a good woman and took such great interest in her church at Thomasville. To know her was to love her. She leaves a husband and four boys. May they live to meet Myrtle again in that glory land. My depest sympathy goes out to the bereaved family and relatives.

The second quarterly conference will be at Piney Grove on Saturday before the first Sunday in March. It is very important that we have a large attendance. Nominees for delegates to the annual conference must be selected.

We have missed only one Sunday in having Sunday school this year, and that day it was raining so bad. I do not see how any person that says he is a child of God and will stay away from Sunday school and church all the year until special meeting comes on and then for a few days only be found there lifting his hopeless cries to the Almighty King to save the boys and girls of the community. Some one may die before that time, so let us all come together in bonds of love for 52 Sabbaths in the year and lend good influence 365 days in the year, and I will venture to say that we will save some of them and wear a crown at the last day.

The reporter that was elected for this place has not served any, but said he would resign, and the matter has been forgotten to elect another one. So I was asked to report until we get one. Rev. Robert Short will preach at Cid on the first Sunday in March at 11 o'clock.

Brother Short and daughter, Miss Virgie, accompanied by Miss Louie Franke, were pleasant callers at N. W. Lanier's one day last week. We learned to love those good people and are always glad to have them with us. So come again.

As ever, a worker in Christ's vineyard, Member.

Thomasville.—For some reason we have been behind in our reports, but we are still alive and on the upward move. Number present at Sunday school, 150. Owing to the condition of Brother Troxler's little boy, Edwin, which has been very serious for 10 days, the preaching service was immediately after Sunday school; a very interesting talk. The evening service was given over to the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, Brother J. Norman Wills being present, who gave us a most interesting description of conditions at home and in the foreign fields. We have many things for which we ought to be thankful, but the most important is, that Christ came to seek and to save the lost, and without Him we are all lost. Pray for us that we may have a successful year in fruit-bearing for the Master. Yours for service, Reporter.

St. Paul.—St. Paul is still on the map, and doing business at the same old stand. We are glad to report some advancements, congregations improving, Sunday school growing, everybody hopeful. The pastor has regained his health, and is able to be on the job. He filled all appointments for the past two Sundays. Yesterday morning his subject was Stewardship; last evening the subject was God's Promises. At the conclusion of the discourse the doors of the church were opened for the reception of members, and two presented themselves for membership, by letter from the M. E. Church, South.

The pastor is planning to begin a series of revival services on Wednesday night, March 21, and will continue throughout the following week, and through the first Sunday in April, which is Easter Sunday. We are hoping and praying for a gracious revival. We request an interest in the prayers of the readers of the Herald.

Shelby.—Our Sunday school is good; collections any school should be proud of. The interest of pupils and teachers is inspiring. We have good and interesting prayer service each Wednesday night.

Our pastor is not afraid to present the Bible truths. Tonight his subject was Consecration, and the way he spoke on it was something to make many heed the warning. Quite a number gave their hands as a token of their consecration in the Master's service.

As there has been a report of Mrs. E. G. Gant's death, I can not help but say something of this good woman who is gone from our church, one we all loved. I knew her quite well. We can not understand why such a good one was taken when it seemed we needed her so much, but God needed her more. God works in mysterious ways, His wonders to perform: we commend Brother Gantt to the God she loved and served.

Dear readers, we feel that this is a needy time for prayer for work for the Master. Oh, give us more courage to stand for the right, regardless of what man may say about us. Man can not destroy the soul. Two members were received into our church today.

DIED.

Spoon.

Sylvester Graham Spoon, born January 21, 1861, died February 2, 1923. He said he could see his way clear, and called his wife to the bed and asked her not to forget him. His body was laid to rest in the cemetery at Flag Spring M. P. church in the presence of a large congregation. Funeral held by the pastor.

J. W. Hulin.

Daniels.

Robert Talmage, son of Talmage and Flora Daniels, was born September 24, 1921, died February 1, 1923.

Talmage was a sweet little boy, but the Lord had need for him and called his home. It was hard for the father and mother to give him over to Jesus, but He claimed His own and we laid his sweet little body to rest in Level Cross graveyard.

Bowers.

Last Sunday evening about six o'clock, we laid to rest the body of Sister Bowers at the Holiness Tabernacle. I never knew the sister, but understand that she was a good woman.

H. S. B. Thompson.

Buckner.

Mrs. Susie Buckner died in her home, Rosemary, N. C., February 4, aged 30 years. She was afflicted for a long time and grew worse until death came. She had one time joined Corinth M. P. church, and later moved her membership to Philadelphia on Greensville circuit, Virginia. She and Mr. J. G. Buckner, her husband, had been living in Rosemary for some time. Her body was laid to rest at Corinth church February 5.

She leaves behind her husband, one child, her father, mother, one brother and five sisters, who have the sympathy of their friends.

Miss Mary Ida Brittain.

With our joy and happiness comes sorrow and grief, as evidence of this, Miss Mary Ida Brittain, the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. R. Brittain, of 606 Fifth Avenue, Greensboro, was called from this world of suffering to her eternal reward. It is sad indeed to part with one with whom we were classmates, friends, and companions, in school, in the home and in social life. It was the writer's privilege to be closely associated with Mary Ida while she lived in Efland, and she was in every respect a true Christian young woman; very much devoted to her church, with which she was united early in childhood. She was always willing to do whatever she could to aid the church and to further the cause of Christ Something like twelve years ago she moved with the family to Greensboro and until her death had made her home there. Mary Ida was a member of the high school, where she made a vast number of friends, until her health caused her to discontinue her school work. From this time on she spent much of her time under the care of physicians and in the hospital trying to find some means of regaining health. But all efforts were in vain. All that loving hands and skilled physicians could do could not restore health and strength to her. She had been a member of Grace Methodist Protestant church since she had made her home in Greensboro; she was actively engaged in the activities of the church until affliction hindered her work; she was faithful and ready at all times to do anything she could to further the cause of Christ.. Mary Ida was a prominent and valuable member of the White Shrine, and the Eastern Star lodges. She was loved and honored by all who knew her during the twenty-one years she lived among us. And there are scores of sad hearts because of her death. Further evidence of her friendship and popularity was the hundreds of people that filled Grace Methodist Protestant church to its capacity. Many who came to pay their last tribute of respect could not find room in the church.. The beautiful floral designs that more than twice encircled the altar were further evidence of her popularity and friendship. The funeral was conducted from Grace M. P. church by Rev. Roland C. Stubbins, who had been her pastor for several years. Her remains were laid to rest in Green Hill Cemetery to await the resurrection morning. May the bereaved be comforted by the blessings of the Heavenly Father who knows best and who took her from us. She is gone from us in physical being, but in memory she will live forever. The vacant chair in the home will never be filled as it once was, and the fond remembrance of the one we loved so dearly will ever bear upon our hearts and minds because God has seen fit to take her from us to the land of flowers, where she will be happy and suffer no more.

Marsh.

Jessie Raye Marsh, daughter of Brother and Sister Daniel Marsh of Fairfield, died February 8, 1923, in her 12th year. Jessie Raye was an unusually bright and pleasant little girl, loved by all who knew her.

At the age of eight years she gave her little heart to the Savior and joined the church at Fairfield. For a child she showed a great interest in church and Sunday school. It was her delight to do anything she was asked to do, and always took an active part in all the exercises of the church and Sunday school. She was only sick a few days. Then the Shepherd called His lamb to the fold.

Her funeral was conducted by her pastor, J. H. Bowman, assisted by Rev. A. M. Hamilton, and her body was laid to rest in the cemetery at Fairfield. The following little boys and girls were flower bearers: Pensie Nelson, Beulah Hahn, Catharine Went, Nellie Kerns, Mamie Tuttle, Stacy Shepherd. Edith Armstrong, Theodie Roberson, Jay Hendrix and Daniel Robertson. The following were pall-bearers:Herman Robertson, Homer Went, Ross Davis, Wayne Went, Bynum Robertson and Carl Tuttle.

Her sweet voice will be missed in the Sunday school and more so in her home. The parents said in the paper that was read at her funeral, "God hath given and God hath taken away, His will be done." God's will was for her to join the angelic band and sing in heaven's choir.

She leaves a father and mother and two sisters, Vera and Lena Marsh, who have our heart-felt sympathy. J. H. Bowman.

Yow.

Brother John W. Yow of Fairfield church, Guilford circuit, died January 31, 1923. Brother Yow was born May 2, 1878, being in his 45th year. He was taken severely sick with typhoid pneumonia on Saturday night and died on Wednesday following.

On June the 12th, 1902, he was married to Miss Emma Gertrude Layton. To this union were born six sons: James C., Clifford, John L., Layton, Kenneth, and Quinton. His wife and children survive him. He also leaves one half-sister and two half-brothers.

Early in life he was converted and joined Fairfield M. P. church, where he remained a faithful and consistent member until God called him home. He was one of the leading members of his church, taking an active interest in all the activities of the church and Sunday school. He has been superintendent of the Sunday school for 13 years. He was one of the leading factors in the remodeling of Fairfield church recently and did the contract work. He was not only interested in his own church but in his circuit. He was secretary of the quarterly conference and had been for a number of years. You might always expect him to be present. He represented his circuit as delegate in the annual conference a number of times.

A good and useful man has gone from among us; who will take up his mantle, and carry on his work? I hope his boys may follow in his footprints of usefulness.

His funeral was conducted from Fairfield church by his pastor, Rev. J. H. Bowman, assisted by Rev. A. M. Hamilton, and interment made in the church cemetery. The service at the grave was conducted by the Jr. O. U. A. M. The following pall bearers were also members of the order: M. J. Hoover, John T. Suits, Carl Gilbreth, D. P. Criscoe, Z. R. Johnson, P. C. Shepherd, D. J. Hendrix, and T. R. Osborne. The flowers were beautiful and elaborate. The flower girls were Ivetus Gilbreath, Lena Marsh, Edna Frazier, Ethelyn Hoover, Vera Marsh, Olga Armstrong, Florence Osborne, Miss Fogleman, Aileen Hendricks, and Mabel Gilbreath.

We want to extend to Sister Yow and her children our heart-felt sympathy in this sad hour of bereavement, and can only commend her to the dear One that said, "I will never leave nor forsake you." J. H. Bowman.

Pitts.

On January 20, 1923, death visited the home of Brother Edgar Pitts and claimed for its victim his wife, Sister Isla Ward Pitts. Isla was 30 years of age, just in the prime of life. Three weeks prior to her death she lost her baby, Louise, by death, and then contracted "flu" and pneumonia, and in spite of all that loving hands and physicians could do she passed into the beyond.

Isla professed faith in Christ and joined the church at Hickory Grove when a small child and lived a Christian until death. We as a church deeply mourn the death of one who was so devoted to her church, and feel that her vacancy will be hard to fill, and that her Christian life and character, her earnest devotion to her family, is a beautiful example, and though she has gone from us her influence is still working and helping her loved ones and friends to a higher life.

Isla was perfectly happy when death came and called her loved ones to the bedside and prayed that they might all meet her in heaven.

She leaves to mourn her loss a husband, three children, a father, C. L. Ward, five brothers, five sisters, and a host of relatives and friends.

The funeral services were conducted by Rev. Edw. Suits at Hickory Grove, and the body was laid in its resting place. There was a large crowd and the beautiful flowers that covered her grave was another way her friends showed their love for her.

Our prayers and sympathy go out for the entire family, and may they look to Him that doeth all things well. E. S. Jones.

WILL IT COME?

Men are talking of the next war. Some declare it inevitable and near at hand. There are doubtless those who would like to see it come. Whether anything would be left of them, or of civilization, should another world war start, they do not consider. Much war talk is propaganda, to use a nearly worn-out word. Never, as during this past summer, have we been convinced of the untrustworthiness of the reports to be found in our newspapers concerning conditions across the water. The most of these reports are inspired by some interest seeking its own end. One often may find in the same issue of the same paper two contradictory stories of personal visits to Russia, or Germany, or France, or Turkey. Some of the war talk in Ameica is to frighten us into increasing our preparations for war. But we have not the slightest idea of another war as imminent. Europe is as good as bankrupt. Besides the consciousness of her politicians that financial ruin is staring her in the face, her people have had all the war they purpose to have. Those who "pay in peace and die in war" are no longer willing like dumb beasts to be prodded into front lines and mowed down by cannon, or sent into slimy trenches to play hide and seek with death. This last war has determined the multitudes who have usually been marched on to the battlefield to be shot, in place of the rulers who started the quarrel, to have something to say themselves about this method of settling the differences between nations.

What may happen in distant years, no man knows, but, unless all sanity and sense vanish from the minds of the world's best business men, and humanity goes mad, another European war is not near at hand. There have been other dark hours when men have despaired and prophesied only evil, yet a better day has dawned and the world moved onward.

Let us not forget, little as modern nations have recognized it during recent years in their councils, that there is One who "hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation; that they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after Him and find Him." And find Him soon or late they will.—Our Dumb Animals.

SAVE THE COUNTRY CHURCH.

It is declared that within the past five years, in the one State of Kansas, no fewer than two hundred church organizations have been abandoned. This is because the automobile has made is possible for the farmers to go to the cities easily, and they have joined the better equipped churches there.

But there are thousands of things that the country comunity needs that the city church cannot give it. The automobile which takes the farmer to the city ought to gather large numbers of farmers together in one locality, where they can build up a strong rural church, ministering to the special needs of the farm community. This implies, of course, co-operation among the denominations and a fusion of churches according to the preferences of the majority, so that the community church in one place shall be Methodist, in another Presbyterian, and so on. But farmers are sensible people, and they may be trusted to solve this problem finally in the right day.—"Arrow," in The Christian Endeavor World.

February 13, 1923.

Dear Editor: Since conference I have received many inquiries as to what I am doing. Well, in about 48 hours after the close of conference, I was offered the First Christian Church in Reidsville. However, I waited nearly a month before accepting it, hoping that I would find a suitable place in the Methodist Protestant Church. I had offers of other places, and I here wish to thank all who were interested in my work.

On December 10 I entered upon the work in Reidsville. I have a good church, practically new, built in 1914. Sunday school and congregation have grown by leaps since I came here. Sunday school has increased 133 per cent. The night when most snow and ice of the winter was on the ground we had 38 at prayer service. I have a fine people here.

I was asked a few days ago by an M. P. if I was as well satisfied as I was when working in the Methodist Protestant Church. My answer, "Yes. I did not have to compromise any principle in accepting this work, and then its growth has been all one could wish, yes, even more. It makes one enjoy the work when it is growing. How could I be otherwise than contented?" I have read with much interest the reports that come out in the Herald ,and here is what the reports show, that nearly every Sunday school has gone down this winter, and church and prayer services to nothing. One church prayer service on a bad night had two present, another three and so on. Thirty-eight has been the smallest yet in the Reidsville Christian church.

I have found several Methodist Protestants here, been living here for years and had not been found by the pastor here, or who had been here, for this is not a censure of Brother Williams. And some others even, that have their membership here, go to the Baptist church to Sunday school. Here is seen the loyalty of our people. I am in a position now to speak my mind about some things I have been aware of for years.

There was a rare treat here in Reidsville last week, an Older Boys' Conference for Rockingham county. I think every county should try and have such a conference to bring the boys together, that they might see each other, and then the addresses were simply fine, and that does not express it. If some of our preachers could have heard C. C. Poindexter on the "Moral Value of Athletics" and an address by Harry F. Comer, they could never say again that our university was, or is, a hot-bed of atheism.

May God bless all, and if anyone is tempted to take issue, why just write a red-hot letter to boost our College.

Yours fraternally, J. A. Ledbetter.

THE "TEN DEMANDMENTS."

A big business firm in Western Canada has hung in a conspicuous place in its works the following "Ten Demandments" for the benefit of its employees:

1—Don't lie. It wastes my time and yours. I am sure to catch you in the end, and that is the wrong end.

2—Watch your work, not the clock. A long day's work makes a long day short, and a short day's work makes my face long.

3—Give me more than I expect, and I will give you more than you expect. I can afford to increase your pay if you increase my profits.

4—You owe so much to yourself you cannot afford to owe anybody else. Keep out of debt, or keep out of my shop.

5—Dishonesty is never an accident. Good men, like good women, never see temptation when they meet it.

6—Mind your own business, and in time you'll have a business of your own to mind.

7—Don't do anything here which hurts your self-respect. An employee who is willing to steal for me is willing to steal from me.

8.—It is none of my business what you do at night. But if dissipation affects what you do the next day, and you do half as much as I demand, you'll last half as long as you hoped.

9—Don't tell me what I'd like to hear, but what I ought to hear. I don't want a valet to my vanity, but one for my dollars.

10—Don't kick if I kick. If you're worth while correcting you're worth while keeping. I don't waste time cutting specks out of rotten apples.—American Boy.

BITS OF CHEER.

Catherine of Siena, whatever her sufferings, was always jocund, "ever laughing in the Lord." The blind Madame du Deffand rejoiced that her affliction was not rheumatism; Spurgeon's receipt for contentment was never to chew pills, but to swallow the disagreeable and have done with it. Essipoff, when commiserated on the smallness of her hands, insisted that longer ones would be cumbersome. Robert Schauffler's specific for a blue Monday is to whistle all the Brahms tunes he can remember. Dr. Cuyler, when very ill, replied to a relative's suggestion of the glorious company waiting him above: "I've got all eternity to visit with those old saints, I am in no hurry to go;" and old Aunt Mandy, when asked why she was so constantly cheerful, replied, "Lor, chile, I jes' wear this world like a loose garment."—Exchange.

—Let us hope that the bull-fight which it is rumored is to take place in Wichita, Kansas, will be prohibited by the state authorities. It would be a sorry piece of advertising for Kansas and a disgrace to the country at large. Many appeals to Governor Allen to prevent this have been sent.—Our Dumb Animals.

SERMON TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

The Grace of Contentment.

We are living in an age of unrest. The industrial world is in a turmoil. The capitalist is planning for larger dividends on his investments. The laborers are clamoring for higher wages. Strikes and counter strikes are the order of the day. The social realm is stirred by petty pealousies and ambitions. The political world is in a ferment. National distrust is plainly evident. Disregard of the rights of nations is boldly declared. Treaty obligations are trampled under feet. Unholy discontent is rampant everywhere.

Worldwide conditions are at wide variance from the royal law and the golden rule. Nineteen centuries of the gospel leaves much land yet to be conquered. Christianity has not, however, proved a failure. Far from it. Its many triumphs are large and lasting. But its herculean task is just begun. To reproduce the spirit of Christ in individual, industrial and national life is the all-embracing mission of the gospel. And one of the most important, as well as one of the rarest, elements of the mind of the Master is the grace of contentment.

The Apostle emphasizes the value of this trait of godliness. ''But godliness with contentment is great gain.'' Let us address our prayerful attention to the nature, conditions, and benefits of contentment. First let us note

The Nature of Contentment.

Christian contentment is not inherited or acquired indolence. The lazy man, it is true, is contented in a way. He is content to do nothing, to have nothing, and to be nothing. But it is the contentment of failure. He is satisfied to miss his calling in life. He is content to disappoint the purpose for which he was put into the world. He is willing to ignore every opportunity and shirk every responsibility.

And godly contentment is not the cowardice that fears to face life's problems and difficulties. Not a few are content to lie down on their jobs rather than shoulder the attending hardships. Others are pleased to retreat before defiant opposition. Still others are seeking the line of least resistance in the attainment of private ends. Surrender to evil influences is the contentment of disaster, death, and damnation.

And this gainful contentment is not indifference to the call of duty. It is not turning the deaf ear to the cry of distressed humanity. It is not, ostrich-like, burying one's head in the sands of worldly ease. It is not forgetfulness of ''the rock from whence we are hewn.''

True contentment is repose in the face of danger, resignation amid the perils of adversity, assurance in the shadows of uncertainty, quietude during storm and stress, confidence in the hour of failure, and blessed hope at the crossing of the river.

Next let us consider

The Conditions of Contentment.

Faith in God is the main condition of a contented mind and life. Faith recognizes the all-sufficiency of Christ to supply every need, to solve every difficulty, to sidetrack every opposition, to dissolve every doubt, to remove every peril, to impart strength for every task, and to make sure of ultimate victory. Faith relies upon God to assume the most minute care of body, mind, and spirit. Faith depends upon the higher Wisdom to guide the faltering footseps along the pathway of life. Faith appropriates the hidden power that helps over the hard places, that laughs at impossibilities and says, ''It shall be done.'' And faith foresees the final glory of its achievements.

''They see the triumph from afar,
By faith they bring it nigh.''

Where faith rules there is peace, assurance, contentment. ''Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee.'' Discontent is evidence of a sore lack of faith.

Consecration is another valuable condition of contentment. Worry is impossible where consecration is complete. When all possessions, talents, time, problems, doubts, and fears are given over entirely into the hands of God, there is not the least thing left to worry about. The all-wise Sovereign demands complete consecration in order that He might do with us and for us ''exceeding above all that we ask or think.'' ''Yield yourselves to God,'' and, if need be, let God do the worrying. Surely He doesn't have to worry. Nothing is too hard for Him to undertake and accomplish. Unbroken peace is theirs who leave all in the hands of the Father of mercies. ''Great peace have they which love thy law; and nothing shall offend them.''

Finally let us note

The Benefits of Contentment.

''Godliness with contentment is great gain.'' This means that to be contented adds worth to the Christian religion. It brings to life a larger and sweeter joy. ''Blessed are the poor in spirit; for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.'' Happiness is the portion of all who are content to be poor, either by force of circumstances or by an act of dedication of all to God. It is not the possession of riches but the unholy greed for them that robs so many of true happiness. It is the love of money, or pleasure, or fame, that is the root of all evil. ''But they that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition. For the love of money is the root of all evil; which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows.''

Another benefit of contentment is the lengthening of one's life. The historian, George Bancroft, was once asked to state the secret of his long life. And he replied that it was due to the fact that he never worried. For worry saps the energies, undermines the constitution, and weakens the vitality of thousands who fill premature graves. The contented person has a larger lease on life, because all his faculties are not harassed by fears and doubtful forebodings.

Still another benefit of contentment is the larger opportunity for self-improvement. A contented man will put in better work from day to day. A contented student will acquire knowledge more rapidly. And a contented child of God will more surely ''grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.'' Therefore exercise always the grace of contentment. For ''godliness with contentment is great gain.''

FORWARD TO CHRIST.

The ejaculation, "Back to Christ," is sometimes heard, as though men had gotten ahead of Christ. The fact is, men are far behind Christ, and need to look forward and move forward to find Him.. The search for Christ will be disappointing as long as men look for Him where He is not and never was. And He must be sought with the heart and with an honest heart. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." Christ was manifested to bring men back into communion with God, to bring about perfect harmony between the life of man and the life of God. That is His great office today. He is today as ever the Doorway. He stands between us and Heaven. When we look for Him as the true way of life (the way, the truth and the life), we may find Him. And when we find Him we should see in Him more than a figure-head: we should recognize His unique and mighty power as the Savior of the human soul from sin, His divine power to start within us a new life, and His fatherly care to train us up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. When we find Him and become aware of His power and commit ourselves to Him, our fortune is made—we are admitted to the heavenly kingdom—we are children of God—we have begun to enjoy our heavenly inheritance. Christ is no longer afar off—He is within us—within us the hope of glory—within us the power that will give us the victory and bring us to glory. When Christ is thus enthroned in our lives, we will feel ourselves anchored to a sure hope. We will not need an infallibble pope because we have an infallible Christ. We will not need an infallible bible because we have an infallible Christ.

Forward to Christ! Let all men join in this forward movement, and the millennium will be here.

—Brother Pierce is unquestionably right about it. People moving and settling near a church of their own denomination should transfer their membership. Church membership means or should mean devotion to the cause of Christ, such devotion as will lead to the best personal effort to make the cause of Christ triumphant. The best personal effort can be put forth in co-operation with others, and in the nature of the case with others where one is. Widely scattered Christians cannot well work together. A man who has no disposition to join in the work of Christ where he is may well doubt whether he has the Spirit of Christ. And "if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." This is a very important matter, brethren. Not only should the person who has moved be concerned to place himself in right working relationship to the church, but the pastor from whom he goes and the pastor to whom he should go should both be concerned and heartily co-operate in enlisting the transferred worker where he can be most effective for the kingdom.

Pastors sometimes get into the habit of speaking of members of the church as "my members." They are "your members" in a very relative sense. They are Christ's members in an absolute sense and He claims them for His work where they can best serve. What Brother Pierce is finding at St. Paul other pastors are finding at other places. It is a situation that calls for concerted action on the part of pastors. There should be no jealousy or narrow thought of aggrandizing one church at the expense of another, but a common desire to build up the church of Christ.

PRAYER.

Eternal God, our Heavenly Father, we thank thee that thou hast permitted us to come to the threshold of another year. As we began this journey through the weeks and the months stretching out ahead of us, we pause for a little while to ask thy special blessing and to seek thy guidance along the way we expect to travel. If we live this year through, we desire our lives to count for thee and for the glory of thy dear Son, our Savior. If at some place on the journey thou shouldst call us home we desire to be ready to meet thee face to face and to hear thee say, "Well done." We thank thee for past mercies and for countless blessings; for the love wherewith thou hast loved us; for thy word which has been our guide book through life; and most of all, for thy dear Son, our risen and ascended Lord. For all that has made life worth living we give thee our thanks. Make this new year to be rich in blessing, and if thou dost permit us to travel through it to the end, let it be the best year of our lives because we have had fellowship with Christ. In his name we ask it. Amen.—Aquilla Webb, D. D.

It is the grand endeavor of the gospel to communicate God to men.—Horace Bushnell.

—Rev. A. D. Shelton, accompanied by Rev. J. T. Sisk, of Concord, came to Greensboro on Monday and went to Mt. Pleasant and spent the night with Brother Millaway. Brother Shelton is studying the problem of church enlargement at Concord.. More room is needed to provide for a growing Sunday school and congregation. Various plans have been proposed. Brother Shelton wants to be sure of the best way. We hope he and his people will find a way out that will gain the end in view and give general satisfaction.

—It remains to be seen how France's effort to collect reparation funds from Germany will result. German miners and railroad men have quit work in large numbers. Unless France can man the works and continue the work her effort will fail, but she declares that she is there (in the Ruhr valley) to stay until she gets complete satisfaction from Germany.

BELIEF IN GOD.

Belief is a mighty word. It seems to some of us such an abstraction. It does not appear to have any personality in it. And yet God says that it is belief in Jesus which is the irresistible power that overcomes the world. Many a man is a weakling today in the church, because he has no overwhelming and dominating faith in Jesus Christ as the Son of God. No mere belief in Jesus as a man, however perfect, can give the Christian the power to overcome "this present, evil world." —Exchange.

FAITH.

Each day man lauches out into the unknown. Each day he comes face to face with problems which require solution; and such solutions oftentimes do not seem to bring him closer to his ideal, but the reverse. Yet the man who attains does not become baffled by adversity, but, with his eyes on the goal, passes on and on until he has achieved.

We discover behind each and every step on the ladder of fame the small but all-powerful word "Faith." We agree that a task without a purpose is irksome and is an inevitable failure. So likewise a life that has no goal is a failure because there is no basis of faith.—Exchange.

IN THY HAND, LORD.

My times are in Thy hand, O Lord! And surely, that is the best. Were I to choose, they should be in no other hands, neither mine own, nor any others. When He withholds mercies or comforts for a season, it is but till the due season. Therefore it is our wisdom and our peace to resign all things into His hands, to have no will nor desires, but only this, that we may still wait for Him. Never was any one who waited for Him miserable with disappointment.—Robert Leighton.

LOOKING BACKWARD.

Brother Powell's communication last week struck me in a reminiscent vein. Especially his first pair of pants. (They used to call them breeches or trousers.) This caused me to remember my first pair. (I'll call them breeches, for that is what they called them before that Fort Sumter episode in —61.) My mother made them. I do not know just how long they were, but they reached somewhere in the neighborhood of terra firma, nearly as long as Lincoln said a man's legs ought to be. She made the ‘‘galluses’’ too, to keep them from coming off. Didn't have suspenders then. Hadnd't got so dignified as all that. There was no rubber in the ‘‘galluses’’ to make them ‘‘smell’’ when a boy stood by a big roaring fire, warming his back. They were made of ‘‘factory cloth.’’ They call it ‘‘sheeting’’ now. About all the difference in the cloth is that the ‘‘factory cloth’’ was good enough and strong enough to hold up a boy's breeches, while the more dignified ‘‘sheeting’’ would be an uncertain proposition. Uncertain where his pants would be at the end of a day's romp. But these were ‘‘good old times.’’ Of course some of the up-to-date ones won't believe it, because they didn't live back there—but some of us did—lived then, and live still. We've seen both sides. Not only was the ‘‘factory cloth’’ ‘‘worth carrying home,’’ in those days, but that ‘‘made at home’’ was still better.

Of course the most of the cloth in those days, 60 years ago, or more, was made at home. Good old jeans and linsey for winter and cotton for summer. We didn't have coal-tar dyes, ‘‘made in Germany’’ then, but just as nice black, blue, red, and green, made of indigo, madder, venitian and other colors. The coverlets and counterpanes of those days beat the factory products of these days ‘‘all holler,’’ whatever that means. And while the women folks carded, spun and wove all the beds, still they had time to work in the garments for the family, and clothing for the beds, still they had time tow ork in the garden, bind after the reapers in harvest time, cook for ‘‘shuckings,’’ visit their neighbors, have quiltings, attend church in mid-week, and camp meetings for weeks together. No knitting or sewing machines—everything done by hand—but it was done well. Didn't have to be done over at once. A garment lasted. So did a blanket, sheet, coverlet, or quilt. It takes just as long to make a garment out of ‘‘plant-bed cover,’’ moonshine, ectoplasm (I believe they say spirits are clothed with this latter something), or some other cheat, as of real, honest, durable cloth. Why is there all this modern cheat? Is it because we have no sense, and are reverting back to monkeys? Or is it because the manufacturer knows that good, honest hand work is of the past, and they have the monopoly, and that the public is at their mercy, and they'll get while the getting is good''? We'll not press this too far lest somebody squeal. But there's something puzzling about it, all the same. It may be evolution, high tariff, prohibition, or because the other fellow's in office. But somehow we do not believe that it is either, or all of these, but just, common, ordinary greed and gouge. The more we pay for cloth, the lighter the weight—the fewer to the ‘‘pick.’’

But we've got off somewhat in our reminiscence. Let us get back to the time when we could sit by the roaring winter fire and eat apples by the basketful, ‘‘without money and without price.’’ Now it's five cents apiece, and many little boys and girls do not have the five cents. But this was before the speculator had cornered and gobbled up everything —the jobber, the wholesaler, the retailer, and all the other ‘‘tailers.’’ We just had apples in those days—to eat, not to sell and speculate on. Now some modern, up-to-date one may shake his head and say, ‘‘I don't believe it.’’ But it was even so, six decades ago. Good old ‘‘Limertwigs’’ and ‘‘Never-fails,’’ and other kinds too. But those were days of frugality and simplicity—and ignorance(?). We hadnd't learned so much then. We sat in the corner of the great fire-place and talked of witches and ghosts, and Revolutionary heroes. We had not learned that the Bible was poorly inspired, if at all, and that man is a brute product, instead of being made in the image of God. We've learned some wonderful things in these days of five-cent apples, ‘‘sorry’’ cloth, short dresses, low dresses, and no dresses, but breeches. There is on old Book that they used to swear by, because they didn't have any more sense than to believe it true, that says something about a man not wearing a woman's garb, nor a woman a man's. It also says something about the woman dressing in ‘‘modest apparel.’’ But of course that old Book is thrown on the scrap-heap by many, and some never did have any use for it. Still the government and courts are old fogyish enough to swear folks by it. And one of our poets said something about ‘‘lack of modesty being lack of sense.’’ But of course the ‘‘wisdom of the ancients’’ cuts no figure now. Of course the race never did have any sense until it learned that it came from brutes ‘‘All that ever came before’’ were fools and idiots. How such a fool, idiotic rabble could have ever built the pyramids of Egypt, planned and constructed the temple of Solomon, the walls and gardens of Babylon, the temple of Baalbec, and hundreds of other great things, the remains of which show for themselves, is a problem hard to solve. But it requires greater faith—credulity—to believe in evolution than in revelation. And as we haven't faith enough for evolution we have to be contented to remain among the common, old fashioned herd that accept revelation. We are not high-browed enough to believe God first had to make some kind of a brute out of which to make man. I can't understand why an intelligent man will commit the asinine act of professing to believe in the Old Book that folks swear by, and evolution at the same time. The two never can be reconciled. One or the other is a pseudonym—a polite name for a lie. And as I haven't faith enough to believe the Bible a lie, I throw evolution overboard, to any kind of monster that can swallow it, though it cause a great deal of amazement among the high-brows. Now just a little thought, cogitation, mental emanation, or something of a like kind: We saw a little brown, reddish looking monkey in a box in a waiting-room munching and nibbling at an apple, and looking foolish, or silly. That's the way he looked to me, as I studied the expression of his eyes, and his entire demeanor. I compared him with the horse and dog, near by, and they both, or each, manifested, to our mind, far more intelligence than the foolish, silly monkey. There is far more dignity and intelligence manifested in the eye of the dog or horse, than in the moonkey. Did you ever think of this? Did you ever compare the facial expression of the monkey with that of the dog or horse, and see how far superior the latter two are to the former? If you haven't, try it. The monkey is inane and silly in comparison. Some have been led astray on the monkey because he cuts a few little silly antics and stands on his hind legs. This cuts no figure; a bear can stand on his hind legs, and so can other animals. A black snake can stand upright, without any legs. The dog and horse are useful animals; eves the black snake's good to clean out the rats. But of what good is the monkey, but to act the fool and entertain some folks of monkeyish minds. But let us get back to our reminiscent vein. Think of the corn shuckings of sixty years ago! What stacks of pumpkin pies! The present day shuckings are tame affairs in comparison. Everybody turned out—old and young, male and female, big and little, white and black. And how the ears flew over the long corn-pile! And the small boys romped in the shucks. But at the house was another scene. That enormous, princely supper was in preparation. A big roaring fire in the ‘‘big house’’ (parlors had not been invented) and kitchen too, with some of the older persons sitting around—some with clay pipes with long reed stems, so they could light the pipes without leaving their seats, but sticking the pipe under the ‘‘fore-stick’’ in the hot embers. They discussed deer-hunting, turkey-hunting, fishing—stories of colonial days, the Revolutionary war, the Tories, Col. Fanning, some of the fights of other days, and the ‘‘bullies,’’ and other things too numerous to mention. It was a jolly good time. But in the kitchen there were stacks of pumpkin pies, potato pies, both custards and ‘‘sliced pies,’’ chicken pies, mince pies, and even pot-pie. There was pork and turnip, bacon and cabbage, sweet potatoes and Irish, beef or mutton—sometimes both—chicken and dumplings, and maybe turkey, to say nothing of butter and milk, coffee, ‘‘light bread’’ and biscuit, pickles and sorghum. And I wish to say, in passing, that the beef was delicious enough for the gods, and so was the mutton. Beef made of ‘‘nubbins’’ and ‘‘punkins,’’ stall-fed, beat Armour's and the local butcher's hand-out so far, that there is no comparison. And it sold for five and six cents per pound. It's by the beef, like the cloth, the more you pay the ‘‘sorrier’’ it is. And still some folk contend the world is on the up-grade, and will soon be in the Land of Beulah and at the pearly gate. But this was before the days of wooden tooth picks (every fellow carried his own tooth-pick, made of a goose quill) and before such things as calories, proteids, protein, carbohydrates, vitamines and other things that they have galore nowadays. Dietetics and dietitians had not been invented, but we had cooks instead, and something to eat. But the boys and girls grew robust, fresh and ruddy, just the same. Lip-sticks and manicuring outfits had not appeared, and powder and paints were a rarity. The girls were just as pretty, and got married just as easily as today. And they were just as attractive with their long, and high dresses on, and their modest demeanor. The "flapper" hadn't appeared. She's one of the modern improvements. The last thing from Paris, New York, Chicago, or some other modern Sodom. Neither had cigarettes, coca-cola, chewing gum, joy rides, and the movies come on the scene to debauch and deprave the young. Of course all these things are improvements, up-to-date, making the world a carnal paradise for carnal fools. Oh! yes, those were days of blissful ignorance. "Where ignorance is bliss 'tis folly to be wise."

When that corn-pile was shucked, and that supper eaten, the boys and younger men, many of them, resorted to the yard to try their strength at such plays as "dog-scratch," or taking the stick, pulling heavy, etc., and the way the soil was torn up, was something to see. Athletics was another thing of which they were blissfully ignorant. But they knew how to run and jump and wrestle, pull heavy, play scratch, and perform other stunts of strength and activity, as much so as today, and that "without money and without price." Didn't have to pay some fellow, called a professor a big salary to teach them how to play. They just learned it themselves. But of course they were ignorant, didn't know any better than to just play without a teacher. But they saved their money, and learned to play, but of course were ignorant of "athletics." Perhaps some of our up-to-dates will think this a great misfortune. If they didn't have "athletics" they had something else just as good, and like the five-cent beef, may have been better. But time would fail us to tell all about those shuckings of sixty years ago. Of the games played in the house as well as outside. One of them was called "brogue." If some of our modern youngsters were to get into this game they would get something on their backs which they no doubt need but have never had. Well, everybody wasn't good then, nor everything good, but we didn't have so many bad things. We didn't have any germs, if we did we didn't know it; no bootleggers, no flappers, no cigarette suckers, no coca-cola fiends, no chewing-gum inanities, no automobile joy-riding, no movies—no Fatty Arbuckles and Mary Pickfords. Yes, we were minus all these bad things in those days, and it seems to me that it was a better age in which to rear boys and girls. You could even tell a twelve-year-old girl from her grandmama by the length of her skirt. Often you can't do it now. O, tempora! O mores! Well, then, what more? The poorest of the people in those days could have milk and butter for the babies and children. Now the price is prohibitive for many, and the children have to go poorly nourished. But this is modern improvement. Call it that if you will, but we have another name. Greed, extortion, gouge, somewhere along the line. But we must close these observations and comparisons, though the field by no means be covered. Still somebody is responsiblbe and somebody will have to pay.

Please let me say a church with the pastor and stewards free from the habit the worm enjoys, and free from the stifling smoke that is attached to the form the poor old worm won't deal with.

A teacher had taken a great deal of time trying to show the children the great wrong of the use of tobacco. To impress the children in a way they would not forget the awful harm it was doing, a debate was given. The subject was, "Resolved, That the use of tobacco is a sin."

Every child handed in his paper on the affirmative. Some of the harms given were:—

I have no confidence in a preacher that uses tobacco, for I don't think God wants a person to preach that can't quit it. It destroys the body, which is the temple of God. No murderer can enter the kingdom of heaven. And when we destroy our body we are killing ourselves.

Many other reasons were given for its being harmful.

Will you tell me how a teacher can do effective work when she teaches the harm of tobacco and the preacher uses it in any and all ways. Parents are prayerfully saying, What shall we do? The pastor is using it in my home, and I've always told my children, Touch not, taste not, handle not, it will bring sorrow. Give us a church free from the tobacco habit, and we will announce that our church is a clean church.

HUMILITY.

"Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." Unbelievable! Has not the short sword of the Roman Legion, has not the Senate in Rome, something to do with the inheritance of the earth?

How dare this Man say that great conquerors, Alexander and Caesar, who were many things but not meek, did not own the earth.

There is just that little word, "inherit," which makes all the difference in the world. The Goths might sack Rome; but where is the Gothic Empire of the Mediterranean today? "As proud as a Spaniard," was a proverb of the Middle Ages, but the Spaniard has not inherited the earth. Napoleon could say to his guardsman, standing as the sentinel at his door, "You are tall, but I am great." The descendants of Napoleon have not inherited the earth.

The strength of America came from her forefathers; people persecuted for their faith in the home countries, who in meekness crossed the sea to seek new homes in the wilderness of the New World.

Pride cometh before the fall—sometimes the way is long that leads to the fall, but the fall in inevitable. It is not only the chrch that has grown from the strange seed, the blood of martyrs. When men are broken to their knees and heads are bowed, there is much hope for such.—Exchange.

A NEW SELF MAKES A NEW YEAR.

The pleasure with which we greet a new year springs chiefly from the hope that it will prove new. Disappointed because the closing year has not been what we planned, and hoping that this new lease of time is bearing to us the opportunity to achieve the good we expected in the old year, we welcome it with a cheer. It is a new chance.

The old year contained much that we wish had been left out and lacked much that we wish it had possessed. This has characterized so many of the past years that we are in danger of becoming cynical concerning this hope. Banish such a temptation. We may not be so credulous as in youth, but he is to be pitied whose heart does not throb a little faster at the approach of this new lease of time. It may and should be richer in material gain, in developed character, and in uplifting ministries than any of the yars that have drifted into the past.

May it not be that what we most need is not a new year, but a new self? We are prone to look beyond ourselves for the things we desire or fear, forgetting that our world is largely within ouselves. We look through colored glasses and do not suspect that the things we see take their color from the glasses on our face. We are dissatisfied with last year, and forgetting that a change of skies does not change the traveler, we enter the new year expecting to find it altogether different. But, alas, the heart we carry within us and the memory that follows hard after us will color next year if they are retained. And so, after all, may it not be that the thing we long for is not a new year, but a new self?

At this point the Gospel meets us with an offer to make us new. "If any man be in Christ Jesus he is a new creature." When that is achieved "old things pass away and all things become new." But the "newness" comes from within and not from without. With some of us this change will commence with the "new birth." This is more than reformation. Reform deals with the exterior, regeneration deals with the interior. The new birth gives a new moral start. It wipes out the sinful past and gives a new chance.. If we have never experienced this change, the crossing of this boundary is the accepted time Commence by surrendering to God. There is something inspiring and inviting in such a time. It speaks with peculiar force. It appeals to us as no other time does.

But this day has an appeal to Christ's followers also. Do we not look forward to the new year as a new opportunity? We are not satisfied with the old year. Possibly the world has been regaining its hold upon us. The prayer meeting and the Sabbath school have lost their charm, and only a sense of duty holds us faithful to the public worship. David had been an officer in the church for years when he wrote the prayer, "Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me." Do we not need to make that prayer our own? Did we ever need it more than now? Spiritual cleansing is a continual work. "The inward man must be renewed day by day." We can live aright only as we are "in Christ," that is, within the circle of His life and influence. Only as we move back into His life more fully will we find the year "new."

May our readers all have "A Happy New Year," and may they know in a blessed measure the meaning of the words which John heard from the lips of the enthroned Christ, "Behold, I make all things new."—United Presbyterian.

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

Since our arrival in Greensboro, January 12, I have visited Grace Church, Greensboro; Siler City; and the Richland charge. The work at Grace church is progressing splendidly under the leadership of Brother Stubbins. His sickness and the sickness of quite a few of his members has handicapped the work a bit, but things are going well now. I enjoyed preaching to the splendid audience which greeted me.

At Siler City I preached twice and held the first quarterly conference for that charge. The people seem hopeful of good results on the work this year, even though they have no pastor at present. Through co-operation with a committee in each church there we hope to have preaching at Liberty twice on each second Sunday, and at Siler City twice on each third Sunday until the Westminster Theological Seminary closes in May and then Rev. Fred W. Paschall will take that charge for the summer months. While on Richland charge I preached at Cedar Falls, Brower's Chapel and Charlotte. The weather and roads were bad, so the crowds were small. Those who did come gave earnest attention to the word. After conferring with the people at these three churches, I have asked Rev. W. F. Kennett to serve Richland circuit for the remaining part of the year. Brother Kennett will preach his first sermon on the charge at Charlotte church next Sunday, February 4, at 11 o'clock. Some weeks ago I arranged with Rev. D. A. Morgan to preach once per month at each one of the churches on the Kernersville charge. So at present all of our charges are supplied. May God bless the workers while they push the work.

February Stewardship Month.

By action of the Annual Conference February has been set apart as Stewardship Month. The gospel of Christian giving needs to be preached just as well as the gospel of Christian living. In fact it is poor Christian living that does not result in liberal Christian giving. Hence, I am trusting that every pastor in the conference will preach at least one earnest sermon on Christian giving to each of his congregations during February. I have no disposition to dictate to any pastor what he shall preach, but there is a splendid field of gospel thought here which ought to be brought to the attention of our people.

The Annual Conference Budget.

In connection with your teaching on Christian Stewardship, please do all you can to raise every dollar possible on the annual conference budget during February. Our conference treasurer is hard pressed for funds to meet current expenses duing the early months of the conference year, so if all the charges will make an earnest effort to collect as much as possible of the annual conference budget during February and will send all amounts raised to Rev. S. W. Taylor, Burlington, N. C., you will very greatly help yourselves and others. I am glad to report that nearly all the pastors have promised to do this.

February 4 I plan to visit West End and St. Paul charges; February 11 Reidsville and Draper; February 18 Burlington and Graham.

Spring is rapidly approaching and we are already thinking about and planning for those district meetings. Rev. Lawrence C. Little is expected to arrive in the State this week and he and I, together with the district chairmen, will be planning these meetings soon.

Yours in the Master's service,

A. G. Dixon.

A WORD OF APPRECIATION.

Though it be a little late, I wish to hereby express my appreciation of the Superannuate Christmas Fund. To all who gave, and to all who initiated and carried forward the movement. We superannuates are not such by choice, but by force of conditions and circumstances over which we have no control. We would prefer to be on the firing-line, in the thick of the fight. But because we are not so placed, do not think we can do nothing. Some of us can preach as well as ever, and perhaps better—better than when boys, in demand. So, please give us a chance, when you can, and we'll do you no harm if we do you no great good. The fatal day is coming to all —the youngest in the conference—unless one is fortunate enough to ''die in the harness.''

Jack.

Jack was only a mule; but he was one of the best mules I have ever ''personally'' known. He was gentle, kind and true. He never balked. He never kicked his master or his master's children, though the children often played around his feet and rode upon his back. Jack pulled the plow day in and day out during the plowing season. He drew the wagon to the mill to have meal and flour made to feed his master's growing family. Jack was not only a good mule; but he belonged to one of the best men I have ever known. This man is Brother N. W. Gordon of Bethel, Flat Rock circuit. Jack was the first plow animal Brother Gordon ever owned and was only three years old when Brother Gordon came in possession of him.

One beautiful spring day, eighteen years later, we were in Brother Gordon's home, and when they were getting ready to drive the teams afield for the afternoon work Brother Gordon said to me, ''I will have to give Jack part of the crop this year, he is twenty-one years old.'' There were other and younger mules on the farm; but Jack had served so long and faithfully that this good man felt that the faithful old servant was worthy of special care and to become a pensioner, so Brother Gordon kept Jack and gave him all of the crop that he needed for I do not know how long.. ''How much then is a man better than a (mule) sheep?'' Matt. 12:12. And should not our old men who have borne the heat and burden of the day, and who have helped to build up our church—who have traveled in cold and heat before the days of good roads and autos, not have a part of the crop? Should we not make ample provisions for our superannuates?

Midway, Haw River Circuit.—Owing to sickness and death in our family, I have not sent a report from this place in some time. On December 16, after an illness of eight weeks, during which time there was much prayer offered for him, the Lord saw fit to take our precious Bernard, 17-year-old son, from us, and plant him in the heavenly garden. Since his going our hearts are sad, but heaven seems nearer and our Savior seems dearer. We feel that the whole church is striving harder to do their Master's will. Brethren, sisters, pray for us that we may be comforfed and that we may live as near right as we think he did.

Our pastor was with us Sunday, preached a good sermon, after which the Lord's supper was administered to a good part of the congregation. Brother Lowdermilk also opened the doors of the church and received the writer's husband, Mr. G. W. Apple, into church on profession of faith. This caused many hearts to rejoice. Some time before Christmas Dr. and Mrs. Johnson and two daughters came to us from Fair Grove Methodist Protestant church. We gladly welcome each one of these new members into our church. May we be a help to them and we feel sure they will be a help to us. Pray for us.

Mrs. G. W. Apple, Reporter.

January 29.

Harmony Grove, West Forsyth Circuit.—Just a few lines to let the Herald readers know that we are not dead and not all asleep. We reorganized Sunday school the first Sunday in the year. We elected W. L. Moser superintendent. Our attendance and collections so far have been splendid, and we trust they will continue. We have bright prospects for a good year's work. The people are taking an interest in the Lord's work here. And we are praying for this to be the best year we have ever had. Our pastor, Rev. A. M. Hamilton, accompanied by Brother H. F. Merritt of Jamestown, N. C., filled his regular appointment yesterday. He gave us another one of his good and helpful sermons. And we feel sure that every one went away feeling better.

We are glad that our pastor was permitted to come back on this circuit again. Brother Hamilton's family have all been sick with ''flu,'' but they are all better, we are glad to report.

Margaret Moser, Reporter.

West Forsyth Circuit.—We are very thankful that we still live. Our work has started off splendidly. We have been hindered much because so many of our people have been sick. Three churches on this charge have taken a long step forward: Harmony Grove, Tabernacle, and Union Hill. These churches are paying pastor's salary monthly, and all other claims quarterly. Brother W. L. Moser of Harmony Grove church is the one who made it easy for the members of his church to pay up monthly. He is chairman of the board of stewards and also treasurer. He said if any member could not have his part of the money ready to pay on the fourth Sunday in each month he would pay it for them, and then wait with them for his money until the end of the year if asked to do so. Brother Moser is superintendent of the Sunday school. The school is growing. Twenty-five new names have been added to the roll. Six new members have come to this church this month. Harmony Grove will go forward.

Three acres of land have been paid for and deeded to the trustees of the Methodist Protestant church. W. L. Moser has made another pledge of $300 on the new church. He is one of the most liberal men we have met.

W. A. Riding and family, John Riding and family, and W. L. Moser and family visited the pastor some time about the 15th.. Well, talk about pounding, but what they did for us will not be forgotten.

Last Sunday we were informed that a package had been left at Brother Moser's house. We are always invited to his house, and always happy because we have such a welcome. After enjoying the good dinner our car was loaded with many useful things. Among the gifts we note the beautiful set of dining room ware given by Mrs. Moser to Mrs. Hamilton. This alone is worth $25. We were given a new battery for our Ford by W. L. Moser, which he paid $25 for. May the Lord bless the work and make this servant a blessing to all on our work. I must close, for my letter is getting lengthy. May the Lord bless all. Yours in His name, A. M. Hamilton, Pastor.

Shady Grove, Tabernacle Circuit.—Since my last report to the Herald, there has been right much influenza in our neighborhood and therefore we have been neglecting our Sunday school. But we have turned over a new leaf and are going to make up for lost time.

Our superintendent, Mr. Pegg, has been confined to his bed with influenza, but is improving, we are all glad to say.

Mr. Burgess filled his appointment at Shady Grove Sunday and preached a very deep and impressive sermon. He told us how dangerous it is to put things off until tomorrow. Delay seems to be one of our main weaknesses. If we would stop and deeply consider how dangerous it is to put things oy, I am sure each one of us could and would do better and be more prompt—"Punctuality is one of the chief objects in life."

Sometimes it may seem we are just on the river bank ready to fall. Are we going to be able to swim? Then is when we need to have faith, and to be able to swim we must speak for Jesus any time, anywhere. He is always ready to lend a helping hand and will ever hear our prayers if we will go to him sincerely and earnestly.

We know there are many people who have wandered far away from the fold. They are wandering somewhere in darkness and cannot see their way home. Now can't we be real little missionaries and touch those wanderers and let them know the love of the Savior, and bring them safely to fold where they'll be sheltered from all harm. To be a real true hearted missionary we must start now, not tomorrow: for tomorrow we may not be here, but go now and give forth words of encouragement to those who are oppressed, dissatisfied and do not know what road to take. Comfort the sad and lonely. Pray for those who say all manner of evil against you. Always let God be with you whatever you may undertake. Pray from the heart, speak from the heart, work from the heart and God surely will abundantly bless you and there will be a great reward some day.

Vesta Lineberry.

Chapel Hill, Davidson Circuit.—Brother Short preached for us the third and fourth Sundays. He preached helpful sermons, if we will take heed. He told us about the many sins. May every church member do their duty and may we get on a higher plane of living. It seems that we are at ease in Zion: let us wake up. Congregation small both times. We are glad that we can have preaching the third and fourth Sundays part of the time.

Brother announced that we would take the sacrament the third Sunday in next month. There will be class meeting the second Sunday in next month. I am also glad of that: I have not been to one in many years. Brother Samuel Fine and Brother Henry Lomax are the class leaders. Hope it will be a good day; lots of young people around here were never at a class meeting.

We like our new preacher, think he will do good if the people will come out to hear him. It seems that members of the church would like to go to meeting. I do not understand why they do not. Let us all come together with love to each other. Why not? Come on, brother and sister. We have had no Sunday school this winter.

We lost one of our members, Brother Stokes Davis died. We will miss him in the community and the church. Lizzie Cranford.

Mt. Zion, Uwharrie Circuit.—Yesterday was our regular preaching day. Our new pastor was with us and delivered a good sermon to an attentive congregation, his subject being Religion. He has preached for us at this place twice. He preaches with great earnestness.. We believe if the members were as earnest about religion there would be great good accomplished on this charge this year.

The trustees are soliciting funds to cover our church some time this spring. They have subscribed to date $124.50. We have not had any Sunday school for the past month, but we have our literature and will have school if the weather is not too bad. Our superintendent, T. M. Briles, and family, have just recovered from an attack of "flu,". W. B. Miller and family also have it, but are improving.

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Swaim of Thomasville attended services at our church yesterday.

With best wishes to the readers of the Herald, Nannie Briles, Reporter.

MEETING OF JOINT COMMISSION.

The commission appointed by the Western North Carolina Conference of the M. E. Church, South, the North Carolina Conference of the M. E. Church, South, and the Methodidst Protestant Church of the North Carolina Conference held its first meeting on January 18, 1923, at West Market Street M. E. Church, Greensboro.

The purpose of the meeting was to seek to bring about a closer fellowship and more understandable co-operation between the two denominations — specifically in North Carolina.

The members of the commission from the M. E. Church, South, are, M. T. Plyler, Mr. Few, C. V. Culbreth, J. H. Barnhardt, F. N. Tate and J. F. Kirk.

Members of the M. P. Commission are, T. M. Johnson, L. F. Ross, R. C. Stubbins, J. H. Allen, R. F. Williams and J. D. Williams.

Those present at the meeting, of the M. E. Church, South, are, M. T. Plyler, C. V. Culbreth, J. F. Kirk and J. H. Barnhardt.

Members present from the M. P. Church, J. D. Williams, J. H. Allen, R. C. Stubbins, R. F. Williams, substituting for T. M. Johnson and L. F. Ross, R. M. Andrews and A. G. Dixon.

The meeting was opened by M. T. Plyler; A. G. Dixon conducted the devotional.

M. T. Plyler was elected chairman, R. C. Stubbins, secretary.

M. T. Plyler explained the purpose of the meeting as an effort to bring about a better understanding and co-operation between the two denominations in the state. Practically all the members present spoke on the subject and were favorable to such a movement. A motion was passed asking the annual conferences to make the organization permanent.

On motion A. G. Dixon and M. T. Plyler were made a committee to prepare an address to the participating conferences, to be published in the Methodist Protestant Herald and the North Carolina Christian Advocate, embodying such ideas of joint mediation as may be deemed advisable of the denominations.

The meeting then adjourned to meet upon call of the chairman. R. C. Stubbins,
Secretary.

BRAVE FIVE MINUTES LONGER.

The Duke of Wellington is credited with saying that the British soldier was not braver than the soldiers of other countries, but he was brave five minutes longer than they, and, of course, the result could only be one thing, namely, victory.

This is one of the great secrets of victory—to keep brave the last five minutes. Many an army has surrendered when just on the point of victory. And the same is true of many a man.

It is not more ability we need for our work—a very large majority are quite strong enough—but they need to be brave just five minutes longer. Suppose there are monotony, and disappointment, and annoyance. What of these things? They are not new. Every man who has ever done anything has met them all, and they have failed to daunt him.

It is a good thing to make up one's mind from the start not to run away from a difficulty, but to conquer it. Some one alse will complete the work we have run from, when perhaps we have done the heaviest part of it, but just failed to complete it.—East and West.

A TRUE DOG STORY.

A family in Troy, N. Y., having a false grate in one of the rooms of the house, placed some red paper behind it to give it the effect of fire. On one of the coldest days a dog belonging to the household came in from outdoors, and seeing the paper in the grate, deliberately walked up to it, lay down before it, and curled up in the best way to receive the glowing heat as it came from the fire. He remained motionless for a minute; feeling no warmth, he raised his head and looked over his shoulder at the grate; still feeling no heat, he went across and carefully applied his nose to the grate, and smelled it. It was as cold as ice. With a look of the most supreme disgust, his tail cured down between his legs, the dog trotted out of the room, not even deigning to cast a look at those in the room who had watched his actions and laughed heartily at his misfortune. That dog had reason as well as instinct.—Troy Times.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETING.

The Executive Committee of the General Conference met January 18, 1923, Rhode Island Avenue Church, Washington, D. C.

The devotion, Scripture reading and prayer, was conducted by Rev. C. D. Sinkinson, D.D.

There were present Rev. T. H. Lewis, D.D., Chairman, Rev. J. A. Selby, Rev. C. D. Sinkinson, Rev. T. M. Johnson, Messrs. Wm. E. Sankey, W. C. Scott.

Rev. T. H. Lewis, D.D., read report of his work as President of the General Conference since the July meeting. (Note.—There was no meeting held in October on account of change of date of an annual conference and consequent conflict of dates and demand upon the time of Chairman Lewis.) The report was approved, including recommendations, and ordered published in the church papers.

The Committee especially approves and recommends the proposition to appoint a commission to study our church finances and make recommendation to our next General Conference. Also the suggestion by Mr. H. C. Staley, General Church Treasurer, that an address by Rev. T. H. Lewis, D.D., on "Saint Paul as a Money Raiser" be published in pamphlet form and distributed as far as practical throughout our church.

The Treasurer's Report.

The treasurer has received from the various conferences and distributed to the Boards, May 1, 1922 to January 1, 1923, a total of $85,893.65 on the budget.

The report below is from July 1 to January 1. The rather considerable overdraft by the Board of Foreign Missions was allowed until the first of the year that some of the Board's Liberty Bonds might not have to be sold at a sacrifice. The Bonds have since been sold and the overdraft taken care of.

Note.—In each instance no mention is made of a balance due any board on July 1. Any such balance is included here in the sum named "receipts."

Foreign Missions, receipts $24,903 (cents are omitted in each instance), disbursements $33,693, overdraft $8,789. Home Missions, $58,609 (including general receipts, borrowed money, and transfer of funds), disbursements $57,813, balance $795.. Board of Education, receipts $25,612, disbursements $19,341, balance $6,270. Board of Young People's Work, receipts $7,179, disbursements $3,490, balance $3,688. Woman's Home Missionary Society, $7,514, disbursements $7,062, balance $452. Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, receipts $19,680, disbursements $19,449, balance $231. Old People's Home, receipts $918, disbursements $911, balance $7. Children's Home, receipts $918, disbursements $911, balance $7. Superannuates, receipts $5,128, balance $5,128. Million Dollar Fund, receipts $1,280, disbursements $1,030, balance $250. Interchurch, receipts $781, disbursements $634, balance $147. Budget, receipts $43,453, disbursements $43,262, balance $191. Near East, receipts $144, balance $144. Reserve Fund, balance $7,066. Home for the Aged, receipts $151. balance $151. Total Balance on Hand, $15,489. Notes payable for borrowed money, Baker, Watts & Co., Board of Education, $7,800; Board of Home Missions, $10,000; Board of Foreign Missions, $6,000; Woman's Home Missionary Society, $1,000; total $24,800.

Interpretation of Church Law.

1. The published minutes of the Colorado-Texas (colored) Conference for 1921 showed that the next conference was to meet "October 26." The president of the conference claimed that this was an error, and contrary to the action of the conference and to the customary date. He therefore published in the church papers a call for the meeting of conference October 18. No one took exception to this published notice, and the conference met on the day named and transacted the usual business, the greater part of the conference being in attendance. On October 26, however, a few ministers and laymen met and held a conference, transacted business.

The decision of the Executive Committee is that the second meeting was illegal: that not having made objection to the public notice they lost their right to protest or to refuse to attend the first meeting.

2. An elder losing his credentials, and applying for a duplicate, may, by consent of the conference, have new credentials issued, if the officers signing the original are available to sign the duplicate. If they are not, the conference may order the present president and secretary to issue a paper certifying that the holder was ordained at the date and place shown on the record, but may not issue new credentials.

3. "In case a preacher, because of his age, is unable to pass an examination according to the Discipline, and yet has preached for years, can he be lawfully ordained?"

No. But the Committee on Itinerancy and Orders may use their discretion as to the character of the examination.

4. The Monthly Meeting (Constitution, Article V) is the primary official meeting of the church. The Annual Meeting (Discipline, page 48) is one of the Monthly Meetings. The Monthly Meeting cannot take the place of other constituted bodies in the church, such as the quarterly conference. But it can do anything within the limit of church law which is not specifically assigned to some other official body.

5. "Is the quarterly conference the ruling authority of the local church in all the church offices?"

No. Officers are elected by the members of the church, and their duties are defined in the Discipline. They are amenable to the members of the church.

6. There is only one valid reason for refusing a letter of good standing to a member of the church, and that is that charges have been, or are about to be preferred against him. No name can be dropped from the register because the member does not contribute to the church. But he may be brought to trial for refusing to meet his obligations. The law also permits persons who cannot be found or who have ceased to take interest in the church to be dropped.

Communications.

Rev. C. E. Sheppard, D.D., presented his resignation as president of the Board of Publication. The resignation was accepted and Rev. C. M. Lippincott, D.D., was named in his place.

Mrs. Henry Hupfield, president of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, submitted a paper signed by the secretary of the Executive Committee of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, requesting the Executive Committee of the General Conference to grant permission that "the Thank-Offering be counted a special gift and not included in the budget of Woman's Foreign Missionary Society." The Executive Committee of the General Conference construes that it cannot change a rule of the General Conference, but that it is in no way in conflict with any rule of the General Conference for the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society to count the Thank-Offering as a special gift and not included in the budget: Provided it is made clear by the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society to churches and individuals contributing to the fund that it is special and not counted on the budget.

A telegram was received from Rev. A. E. Fletcher, D.D., president of the Washington Conference, urging that the President of the General Conference visit the Washington Conference. On motion of W. C. Scott, Rev. T. H. Lewis, D.D., President of the General Conference, was instructed to make such visit.

On motion the invitation from the Tiffin Church, Ohio, was accepted to held the next session of the General Conference in that church.

On motion it was decided to hold the next meeting in Baltimore during the first week in April, the exact date to be named by the Chairman.

There being no further business the Committee adjourned to meet in Baltimore in April, 1923, at the Call of the Chairman.

T. M. Johnson, Secretary.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.

By Dr. Crates S. Johnson, Forward Movement Secretary.

February is Stewardship Month, according to our forward movement program, and if the interest justifies it the time will be extended to include March.

This is an opportunity for pastors, Sunday school superintendents, women's societies and young people's organizations to give prominence to a fundamental but much neglected teaching of our religion.

The object is not to recure money, but to lift our people to a higher level of Christian life and service, for the principle of Christian stewardship put into practical operation will make for a better quality of religious experience, as well as a more vital and effective church life. There is scarcely a better or fore constructive piece of work that a pastor can do than to lead his people into the adoption of the stewardship principle.

Jesus had a great deal to say on the matter of property or money, and on stewardship. It is said that one verse in every seven of the Gospels and 16 of the 38 parables of Christ relate to stewardship. Stewardship was Jesus' philosophy of life. It should receive greater emphasis. It is a growing concern among all Christian people. There is a deep and wide-spread interest among the churches. Ralph Cushman asks: "What is stewardship but God's word to this generation?"

Literature upon the subject is abundant. Text-books have multiplied. Study-courses for young people have been prepared. Programs have been arranged for use of societies in their public meetings, and the truth has been pictured forth in drama and dialogue.

This department is desirous of helping any who may apply. We have access to valuable methods employed in other communions, and can offer homiletical suggestions, suggest textbooks and study-courses, etc., and literature on tithing at small cost. Arrangements have been made with the Layman Co., 35 North Dearborn St., Chicago, by which we can furnish literature of a certain class at 25 per cent of its list-price. The particulars of this offer, which is limited as to time, are enclosed with copies of a beautiful poster going out this week to the pastors. This poster is entitled, ''The Earth Is the Lord's'' and one is intended for each church. If you do not receive enough copies, please advise.

We would like to hear from our pastors telling us that they desire to observe Stewardship Month. As an inducement we will send to the first 250 pastors intending to put on a stewardship program a copy of either Cushman's ''The New Christian: Studies in Stewardship,'' or McConaughy's, ''Money, the Acid Test.''

THE WAY OUT.

One might suppose that people who oppose, will not help, foreign missions, act on the supposition that the enterprise is modern in conception and development. True, religious work for the heathen nations, as now conducted, was revived in modern times.

But, despite the fact that Christians failed in the past to measure up to their obligations and to the world's needs, God has sought throughout human progress to bring the race to light and life in its highest plane.

What was Abraham but a foreign missionary, for he was led of God into a strange land, and there laid the foundations of the Israelitish nation through whom knowledge of God was made known in their deliverance from Egypt, after they had grown as a mighty host there from Joseph's time, who himself was a foreign missionary, and, by adherence to righteousness and God, saved Egypt from famine and became a high official.

Exclusive as were the Jews, hedged in by divine and human enactments, separated by belief, customs, life and mission from all other people, yet they guarded the oracles of God, and shared in the unfolding of God's redemptive scheme whuch culminated in the advent and work of the Lord Jesus.

Was not Daniel a foreign missionary to Babylon, and were not the three Hebrew children the same, the one opening his window towards Jerusalem, braving kingly authority and the malice of enemies, and inviting death by praying to the living God, refusing to bow to idols, the creatures of men's hands.

The coming of the Son, the pouring out of the Holy Ghost, the establishing of the church, and its commission to make a conquest of the whole world are ample proofs of God's purpose, and of the duty of all Christians to actively share in the greatest work given of God to men to carry on.

The need of the hour to arouse the church to a full realization of its duty is a deep spiritual revival, and the teaching of a higher standard of devotion to the Christ and His kingdom.

One explains that to awaken such a revival ''is not to aim at this itself so much as to lead believers to a more complete separation from the world, and to an entire consecration of themselves, with all they have, to their Lord and His service.''

If pastors and people in their services would strive to realize they are in the presence of their King, and would concentrate their thoughts upon Him and upon His will, and recognize that He demands our surrender—the surrender of our will and of our life to Him to do His will in the strength of His might—great results might follow.

Can we not believe that Christ, our Lord, desires to have all His followers experience constantly His love in their hearts, to exercise triumphant faith, to make an absolute, passionate consecration to His service, to act as God's stewards in the use of money and possessions so as to share in the work ''to win for the Lamb that was slain the reward of his sufferings.''

Then there must be the appeal to God in prayer.

''The work is His; He cares for it.
The power is His; He gives it.
The church is His; He waits to use it.
The world is His; He loves it.
He can make His people willing in the day of His power.
He will hear the cries of His servants who give Him no rest.
He delights to prove His faithfulness in fulfilling His promises.''

Fred. C. Klein.

OUR CHURCH AND SEATTLE.

I don't know what others may say regarding this far-away field, but there is much that can be said that should appeal to our denomination at large and awaken a helpful interest in their brethren of the far Northwest.

Our Methodism has gone hand-in-hand with the growth of this great city, from the time it was a small frontier village on Puget Sound water front. The true and real history of Seattle will never be written if the story of the Methodist Protestant Church shall be omitted from its annals, with some space given to the lives and service of its heroic founders and pioneers. These men were not only founders of our Methodism, here, but their names are inseparably connected with the early growth and later development of the city of Seattle and state of Washington.

That is how old our Methodism is here and that is the prominence it had in the early days. However, for some reason it did not keep pace with the rapid growth of either the city or the state.. Other ecclesiasticisms outgrew us, though ours was one of the first two churches in the village on the water front.

The city has now grown to a population of 315,652 (census of 1920) and promised to be one of the largest cities in America, and the greatest by far on the Pacific coast. This ''promise'' grows out of its beautiful physical setting and surroundings, its salubrious, even and healthy climate, its port and harbor facilities unsurpassed in all the world. The character of the population is cosmopolitan, nearly all colors, races and classes are found here; even our American Indian is conspicuous in the motley throng that crowd the business districts.

Seattle and this part of the coast is a veritable Mecca for the many thousand tourists who come from all over the world, by auto, train and great ocean liners.

There is great need for the church of the living God, a great work to do and a great place to fill. The ''fields are white, and ready for the harvest.'' The openings, without overlapping or duplication are many and very promising.

We have but the one self-supporting church in the city, the First on Capitol Hill; and, for the recent past, as well as at present, it is straining every source of supply and commandeering every available asset in order to be more and more self-supporting and in better position to render help to the established missions, as well as to be able to assist our Board of Home Missioons in locating and fostering organizations at other points where work is so badly needed.

We suffer because of our isolation from the rest of our denominational field and life, as well as because of a lack of knowledge on the part of our people concerning what has been done in the past, what we are trying to do right now, with the promise of better things, denominationally, in the immediate future.

The money of the church has been well spent and wisely invested. We ought to undertake big things in this big city. It should be made one of our denominational centers. Will the church at large make it possible?

Alfred E. Fletcher.

THE MONKEY BREAD TREE.

The queerest of trees must be the baobab, or monkey bread. It grows to the height of forty feet, but its girth is entirely out of proportion to its height, some trees being thirty feet in diameter. Its branches, from sixty to seventy feet long, are often as thick as the trunks of large trees, and they form a hemispherical head of 120 to 150 feet in diameter, their outermost boughs drooping to the ground. An old baobab in Africa is, then, more like a forest than a single tree.

Their age is incalculable. Humboldt considers them as ''the oldest living organic monuments of our planet.'' Some trees are believed to be 5,000 years old. You can cut a good-sized room into the trunk of a baobab, with comfortable accommodations for thirty men, and the tree lives on and flourishes.

The flowers are white and extremely large, hanging on drooping stems a yard in length. It produces a fruit about a foot long, which is slightly acid and pleasant to the taste, while the expressed juice, mixed with sugar, is much esteemed as a beverage, being very refreshing, effectual in quenching thirst, and regarded as a specific in putrid and pestilential fevers. The leaves and bark are also medicinal, being considered valuable in diarrheas and fevers.

As an example of slow growth in England, a baobab at Kew, though more than eighty years old, has only attained a height of four and a half feet. A kindred species to the African boabab grows in Australia. They have been found with a height of thirty feet and a girth of eighty-five feet.—Selected.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK

JESUS WATCHING THE TREASURY.

Luke 21: 1-4. Studies in Stewardship.

In these short articles that are to be given during the month of February it is the purpose of the writer to impress upon the mind of the reader that as Jesus sat over against the treasury and beheld how the people cast in their gifts when here in person, he is still watching the treasury today. And it should be the purpose of every young Christian as well as the older ones to so take into account His presence that when giving there should be no stinting and there should be no neglect of giving at the proper time.

My desire is to give in these articles a plain and yet comprehensive statement of ''God's Financial Plan,'' not for an argument with any one, but to help those who wish help in deciding for themselves a plan in life that will bring to them the greatest returns in both temporal and spiritual prosperity. I am a firm believer in the fact that ''honoring God with our substance and the first fruits of all our increase'' will bring returns in more ways than one. Sure the promise is that our barns shall be filled with plenty, but the greatest returns to my mind is that a fat soul is the greatest result that can come.

My wish is that, as we study these things together, that the plan mapped out may be so plain that ''he who runs may read.'' We want to learn how much and when it should be given.

When we consider the matter of stewardship, we should not forget that our money is not all that is required. While this is a tempting field here for comment I shall confine my notes to the financial side, or the giving of our substance. We want to keep in mind that we should never appear before the Lord empty, for he is ever taking notice of what we bring and the spirit in which it is brought.

The rich were not commended for their abundant giving, for it was not in accord with what they had. The widow was not commended so much because she gave all, but the devotion that led her to give all. To the mind of the writer the commendation, and that means the blessing, of Jesus, comes according to our devotion to a cause. And our devotion to a cause will determine the amount of our gifts even if it takes all we have to prove it.

We might then begin with these questions:

Does Jesus take into account the amounts put into the church treasury today as he did of old?

At what age should my devotion to the church show in my gifts?

How often should I contribute? How much? When does my contribution become a gift?

What effect does my giving have upon me? How much upon others?

Keep these questions in mind and let us see how we will answer them after we have studied them together for awhile.

N. G. Bethea.

He who receives a good turn should never forget it; he who does one should never remember it.—Charron.

NOTICE TO SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTdNDENTS.

Last week I had a notice in ''The Herald'' to your pastor. If he did not see it, please look it up and take it to him.

I want to help you make your Sunday school 100 per cent efficient. Will you let me do it?

Are you entirely satisfied that all of your teachers are well trained and fitted for their classes?

When your present teachers grow old or die, will you have others prepared to take their places? Even now when a teacher is absent do you have others eager to take her place? If you can answer these questions in the affirmative, you need read no more; this notice was not meant for you.

Do you know that your denomination has a course already outlined for Teacher-Training classes?

This is not all it has done to help you. If you have no one to teach such a class and only a few to take a course, there is planned out a Correspondence Course by which any one can get the training and receive a Denominational Diploma.

Now I know that there are a few interested young people in every church, and if you and your pastor will only try you can in a short while have well trained teachers.

The responsibility rests on you. What are you going to do about it?

Please let me tell you more about these courses.

Just write and tell me you are interested.

Welch Memorial Senior Society.

It looked at one time that our Christian Endeavor society would die in spite of all that we could do, so we decided to elect new officers and committees and start out anew..

The first thing the new officers did was to have a social with a special program. We had a good attendance at this social. The new president suggested that we learn some new songs; of course that took with us all. While we were practicing the songs another suggested that we visit the Children's Home, which we did.

We had a big delegation at the Home, and took Brother Garrett by surprise. One trip was not enough. The Endeavorers fell so in love with the children they decided to have a joint meeting with the children. When the cars arrived to take the crowd to the Home the last one of them was packed and ready. They enjoyed the trip very much, and came home with enthusiasm for the Home and the children.

When the time arrived for the sunrise prayer meeting, it would surprise you to know how manny of our young folks were out on that cold, frosty morning. Their baskets were filled with good things to eat for the poor. It seemed that they all had caught the spirit that it was ''more blessed to give than to receive.''

During the time the field was ripe for a Junior Christian Endeavor society, and we organized one with about twenty charter members. The Juniors are doing some splendid work.

About this time the Christian Endeavor City Union offered a banner to the society doing the best work, and our society decided that it would look best hanging on Welch Memorial walls. At present it is down here, and we are working hard to hold it for another six months.

On January 14 we organized a senior society at West End Church, Thomasville, with ten charter members. The prospects are good for a large society for both the Juniors and seniors.

What Is the Meaning and Object of Christian Endeavor Day?

It is a birth anniversary. On my younger birthdays, I used to stand against the doorjamb to be measured, to see how much I had grown in the last year. On Christian Endeavor Day, we should measure ourselves by ourselves.

Then, too, we should measure ourselves by Christ. How faithful have we been in keeping our promise to Him? What progress have we made? How has the society grown? Growth does not always mean numbers. Sometimes a society grows by diminishing numerically. Have you not known cases where pruning the membership roll has resulted in greater efficiency?

Christian Endeavor Day should bring to us a sharpened ideal. Did you ever try cutting cardboard by a sample card? You mark off the second by the first. It is just a little larger, because the point of the pencil with which you mark extends beyond the margin. Then you mark the third by the second, and so on —each successive one growing farther and farther from the sample, until maybe the tenth, or the twentieth, is half an inch off. So with copying an ideal into life. We need to go back to the original, and our original is Christ.

Christian Endeavor Day is like a city making a survey of its homes and schools to find out what is wrong.. Things have been ''off,'' something wrong, without special effort to know what; now it is determined to know the exact situation, and remedy defects.

Something for Everybody.

1. Mountain-Peaks of Endeavor.—From my window I can see mountains stretching back from the Pacific Coast, each successive peak seeming to rise higher than the last, until the summit peak of the Cascades fades into a blue haze. In verse 11, Paul sets in a vista some of the mountain-peaks of Christian Endeavor: meekness, patience, love, faith, godliness, righteousness.

2. Having Faith, and Using It.—My morning paper announces the completion of an irrigation dam that will take the waters of San Louis del Rey River and water forty thousand acres of land in our county. The river has been flowing through the county from time immemorial; but now it is to be set to work. One of the chief values of Christian Endeavor is in setting latent powers to work, through the various committees, in the service of our King.

3. Being Charged With a Charge.—Nothing develops one like being "charged." A charge, in a gun, is something to be fired, to bring down game, or to protect the house from robbers. Every Christian Endeavor is like a loaded gun—he is expected to "go off" in some line of Christian activity. If he does not, the priming must be defective, or the fuse (detonating cap) wet.. Are you a defective cartridge, or a good one?

4. Puts Us on a Pedestal.—Wearing a Christian Endeavor pin puts one on his best mettle. A policeman noticed a young fellow unpinning something from his coat, as he was about entering a questionable resort. "Young fellow," he accosted him, "I have been in war, and have seen men throw away their uniform when they were about to desert to the enemy. It seems to me you need that pin more than I need my officer's badge; put it back on and go the way it points."

5. The One We Serve.—"Make way for me," called a courier of the king, "for I serve royalty." One of the chief values of Christian Endeavor is that it links us up in service with Christ, whom Paul calls "The only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords."

6. Its Aim to Glorify Christ.—Christian Endeavor is not to glorify its founder, or its state, or county, or local union heads, but to glorify and exalt Jesus Christ. A vain militia captain called his color-bearer to bring the flag a pace behind him. "This is my country's flag," said the soldier; "and country is greater than captain; the flag goes first."—Rev. J. F. Cowan, D.D., in Methodist Recorder.

THE MISTAKES OF SOME BOYS.

It is adways a mistake for a boy to think that he knows it all, or that he knows even half of what his father knows.

It is a mistake for a boy to get into his head the erroneous idea that there are short cuts to wealth and the highest success in life.

It is a mistake for a boy to think that any degree of natural "smartness" can make it unnecessary for a boy to work hard.

It is a mistake for a boy to fail in respect to his father and mother. The better class of people take note of this respect and remember it to the great discredit of the boy.

It is a mistake for a boy to lose any opportunity of securing a good education. The educated young man was never in greater demand than he is today.

It is a mistake for a boy to think there are better ways of getting a dollar than by honestly earning it. This sort of mistake has put many a boy behind prison bars in the years of his manhood.

It is a mistake for a boy to suppose that the amassing of great wealth is the highest form of success in life.—Unknown.

COLLEGE PAGE

EDITED BY REV. R. M. ANDREWS.
607 Guilford Avenue, Greensboro, N. C.

A GOOD EXAMPLE SET.

Last summer when one of the young ladies who was working with us solicited a good woman in Alamance county for a contribution to the college she was told that she would give a turkey a year for five years. That turkey was sold and a check for $5.80 was received, which has been duly credited.

Are there not at least one thousand other good women in our church who are so situated that they can give us the price of a turkey a year for five years?

There are so many ways that people can help when they want to help that it may truthfully be said that there is not a person in our church who can not do something.

I recently had a contribution from a good woman who must have denied herself greatly in order to make this gift. And yet she did not want her name to appear with the gift.

These are refreshing examples of loyal supporters which are matched by the assistant superintendent of the Sunday school who does not take his church paper, nor will he help support any institution of his church except the little he pays to the support of his pastor.

At this date just about one out of every five members in our church has made a subscription to the college. It is unthinkable that only one person out of every five in our church membership believes in Christian education and wants to help establish a college for the education of their children and kinsmen for their own church. If figures do not "lie" then this must be the case with them.

ARE YOU HINDERING US?

There has not been a time since we began work on the college plans, more than a year ago, that we have been in a more serious situation. We have bought materials, the workmen have done their work, but we do not have the money to meet the payments.

For weeks we have been telling the readers of the Herald that they should pay up, but today there is due us about $15,000 from our own folks on college pledges. And because you have not paid we are greatly hindered. Work will most surely have to be stopped within the next two weeks unless money comes in to meet these bills. We cannot go in debt.

Do you want the work to stop? Are you one among us who is willing for the report to go forth that the members of the Methodist Protestant Church have failed to keep their word, therefore the building committee has been forced to close up the college from the lack of funds? How about it, friends? We have hoped you would come in on the last call, so now is the time to come. You have waited until the last moment, that moment has come.

To fail us now will be tragic for the interest of the College. I have no doubt but sickness has kept a great number of our subscribers from responding promptly, nevertheless their failure to respond has greatly hindered us.

TO BABY LAND.

“How many miles to Baby Land?”
“Any one can tell;
Up one flight,
To the right;
Please to ring the bell.”
“What can you see see in Baby Land?”
“Little folks in white—
Downy heads,
Cradle beds,
Faces pure and bright.”

“What do they do in Baby Land?”
“Dream and wake and play.
Laugh and crow,
Shout and grow:
Jolly times have they!”

“What do they say in Baby Land?”
“Why, the oddest things;
Might as well
Try to tell
What a birdie sings!”

“Who is the Queen of Baby Land?”
“Mother, kind and sweet;
And her love,
Born above,
Guides the litttle feet.”

—George Cooper.

THE BOY WHO DROVE THE COWS.

About fifty years ago a little boy lived on the eastern side of the Connecticut River in Massachusetts, near the New Hampshire line. His father was one day stricken down with apoplexy and died suddenly. His poor widow had nine children to clothe and feed—a pair of twins being born soon after their father died. It was a sad and sorrowful home, with no father to get bread for so many hungry mouths; and how was a poor mother to keep her little flock together?

But the mother had a brave heart, and the good God is a father of the fatherless and a judge of widows in his holy habitation, and so she struggled on as best she could. She had brave children. One of them named Dwight, when but six years old went off of his own notion and agreed with a Mr. Alexander to drive four or five cows to and from his pasture on the mountain side, a distance of more than half a mile, for a cent a day; and he did it all through the season except some rainy days, when his brother George, who was some five years older, and worked out for twelve and a half cents a day, drove them for him.

Dwight had no trouble about driving the cows, though the farmer's son, who did the milking, used to shake him up sometimes for routing him out too early in the morning!

The God of the widow and the fatherless took care of the mother and the children; and the little cow-boy who was up and about his business in the morning, is now known over the world as Dwight L. Moody, whose home and Seminary are near the place where he was born, and near where he, a barefooted boy, drove the cows for a cent a day so many years ago.—The Little Christian.

SOME WONDERFUL THINGS.

“Martin,” said a wise grammar school boy to his little brother of six, “come tell me what you have inside of you.”

“Nothing,” said Martin.

“Yes, you have. Listen! You've got a whole telegraph stowed away in your body, with wires running down to your very toes and out to your finger tips.”

“I haven't,” said Martin, looking at his feet and hands.

“You have, though; and that isn't all. There's a big force pump in the middle of you, pumping, pumping seventy times a minute, all day long, like the great engine I showed you the other day at the locomotive works.”

“There is no such thing—”

“But there is, though; besides all these things, a tree is growing in you, with over two hundred different branches, tied together with ever so many bands and tough strings.”

“That isn't so at all,” persisted the little boy, about ready to cry. “I can feel myself all over, and there's no tree or engine, or anything else, except flesh and blood.”

“Oh! that isn't flesh and blood; that's most of it water. This is what you are made of—a few gallons of water, a little lime, phosphorus, salt and some other things thrown in,” said his brother.

“The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground;” and anaylze him as much as you please, you will find he is dust still. But how marvelously this dust is combined, into forms of strength and beauty; so that man, made in the image of his Maker, stands complete as the crown and ruler of all the creation of God. Well may the Psalmist say, “I will praise thee; for I am fearfully and wonderfully made; marvelous are thy works; and that my soul knoweth right well.” Psalm 139:14. —Selected.

THORNS OR ROSES.

Bessie Taylor was always looking out for what was disagreeable, and not for what was pleasant.

One day Bessie was going away from home, and her grandmother asked her if she would have a rose to stick in the bosom of her dress. So, being fond of flowers, she told her that she would like one. Away went her grandmother, with her cane in hand, into the little garden, and gathered the finest ones there. There were two buds growing on the same stem with the rose, and the leaves were as fresh and green as the leaves of a rosebud could be. You may suppose that Bessie was surprised when her grandmother snipped the rose, the two buds, and the green leaves with the scissors, and offered Bessie Taylor the stem alone, all covered with thorns.

“Oh, grandmother, this is not a rose! Do you think that I will stick that ugly stem in my dress, without a single flower or leaf upon it? No! that I never will! You do not deserve to have roses in your garden if you spoil them in this way.”

“Perhaps not,” mildly replied her grandmother, “but there are other people in the world besides me who spoil roses.”

“Then,” said Bessie, “they must be very silly people.”

“I think so, too,” replied her grandmother. “And now I will tell you the name of one. It is Bessie Taylor.” Bessie reddened, while her grandmother said, “It has pleased God to mark your life with many blessings, mingled with few cares, and you continually neglect your blessings and remember your cares. If you thus willfully despise your comforts and pine over your troubles, what is this but throwing away the flowers and green leaves of your life and sticking the thorns in your bosom?”—Selected.

GOOD RESOLUTIONS FOR 1923.

Among the resolutions that you make for the New Year do not fail to include a determination to study the Bible daily in a devotional spirit. The Psalmist said, “Thy Word have I hid in mine heart that I might not sin against thee.” The study of the Word of God is a real protection against sin.

Resolved, to look on the bright side of everything in 1923, since everything has a bright side.

Resolved, to be content with such things as God bestows, and dissatisfied with all the gifts of the devil.

Resolved, to make this a better world to the extent of the powers and opportunities God provides.

Resolved, to fight all bad habits, and cultivate all good ones, in the strength of the Savior.

Resolved, to make this a purpose year, a faith year, and a prayer year.—Exchange.

AN IMPORTANT TRUST.

Henry Martyn prayed that he might “take each day as an important trust for the Lord.” This is the true view to take of time. Each day and each hour is a trust committed to us by God.

Every morning the Christian should ask, What is the day given me for? The question then arises, How does God wish him to spend the day? No trust is given to be wasted. The day is not to be spent in mere idleness. We are faithful to our trust, when we spend the day as God would have us to spend it—whether in manual labor, in prayer, in rest, or in presenting Divine truth to the minds of others.

Happy is he who, reviewing the day at its close, can thank God that, through grace, it has been spent in accordance with his will. —Selected.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

Shelby.—On February 22 we moved into the new parsonage and about seven o'clock the good people came and took possession of the parsonage and left us many things to eat, just such things as a preacher and family need. I don't know just how many there were, I know the house was full. There were so many good things it seems needless for me to say that I surely appreciated these tokens of kindness, because if they were to see me devour these good things they would know I enjoyed them. Everything is needful about the parsonage.. I want to say that I never served better people than the Shelby people. We have one of the most up-to-date parsonages in North Carolina Conference.

A number of things have taken place since my last report that have been interesting. A splendid entertainment and Christmas tree at Shelby church. Mrs Ramsey trained the children and they certainly did their part well. We took up collection.

I ask the prayers of all the good people. Your brother in Christ, J. M. Ridenhour.

Weavers Chapel, Littleton Circuit.—Last Sunday was a very favorable day for our church. We felt that the attendance should have been larger, as the weather was so pretty. We are praying for a larger attendance the third Sunday in February. Brother O'Briant delivered a very touching and interesting sermon, as he usually does.

On December 26 our Sunday school gave a Christmas entertainment which was enjoyed by all. After the program old Santa came forward and presented the presents to the children.

Owing to the cold weather we regret to say that our Sunday school has gone into winter quarters, but we intend to begin the good work again as soon as the weather gets a little more settled, and the epidemic of "flu" is over. I want to ask all of the Herald readers to pray for our church and Sunday school that we may do a better work in the year 1923 than ever before. Our work in the past year has been beautiful: the children as well as the grown-ups acted their parts well in the Children's Day exercise as well as the Christmas program.

May this be a prosperous year for the Herald and its readers. Ola Mae King.

Harris Chapel, Vance Circuit.—Last Sunday was our regular preaching day. We had a very good congregation, considering the cold windy day, and the amount of sickness in this community. Our pastor, Brother Neese gave us a splendid sermon, which he always does. We are glad to have Brother Neese back with us for another year. We think a great deal of him and his excellent wife. I am sorry to say that Mrs. Neese has not been feeling well for some time, and has not been able to get out much. Mr. Neese has a good many friends among our neighbor denominations who appreciate his preaching, and are regular attendants at our church.

Our Sunday school has suspended for the winter. There has been so much sickness, and the weather has been bad, so that it has not been at all convenient to keep it up. I hope the churches will all cooperate with Brother Neese and help him to make this the best year of all. Reporter.

New Hope, Pageland Circuit.—On the third Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock Brother J. W. Quick [illegible] his [illegible] sermon here. His subject was "The [illegible] Word." Scripture [illegible] Isaiah 40. The first five verses was [illegible] preached a wonderful sermon. He is a man who is not afraid to declare the whole counsel of God. He puts his whole soul in his message. We like him because he condemns sin in all its blackness. Would to God more of our pulpits were filled with such men. Let us all [illegible] this word of [illegible] of [illegible]. It is [illegible] all. And it has such power [illegible] shall live. It cleanses, [illegible]. "Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest." May God help us to come. Jesus [illegible] I will [illegible] His promises are sure.

Our Sunday school is doing very well considering the weather and having some sickness too. Our young people are faithful or at least [illegible] of them. Our organist is a Christian boy [illegible] fifteen years of age who is always [illegible] ready for service. Our choir leader is a faithful young man too. Pray for the work here.

Ezer, Mecklenburg Circuit.—As the pastor put me in as reporter again, I suppose I'd better "get busy." I am sorry to say that we have had preaching but once, which was Sunday (the third Sunday), since conference. Our pastor and family have been sick with "flu." He delivered us two fine sermons..

There has been much sickness in the community.

Our Sunday school is still "moving along," but on account of bad weather and sickness it has not been as great in attendance as we had hoped. [illegible] hope it will be when spring opens up. There were several that received the wreaths that go with the cross and crown pins for perfect attendance last year. The following are the names of those that received the wreaths: Mr. W. C. Hartis, Mrs. W. C. Hartis, Price Hartis, Thomas Atkins and Bertha Hartis.

Our pastor organized a Home Missionary and a Foreign Missionary society Sunday. The officers of the Home Missionary are as follows: President, Mrs. W. F. [illegible]; vice president, Mrs. W. C. Hartis; secretary, Miss Lillie Atkins; treasurer, Mrs. Mettie Osborne. The officers of the Foreign Missionary are as follows: President, Mrs. W. W. Osborne; vice president, Mrs. J. D. Atkins; secretary, Miss Bertha Hartis; treasurer, Miss Lillie Atkins. We are hoping that much good may be done through these societies.

Since my last report our hearts have been saddened by the death of J. A. (Grandfather) Walker. He died Wednesday, January 17, 1923. Pray for the bereaved ones. An obituary will appear later.

Best wishes to all. Bertha Hartis, Reporter.

Roberta.—Just a line to give notice of our meeting to begin Sunday, February 11, with Brother A. Ridge as help. We ask your prayers for the meeting. J. T. Sisk, Pastor.

Rose Hill, Pageland Circuit.—We have our pastor back with us again, Rev. J. W. Quick, who has so faithfully served us for the last eight or nine years. Brother Quick is not a theological seminary student, but I believe he is called of God to break the bread of life. On the first Sunday night of this month he preached a soul-stirring sermon. Some of the members were so enthused over the sermon that they congratulated him on this being the best he ever delivered in Rose Hill church.

We reorganized our Sunday school the second Sunday. Brother J. A. Turner, who has so faithfully served us as superintendent for the last 31 years, who has not missed a single Sunday unless providentially hindered, who has been so prompt, never late during the whole time that he has been serving, was re-elected. Sister T. B. Smith was elected to her little card class as teacher. May the good Lord bless Sister Smith, who has been a good mother in the home and in the Sunday school to so many. When I was a child and in the little card class she told me of the wonderful love of Jesus and told me he died for me. I will always love her. Sister Fannie Porter was re-elected to her class four. She too is faithful; when she possibly can be she is with her class. All the other classes re-elected the old teachers. They all have been faithful.

Leo Sowel, Reporter.

Albemarle.—It has been some time since I attempted to write; but since that we have passed through some dark and trying experiences, in the illness and death of our daughter. O, how we miss that voice that could sing so sweetly and that smile we nevermore shall see on earth. But she is singing in a brighter world on high. Some day we shall see her face to face, where partings never come.

Wish to say I never lived among kinder and more sympathetic people than here; all denominations have been so nice to us with heart, hands and money. We were almost two months behind getting started off with our work, but have started nicely now. Held our first quarterly meeting December 27. Plans were laid for ensuing year, and we are hoping and praying for the best year's work in the history of our church in Albemarle.

There was a nice entertainment given at the church December 23. The children did fine under the instruction of Mrs. C. S. Moton. Santa well remembered us at the parsonage, warning us not to forget it was Christmas. We received lots, and appreciate it very much. On Sunday, December 24, the Baraca class gave their pastor a present of $25 and since that the people gave us a nice pounding of all kinds of good things, which are very useful in the cook room. We wish to thank each one, and may the Lord richly bless them all.

There has been much sickness among our church people, which has reduced our attendance at Sunday school and church to some extent, but most are recovering at this writing.. Our Sunday school is doing fine under the leading of our new superintendent, Brother John Whitlock. Brother J. E. Gantt had held this place for several year and accomplished great good; he is a faithful worker in the church.

Members have recently purchased a piano for the church which all are proud of.

May the Lord bless the entire church and give us a good year, is the desire of the pastor. Best wishes to one and all.

T. A. Williams.

January 27.

Bethel, Alamance Circuit.—Brother Holmes filled his regular apointment at Bethel the third Sunday in January, giving us a splendid sermon on "The Prodigal Son." Our Sunday school is alive and flourishing, though some are being kept at home on account of sickness. Mrs. W. R. Foust and Mrs. J. A. Allen are slowly improving, but not able to be out yet. The families of Messrs. R. W. Lindley, R. S. Thompson, R. L. McPherson, and Rev. G. W. Holmes have all been right sick with "flu," but are all improving now. Hope they will all soon be well.

Mrs. Margaret Shaw, mother of Mrs. J. M. Roberson, died of paralysis January 19 and was buried at Bethel the following day. Funeral services were conducted by Rev. G. W. Holmes. She was nearly eighty-one, one of Bethel's oldest members. One by one we are all going home and we hope to meet in a "land that is fairer than day." She will be sadly missed by many, but most by her daughter and grandchildren, who were all devoted to her. They have our sincere sympathy in this sad hour.

Our Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary societies met last first Sunday with Mrs. Lou Stafford. The attendance was small, but nevertheless, we had a very interesting meeting. Papers were read on the subject, Thankfulness, and a talk on the first chapter of our study book, "Lighted to Lighten." We are liking our book fine and find it very interesting. Mrs. F. R. McPherson joined, and we know she will be an active, earnest worker, because she was formerly such a worker in the mission band. We are proud of her. Five dollars was collected and sent to the Bethel Home for Christmas. Next meeting with Mrs. J. M. Foust, first Sunday in February, at 2:30 P. M. Subject, "Walking with God."

Mrs. J. F. Foust, Reporter.

St. Paul.—Just a word from the pastor. We have not written of late, as our faithful reporter has been making regular reports, and perhaps has one ready for this week. But we like to speak through the columns of the church paper occasionally. We wish to express our appreciation of these good people, they are loyal to their church and pastor.

We were sick yesterday, and unable to be at church, which we very much regret, as Dr. Andrews was present. And again, it was nice that he had planned to be with us at that time, or the good people would have been disappointed, as it was not generally known of the pastor's illness. We hope that Brother Andrews can arrange to be with us at some other time when we can be present. We would love to hear him speak.

While we have not made any great strides, yet we are moving along slowly, making some progress. The first Sunday in the New Year we receiveed into the fellowship of the church eight new members, and have several others who are now waiting for their letter from their former church. I think that pastors should be prompt in sending church letters to those who have moved out of their community, and away from the church; that is, when they are requested to do so. I really think that when a person moves away from their church, into another locality, where there is a church of the same faith, that person should secure their letter from the church they are leaving, and deposit it with the church where they are going, so as to keep them from becoming alienated from the church, which is very often the case. We have found very many at this place who are members of the Methodist Protestant Church, at some other place, where it is not convenient for them to attend, and yet they have not united with our church. We hope they can be led to see the vital importance of having a home church. There is another matter which we feel should be brought to the attention of the people. That is, that every family connected with the church should have the church paper coming in their homes. I cannot see why they should be interested in every kind of secular paper, and all kinds of trashy literature, and not interested in the organ of their church. We hope no one will take any exception at these expressions, for I am only expressing my own thoughts. We have secured several new subscribers, and hope to secure several more.

The Sunday school is growing in interest, and our attendance is good, considering the weather and health conditions. The congregations are very good considering the same conditions. The last service that I had was the second Sunday night, and we had the largest congregation which we have seen at St. Paul since we have been the pastor. We are very hopeful indeed. We have organized one new class in Sunday school known as the Junior Philathea class, and have organized the young ladies into a Junior Ladies' Aid society. We are hoping to effect other organizations which we think will be helpful to the church.

Dr. Dixon is to be with us next Sunday night.

We need your prayers. Let us have them. You have ours. T. E. Pierce, Pastor.

West End, Greensboro.—The Foust Bible class began the new year with renewed enthusiasm. At its meeting Christmas the new officers were elected with Mr. S. E. Ratlege as president, Mr. J. C. Edwards vice president, Mrs. V. C. Stockard secretary, and Mrs. M. H. Waynick treasurer. Miss Llama Dorsett was elected assistant secretary and Miss Gladys Routh as class reporter. This meeting was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. V. C. Stockard, whose entertainment was very pleasing. Some "moving pictures" of the Holy Land were given, after which a social hour was enjoyed and refreshments served.

The January meeting was held last Thursday evening with Mr. and Mrs. M. H. Waynick. There was a good attendance. The former president, Mrs. W. A. Smith, gave a splendid talk, presenting some of the helpful things he gathered at the Sunday school institute held in the city last week. The amount necessary to furnish a room at the Methodist Protestant orphanage was raised. Several guests were present. The social hour was spent in games, followed by refreshments.

G. M. A., Class Reporter.

Bethesda, Halifax Circuit.—Mr. Bethea filled his appointment here last night and gave us some good thoughts, as usual. One thing he said was to the effect that the only way for people to get good out of a sermon is by contributing their part, in the way of prayer, responsiveness, a spiritual attitude.

At the next appointment, second Sunday, we are hoping to have Mr. Bethea sing "The Holy City," and we hope there will be a good congregation, for this will be worth hearing. We have a singing preacher, as many already know.

Well, Christmas came at the usual time down here, regardless of "flu," and passed by, leaving considerable disappointment, especially among the little folks of the Sunday school, on account of the Christmas tree we did not have. Sickness among those most actively connected with the arrangements broke up our plans for a tree and entertainment.

We are very sorry to lose Misses Mary and Harriet Wills, who have recently moved to Greensboro to make their home near relatives there. This is a great loss to the church and Sunday school here—and also to the community where they have spent most of their lives, active in good word and work. The Sunday school presented them a parting gift in the form of a little electric lamp, at the same time expressing our appreciation for years of faithful service and our confident conviction that they will always let their light shine.

Reporter.

Brinkleyville, January 29.

Union Grove, Forsyth Circuit.—Yesterday our beloved pastor, Rev. E. A. Bingham, came and filled his first regular appointment for this year, bringing his new year's message to us. We have enjoyed all the services he has held for us but we believe this one was the best yet. After the sermon he administered the Lord's supper, of which the greater part of the congregation partook.

Our community has been saddened by the death of Fred Hampton, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. O. E. Berrier. It was sick only a short time with pneumonia. It was buried at Union Grove last Friday at four P. M. Brother Bingham came and held a very impressive funeral service. Our sympathy goes out to the bereaved parents. May God, who doeth all things well, bless and comfort them.

Reporter.

First Church, Thomasville.—There were at Sunday school 133. The reason of so small a number is, many of our people are sick. Brother Troxler made a good hit this time by taking up his subject immediately following the Sunday school exercise so no one left and a whole Sunday school got to hear a good sermon on the subject, "Tubs," with little new tubs with which to illustrate, and draw plain word pictures, which was well received by all present. We feel that we are favored to have Brother Troxler as our pastor, as he always is master of his subject.

P. M., with a good program, which was very interesting, followed by the usual evening service, subject, "The Holy Spirit," presented plainly and to the point as a master workman in the service of a great master.

Let us have your reports, brethren, so that the whole family may keep in touch with each other, so we will know one the other better and can help one another better.

Yours truly, Reporter.

Three Congregations Will Worship at the Burlington Church.

The Burlington church is expecting to have a large number of visitors next Sunday morning. Three congregations of Methodist Protestants will worship with us at the morning service next Sunday, February 4.

The congregation of the Haw River church, whose building was destroyed by fire in November, 1922, and the congregation of Glen Raven church will worship with the congregation of our Burlington church. Rev. J. M. Morgan, pastor of the Glen Raven and Haw River churches, will preach the sermon. Brother Taylor, pastor of the Burlington church, will be present and assist in the service.

The Burlington congregation will have the opportunity of hearing Brother Morgan; most of them for the first time. We are looking forward to the day with anxiety and anticipation for a great occasion, and we believe that the members of all three congregations will be blessed by worshipping together.

The Burlington congregation will be given an opportunity to express their sympathy to the Haw River church in a substantial manner. An offering will be taken for the building fund of the Haw River church.

"There is no stable Christian character where there is no religous custom."—Rev. S. W. Taylor.

Liberty Hill, Anderson Circuit.—Yesterday morning at 11 o'clock Rev. G. C. Baker delivered a splendid sermon to us, his subject being Samson. Our pastor also preached a splendid sermon Sunday night, his text being, "I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive forevermore, amen, and have the keys of hell and death." He told of the punishment that came upon the people for betraying and crucifying Christ. These sermons were both very interesting and we hope that they will be helpful to us all through life.

Our Sunday school is progressing nicely, considering the weather and sickness in the community. The singing at this place is splendid.

Friendship, Stanly Circuit.—This is a beautiful, a grand, a glorious old world. Nature is the great volume in which we find a revelation, the oldest testament: and the happiest being in the world is a true lover of nature and nature's God. Yet there are times and seasons when everything is so charming and felicitous to the pure and responsive heart that we feel as we could live here forever—could make it our heaven.

A delightful spring or summer day, in the midst of fascinating scenery, blending mountain, hill, and valley, with smiling field and verdant tree and rippling stream, fanned by healthful breezes and regaled by songs of birds, when all nature is vital with energy and radiant with glory and the heart is content and happy with itself and environments —it is then this—it is then this world seems like a paradise. Everything depends upon the heart within, as we see the world without.

There are quite a number of people sick at the present time. We extend our deepest heartfelt sympathy toward them.

On the third Sunday in this month Rev. A. Ridge delivered an excellent sermon, after which the ordinance of the Lord's supper was very fittingly observed.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Ridge spent the week-end in Denton with their daughter and son-in-law, visiting.

We were surprised to hear that the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Hatley, and son of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Hatley from near Porter were united in holy bonds of matrimony last Friday; we trust they will continue to be loyal and faithful to the church. May their hearts be like a garden that blooms with beauty rare where the seeds of joy and promise bring forth a flower fair. Best wishes.

Charlotte Tidings.

For reasons not to be explained but probably because of weather conditions the attendance was not so good at either Sunday school or morning preaching service last Sunday as on the Sunday before. The service at night was well attended.

Among visitors in the congregation on last Sunday evening we were glad to notice Brother Noah Richardson of Bladenboro. Brother Richardson has been a life-long Methodist Protesetant but for some years he has not been near a church of his choice. He was especially pleased to once more worship in a Methodist Protestant church. He is the father of our Brother F. C. Richardson. His younger son and daughter, Mr. Jewell and Miss Bonnie, are now living in Charlotte and are workers in our church.

Most of our sick people have very much improved and are well on the way to recovery. Miss Carrie Muse has sufficiently improved that she has returned to her home from the hospital. Mrs. A. F. Love is our most recent victim of "flu." We hope she will soon be restored to health. Mrs. Love is among our best workers.

Mrs. L. C. Davis has been called to the home of her sick brother, Mr. Campbell, of Pinetown in Washington county. Mr. Campbell is quite sick. We pray for his recovery and our sympathies go out to the anxious relatives.

Our brothers Henry and Charles Muse have just returned from a very pleasant trip to Florida, where business matters were attended to and at the same time a number of relatives and friends were visited.

Geo. L. Curry.

Pinnacle.—We had an interesting program at our Pinnacle church Sunday. The Baptist Sunday school came over to our church and took charge. They made the hour interesting to us and their fellowship was sweet. They invited us to visit their church and take charge at an early date.

Miss Sudie Jones is making herself felt as one of our best Sunday school teachers and church workers. During the Christmas season her time was given to supplying gifts to the poor. She has given a number of Testaments to her class and to the home where no Bible was found. She is a model in her devotion to her church.

We were glad to have Miss Mally Pasey, who holds a position at Salem College, worship with us Sunday. W. D. Reed.

Roberta Station.—Our services were as follows this week-end: Music teaching and prayer meeting Saturday night, Sunday school at 10 A. M., preaching at 11 A. M. and 6:30 P. M. Brother Sisk preached a good sermon Sunday morning on "The Rebuilding of the Walls of Jerusalem." Everybody took great interest.

The people of our community are improving. We are glad to see them get better and return and worship with us.

The people of Roberta gave Mr. Sisk some useful gifts as follows: a pair of shoes, socks, shirt and hat. They were appreciated very much.

The protracted meeting will start at Roberta February 11, assisted by Rev. A. Ridge of the Stanly circuit. Essie Linker,
Reporter.

Concord.—My reporter has accused me of not doing my part of the reporting, so I have decided to repent and do better..

The work here is moving along in a very satisfactory manner. The congregations are holding up splendidly considering the amount of sickness there is at present. The greatest hindrance to the work here now is, we do not hove room for the Sunday school. It is a fact that this part of the work can't grow any more until there is more room provided. Our people are beginning to see this and are uniting their forces to this end. We believe that our work here would grow by leaps and bounds if we had more room. We are hoping and praying that before this year closes this church will be in a position to do the best work it has ever done. Pray for us that we may lead in the right way in all things.

A. D. Shelton.

New Hope, Why Not Circuit.—Mr. Hulin preached an excellent sermon yesterday. His message contained many good truths, which were forcibly presented.

Mr. Moore, of Darlington, S. C., was present. Glad to have him with us.

Sunday school is progressing nicely with Mr. W. R. Williams as superintendent and Miss Rosa Merritt secretary.

Some of the members at this place attended the funeral of Mrs. J. H. Spencer last Saturday at Fair Grove. It can be truly said that Why Not Circuit has lost one of its best members. Mrs. Spencer was a charter member of this church, but at the time of her death she was a member at Fair Grove. We extend our heartfelt sympathy to the family, especially the aged husband, who will feel his loss most keenly. Annette Allen.

The first step to greatness is to be honest.—Johnson.

DIED.

Johnston.

Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Johnston, always known as "Betty Wheless," was born March 19, 1841, departed this life January 19, 1923, age 81 years and 10 months. She was married to Mr. Patrick Henry Johnston November 14, 1871. To this union there were born four children; three are now living, namely, Miss Mamie Johnston, Messrs. Charles L. and Henry Johnston; the other died in infancy.

Mrs. Johnston united with the Temple M. P. church in her early girlhood, perhaps 65 years ago, under the pastorate of Rev. John F. Speight. She has always been her pastor's friend, and not only her pastor's but it may well be said of her, that "she lived in a house by the side of the road and was a friend to man." She was no respecter of persons, but freely gave her services to all alike, even unto the colored race. She soothed the dying moments of many people, and in her younger life was termed the Good Samaritan.

Interment took place on January 20 in the family cemetery on the farm near Whitakers with her pastor speaking the last words over her remains. It can be truly said one of our best has been taken from us, as well as our oldest here at Whitakers church.

Her Pastor.

Hardy.

Willie Cary Bustin, wife of Charlie Hardy, passed from this world to the land of spirits January 11, 1923. Her father and two sisters preceded her to the beyond while her mother Mrs. Bustin, and one sister, [illegible] together with a brother who lives in Texas, remain of the family, and her husband, who with a number of friends and relatives mourn their loss.

Mrs. Hardy was taken with influenza during the Christmas holidays and after several days it was found that the trouble had gone to her head and an operation for [illegible] was necessary, and while the operation seemed to be successful she only lived a few days when she succumbed to the dread monster Death.

Willie Cary, as she was familiarly known, was married to Brother Hardy about one year ago, and was a devoted wife and we sympathize deeply with our brother in his great loss. She had never left the old home and her grief-stricken mother and sister will miss her greatly. She was a member of Enfield Methodist Protestant church and was ever alert to its interests. She was of a sunshiny disposition and her loved ones as well as her many friends will miss her friendly smiles and cordial greetings.

It was indeed a sad funeral, for to see one taken amidst their activities always makes us wonder why. There were many there that day with tearful eyes as we laid her body to rest in the Enfield cemetery to await the resurrection morn. Many beautiful floral offerings, together with the large number of people who attended the services, attested in a measure the high esteem in which she was held.

Cheer up, dear ones, for the form upon which you looked for the last time was not the real one that you loved so well, only the house in which she lived with which you had become familiar, but the real being that lived in that house had already entered into that rest that remains for the people of God. "For we know that if this earthly house of our tabernacle were dissolved we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

The prayers and sympathy of many who have had like experiences go out to you and for you. But best of all the One who stood by the grave of Lazarus and wept knows all about it and he stands by in this dark hour. May His grace sustain you. N. G. Bethea.

McCauley.

Mrs. Julia Frances McCauley died December 21, 1922, at the age of 74 years, one month, and 23 days, in the home of her son George J. McCauley in Mebane. Her marriage in 1880 to A. J. McCauley was blessed with three children, Mrs. Mary Isley of [illegible], George J. McCauley, in whose home she had lived for a number of years, one boy having died when small. Her companion preceded her to the other world December 6, [illegible]. Mrs. McCauley became a Christian when a girl in her teens and joined the Presbyterian church at Stony Creek. The funeral was conducted by Rev. A. W. Shaw and the [illegible] at Union Ridge Christian church where she was laid to rest by her husband to await the resurrection morn.

Our sympathy goes out to the son and daughter and grandchildren, for we rejoice with them in the fact that she was permitted to remain with them for so many years, also we rejoice with them in the Christian's hope of the resurrection and the life beyond. T. M. Johnson.

Mebane.

Wolff.

Miss Charity E. Wolff, better known as Miss Charity or "Aunt Charity," born in Surry county, Stony Ridge, N. C., on November [illegible], died, after a short illness, at the home of her niece, Mrs. May Atkinson, Elkin, N. C., December 17, 1922. Aunt Charity had a stroke of paralysis which brought death after a few hours; fulfilling her desire for many years. She did not wish to be sick and suffer for a long while. She lived very close to her Savior and often said, if it could be His will she wanted to be taken suddenly. This good and useful woman lived in a constant state of readiness. To her death had no sting. Her mortal remains were laid to rest in Elkin cemetery to await the awakening of the dead. The funeral was conducted from the home of her niece by Rev. A. P. Ratledge, pastor of the M. E. church, South.

She was converted when a young woman and joined County Line (Mt. Zion) Methodist Protestant church during the pastorate of Rev. Mason [illegible]. Here she remained a faithful and useful member till God said, "Enough good and faithful servant. Enter into the joys of thy Lord." The usefulness and helpfulness of this truly great woman is not generally known by the church of her choice. She was gentle, kind, unassuming, not letting her left hand know what her right hand did. During the terrible struggle between the states (the Civil War) she, her sister Sarah and several other women took their axes and, perhaps, a few other tools, went to a beautiful spot that lay between three roads on the county line, cleared the land, built a brush arbor; invited Rev. Isaac N. Hunt (a local preacher) to come and preach. To the memory of Aunt Charity and her comrades stands the beautiful church of today as a monument. Aunt Charity loyally stood by her church with her money and every human effort to advance the cause and kingdom of Christ.

She was never married, but a real mother to some of us. She has liberally helped with her means more preachers and enterprises of the Methodist Protestant Church than any other woman who has lived in our church and state. For more than 30 years she has been as a mother, personal adviser, and friend to the writer of this sketch. In my darkest days of poverty and sorest trial she brought light and cheer to me. It was her money that enabled me to continue in school. Not one cent of interest would she take. I had worked on the farm to get money to go back to school and failed. I was then superintendent of the Sunday school at her church. My announcements may have led her to suspect that I was not going back to school that fall; she came to me, dropping $5 in gold in my hand, [illegible] I was not going back to school. [illegible] asked me to come and [illegible] on the following [illegible]. I did. When she talked to me, [illegible] to lend me money on my note [illegible] interest. I told her I did not want to [illegible] as I might die and she would lose her [illegible]. She said, "I want you to have what you need and we will trust the Lord." She had two sons in the ministry (she always called us her boys), Rev. W. F. Ashburn and [illegible]. For more than 30 years her letters have come, part of the time weekly, and occupied in my mind and heart as sermons. I have never known in any, greater faith in God and consecration. She leaves near relatives, but no one feels more keenly the loss of this saintly woman than I do. She never failed to give of her means to every call of the church. In fact, she gave all of the little income left her to the Methodist Protestant Church and kingdom of Christ. She was rich in good works. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord, yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

By one who knew her and loved her,

H. L. Powell.

Morris.

Our hearts have been saddened recently because of the visitations of the ravages of death in our midst. But as death is no respecter of persons, and one short sentence will close the biography of us all, we humbly submit to the wise providence of Him who is too good to withhold any good thing from us who love Him, and too wise to make a mistake.

On January 15 the seemingly merciless hand of death came and claimed for its victim our beloved friend and neighbor, Edmond Clark (Dock) Morris. He was born March 13, 1851. On March 24, 1872, Brother Morris and Sarah Lou Nance were united in holy matrimony. To this union were born 11 children: three girls and eight boys. One girl and two boys, with his beloved wife, preceded him to their rewards. Two girls and six boys survive. He also leaves one sister, one brother and 19 grandchildren, with a host of friends, to mourn their loss.

Brother Morris professed faith in his Savior, and surrendered his life to God, about 45 years ago, at Mt. Ebel camp meeting, under the ministry of Brother Wills. Later he united with the church at Lineberry church, being among the first members of that organization, of which he remained a faithful member till death called him home.

About 45 years ago Brother Morris was a victim of a nervous prostration, since which time he has been, practically, confined to his house, part of the time he has been speechless, not even able to whisper, helpless as a child.

He was a loving, devoted husband, and a true father. Strict honesty, truth and industry, coupled with the fear of God were the constant themes of his instructions to each child. Amidst all his suffering and confinement, he was permitted to see his all enthroned in business, manhood, womanhood and virtue. Their reverence, obedience, tenderness and devotion were remarkable.

His suffering was borne with patience and fortitude. His face was an inspiration to behold. He asked not to be saved from his suffering, but prayed, "O God, help me to bear it." His faith was unshaken, conscious till death. His last words were, "I'm going home."

With sympathy for the bereaved, and a prayer that the mantel of this good man may fall heavily upon the shoulders of his strong sons and daughters, that they may be prepared to imitate his virtues, patience and devotion to God and man, I close.

Robert Short,
Pastor of Davidson Charge.

Davis.

The seemingly merciless hand of death has again visited our ranks, and left our hearts sad, by claiming for its victim our friend and neighbor and "fellow soldier of the cross," Brother Stokes Davis, of the Chapel Hill section. Brother Davis was born December 9, 1858, departed this life January 19, 1923. His beloved mother died just four days before he did. He leaves a wife and several children, and a host of friends to mourn their loss.

The funeral was conducted by his former pastor, Rev. J. W. Hulin, in the presence of a large number of weeping friends and acquaintances, at Chapel Hill, of which the deceased was a member. The testimony of all I have met has been, "You could only know him to love him. The more you knew of him the more you would like him." His influence was not confined to his immediate community, but the writer finds sorrowing ones in all the neighboring communities around. And well may we weep the loss of such men as he, for we shall never know the worth of such characters in this world.

The marks of his greatness were as follows: He was never too busy, even in his harvest-field, to lay down his work and accommodate a neighbor in need. In our mad rush to please ourselves, we often forget others. But he never did. He loved and cherished his wife and children. Was often found around his fireside, singing the old "hymns of Zion" and pointing his children to the Lamb of God. He loved God and sacrificed for His cause. Nothing was too good for his pastor, who served him 13 years. He sought opportunity to do good, and help others to be good. He bore his misfortune with patience and fortitude. He loved his mother. While in the very jaws of death, not knowing his mother was dead, he was careful to have others to see if mother was warm, and covered.

These marks, in any character, will not allow us to die unwept, but will cause our departure to be keenly felt. May our heavenly Father comfort the bereaved widow and orphan children, and cause that the mantle of his virtue fall on sturdy shoulders, who shall grace his place in the church, is my humble prayer.

Robert Short,
Pastor of Davidson Charge.

What About Furnishing That Room?

Work is progressing rapidly and we will soon move into the new dormitory if the rooms are furnished. They have not all been provided for and we would like to hear from you at your earliest convenience, and couldn't you give the matter your special attention? If you could come and see the attractive rooms you would be anxious to have your name placed on a door telling that you had furnished that room.

We will also need cooking utensils, table ware, table linen, tables, and who will furnish a three-compartment fireless cooker? May we have a number of inquiries? The reason we want you to write us is that we do not get overstocked on some things and not get enough of something else.

Write us before making a purchase unless you are sending sheeting. We want to hear from you. Please act after reading this.

WHAT ARE YOU GOOD FOR?

Two young men who had been classmates in college chanced to meet in the waiting room of the office of a large shipbuilding establishment. In the course of conversation it became apparent that both had come to apply for a position that they had heard would in time be vacant. Their diplomas from the technical school gave them equal chances of success, says a writer in the "Wellspring."

One of them was finally called into the office. The superintendent's time was valuable. "Well, what is it?" was his concise and almost curt inquiry. The young man told him, rather volubly, that he was a graduate of such and such a school and wished a position in his establishment.

"What kind of work do you want?" was the next brief query hurled at him.

"I'd like a position as master shipbuilder," confidently responded the young man. "It seems to me—" But the superintendent cut him short.

"Your name, please? And address? Thank you. That's all. If we should happen to need such a man we'll undoubtedly send for you."

And the astonished and chagrined youth found himself outside the door and muttering savagely to the other, "No use to go in there. That fellow is mighty short."

"I guess I'll try it anyhow," replied the other young man, though with an inward quaking in his heart.

When his turn came to interview the great man, he mentioned, as briefly as possible, his college work and his desire for a position, and at the same terse, concise question, "What kind of work do you want?" answered simply, "Anything you've got for me."

"Show Brown in here immediately," was the command, and when Brown appeared, "Here, set this fellow to sorting scrap iron."

To say that the young man was surprised and considerably taken down, would only be stating the simple truth. But he was game. He never flinched, and into his eyes as he followed that foreman from the room sprang a resolution to prove to that director that he was worth more than that.

The superintendent had gauged his men correctly. The first would have been insulted at such an offer. The second came out strong. His knowledge taught him the value of different pieces. He sorted scrap iron a little better than anybody else had ever done that work. Promotion followed promotion.

Today he is the master shipbuilder.—Selected.

For what God is doing in and through us, and is willing to do, we thank Him and continue to pray that,

"As on the river's rising tide,
Flow strength and coolness from the sea,
So, through the ways our hands provide,
May quickening life flow in from thee."

NOTES.

—Brother J. A. Dwiggins, formerly Sunday school superintendent at Bethel church, Flat Rock circuit, has moved with his family to Newberry, S. C., R. 3, where he has an engagement with the Fulp Lumber Company. They will be missed in their church and community.

—A new amendment to the United States Constitution has been started on its way toward adoption. On January 23 the House passed a resolution, 223 to 101, for an amendment to give Congress power to prevent States and cities from issuing tax-exempt securities. That is, bonds whose income, or interest, is free from taxation.

—Charles B. Warren has resignel as U. S. Ambassador to Japan and will return to this country soon. A farewell dinner in his honor was given in Tokio last week. Among the guests was Masanao Hanihara, the new Japanese Ambassador to the United States. Mr. Warren praised the treaties made at the Washington Conference last year. They have resulted in a better understanding between America and Japan, he said.

—There will be no strike in the soft coal fields this year. That was decided last week at the conference, in New York, of the chief coal operators of the country and the high officers of the United Mine Workers of America.

—The first five men to be tried for taking part in the Herrin massacre were found not guilty at Marion, Illinois, January 19. Attorney General Brundage announced that the State of Illinois would continue its efforts to convict the men guilty of those terrible crimes.

—One thousand refugees are dying every day in Greece. That is the estimate of Dr. Mabel Elliott, head of the American Women's Hospital, and medical director of the Near East Relief. The refugees make up more than one-fifth of the total population of Greece. They have gathered in more than eight hundred different places. Small-pox and the deadly typhus have broken out in these camps. Food and clothing are needed for a million persons. In appealing to the world to help the refugees, Dr. Elliott says: ''The Greek government has done magnificent emergency work in receiving these exiles, but its resources are exhausted and it can do no more. Is there no longer any stimulus in heroic example? Greece has given her all for the reception of these refugees; will the outside world stand by and let them die?''

—Mrs. Edith Kermit Roosevelt, widow of President Roosevelt, has sailed for Brazil. She expects to remain there two months. She will visit Yguasso Falls. This is not far from the ''River of Doubt,'' which Colonel Roosevelt explored after he retired from the Presidency —Antonio Falcone, aged thirteen, built a big snow house in the yard of his home in Syracuse, New York. While playing alone in the snow building it tumbled in a great heap and left him buried under several feet of heavy melting snow. He could not dig himself out. He remained buried for eighteen hours before his parents happened to think that he might be under the big pile of snow. When taken out he was unconscious and his clothes were frozen stiff. The doctors, however, think he will get well.

—Three hundred and sixty-two million tons of soft coal were mined in the United States during the 11 months' period from January 1 to November 30, 1922. This is announced by the U. S. Geological Survey. Of this total the State of Pennsylvania produced ninety-two milion tons, or more than one-fourth. West Virginia was second with seventy-one million tons, and Illinois third with fifty-one million.

—Max Nordan, noted Jewish author, died in Paris January 22. He was born in Budapest, Hungary, in 1849. He was one of the leaders of the Zionist movement, that is, the plan to make the Holy Land a Jewish state where all Jews, who so desire, may make homes.

—The American people deposited a billion and a half dollars more in savings banks during 1922 than they did in 1921. This is announced by the Savings Bank Division of the American Bankers' Association.

—The Senate has passed an appropriation bill which provides 428 million dollars for the work of the Veterans' Bureau. That bureau is responsible for the care of the sick and disabled soldiers of the World War.

—President Harding has appointed Edward T. Sanford, Republican, of Knoxville, Tenn., an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. If confirmed by the Senate, Mr. Sanford will take the place of Associate Justice Mahlon Pitney, of New Jersey. Justice Pitney retired January 1, on account of poor health.

OUR DEPENDENCE ON OUR COMMUNITY.

A speaker in a Sunday school institute showed that thoroughly successful religious education for the individual is possible only through religious education for the entire community. If all are not educated religiously, the uneducated portion of the community will exert a restraining, counteracting influence, making partially if not wholly unsuccessful the effort to educate part of the community.

A man of wealth was asked to contribute means to establish a community school for his comunity. He refused, saying that he had means to educate his own children and that no man had a right to have children who had not the means to educate them. The community school was not built, and the result was that the rich man's sons had very meager educational advantages in their early years. But he hoped to make up for this by the help of colleges. He took one of his sons to another state to place him in the college of his choice. Because of the father's wealth the college authorities paid great respect to the father and son, inviting them to dinners and banquets. The son was left in college and the father made a brief visit to another place and then returned home. His wife asked him about the college and whether he thought their son would stick. "O yes, it's a splendid institution, and he'll stay all right." The mother then called out: "Come out of the closet, son!" The young man had beaten his father home. The father was brought to a realization of the power of his community and of the feebleness of wealth in comparison.

We should think of the power of our community in our planning for religious education. The only way to educate some of the people and bring them to security is by educating all the people. We must not content ourselves with the select few. We must regard our neighbor's children as well as our own. We must plan and labor to reach the unreached and bring them under the influence of the truth as it is in Christ. A hungry child in our community would excite our compassion and receive our help. How much more should a soul starving for the bread of life. The command to go into all the world with the gospel certainly includes with a meaning of special intensity, Go into all your community.

The mighty reflex influence of one's community makes it imperative for our own safety that the entire lump be leavened.

The followers of Paul and the followers of Peter and the followers of Apollos should so co-operate in work for the entire community as to show that they are all animated by the spirit of Christ.

A creed or a program that leaves out some of the community is entirely too narrow.

The community for Christ should be a slogan of every Christian, and every individual for Christ should be the aim of every church in every community. This would lead out into the neglected homes and to personal work for unreached individuals.

HERALD CIRCULATION AGENTS.

The rumor has gone abroad that scholarships in our new college are offered to those securing subscriptions for the Herald, and we have had a number of letters from young people inquiring for the particulars.

Only two scholarships are thus offered, one for the largest number of subsciptions or renewals received, the other for the largest number in proportion to the membership of the church in which the agent works.

Each pastor is authorized to appoint one Herald circulation agent for each of his churches. This agent might be a society, as, for example, a Christian Endeavor society, but it will be considered as only one agent. Two conditions are to be met: (1) The pastor must appoint, and (2) the agent accepting the appointment must notify us of his acceptance and be enrolled in this office as a contestant for one of the prizes.

Territory Assigned to Agents.

Each agent has exclusive right to canvass the membership of his or her own church. The people outside our Methodist Protestant churches constitute a field open to all alike. It is thus possible for an agent to reach more than 100 per cent of the membership of his own church.

If no agent has been appointed for your church and you wish to enter the contest, it would be in order for you to offer your services to your pastor. He may be looking around for some one to do this work.

We thank those who are taking an interest in extending the circulation of the Herald, and are confidently expecting a substantial gain in the number of subscribers. The campaign continues to April 1—two and a half months yet.

MY NEIGHBOR.

Brother Editor: I have read Brother Dosier's article, "Who Is My Neighbor," and your editorial comment upon the same subject. Your discussion put me to thinking more seriously upon the subject of one's moral relation to his fellow man. With no desire to provoke an argument, I beg permission to make a few statements relative to the subject under consideration which may be helpful, in a measure, at least, to some Bible reader. The parable or statement of facts, as the case may have been, sets forth the gospel of love so clearly and forcibly that the honest seeker after truth cannot fail to understand and appreciate it. The word "neighbor" in the ordinary sense of the term as we use it means one who lives close to us. In the original "neighbor" meant "nigh dweller." So in this sense the person who lives near us is a neighbor, whether he is kind and helpful or not. He may not respond to kind treatment but on the other hand may be disagreeable and hard to get along with—even to the extent we may be forced to speak of him as a bad neighbor, yet he is a neighbor. because he lives close to us. We are neighbors to each other. But that is not what neighbor means in the Scripture, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." In the Hebrew the word neighbor has three different meanings, and in the Greek language as used in the New Testament, it also has three different meanings, the last of which is used in the specific sense under consideration. Here it means close in sympathy and love. In this sense the unfortunate person who is entitled to mercy and help is a neighbor to the one who shows mercy and renders compassionate service.

As stated above, the beautiful parable of our Savior expresses the gospel of love in a practical way. The law of love is universal and infinite; therefore the term neighbor as used in the parable includes every member of the human race. It comprehends everybody. The moral responseibility of man is wholly independent of race, country, residence, condition, or religion. The brother who says that only the person who shows mercy, and not the one receiving it, is a neighbor, is evidently mistaken.

The wounded man was neighbor to the good Samaritan, and so is every one who receives help neighbor to the one who gives it.

While the word "neighbor" includes every human being, my individual neighbors whom I am required to love as myself are those with whom I come in contact along the journey of life. In a broader sense, however, the heathen are also our neighbors, and if we possibly can do so, we must express our love for them by helping to send the gospel to them

The suffering, starving children of Armenia and Japan are our neighbors and we must help them to the extent of our ability. Right at this point much grace and wisdom are needed to enable one to decide how much he is required to do. Certainly we are required to make some sacrifice, otherwise it could not be considered an evidence of much love. We do not always have to make great sacrifices in order to be a good neighbor. The case of the good Samaritan was an extreme one. It was that of a man loving one of his bitterest enemies. The example given clearly teaches to what extent one must love his enemy. Help him to the extreme limit of his needs.. The very ones who were under obligations to aid the wounded man unmercifully and cowardly neglected him. From them he had a right to expect help, because they—the priest and the Levite—were representatives of the law which said, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Lev. 19:18. It was imposed upon them to preserve, transcribe, and interpret the law. The poor fellow who doubtless thought that he had friends among his own people was made to realize his mistake. The good Samaritan perhaps did not know much about law but he knew how to love a suffering fellow-being, though an enemy filled with racial hatred toward him. I am compelled to believe that the wounded man cheerfully responded to the loving sacrifice made in his behalf, and thus became a good neighbor by passing on to others acts of kindness. A friendly person will make fiends wherever he goes. The Christian filled with divine love—the Spirit-filled person—will beget love in those with whom he associates.

In my humble opinion a person must be wholly consecrated to the Lord—baptized with the Holy Spirit—in order to be able to love his neighbor as himself. Such love begins with God the Father from whom His needy children get their supply and the power to give a goodly portion to others and thus His children become the medium through which His wonderful love ultimately reaches all mankind.

The measure or extent of one's love for his neighbor is expressed in the Golden Rule as taught by our Lord. If we would not have other people speak evil of us or mistreat us in any way, we must show the same degree of loving kindness toward them. And this love for our neighbor varies from the simplest act of kindness—the giving of a cup of cold water in the name of Jesus to one of His humblest followers up to the most supreme Sacrifice.

This subject is too comprehensive for me to attempt to discuss it in detail. I have rather unconnectedly just touched here and there some of the most important phases of it, hoping to induce the reader to think seriously upon his moral relation to his neighbor the proper observance of which means so much with reference to his eternal salvation. Do I love my neighbor as myself? Who is able to answer in the affirmative?

THE NEW COLLEGE.

This good year of 1924 will witness the fulfillment of a dream of the Methodist Protestant church, cherished through long years, that of a college of their very own. Already Roberts Hall, the first building of the group, is practically completed, and the heating plant will soon be installed. Situated on a beautiful knoll in the north-eastern section of the city of High Point, directly on the Greensboro highway, it presents a striking and imposing appearance. Ground for this building was first broken on April 20, 1922, and the corner-stone was laid with appropriate ceremony on June 30 of the same year. This building was namemd in memory of the late Mr. J. C. Roberts of Kernersville, who died a number of years ago, bequeathing in his will the sum of $10,000 for a college in North Carolina, which was the first money donated for this purpose. Roberts Hall is the administration building, and is a two-story structure of sand-face brick, reinforced with concrete and fireproof throughout. The plan of the building follows the English renaissance style, the lines being extremely graceful, and the whole is surmounted by a lofty ornamental tower. In the first floor are found the offices of the administration and eight class rooms. A spacious lobby marks the entrance, which is separated from the other units by beautiful circular arches. In addition the physical and chemical laboratories, a dining room and kitchen are located on this floor. The library and a temporary auditorium with a seating capacity of 500 are located on the second floor.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Trustees it was decided to let contracts for the erection of two dormitories, one for boys and another for girls, on either side of Roberts Hall, to be completed by September 1, 1924. These dormitories will accommodate 200 students, and the design will conform to the general plan. In addition to Roberts Hall and the dormitories, there will eventually be added a chapel, an auditorium, conservatory of music, a stadium, and a gymnasium. Additions 100 feet long will be added to Roberts Hall on either side.

The cost of the building to date is $135,000. The bell which was once used in the Guilford County Court House at Greensboro will hang in the tower of Roberts Hall, having been donated for this purpose by the county commissioners when the old building was demolished to make way for the Jefferson Standard skyscraper.

The president of the institution has not been selected as yet, and no definite plans have been formulated for the faculty, but it is understood that a corps of instructors will begin the work of the session next September.

The following members constitute the Board of Trustees: Dr. R. M. Andrews of Greensboro, chairman; F. R. Harris, Henderson; Dr. J. F. MrCulloch, Greensboro, Rev. J. D. Williams, Reidsville; Rev. G. W. Holmes, Graham; Dr. T. M. Johnson, Mebane; Dr. C. L. Whitaker, Lexington; C. F. Finch, Thomasville; Dr. J. T. Burrus, J. S. Pickett, M. J. Wrenn, J. W. Hedrick, Frank Wineskie, and A. M. Rankin, High Point; Mrs. J. M. Millikan and J. Norman Wills, Greensboro; Ed Swain and Mrs. J. S. Williams, Asheville; R. F. Williams, Burlington, and Dr. Henry Cutchin, Whitakers.

High Point is quite proud of her first institution of higher learning, and it will prove her most valuable asset in the years to come.

ROBERT E. LEE AND HIS "SUBLIMEST WORD."

"Duty is the sublimest word in our language."

"There is a true glory and a true honor, the glory of duty done, the honor of the integrity of principle."

These noble utterances of Robert E. Lee were, with him, not simply fine phrases to be admired, but practical mottoes to be realized in life. And how sublimely were they realized in his whole career! When war became inevitable he faced a great struggle—that of deciding the momentous question as to the side he should choose in the great conflict. That duty as he saw it, and duty alone determined his choice, no one who has read the record can doubt. Randolph H. McKim, one of his soldiers, and author of that most excellent volume, "The Soul of Lee," says in regard to this great decision:

"Never, in any of his great battles—Chancellorsville, Sharpsburg, Gettysburg, the Wilderness, Petersburg, was his great soul so shaken as on that night in his chamber at Arlington when this momentous decision was trembling in the balance. Even now, after the lapse of fifty-six years, no generous heart can coontemplate without emotion and admiration this midnight wrestling of a brave and unselfish man. One question alone presented itself to his great soul: 'What is my duty?' He put aside ambition—personal inclination—every selfish interest. Nothing weighed in the balance at that supreme moment but the purest highest, most unselfish motives."

In a letter to his sister, whose husband and son espoused the Union cause, Lee wrote: "With all my devotion to the Union, and the feeling of loyalty and duty of an American citizen, I have not been able to make up my mind to raise my hand against my relatives, my children, my home. I have therefore resigned my commission in the army, and save in defense of my native State, with the sincere hope that my poor services may never be needed, I hope I may never be called upon to draw my sword, I know you will blame me; but you must think as kindly of me as you can, and believe that I have endeavored to do what I thought right."

"The All-Compelling Sense of Duty."

Long, in his "Memoirs of Lee," says: "In the interviews between General Scott and Col. Lee it is stated that the veteran commander earnestly sought to persuade the young officer not to throw up his commission, telling him that it would be the greatest mistake of his life. But to all his pleadings Col. Lee returned but one answer—that his sense of duty was stronger with him than any prospects of advancement, replying to the appeal not to send in his resignation in the following words: I am compelled to; I cannot consult my own feelings in this matter."

With reference to the same matter, Thomas Nelson Page adds: "All that we know is that sacrificing place and honors and emoluments, leaving his home to the sack of the enemy already preparing to seize it, he decided in the sight of God, under the all-compelling sense of duty: and this is enough for us to know. What did the politicians clamoring for war know of the motives that inspired his high soul?"

To an old friend he wrote, just after the war: "I must give you my thanks for doing me the justice to believe that my conduct during the last five years has been governed by my sense of duty. I had no other guide, nor had I any other object than the defense of those principles of American liberty upon which the constitutions of the several States were originally founded, and unless they are strictly observed I fear there will be an end to Republican government in this country."

At the close of the war he said: "We had, I was satisfied, sacred principles to maintain and rights to defend, for which we were in duty bound to do our best, even if we perished in the endeavor."

When he was criticised for not fighting in the West Virginia campaign, he explained that no substantial success could be expected, and when one of his officers urged: "But your reputation was suffering, the press was denouncing you, your own State was losing confidence in you, and the army needed a victory to add to its enthusiasm," Lee replied, with a smile, "I could not afford to sacrifice the lives of five or six hundred of my people to silence public clamor."

"The Only Question."

At the great crisis when the question of the surrender of the army was being considered, Charles Francis Adams says: "Sitting before the bivouac fire at Appomattox he reviewed the situation. Doing so, as before at Arlington, he reached his own conclusion. That conclusion he himself at the time expressed in words, brief indeed, but vibratory with moral triumph: 'The question is, is it right to surrender the army?' If it is right, then I will take all the responsibility!"

The consciousness of duty conscientiously performed had been the mainstay of his life, and how appropriate that, in his last General Order, dated April 10, he should say to the faithful men who had followed him: "You will take with you the satisfaction that proceeds from the consciousness of duty faithfully performed."

When Gen. Alexander "earnestly remonstrated with Lee against the surrender of the army and counselled a dispersion of the soldiers individually to rally subsequently as best they might for further resistance, he replied: 'General, you and I as Christian men have no right to consider only how this would affect us, we must consider its effect on the country as a whole. Already it is demoralized by four years of war. If I took your advice, the men would be without rations and under no control of officers. They would be compelled to rob and steal in order to live. They would become mere bands of marauders and the enemy's cavalry would pursue them and overrun many wide sections. We would bring on a state of affairs it would take the country years to recover from.'

"These words," says McKim, "revealed the greatness of the soul of Lee, and they settled the question definitely and finally. Alexander says: 'I had not a single word to say in reply. He had answered my suggestion from a plane so far above it, that I was ashamed of having made it."

"Lee the American."

After the war he counselled that all bitterness be put aside, advising old soldiers and others to submit to all authorities and become law-abiding citizens. When a lady cherished some bitterness toward the Government, he said, "Madam, don't bring up your sons to detest the United States Government. Recollect that we form one country now. Abandon all these local animosities and make your sons Americans."

Referring to these noble words, Gamaliel Bradford, of New England, author of "Lee the American," says: "Abandon all these local animosities and make your sons Americans! What finer sentence could be inscribed on the pedestal of Lee's statue than that? Americans! All the local animosities forgiven and forgotten, can we not say that he, too, though dying only five years after the terrible struggle, died a loyal, a confident, a hopeful American, and one of the very greatest?"

By the side of these words of Bradford of Massachusetts let us place the words of Page of Virginia: "Some day, doubtless, there will stand in the nation's capital a great monument to Lee, erected not only by the Southern people, whose glory it is that he was the fruit of their civilization and the leader of their armies, but by the American people, whose pride it will be that he was their fellow-citizen. Meantime, he has a nobler monument than can be built of marble or of brass. His monument is the adoration of the South; his shrine is in every Southern heart."

McKim says: "His calm dignity when he met Grant at Appomattox to surrender the remnant of his army has often been described. But who can tell what a wild storm of feeling was beating within his soul! 'I would rather die a thousand deaths,' he had said before to Col. Venable. And again, as Dr. Jones reports, 'How easily I could get rid of this and be at rest! I have only to ride along the lines and all will be over! 'But,' he quickly added, 'it is our duty to live, for what will become of the women and children of the South if we are not here to support and protect them?"

"They are offering my father everything," said one of his daughters, "but the only thing he will accept: a place to earn honest bread while engaged in some useful work."

"Good Name Not For Sale."

"When offered the presidency of an insurance company at a princely salary, and being told that no duties would be required of him, nothing was asked but the use of his name, his answer was that his good name was about all he had saved from the wreck of the war, and that was not for sale." To another attractive offer he made this sublime reply: "I am grateful, but I have a self-imposed task which I must accomplish. I have led the young men of the South in battle; I have seen many of them die on the field; I shall devote my remaining energies to training young men to do their duty in life." And this he did, accepting the presidency of Washington College, (now Washington and Lee), at a salary that was a mere pittance.

"Thus, the first captain of his time, and almost, if not quite, the most famous man in the world, with offers that might well, in that hour of trial, have allured even him with all his modesty, turned his back on the world, and following the lamp with which Duty appeared to light the way, rode quietly to that little mountain town in Rockbridge county, to devote the remainder of his life to fitting the sons of his old soldiers to meet the exactions of the coming time. On his old war horse he rode into Lexington alone, one afternoon in the early autumn, and, after a hush of reverent silence at his first apearance, was greeted on the streets by his old soldiers with the far-famed rebel yell which he had heard last as he rode down the lane from Appomattox.

"Ah! ride on alone, old man, with Duty at thy bridle-bit: behind thee is the glory of thy military career; before thee is the transcendent fame of thy future. Thou shalt abide there henceforth. There shall thy ashes repose; but thou shalt make of that little town a shrine to which pilgrims shall turn with softened eyes so long as men admire virtue and the heart aspires to the ideal of Duty."

THE WORK AND THE WORKERS.

Winston-Salem.

The cold Sunday of January 6 was spent with Rev. R. A. Hunter and his congregation at Winston and with Rev. Edward Suits and his people at Lebanon. It was an excedingly cold drive to get to these churches and on account of the weather the congregations were small, but the drop in temperature was not reflected in the hearts of those who braved the weather to come out and I enjoyed preaching to the people at both places. Brother Hunter and his people have planned well and are pushing forward for a good year's work, anxiously desiring a deeper spiritual life for the church and expecting to raise all the claims in full. Winston always does. R. A. Hunter always does. Together they are doubly sure to go over the top. The every-member canvass is no new thing with them, for they have been practicing it for several years and would not under any condition go back to the old way of financing a church. Owing to a frozen radiator we did not get into the Sunday school with these dear people but learned that it is doing good work under the superintendency of R. N. Hauser The Christian Endeavor society too is doing good work with Miss Pauline Dixon president.

Lebanon.

Sunday evening hour found us back at Lebanon in time to get warm before the Christian Endeavorers came in for their meeting. This is a wide-awake society with Miss Viola Suits president. They are planning a real constructive program for the year's work. The Sunday school is making good use of its splendid equipment of class rooms. This church was one of the first to report the every-member canvass about completed. This is another church and pastor that we depend on to go over the top with their finances. Pastor and people are planning for and expecting a good year in every way. Building a parsonage during the year is one of their objectives.

Fairview.

On Saturday, January 12, I drove to Fairview to be with Rev. J. H. Bowman and his people in their first quarterly conference. Not many were present but we had a good conference and laid good plans for the year. They endorsed the every-member canvass and planned to put it on right away. Sunday morning I was with them in the Sunday school and had the privilege of sitting in their Baraca class taught by Brother W. M. Taylor. Brother Taylor is a fine teacher and seems to have a fine grasp of the Bible truths At 11 o'clock I preached to a fair sized audience and found them delighted with their pastor, Brother J. H. Bowman, and ready to go forward with all their church activities.

Gibsonville.

Sunday evening was spent with Brother C. J. Edwards and his good people of Gibsonville. There was a good congregation present and a fine spirit of interest in their church and its progress was manifested. The chart on the wall showed a good record for their Sunday school and I gathered that all lines of the work are going forward nicely. These people are interested in the advancement of the Kingdom and it was a pleasure to preach to them.

The Cry of a Pastor's Heart.

Brother Hunter expressed himself as deeply anxious about the spiritual welfare of his people. This cry from the heart of our young brother finds a response in the heart of every pastor who is deeply concerned about kingdom progress and the salvation of the people whom he serves, but it does one good to talk to a pastor whose first concern is the soul-welfare of his people, for after all this is the business of the church to keep all within her walls saved, and through them to reach out and save the world. We do all things else that we may reach the further and save more. To this end may God bless all our pastors in their efforts to bring their people to a higher spiritual level. And right here I would like to call on all pastors, Sunday school and Christian Endeavor workers with all the members of all the churches to join me in praying that this may be a deeply spiritual year in our conference work.

February.

Pastors, please bear in mind that nearly all of the evangelical denominations will observe February as Stewardship Month. This will afford a good opportunity to present to your people some of the great Bible truths on the proper plans and methods of giving, while other denominations about us are doing the same thing. This is our weakest point, and we need to teach our people what the Bible says about stewardship. Plan to have some one present this great theme in each of your pulpits during February.

Reports.

During last week I mailed a report blank to each pastor. I waited this late hoping that all first quarterly conferences would be over. If you have not sent in your report when you read this please look it up and mail it at once. Some pastors persistently failed to report last year; but if I am to do what conference directed me to do this year then I must have these reports. So please let me have them without delay. Thank you.

A Chart.

A chart will be prepared and presented at the Pastor's Summer Conference in June, showing just what amount has been paid on pastor's salary, A. C. B., and G. C. B. up to June 1. This is written now that each charge may have a chance to do its best by that time. We learn from Brother S. W. Taylor's reports that five chanrges have already paid their A. C. B. in full. All charges can easily pay the A. C. B. in full by June if they will, and they will then find it easy to pay the G. C. B. before conference meets in the fall.

May God bless and direct us all. Yours in His service, A. G. Dixon.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—JAN. 20.

Moses Called to Deliver Israel.

Lesson Text: Ex. 3:1-12.

Golden Text: Heb. 11:24, 25.

The Central Truth: God has sent His Son, Jesus Christ, into the world to deliver lost mankind from the bondage of sin, and lead them to the Canaan of glorious immortality.

Scriptural Points.

1. Moses was a child of Providence: Saved from the decree of death, the adopted son of Pharaoh's daughter, instructed in all the learning of the Egyptions, trained to worship and serve the God of heaven, and an exile for forty years in a strange land. His mother's influence over him was stronger than that of Pharaoh's daughter, for he chose to cast his lot with his afflicted people and turned his back upon royalty, and the promotions and pleasures that went with it.

2. His first effort to deliver his down-trodden people was a complete failure. It was an appeal to open revolt, to which the Israelites refused to respond. They failed to rally to his standard, and Moses was compelled to flee for his life. He failed because he did not take God into his plans. God's time for their deliverance had not arrived. The four hundred years of servitude was not quite ended.

3. The lonely shepherd life of forty years had wrought a wonderful change in this man who wanted to free his people by physical force alone. He was no longer rash, headstrong, and self-assertive. He had become quite humble, submissive, and dependent. He was now willing for God to have His way.

4. It was in this frame of mind that God appeared to him in the burning bush. He was ready to listen to anything that God had to say along the line of duty and service.

5. Horeb and Sinai were names of the same mountain or range of countains.

6. "The angel of the Lord" was none other than the Lord Himself, appearing as an angel. See verse 4.

7. The fire in the bush was for the purpose of attracting Moses' attention. When his attention was drawn God spoke to him out of the burning bush. The double call signified the great importance of the message.

8. Moses' reply, "Here am I," meant much more than his physical presence. He meant, Here am I, to hear thy message, to do thy will, and to endure whatever hardship may attend loyal and faithful service. "Here am I" is the language of a consecrated soul.

9. The presence of the holy God makes all ground sacred. The touch of creation has made this footstool of the Almighty a sacred place in which to live. The touch of providence has made all nature a sacred channel along which comes down from the Father of lights every good and perfect gift. And the touch of redeeming grace has made even the human body a sacred temple in which the Holy Spirit dwells by faith.

10. Moses was afraid to look upon God, not because he was so sinful, but because he felt himself to be so unworthy.

11. The declaration, ''I am the God of Abrham,'' is evidence that Abraham and the patriarchs were still living, and worshiping God in the glory world. Jesus quoted this passage as proof of the resurrection of the human body. See Matt. 22:31, 32.

12. Verse 7 is evidence of God's infinite care over His people. ''I know their sorrows.'' It is a knowledge of intense compassion. He felt as well as knew their sorrows. For it is written in Zech. 2:8: ''For he that toucheth you toucheth the apple of his eye.''

13. ''I am come down to deliver them.'' Deliverance would come by the power of God, as manifested in the ten plagues that devastated the land of Egypt.

14. A rich inheritance was awaiting this people in the land of Canaan,—''a land flowing with milk and honey,'' a most prosperous and plentiful country.

15. The proposition to send Moses to lead this people out of Egyptian bondage was not well-received. Moses objected most strenuously. He offered five excuses. 1. ''Who am I?'' I am not worthy of such an honor. 2. He next complained that he didn't know God's name, the Source of authority to undertake this task. 3. He then complained that the people would not believe the message. 4. He tried to get off by saying that he was not eloquent, but slow of speech. 5. And finally he said, in substance, ''Send somebody else, please.''

16. God patiently answered all these excuses except the last one, when His anger was stirred because of Moses' unwillingness and lack of entire consecration. God promised to be with him, to be mouth and wisdom to him, to perform miracles for him, and to give him Aaron to be his spokesman.

Practical Points.

1. A golden opportunity for large usefulness comes to those who wait in earnest and prayerful consecration. Moses waited forty years before the clock in heaven struck the hour for him to attempt a great work for God.

2. It was not material fire that Moses saw. It was spiritual fire, a manifestation of God's personal presence. ''God is a Spirit.'' ''Our God is a consuming fire,'' that consumes sin, selfishness, and worldly-mindedness. The fire of hell is also spiritual fire that torments the undying soul.

3. It is sweet consolation to be assured that God knows our peculiar tribulations. No ill so slight escapes His sympathetic notice. Not a sparrow falls to the ground without stirring the depths of His wonderful compassion. The most insignificant things and circumstances are held in the grip of divine providence. ''The hairs of your head are all numbered.''

4. Reverence for God and all sacred associations is likely to become one of the lost virtues. A revival of reverence is much needed in these days of loose thinking and loose living. ''Hallowed be thy name.'' ''Holy and reverend is his name.''

5. Our God delights to point to His record of goodness in order to stir up faith and devotion. ''I am the God of Abraham'' means that He will be just as good to us as He was to Abraham if we will meet the conditions laid down. ''Prove me now herewith,'' saith the Lord of hosts.

6. Deliverance from sin and from the bondage of this present evil world is Christ's program of redemption. ''He hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised.''

7. All the great and enduring achievements of history were accomplished by those who hold commissions from God. ''There was a man sent from God whose name was John.''

8. A sense of unworthiness is quite becoming. It should be regarded as an equipment, never as an excuse.

Whitakers and Speight's Chapel.—By request of President Dixon it was my pleasant experience to spend Sunday, the 13th, with the two faithful bande of workers and worshipers at Whitakers and Speight's Chapel, attending Sunday school and preaching service at Whitakers, also speaking to the young people in the afternoon, then worshiping with the Speight's Chapel people at night.

Here are two bands of workers that seem not to know how, or when, or where to become discouraged. When their pastor needs to spend some time in the Seminary yet, they borrow a preacher Sunday after Sunday and keep on smiling and working. If the water rises through the cement floor in the basement, at at Whitakers, and drowns the furnace, they make fires in the heaters, go on with the work, keep smiling, and see a bit of humor in the fact that while they are having difficulty in keeping the water out their Baptist neighbors are having a somewhat similar difficulty to keep the water in—their baptistry. Perhaps if there were an Inter-Church Adjustment Commission, it might suggest an exchange of places by the two congregations.

Or when the stove pipe falls to the floor, as at Spenght's Chapel, they keep smiling, gather up song-books and lamps and start to the nearby school house to hold the service, but gratefully accept the cordial invitation to have the service in a home near the church. We were presently engaged in our preaching service in the large comfortable living room of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Speight. Theirs is a typical eastern home, modernized by remolelling and equipping with modern conveniences including electric lights, but maintaining the large, open fire-place so inviting to one who grew up breathing country air and living by country ways.

It is an inspiration to worship with such congregations and to witness their hopeful, zealous efforts to extend the kingdom.

One member joined at Whitakers. It was a pleasing incident to shake hands and touch hearts with friend Garrett of the Children's Home who was down looking after some orphans who are about to enter the Home, he conducting a night service in Whitakers church while I was at Speight's Chapel. I wish gratefully to acknowledge the kind hospitality of Mr. W. T. Braswell and family in Whitakers and of Mrs. Hyman and family at Speight's Chapel and may the blessing of Heaven rest upon both faithful bands.

January 14.

Halifax.—I am beginning to believe that if ever people did enjoy giving these folks here know what the joy is. Several nice Christmas gifts that count came from the following: Mr. and Mrs. E. V. Neville, broad cloth shirt and gingham dress; Raymon Taylor, tie and lady's sik handkerchief; Miss Blanche Hardee, tie; Mrs. Mary Dosier, Misses Myrtle and Daisy Aycock, each a lady's silk handkerchief; Mrs. J. C. Edwards, gingham dress; Mrs. Horace Palmer, tie; Mrs. E. L. Perry, one celluloid letter opener. And aside from the Christmas poundings and gifts the following have come in at different times: Miss Winnie Burt, sausage and backbones; J. W. Hardee, ribs, backbones, sausage, pork chops, etc.; E. C. Harrell and wife, ribs, sausage and liver; Mrs. A. W. Cooper, apples; Mrs. F. M. Taylor and Aunt Peggy Lee, dozen oranges each; Y. A. Spivey, bag of corn for bread meal; Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Kennedy, eight pounds fresh meats; Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Locke, one pork ham, besides 24 pounds of sausage, backbones, ribs, etc.; Mrs. S. A. Whitley, one pork ham, five pounds sausage.

I failed to mention the nice lot of cheese and grape fruit in the last report, and also the names of Mr. anl Mrs. Rawlings and H. B. Neville and wife of Weldon who had a liberal share in the pounding. There may have been other names left off in the affair but if so it was unintentional on the part of those who assembled the goods. We thank you all, friends, and pray God's richest blessings upon each giver. The children at Hollister and Bethesda enjoyed the visit of Santa Claus during the Christmas season at the entertainment given at each of these churches. Now that the holiday season is over, we are trying to get back to normal by planning and working for a greater year in the work of the kingdom since coming to this field. There is much to be done and we are asking for the co-operation of each member in some way in the undertakings of this conference year. We are not working and planning to get members from other churches, but are anxious that we may get every one unsaved in reach of us this year into the Kingdom and into some church for service. To this end we have added this to our every-member canvass card: First: I am willing to pray for a revival in my local church and that every unsaved person in my community may be saved this year. I offer my services to this end. Then follows the pledge for finances. I believe that we should make the saving of the people the first consideration for discharging the financial obligation is not enough. Will all who read these lines help us pray that our goal may be reached? Halifax goals for 1924—The lost of my community saved. Every cent of every claim paid. Sincerely, N. G. Bethea.

IRON AND GOLD.

Captain Scott, in ''The Voyage of the Discovery,'' tells of the immense care that was taken by the magnetic experts on board to banish all iron and steel from the vicinity of the magnetic observatory. Everything within thirty feet of the observatory had to be made of brass, lead, hemp or some other non-magnetic material. These regulations secured the accuracy of the magnetic observations. But the motions of the heart are most disturbed by a bit of gold anywhere in its neighborhood. The thought of gain seems to deflect the whole delicate machinery of the moral sense.—W. L. Watkinson.

PASTORS AND TREASURERS PLEASE OBSERVE.

Just recently two letters have come to me from Rev. Geo. H. Miller, D.D., including remittances that had been sent to him as Christmas offerings. Please do not send any money counting on budget, to any general church agent. It goes first to your conference treasurer; he sends it to the treasurer of the general church, and from his office it is distributed to the various boards and institutions.

This does not apply to the money raised by the Women's Missionary societies. This money counts on the budget of the local church, but it is sent to the respective treasurers of these organizations, and not to the conference treasurer. Mrs. C. L. Whitaker, Lexington, N. C., gets the money for the foreign work, and Mrs. H. A. Garett, High Point, N. C., for the home work.

One other thing: money raised for Japanese Relief is not a part of the budget and is not sent to the undersigned. Send it direct to Mr. H. C. Staley, 1025 Calvert Building, Baltimore, Md.

May I suggest that pastors speak of this from the pulpit? If they will do so, it will help our people to understand our financial scheme, and eliminate unnecessary work.

And, please, let no one think that this is said in the spirit of criticism. It is not, but is only an effort to get us properly acquainted with the handling of the budget.

S. W. Taylor, Treasurer.

Mrs. Emogene Sprowl, West End, Greensboro, remembered us with a lot of canned beans. Thank you.

The Woman's Home Missionary Society, Grafton, W. Va., seemed to know our needs and sent a box of clothing.

The M. P. church, Cambridge, Md., Rev R. Y. Nicholson, pastor, seemed to know just the toys that would please our little ones.

These friends would have been well paid for their trouble if they could have seen the sunshine come into the faces of the little ones when they received the toys.

Last Sunday was so cold only four of our boys went to Sunday school. The attendance was small in all our schools and the offerings, of course, were small. Our expenses were heavy because it took an abundance of fuel to keep the buildings warm but all were comfortable.

If your offering was not what it ought to have been can't you make another effort?

The superintendent will spend a few days in and around Whitakers in the interest of the Home.

THE SITUATION.

The main loss of the society was the destruction and damage of its girls school buildings, and its kindergarten building, and to restore all for working purposes will require at least $12,000 to $14,000 more than the $15,000 which the missionaries estimated.

The board's losses were in churches, parsonages, school buildings, etc., burned, demolished and damaged, estimated by the committee in October to amount to $28,000 but its half of the receipts in cash will not meet the demand even if all could be restored at the October estimates, but this is seriously questioned and it must have from $14,000 to $16,000 more than the share of receipts to replace what has been burned or damaged, we believe.

The churches, parsonages, etc., ought to be restored, that is the general appeal from all sources in Japan, for the spiritual needs of the people must now be attended to, but the board is powerless to do so unless the Earthquake's Relief Fund is greatly increased.

The board's missionaries cabled twice for sums of money with which to rebuild parsonages and erect a temporary church in Yokohama, as permanent buildings were still prohibited by the government. Two of the churches were using borrowed tents, but the severe winter was at hand, and something more substantial is required.

The girls school is more needed than ever in Yokohama, where schools were destroyed, to gather in the girls who are exposed to grave dangers, and we must shelter our pastors, and provide the means to carry on their important work, but we can only turn to our people and plead for gifts to the special fund.

In the name of our Master whose work it is, in behalf of our sorely tried and faithful missionaries, in behalf of our impoverished Japanese people we plead for your help. Any gift, of any amount, from any source—individual, Sunday school, C. E. society, Woman's Foreign Missionary society's auxiliary, Ladies' Aid society—will be gratefully received. Send cash and subscriptions to Mr. H. C. Staley, 1025 Calvert Building, Batimore, Md.

Twenty-six members were killed, 15 wounded, 180 of their homes burned, and demolished, and 52 damaged. One girls' school teacher and six girl students were killed, and 146 stundents burnt out, and nine lost their parents. Fred C. Klein.

THE MANIFESTATIONS OF THE DIVINE OR A COMPLETE SUMMARY OF THE DOCTRINES OF THE BOOK.

By Pastor F. E. Marsh, East London Tabernacle, England.

The Spirit of God travels along many lines to bring us to the terminus of God's revelation about His Son, and one such line is found in what He says regarding the purpose of Christ's manifestation.

The Greek words rendered ''manifest'' signify ''to show,'' ''to lighten,'' ''to shine upon,'' ''to disclose,'' ''to exhibit,'' and ''to reveal.'' The words are used to decribe ''a light that shineth,'' (2 Peter 1:19), to give a reward ''openly'' for what has been done ''in secret,'' (Matt. 6:4), to make a person ''known'' by announcing his presence (Mark 3:12), to exhibit anything to another so that it can be said it has been ''shewed'' unto him (Rom. 1:19), to reveal, as when the apostle said: ''the life of Jesus was made manifest in our mortal flesh (2 cor. 4:10), and to appear before another, as when Christ ''appeared'' unto the eleven disciples in the upper room (Mark 16:14).

1. God,—or ''Christ, the Manifestation of God's Person.'' ''God manifest in the flesh'' (1 Tim. 3:16). Christ is God expressed in living characters. God is not known apart from Christ, but He is well known if we know Him.

2. Sin,—or ''Christ, the Revealer of sin's iniquity.'' ''The light shineth in darkness and the darkness comprehended it not'' (John 1:g). The Light revealed the sightless eyes of man's ignorance, the evil of his nature, and the plague spots of his wickedness.

3. Love,—or ''Christ,'' the Manifestation of God's love.'' ''In this was manifested the love of God toward us,'' etc. (1 John 4:9-17). Love is seen in those stakes in (1 John 4:9-17)—love for us, answering for our sins in the past (v. 9); love in us, moving us to love in the present (v. 12); and love with us, giving us a bright outlook as to the future (v. 17 margin).

4. Atonement,—or ''Christ, the Satisfaction for Sin.'' ''Once in the end of the world He appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself'' (Heb. 9:26). Provisionally He puts away sin by giving satisfaction for it in His death, and thus removes it as a hindrance. Substitutionally He removes sin as a penalty, as we believe in Him (1 Pet. 2:24). Effectively He puts away sin as a power as we identify ourselves with Him, by reckoning we are dead to it (Rom. 6:8-11). Prophetically He will remove sin as a presence, for He is the Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world.

5. Substitution,—or ''Christ suffering in our stead.'' ''He was manifested in these last times for you'' (1 Pet. 1:20). ''For you,'' may be read ''on your behalf,'' and thus ''in your stead.'' We must distinguish between Provision, Substitution and Identification. Provision proclaims that Christ has made a sufficient oblation for the sin of the needy world, for His death is ample to provide for all to be saved. Substitution declares that Christ has taken the place of the believing sinner and that He has answered for his sin and therefore he will not have to bear it. Identification is the Gospel for the saint, for God reckons all who believe in Christ have died with Him, and therefore have answered for their sins.

6. Resurrection,—or ''Christ raised from the dead, the manifestation of God's power.'' ''Jesus shewed Himself'' (John 21:14). The fact of Christ's resurrection is the living flame which ever burns on the altar of Christianity, and it is the vital factor in the life of the believer which lifts him from the realm of self to the fellowship of Christ, who lives in the power of an endless life.

7. Salvation,—or ''Christ, the Bringer of God's redemption.'' ''The grace of God which bringeth salvation to all men hath appeared'' (Titus 2:2 margin). Personally salvation is a benefit to the individual believer. Practically, salvation is a force to mold us like to Christ. In the first, Christ is offered to us (Acts 13:26); in the second, Christ is accepted by us (Eph. 2:8); and in the third, Christ by the Spirit lives in us (Eph. 3:16-17).

8. Life,—or ''Christ the Communicator of Life.'' ''The Life was manifested'' (1 John 1:2. Sin brings death, which means separation from God; Christ brings life, which means union with God in Christ (John 17:3). As natural life is the union of the spirit and body (James 2:26), so spiritual life is the union of the believer with Christ (Col. 3:3). Christ is revealed to us as the Quickener from sin's death (Eph. 2:1), He is revealed in us, as the Sanctifier of heart and life (Gal. 1:16), and He is revealed through us to others by a consecrated testimony (1 Thess. 1:8-10).

9. Power,—or ''Christ, the Displayer of Power.'' ''Manifested forth His glory'' (John 2:2). Glory is the excellence of anything in display. Christ's first miracle displayed the excellence of His power. It is fitting that His first miracle should display His power to change things. By the cleansing of His blood and the conformation of His Spirit He can change the sinner into a saint. Translation, transfiguration, and transformation cover the ground of God's Gospel of grace, godliness, and glory. Translated into His kingdom, as to place (Col. 1:13); transfigured by His Spirit, as to character (2 Cor. 3:18 r. v.); and transformed by His coming, as to the glorified body (Phil. 3:20, 21; John 3:2).

10. Satan,—''Christ, the Victor over the evil one.'' ''The Son of God was manifested to destroy the works of the devil'' (1 John 3:8). The works of Satan are mighty and manifold, but Christ has met him upon his own ground and conquered and routed him. Take but one chapter of the gospels, and in it we have a record of how Satan raised a storm, demonized an individual, tormented a woman and caused the death of a child. But Christ raised the dead to life, healed the woman, delivered the man, and stilled the tempest (Luke 8).

11. Emancipation,—or ''Christ, the Remover of sins.'' ''He was manifested to take away sins'' (1 John 3:5). The word for ''take away'' is rendered ''removed'' in Matt. 21:21, ''loosing'' in Acts 27:13, ''lifted up'' in John 21:41, and ''take away'' in John 21:39. The word signifies to take away by taking upon one's self, and is so indicated in John 1:29, where the margin reads ''beareth away.'' Christ removes the sins from us by His propitiation and power, by bearing their consequence in His death, and by severing us from their control by His presence.

12. The Holy Spirit,—''Christ endowed and endowing with the Spirit.'' ''He was manifest'' (John 1:31). John knew Christ when he saw the Spirit resting upon Him, and knew that He was also the Baptizer with the Spirit. Christ was anointed to do a definite work (Acts 10:38; Heb. 9:14), and when He accomplished that work became the Anointer with the Spirit as a reward (Acts 2:33).

13. The Father,—''Christ, the Revealer of the Father.'' ''I have manifested thy name'' (John 17:6). John 17 reveals what that manifestation means—a work done for us to the Father (4), the blessing of eternal life from the Father (2), a holy confidence in the Father (8), an exclusive prayer to the Father (9, 10), the disciples kept through the Father (14) sanctified by means of the Father's truth (17), oneness with the Father (21), and seeing the glory of the Father (24).

14. Immortality,—''Christ, the Bringer of Life and Immortality'' (Tim. 1:10). Life is more than continuity of existence; immortality is more than deathlessness. The latter is a state of holiness and bliss in an incorruptible and glorified body, from which it will be impossible to fall.

The revelation which God makes to us in the Book of His revelation is designed to be revealed in us by the Spirit through faith, and should be revealed through us by the effective working by the Spirit in our testimony.—The King's Business.

MY NEW YEAR'S PURPOSE.

To be a little kindlier
With the passing of each day;
To leave but happy memories
As I go along the way;
To use possessions that are mine
In service full and free
To sacrifice the trivial things
For larger good to be;
To give of love in lavish way
That friendships true may live,
To be less quick to criticize,
More ready to forgive;
To use such talents as I have
That happiness may grow,
To take the bitter with the sweet,
Assured 'tis better so;
To be quite free from self-intent
Whate'er the task I do.
To help the world's faith stronger grow
In all that's good and true;
To keep my faith in God and right
No matter how things run;
To work and play and pray and trust
Until the journey's done.
God grant to me the strength of heart,
Of motive and of will,
To do my part, and falter not,
This purpose to fulfill.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK

FIELD SECRETARY RESIGNS.

I am sure that it will be a shock and a source of regret that Brother Lawrence C. Little has resigned from the field secretaryship of the Board of Young People's Work.

During the ten months he was with us in that capacity he has won the highest admiration of the entire conference because of his winning personality and because of the efficiency of his work. It was indeed with the deepest regrets that the Board accepted his resignation and they did so only because Brother Little felt that God would have him in another field. He regretted to leave the field even as we regretted to lose him, and he did so because he felt God had called him to this other field, as the statements below incorporated in his resignation will show. In part Brother Little says:

"After earnest and constant prayer for these two months, I have decided to offer my resignation as field secretary of our young people's work and to accept the place as pastor of the church here in Concord.

"I hesitated to take such action until I felt definitely led to do so. But since coming here to this field and getting into the swing of things, I am sure that the Master would have me to take this step It is an opportunity I have long desired and one that I shall enjoy most heartily.

"In resigning my work, I am just as anxious as any one can be about the work in the field and am earnestly praying that God may help us solve our problem."

I do not know as yet who will fill the vacancy. It will be hard to find any one to carry on the work as effectively and efficiently as it has been carried on for the past ten months Until one as efficient and as full of the spirit of God is found the position will be left vacant.

We ask you, therefore, to bear with us as we try to direct the work as best we can without a field secretary, and also to join with us in prayer that the right person may be divinely directed to us.

N. M Harrison, President,
Board of Young People's Work.

Helpfulness.

One of the most beautiful and one of the most practical Christian graces is that of helpfulness. Opportunities to practice it meet us at every turn of the road, every hour of the day. The strangers we meet, chance acquaintances, associates, friends, members of our own family, of our church and Sunday school, or of our Christian Endeavor society each presents opportunities where we may practice this rare Christian grace, and helping these we are helping our church, denomination, and the kingdom. There is no more important word in the English language than helpfulness, yet how few of us really know the meaning of it by practice. Whittier's beautiful thought is worth memorizing.

"If there be some weaker one,
Give me strength to help him on;
If a blinder soul there be,
Let me guide him nearer thee;
Make my mortal dreams come true
With the work I fain would do;
Clothe with life the weak intent,
Let me be the thing I meant!
Let me find in my employ
Peace that dearer is than joy;
Out of self to love be led,
And to heaven acclimated,
Until all things sweet and good
Seem my natural habitude."

What difference whether I am to root down in the earth where the worms crawl, or up on the tree where the birds sing, if I am only helping to make God's tree. What odds whether I am the stone down in the foundation where no one ever sees me, or the cross on top where the sunlight never leaves me from sunrise to sunset, if I am helping to make God's church? Whether I am just an humble member or an officer if I count one in the Kingdom?

What Is the Program?

First, what is the program of the local church? What is the church doing in which you can help? What needs to be done at the church that you can do? Look around and see if it is neat and clean. Is it 100 per cent efficient in Sunday school work and in saving the community? If not, what can you do to help make it so? Is it 100 per cent true to its financial obligations? Does it pay up all along the line, ever keeping in mind that "the Lord loves a cheerful giver," and that a cheerful giver gives on time? If not, what can you do to arouse a spirit of better church finance? Then, of course you want a 100 per cent Christian Endeavor society. It will not be that unless you help make it the very best.

Second, what is the North Carolina Conference program? This conference can only do what the individual members do, and if all Christian Endeavorers do their best to help the conference program will go over the top along all lines.

Then in the third place, what is the program of the denomination? We can do nothing to help unless we know what is to be done. We must study to know what our church is undertaking to do for the Kingdom. Is it worth anything to God in his great work of saving the world? What are we doing for missions, for Christian Education, for the needy along all lines? (A good interesting meeting will surely result if you discuss these three programs. A good plan would be to divide the members into three groups and have them contest with each other, seeing which group could bring in the most points where the Christian Endeavorers could help—first group the local church, second group the conference, third group the general church.)

For Discussion. Suggested Ways of Helping.

Christian Endeavorers may help their church and denomination by prayer. Narrow, selfish praying never got anyone anywhere, but broad, earnest prayer for the salvation of a lost world stimulates to action and helps save the world.

By team-work in giving. "The earth is the Lord's' and whatever he loans to you for use while you are here he surely commands that you bring back a part to his church to use for him.. I truly believe that if you bring more back to him he will loan more to you for your use.

By holding steadfast to tested Bible truths. This is a day when people who are not grounded in the Bible truths and holding steadfast are perplexed and sorely troubled about what to believe. I prefer to take no chances. I'll believe the Bible. If the other fellow who doesn't is right I lose nothing,—take no chances here or hereafter, for believing the Bible as it is makes me happier here and cannot lose me anything hereafter. If I am right and those who do not take the Bible as it is are wrong then they lose everything here and hereafter.

By not being a religious gadabout, the counterpart of the hobo. Always on the go but belonging nowhere. Such a one is of no use to the Kingdom or to the society.

By developing trained workers. A school is judged by the kind of students it turns out. The Christian Endeavor society is the training school of the church. What kind of a worker are you going to be when you have passed through your training school?

By stimulating effort. Setting goals. Arousing friendly rivalry by contests. Glorifying service. By working for an efficient church. We need a stimulus to bring out our best.

By emphasizing loyalty. The Christian Endeavor pledge ties the members to the church. The society was organized to serve the church and the Lord of the church. It holds young people up to the highest ideals and puts before them the question, "What would Jesus do and what would he have me do?" Then when they find the answer they go and do it.

Quotations.

Committee work taught me to plan and then push, and this principle has brought me success in my business.—Alton C. Lock.

It was by what Christian Endeavor taught me about my denomination that I learned to know and love it in its larger life.—James Montgomery.

The evening church service should be full of Endeavorers and their friends. It offers an opportunity for real evangelistic work. We should make this service our own.—Barry Lindon.

To the Pastors.

Christian Endeavor is a part of the church as a spiritual building. It will help as is is made use of, guided, encouraged, loved. Neglect of an organ destroys it. So does neglect of the society.

THE WEAVERVILLE CONFERENCE.

The Young People's Summer Conference will be held at Weaverville again this year as it was last year. The exact dates of the conference will be announced, through these columns, within the next two weeks.

Two hundred and six were in attendance, besides the Buncombe county people, which possibly would total thirty or forty. We are expecting a much larger attendance this year. From indications there will be another record-breaking attendance. Fully five hundred people will apply for accommodations this year, judging from present indications. Because of the inability of Weaver College to provide for more the attendance will have to be limited to 350. We regret that we do not have more room to care for all of the young people who wish to attend the conference.

The registration for the conference will commence the fifteenth of February; room deposit reservation May the first. Registration fee will be fifty cents for all persons above the junior age, and twenty-five for children from the junior age and under. The room deposit will be five dollars, and will be returned in case the person cannot attend the conference provided the president of the board is notified five days before the conference convenes.

The chairmen of the districts will have charge of the registration. Each chairman will appoint some one in each church in his district as registration agent. This agent will secure the registrations and send same with the money to the chairman of his district. He in turn will report to the treasurer of the Young People's Board, Mr. F. R. Stout, Greensboro. A record of the registration will be published in the Herald at least every two weeks. We are expecting to register this year fifteen hundred people.

Two banners will be awarded. One to the district registering the largest number of persons, according to the membership of the district, and the church in the district registering the largest number of persons according to its membership will hold the banner. The other will be the attendance banner. The charge having the largest attendance at Weaverville will receive the banner, and the church on the charge having the largest attendance will hold the banner. Let us see who wins these banners. Chairmen, pastors, young people make your district, and your charge, and your church, win.

Do You Care?—Taking North Carolina as a whole, only one in three of the white population is enrolled in Sunday school, and less than one in four is actually attending.

TO ANY PROSPECTIVE STUDENTS OF OUR NEW COLLEGE.

As we are planning to open our doors to students next September, we would like very much to get in torch with all who wish to come to us at that time. So we are asking that you drop us a card, stating your desire and we will send you an application blank. I wish very much that the pastors who know the boys and girls who are speaking of going would send me a list, with the post office addresses, of all such that I may get in touch with them.

"MORE MONEY."

It has been said that constant dripping wears a stone; and I suppose that repetition may be said to be a good method for one to use in making his request known. Anyhow, the poor woman in the time of our Lord won out because she was importunate. So we are still in the receiving line, not begging, but asking all that have made pledges to pay up just as promptly as they possibly can. As we have said before we are now getting ready to erect the two dormitories, but we cannot go faster than you send us. So let us have your money and your prayers along with your good wishes.

THE CAMPAIGN.

We have not gone into winter quarters, but we have been trying to get ready to do some intensive work, and we are making our preparations. So there is a little lull at this time, a sort of breathing spell, We appreciate the responses that have been made to our appeals the willingness of our leaders to co-operate in all this campaign. For while it has not been a great compaign, it has at least been a long one. But we have gone too far now to turn back. We are too near the goal to be discouraged. There is only one thing to do and that is to go forward with zeal and determination to win out. Let everyone do his and her best for the college, and we will surely succeed. Fraternally yours, R. M. Andrews.

Born not for ourselves alone but for the whole world.—Motto.

BETTY'S BARGAIN.

"Every time I want to go anywhere I have to play with Ned," said Betty, putting her little brother in his go-cart rather crossly. "The other girls can go to pick flowers this morning, but I must amuse a tiresome baby all the time."

"It would be very nice not to have a little brother," said mother, thoughtfully. "You could go where you pleased all the time, and a few little chores would not count."

"Wouldn't it?" said Betty, with a smile. "Just think of the good times Nell and Grace have. I wouldn't have to leave my new story-book so often and hunt playthings for Ned if he belonged to some one else."

"I'll buy him if he is for sale," said Mrs. Turner, who was coming up the walk. "How much do you ask for him?"

"A dollar," said Betty. And to her great surprise the visitor took out a fat purse and gave her a big silver piece.

"Run along with the girls and spend your money as you please," said Ned's new mamma, as she took the baby out of the go-cart. "I think I have made a good bargain."

"I'll get some oranges and candy and pop-corn," thought Betty as she hurried after her friends.. "They are not going very fast, and I can catch up after I get the things. They'll be surprised, I guess, to see what I bring to the picnic."

The man at the store gave her a small basket; and, when she went away with it filled with good things, she had only half her money left. "I'll save this much to buy the little cart for Neddie," she said to herself as she ran down the stree. "He wants it so bad."

"Where did you get all these nice things," asked the girls when they spread their dinners on the big rock in the woods.

"Mrs. Turner gave me a dollar," said Betty, "and I spent half of it."

"Gave you a whole dollar? What for?"

"Sold Neddie for a dollar? My mamma would have given you ten times that much if she had known you wanted to get rid of him. What did you want the dollar for?"

"I wanted to buy Neddie a cart and—"

"But you can't get him a cart when he doesn't belong to you," said Grace. "I always thought you ought to be the best girl in the world because you had such a dear baby to play with, and here you sold him for a dollar."

"Do you think—" began Nell, but Betty was running home as fast as she could go. The goodies were left on the big rock, and all she cared for was to buy back the dear little brother.

"If you'll only sell him back to me," she gasped, "I'll earn a dollar to pay you. I don't know what made me so wicked."

"Well, if you are sure you want him, I suppose I'll have to give him back," said Mrs. Turner, with a smile. "He is a little darling, and I am not surprised to have you come after him."

"Mrs. Turner said I made a good bargain, but I think it was very bad, mamma," said Betty. "I hope Neddie will never find out how near he came to being Ned Turner instead of Ned Brown.—Hilda Richmond.

A LAUGH IN THE RIGHT PLACE.

"I wish," said Jean, wistfully, "I wish mother would let us have a barn party and invite the little girl who lives in the new house on the hill. I think she looks lonesome, playing all alone. She hasn't any brothers and sisters—mother said so."

"She's got a doll, though, the biggest one I ever saw. It looks like a real baby. Perhaps mother will let us have a party. We haven't had one for a long time. Let's ask her." Ruth was half-way up the path before she finished speaking.

"Let's!" echoed Jean, running after her.

Mother, sweeping off the piazza, stopped her work to listen. "Of course you may have a party," she told them. "I think Betty Lane would like it in the barn, too. I doubt if she ever went to a barn party before. Do you want me to call her mother on the telephone and invite her, or will you ask her yourself when you go by the house on your way to the post office?"

"We thought—that is, I thought—it would be nice if we wrote a really, truly invitation on—on your lovely pink note-paper," replied Ruth.

"Why"—Mother hesitated a moment. "Do you think that would be just the thing? The party won't match the paper!" Then, as Ruth looked so disappointed, she added: "But I don't mind. I will write the invitation for your first and you may copy it. I don't believe you know just how to word it."

After writing and rewriting the note two or three times Ruth was satisfied that she could copy it neatly on the pretty pink paper. When it was finished Jean declared it looked like a grown-up person's writing and Ruth herself was not ashamed of it.

At two o'clock everything was ready. The big, cool barn had been swept. The table had been spread. The children knew the lunch would be a success, for they had sampled everything from the gingerbread horses mother had made to the apples, pears, and grapes they had picked themselves in the orchard. Dressed in pink gingham bloomer suits, they swung on the gate watching the road down which their little guest would come.

"I'm glad her name is Betty. I love that name," said Jean.

"Here she comes! Oh, goody! she's bringing her big doll," cried Ruth, dancing with delight as a little blue figure came in sight over the brow of the hill.

All at once Jean saw something else.

"Oh!" she gasped. "Oh! What are we going to do?"

"What do you mean?" asked Ruth, and then she, too, began to cry, 'Oh! oh! oh!"

The children looked at each other in dismay. They felt like runing and hiding, and yet they knew that they couldn't. Already Betty was near enough to wave to them—near enough for them to see more plainly this embarrassing thing that they must face.

Betty Lane was all in blue, ruffly, fluffy blue. She wore white socks and white slippers. A blue hair-ribbon perkier and wider than any the children had ever seen before, was tied to a golden curl on top of her head. And in all this finery she was coming to slide down the haymow, jump in and out of the hay-rack, pat the horse, feed the cow, and hunt for eggs in the grain-bins!

"Oh," almost sobbed Ruth, "It was the pink note-paper that did it! She thought it was going to be a parlor party. Mother said the party didn't match the paper. What are we going to do?"

"We can't do a thing but stay right here and act as if we didn't notice anything wrong," returned Jean, miserably. "But it just seems as if I couldn't look at her at all."

Meanwhile the little guest had come very near. She waved her hand gaily. "Here I am," she announced, "and I've brought Isabella. She just loves parties. 'Specially the ice cream. Don't you, Isabella?"

"Come right in," said Jean, clearing her throat. Ice cream! This was worse than the blue riffly dress!

Betty looked at the sisters a bit anxiously as they all went up the path. She felt that something was wrong. As for Ruth and Jean, it seemed as if they just couldn't take her in that barn!

Of course, they had to. "We're going to have our party here," explained Ruth, huskily. "It's a barn party, you see."

For a moment after that all three children stared at one another in silence—a silence that seemed to hurt. Jean's eyes were full of tears and Ruth's lips were quivering. As for Betty Lane, there was the queerest expression on her face. Was she going to cry, or fly into a temper and go home? For just a moment the three stood there, and then—then Betty began to laugh!

"Oh, what fun!" she cried. "I never went to a barn party before. Won't it be fun? Don't you think so, Isabella?"

After that nobody thought of anything else but fun. When the ginger-bread horses and the fresh milk and fruit appeared, Ruth remembered with a little pang of regret that Betty had expected ice cream. Mother had thought of ice cream, too, and had remembered that no party, whether in a parlor or a barn, is quite a truly party without it; so, without a word to the girls, she came in with a half-dozen cones piled high with it—pink, cool, and delicious. And, coming as a surprise, how much better it tasted.

"It is just the loveliest party I ever went to," declared Betty as she trundled Isabella down the path toward home. "I hope you'll ask me again sometime. Say good-by to the ladies, Isabella."

She made the big doll wave a china arm at her hostesses in farewell.

"We play in the barn every day," Jean told her, "although we don't have a party every day. We wish you would come and play tomorrow."

"If my mother says I may, I'll come early tomorrow," promised Betty, promptly.

When she was out of hearing Jean turned to Ruth. "I think she's just lovely," she said, "but for a minute, when we took her into the barn, I didn't know—I thought, perhaps—she looked so''—

"I know," Ruth nodded. "I thought she was going to cry. But she laughed! The minute she did that, I knew she wasn't cross or anything but just dear. The next time I don't know what to do, I'm going to do that too—laugh!"

THE LITTLE RED HOUSE.

Once upon a time there was a little boy who was tired of all his toys and tired of all his picture books and tired of all his play. "What shall I do?" he asked his dear mother.

And his dear mother, who always knew beautiful things for little boys to do, said: "You shall go on a journey and find a little red house with no doors and with a star inside."

Then the little boy's eyes grew big with wonder. "Which way shall I go," he asked, "to find a little red house with no doors and a star inside?"

"Down the lane and past the farmer's house and over the hill," said his dear mother. "Come back as soon as you can and tell me all about your journey."

So the ittle boy started out. He had not walked very far down the lane when he came to a very little girl dancing along in the sunshine. "Do you know hwere I shall find a little red house with no doors and a star inside?" the little boy asked her. The little girl laughed. "Ask my father, the farmer," she said.

So the little boy went on until he came to the great brown barn, where the farmer himself stood in the doorway looking out over the pastures and grain fields.

The farmer laughed, too. "I've lived a great many years, and I never saw one," he chuckled. "But ask the granny who lives at the foot of the hill. She knows how to make arrowroot taffy, popcorn balls and red mittens. Perhaps she can direct you to it."

So the little boy went on farther still until he came to the granny sitting in her pretty garden of herbs and marigolds. "Please, dear granny," asked the little boy, "where shall I find a little red house with no doors and a star inside?"

The granny was knitting a red mitten, but when she heard the little boy's question she laughed cheerily. "I should like to find that little house myself," she chuckled. "It would be warm when the frosty nights come, and the starlight would be prettier than a candle. But ask the wind, who blows about so much and listens at all the chimneys. Perhaps the wind can direct you to the little house."

So the little boy took off his cap politely to granny and went up the hill. The wind was coming down the hill as the little boy climbed up. As they met, the wind turned about and went singing along beside him. It whistled in his ear and pushed him and dropped a pretty leaf into his hands to show what a good comrade he was.

"O wind," asked the little boy, after they had gone along together quite a way, "can you help me to find a little red house with no doors and a star inside?"

The wind can not speak in our words, but it went singing on ahead of the little boy until it came to an orchard. There it climbed up in an apple tree and shook the branches. When the little boy caught up, there, at his feet, lay a rosy apple. The little boy picked up the apple. It was as much as his two hands could hold. It was as red as the sun had been able to paint it, and the thick brown stem stood up straight as a chimney. It was a little red house in which the apple blossom fairy had gone to sleep. It had no windows.

"I wonder," thought the little boy. He took his jackknife from his pocket and cut the apple straight through the center. Oh, how wonderful! There, inside the apple, lay a star holding brown seeds.

So the little boy called "Thank you" to the wind, and the wind whistled back, "You're welcome." Then the little boy ran home to his mother and gave her the apple.

"It is too wonderful to eat without looking at the star, isn't it?" he asked.

"Yes, indeed," answered his dear mother. —Carolyn Sherwin Bailey, in Mother's Mazazine.

WEENIE.

When the Gray boys were growing up there were no such things as moving pictures and automobiles, and you children of today would wonder how there could have been any fun at all.

But there was lots of it, for when Mr. Gray had a new barn he gave the old one to Ted, Bill, and Harry for their playhouse, and what a jolly one it made!

Every Saturday afternoon all through the winter months and early spring the boys had circuses and Wild West shows, with Weenie for the clown. They chose Weenie, not because he was queer in his head or his legs—he was all right in both—but because he was a good-natured chap and plump as a partridge.

Weenie wasn't his name, of course, but the boys called him that, for they said he had lots of "pep" and good muscle and could do some lively jumping even if he was squeezed into clothes half a size too small. It was Weenie who always walked the ropes that went across the barn, and who could twist himself into as many shapes as a monkey shinning up and own the ropes of the swing.

Weenie's real name that was written in the school register was Walter Brown, but not a boy or girl of Breezy Nook called him that.

Long before two on Saturday afternoon a procession of young people, with nails in their pockets for admission to the show, could be seen making their way to the barn. The doorkeeper took the nails and later sold them for old iron, and woe be unto any one who tried to sneak in without pay!

In front of the barn stood tables where some of colored Mahaly's ginger-cooky men and horses were for sale, and bottles of licorice water, which the boys had been shaking vigorously an hour before the performance. On warm days, and when Mahaly was in good humor, there was iced lemonade.

Bill, who was not famous as a scholar, printed upon the beam in the barn one day, "Make no Nose," as a warning to the audience to keep very still through the afternoon's entertainment, but it did not do much good. Such a stamping of heavy boots and clapping of hands made the old barn shake, and could be heard all over the neighborhood.

These Saturday afternoon shows were just as much fun as the best "movies" you ever saw, but one day something unusual happened. A piece of paper tacked on to the hitching-post at the side of the barn made every boy and girl come to a sudden standstill. It read:

I guess this ain't any day to be in the barn. I'm tired of bein clown and I'm goin to look for birds. You can get Jim Downs to do the funny. Yours truly, Weenie.

While the eager group crowded around to read the sprawling penmanship, the writer was already on the road for an afternoon of freedom. How his blood tingled at the very thought, for freedom meant doing just as he liked for an afternoon at least, and just as he liked meant for Weenie looking at the birds. He knew the spot where they gathered on the edge of the bluff and then took their flight across the wide ocean. If there was one thing on earth that Weenie loved, it was to watch closely the birds and to study their ways, and he could never be induced to tease or shoot them.

So with a light heart and a lighter conscience—having quieted that by giving the name of Jim for his Saturday job—he went on his way.

It was one of those surprising days in a series of cold, snowy ones, when it seemed as if one could catch a breath of spring; and Weenie whistled, first like a blackbird, then like a quail, and sent his "bob-white" call sharp and shrill across the stretch of meadow land.

He walked or flew along, as if on wings, and was astonished when he reached the large place called "Woodbury Lodge." This was not unfamiliar to him, for Henry Woodbury, the supervisor of the Breezy Nook schools, was in the habit of visiting the grammar school every month.

As he tramped along, he glanced at the doors and windows of the summer cottage, and to his surprise saw that the place was partly open, although so early in the season.

Suddenly, in the midst of his passing thoughts, he heard a sound like a faint call for help. Weenie stopped where he was, and listened.

"That's no bird!" he said to himself, and he shouted, "Hi there!" Again, and fainter it seemed, he heard the plaintive cry.

By this time he was fully alert. "Coming! Coming!" he cried. "Where are you? Who is it?"

Was it possible that he heard the faint voice answering, "I'm here!" Then Weenie whistled loud and clear, and called again, "Coming!"

His feet never flew over the ground more quickly, and he soon drew near the spot from which the call seemed to come. He almost stumbled over a large flat stone that lay in the path before him. It had evidently been pushed aside, for as Weenie drew nearer he found himself peering into a deep well—down, down—it seemed as if the depths of the world. How his heart pounded! For there, clinging to a rubber pipe that lay across the Well—some distance from the top—hung a little boy. Weenie tried his best to control his thump-ing heart, and to speak calmly, lest he might alarm the child.

"Hold on tight, sonny! I'm coming!" he said.

He threw his basket to one side, quickly stripping off his coat, and removing his shoes. He would need all his agility as a circus performer now!

Stooping over the well, Weenie scanned its smooth, slippery sides to see if there might be some sort of foothold by which he might climb down, but there was none. Looking around him despairingly, he chanced to spy a stump with gnarled roots only a few feet from the well. Without hesitation, Weenie stretched himself on the ground, hooked his stockinged feet into the roots, and hung himself head downward into the well. In this position he found he could just reach the little fellow, and in another moment he had gripped him firmly by the arms. . But in spite of Weenie's unusual strength he had not the power to lift the little fellow out of the well. He could merely hold him up until further help came or until his arms gave out.

The child was whimpering softly because his little arms were strained from hanging in so awkward a position, and he was quite blue and cold. No doubt he wished in his small heart that he had never played so near the well.

Weenie began to call for help. His wonderful gift of imitating the birds had strengthened his vocal cords, and his voice carried very far. He knew if his feet should slip from their position he would fall headlong into the well, carrying the little fellow with him. It was a dangerous place to be, and Weenie knew it, but he set his jaw firmly—and held on.

At last—after what seemed a great length of time—there was a sound of feet in the road, and a moment later, Sam, one of the farm hands, rushed to the spot. He saw both the boys and cried, "Hold on! I'll have you out of there in a minute." With his brawny arms he grasped Weenie around the waist, and at the same time Weenie tightened his hold on the little boy's tired wrists. One toss and they both lay on the ground, trembling and half stunned. Sam lifted the smaller boy in his arms, for the child looked ill and weak. Then he gave a shrill whistle, and in a few more minutes a horse and carriage came whirling down the country road. Before the horse had fairly stopped, a man sprang out of the carriage and rushed to the gorup. It was the child's father.

"Great heaven!" he cried, when he saw the limp little form in Sam's arms. With Sam's help he put his son and his rescuer into the carriage, and taking off his coat threw it over them. Sam quickly related all that had happened.

"Drive like mad, Sam," the father said, "I can't. I'm too shaky! I'll send for Dr. Beardsley right away."

Things happened very quickly. The doctor, who was at a neighbor's, was soon bending over Weenie and Henry, Jr. Hot blankets and water-bags were brought by Sam's wife, for the younger boy was plainly suffering with a chill. It was not long before he began to revive, and the purple color in his face soon changed to a more natural hue.

The strain of the rescue had been too much for Weenie. He had almost lost consciousness. Rousing later, he murmured: "What's up? Oh!" Then, rubbing his forehead, he said: "Yes, now I remember. Is—is the little boy"—

"Saved, my boy, yes." The father's voice trembled. "And you saved him. Who are you?"

"Weenie! I mean that's what the boys call me. My name is Walter Brown."

"Walter Brown," Mr. Woodbury repeated. "Why, that's the name of the whistler in the seventh grade. He whistles like the birds, doctor."

"If anything had happened to Junior," Mr. Woodbury continued, "Why, doctor, I think it would have killed his mother. You see, I brought him out here for the day to give her a rest. He's always crazy to go where there's water, and he wandered off. I thought he was with Sam's wife, and she was sure he was with me."

"I'm all right now," said Weenie, but even as he spoke he became dizzy, and the doctor said:

"Here, my lad, you've just got to be still—lie here half an hour more, and then I'll take you home."

"No, I'll do that," Mr. Woodbury exclaimed. "I can't lose sight of Weenie—and mother will want to see him and thank him. We owe thanks to Sam, too, but if Weenie hadn't been on the spot"—

"Oh, 'tain't anything!" exclaimed Weenie, and for once the supervisor of schools forgot to give him a low mark in grammar.

"Anything!" Mr. Woodbury echoed. "Well, we'll see."

News of the rescue soon spread all over Breezy Nook, and the boys whose Saturday fun had been spoiled were the first to hear of the exciting adventure. They reached Weenie's home about as soon as he arrived.

"You'll hear from us, Mrs. Brown," Mr. Woodbury told Weenie's mother, as he clasped her hand warmly. "Your son has told me why he happened to be near our place today and so helped to save my boy from drowning. He loves birds, doesn't he, and if I live he shall make a study of them. I remember what his teacher told me of his wonderful gift for imitating them. He must make them his life study. I shall see about it."

"Oh, I didn't do much!" Weenie murmured, blushing at the applause, which was greater than he had ever received even at those other Saturday performances.

"Well, you think this is all nothing!" Mr. Woodbury said, in a voice trembling with deep feeling. "It will be something mighty nice, some day."

And it proved to be so, for in spite of Weenie's high jump and jolly stunts, he had his days off for studying the birds, and in after years his chums were proud to say:

"Oh, he's our Weenie and always will be. He's a smarty on birds! I tell you, you can't catch him, and we call him Professor Weenie, but every one else says Professor Walter Brown."—Lucretia M. Gardner, in Zion's Herald.

Thine to work as well as pray,
Clearing thorny wrongs away;
Plucking up the weeds of sin,
Letting heaven's warm sunshine in.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE.

Roberta Station.—Our work here is still moving on real well. . We have had real large congregations considering the cold weather. We held our Christmas service Monday night, December 24. We had a full house. The tree was beautiful. Most of the Sunday school received beautiful presents. The children were trained by Mrs. Carl Williams. An offering was taken for Christian Education, which amounted to $22.

We are real proud of the Roberta choir; it is reported that they did the best singing at the convention at the Concord court house Sunday, December 30. The choir leader is Mr. Carl Williams.

The interest in the Sunday school seems to be increasing; the report every Sunday is an increase from last year. I am glad we are going forward. We have a fine superintendent, Mr. W. D. Alexander.

. First church, Concord.—The interest and attendance at all services is good. The Sunday school attendance Sunday had an increase of 101 over the previous Sunday. Mr. Little is conducting a Bible drill for a few minutes in the Sunday school which is very interesting as well as helpful. The Sunday school voted yesterday to challenge the Charlotte Sunday school in an attendance contest for the next two months.

At the morning service Sunday our pastor preached a splendid sermon, after which he administered the sacrament of the Lord's Supper; quite a large number communed.

At the night service Jack and Carolyn, children of Mr. and Mrs. P. H. Scarboro, and Josephine, little daughter of Mrs. Mary Scarboro Fant, were dedicated to the Lord by baptism.

We were glad to have Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Bodenheimer (the latter a daughter of Rev. J. H. Moton), worship with us. These folks have moved to our city and we welcome them into our midst. Ex-Reporter.

North Davidson.—Bethesda and Mt. Pleasant had Christmas entertainments on the 24th of December. Bethesda in the afternoon had a splendid program by the Sunday school. The singing was fine. An offering was taken after an address by the pastor. And then the tree was unloaded of its gifts for the entire Sunday school, including the pastor and his wife.

Just as we expected the benediction to be pronounced they announced one thing more—a pounding for the preacher. There were so many good things that the little Ford would not hold them all, so the balance was piled on running board and fenders. This is getting to be an annual affair with Bethesda—they did this same thing last year. We tried to thank the people then and there but feel that we did not half express our appreciation, so will again try to assure you of our appreciation. We think of you often when in kitchen preparing the good things to eat and even when we sweep, for there was a nice broom together with all the good things to eat.

We went from Bethesda over to Mt. Pleasant for their entertainment at night. They had, to make sure of his presence, invited the pastor a year ago, to be present on this occasion. Their program was fine and they made an offering for Christian education, after which they distributed gifts to all the school. They had a tree here too and remembered pastor and wife liberally with gifts from the tree. We had no opportunity of saying thank you but we appreciated the gifts very much and enjoyed the program and good fellowship.

I think Friendship had a Christmas service with perhaps a tree. They are preparing to remodel their church. This church lost two of its oldest members recently—Mrs. W. A. Phillips the 30th of November and her husband, Mr. Wesley A. Phillips, just 30 days later. They had lived to a ripe old age and were gathered home.

Shiloh was disappointed in not being able to have a Christmas service, but they are by no means idle. They have two Christian Endeavor societies and two missionary societies. The Junior C. E. society has 60 members. some of these Shiloh people have been supplying us with fresh meat, in fact they have kept us supplied since middle of November. One of the Shiloh members leaves us a bottle of sweet milk every morning. We appreciate all these special favors very much.

Mrs. Clifton L. Whitaker.

Haw River.—The first Sunday in January was a day of lamentation and bitter regrets on Haw River charge. Grim blizzard came and took his toll of all the flowers in this community and the ladies have hardly assumed their natural expressions unto this day. However, it didn't nip our services, as we met a good congregation at Mizpah at 11 o'clock and also had a service at Brown Summit at night. Brother Jones at Mizpah said he tried to reason himself into believing that it was too cold but failed, so he was on hand, while his good wife remained at home and prepared a dinner for the pastor that would have appealed to the taste of a king. Mizpah is enthusiastic in her plans and we predict a good year at this place.

We are discovering that Haw River is a sleeping giant. Few charges, if any, in the conference have more wealth, and when they are awakened, Haw River will be second to none in the conference in amounts paid to budget—they are well able. W. D. Reed.

Lincolnton.—I am in the sixth grade and am eleven years of age. During school I began to think it would be nice to write a little "Wouldn't It Be Nice?" poem, so I put forth an effort and here am inclosing it.

Some time ago one of our most true and faithful members was called away to her home in "glory." Mrs. Freeman was about sixty-two years of age and faithful until death. Her place is vacant in church and home and seems that all know it can never be filled. Let us all try to be prepared to meet Mrs. Freeman in our bright home over yonder.

My poem or write-up will be next.

Wouldn't It Be Nice?

Wouldn't it be nice to dream one night
Of Jesus our Savior so bright;
Wouldn't it be nice to dream of Him,
Who loves little children and cares for them?
And still while we're dreaming
Wouldn't it be nice to see
Little angels so pure and white?
To hear their voices fresh and gay,
To see where they live and love to stay?

But best of all, wouldn't it be nice
To see our home in Heaven so bright;
To hear our Savior speak and tell
That there is nothing wrong, for all is well
So straight to Heaven we'd take our flight
And reign with Jesus that very night.
But soon as the dawn of day
Comes through our little window
Upon me and you, we'd wing
Our flight to earth again.
With a surprise we'd wake and look upon the screen,
But nothing of Jesus and the angels are to be seen,
And then we think 'twas only a dream.

Lena Johnson.

Canaan, Denton Circuit.—Today was another good day for us. Brother Trogdon preached another good sermon. We never get tired of hearing good sermons like our pastor presents to his congregations. Collection was taken for the Children's Home, which was $3. Also a collection was taken for the general claims.

President Dixon will preach for us next Sunday at two-thirty. Best wishes to the Herald and readers. Mattie Hunt, Reporter.

St. Paul.—No poundings, but other tokens of appreciation. Many pleasant greetings with hearty handshake and good wishes. Was kindly remembered by my class of young ladies at Christmas. Mrs. Pierce also received several nice presents off the Christmas tree.

Our first quarterly conference was held Saturday evening, December 15. Almost all the official members present. The business of the conference was transacted in perfect harmony. The pastor presented the claims of the church, with a recommendation that every family subscribe to the Methodist Protestant Herald. The conference voted to adopt pastor's report and proceed to raise A. C. B. during the first three months in the year, and then proceed to collect G. C. B. We hope to have each budget in full by the end of the conference year. Brother G. L. Wyrick was appointed to secure subscriptions to the M. P. Herald. He has already secured several. We hope he will succeed in securing a subscription from every family which is related to the church. We are planning to begin a series of revival services the first Sunday in April with Brother N. G. Bethea for pulpit help. We are praying for a gracious revival. Your prayers will be appreciated. T. E. Pierce, Pastor.

Pageland.—Rose Hill Sunday school was reorganized Sunday morning, January 13. The following officers and teachers were elected: Superintendent, J. A. Turner; assistant superintendent, H. B. Sowell; secretary, Mrs. Guy Watts; assistant secretary, Miss Ethel Clark; teachers — Mrs. Lee Smith, J. E. Smith, Mrs. J. H. Turner, J. C. Gathings. In honor of the deceased Mrs. C. E. Smith, who had been teacher of class number one for several years, a teacher will not be elected to fill her place until the second quarter. During this vacancy Mrs. Fannie Porter will act as substitute.

Rev. J. W. Quick is able to be out again after being confined to his bed most of the time for several weeks.

During the summer the ladies volunteered to raise enough money to paint the church. The necessary amount has been secured, and the building is now being given a second coat of paint, which will add much to its appearance. Leo Small, Reporter.

Reidsville. — The attendance at services Sunday was good. The regular communion service was held at the 11 o'clock hour and our pastor preached a sermon appropriate for the occasion.

We didn't have the evening service as usual as the Ministerial Association at a recent meeting decided to hold union services each Sunday evening until they had been held in every church. Sunday evening the service was held at the Presbyterian church, Rev. H. B. Worley, pastor of the Disciples' church, preaching.

At the regular Christian Endeavor hour our society went over to the Baptist church and held a joint service with the B. Y. P. U., our society having charge of the service with Mr. G. M. Reed as leader. Special music was rendered which added much to the program.

Last Thursday evening the regular monthly business and social meeting of the Christian Endeavor society was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Dixon. A great deal of interest was shown and plans were made for the good of the society, one item of special interest was the pledge made to put the church paper in every church member's home. A committee was appointed to look after this. Delegates were elected to attend the Northern District Convention which meets in High Point February the 8th and 9th. After the business was disposed of delicious hot chocolate and sandwiches were served.

Yesterday evening the Baraca and Philathea classes met in the Sunday school rooms and held their business meetings. The business session was held separately, after which they enjoyed a social hour together. Refreshments were served during this time.

Matthews Chapel.—Sunday school report for January 6: Attendance—officers and teachers, 7; departments—adult, 5; senior, 13; intermediate, 14; junior, 3; primary, 1; beginners, 0. Visitors, 7. Total attendance, 50. Collection, $1.10. Dora Edwards, Secretary.

Pleasant Hill Church, Spring Church Charge.—We were glad to welcome to the parsonage our pastor, Rev. H. S. B. Thompson, and his family several weeks ago. Brother Thompson was pastor of this charge about 26 years ago. Therefore he is not a stranger to some of the people here.

In spite of the cold weather yesterday the attendance at Sunday school, preaching and prayer meeting was very good. Communion service was also observed.

We had our Christmas tree on the night of December 27. The program was splendid. Considering the small number of children that we have to take part in a service. The credit is due to Mrs. Rose Crew and the co-operation of the parents. The offering, which was for ministerial education, amounted to $8.40.

Our Christian Endeavor society is still alive and at work, for which we are thankful.

The Ladies' Aid society will hold the meetings in the homes of the members during the winter months.

All of our boys and girls who have been spending the Christmas holidays at home have returned to their various schools, except Miss Elsie Maye Crew. She has been ill for the past two weeks from ptomaine poisoning. We hope for her a speedy recovery. We also hope for all of you boys and girls that this may be the best and most profitable year than you have ever spent.

May each of us make for this year the resolution, that we do more for the cause of Christ than we have ever done before. Reporter.

An Elect Lady.

While in Greensboro during Christmas week we called to see that elect lady, Mrs. J. R. Dwiggins, at the home of her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. M. W. Gant. Sister Dwiggins and her husband, Rev. J. R. Dwiggins, were for many years members of the M. P. church on Flat Rock circuit. Their home was always the pastor's home. Since the death of her husband Sister Dwiggins has made her home with Mr. and Mrs. Gant. We were pleased to find her in good health and so comfortably situated.

An Aged Minister.

We also called to see Rev. W. C. Kennett at his home on Randolph Ave. He appeared to be in better condition than when we had last seen him. We predicted that he will live to see his 90th birthday. The 20th of next month (February) will be his 89th birthday.

A Salvation Army Lassie.

One night we stood on the street and listened to a Salvation Army lassie tell the story of the prodigal son and of his final return to the loving arms of the father. We counted about one hundred men and boys who seemed to be listening most intensely to her earnest appeal. Some one has said that if the Methodist church had retained her old-time fire the Salvation Army would not have been necessary.

Asheboro, January 12.

Whitakers Charge.—It was my privilege to be with the people on the Whitakers charge the fourth and fifth Sundays in December. In the morning I was with the people of the Whitakers church in their Sunday school and preached for them at the usual preaching hour. In the afternoon I was with the people of Speight's Chapel in their Sunday school and preached for them in the evening. This plan of appointments was followed each Sunday. I found the work in good shape, generally speaking, and especially so, since the people do not have the all-time service of a pastor. The people are very loyal and have the interest of their church at heart. They are a people who do not mind work, thus they are constantly planning and doing things for the betterment of their church and for the advancement of God's kingdom. To show the interest of the people, I cite the following. The people of the Whitakers church desired to have a church meeting and the purpose of the meeting was to begin preparations for revival services to be held in that church in the early spring. To rebuild the walls of Jerusalem was a great task for Nehemiah and his followers, yet the task was finished and this is one of the primary reasons, "the people had a mind to work." It is a task to build up the spiritual walls of a community, yet where the people have a mind to work it can be done. Consequently I believe that this is going to be a most profitable and successful year on the Whitakers charge.

I am truly grateful to Dr. Dixon for all that he is doing to have the work supplied in my absence. I am also very grateful to the brethren of the conference who have supplied the work and will supply it until May.

It was certainly a splendid thing to read these words in the Herald this morning: "Whitakers charge pays A. C. B. in full, and takes fifth place on this honor roll." I rejoice with the people in the fine way in which they have begun this conference year. May each one of us be as faithful in service for Christ as for self!

Yours in His service,

Fred W. Paschall.

Church Dedication at High Point.

English Street M. P. church, Rev. A. M. Hamilton pastor, is to be formally dedicated on Sunday January 27. President Dixon is to preach the dedicatory sermon at 11 o'clock. There will be other services during the day. Rev. R. M. Andrews has been chosen to preach in the evening service.

This new church is forging ahead rapidly. The attendance is crowding the present capacity, and enlargement is already in contemplation. New heating apparatus is about to be installed now.

West Lexington, Lexington Charge.—We were favored with fair weather last Sunday and the services were well attended here. There were 101 in Sunday school, a decided increase over the previous Sunday and one year ago. At the morning church service the Lord's Supper was administered and quite a large number partook of the elements of bread and wine, thus attesting to the fact that they "intend to lead a new life following the comandments of the Lord." A very attentive congregation was present which is always an inspiration to a pastor.

A larger congregation assembled for the night service, which was held from seven to eight o'clock. Again the pastor was given a good response by the people with attentive minds to his feeble efforts in presenting the gospel. We were glad to have several visitors in the service, among whom we noticed Brother H. V. Swicegood and family, members of the Mt. Carmel church.

Next Sunday night the people of West Lexington church will be privileged to hear Rev. J. S. Riddle, pastor of the Uwharrie charge. Brother Riddle will preach at this place for the first time, and we are expecting a large congregation present to hear his gospel message.

The general work of the Sunday school and church is moving along nicely at this place, and the people are co-operating with the pastor in a splendid manner. It is a pleasure to serve a people so responsive and appreciative of the efforts of a pastor in the beginning of his ministerial career.

Our next regular appointments at this church will be the fourth Sunday morning and night. C. B. Way, Pastor.

South Davidson Charge.—On Sunday, January 6, we met our appointments at the two churches on this charge, Mt. Carmel in the morning and Yadkin College at night. Owing to the extreme cold weather there was a small attendance at both churches. We administered the Lord's Supper at Mt. Carmel and there were 24 who communed out of a total attendance of 34 in the service. The work at this church is going forward nicely. We are planning to make the every-member canvass at this church soon. Our next appointment at Mt. Carmel will be next Sunday afternoon at three o'clock.

Next Sunday morning we will be at Yadkin College church. The Lord's Supper was administered at this church on the third Sundady morning in December. The Yadkin College church is bringing its finances up pretty well. Some paid on the budgets, the Japanese Relief Fund, the General Conference delegates' expenses, and pastor's salary is paid up some in advance. We appreciate the fine spirit of loyalty that is shown by the church at Yadkin College. Though a small band of workers, the members of this church are doing their part in a splendid manner to carry on the great work of the kingdom of God in our denomination. C. B. Way, Pastor.

IN HONOR OF THE DEAD.

Miss Val Crawford.—On January 3, 1924, death came into the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Crawford and took their loving daughter, Val. She was sick about one week. All that could be done by doctors and loving hands could not save her. She had pneumonia. Val had sueffred a lot in her life. She was one of the most patient sufferers we ever knew and a sweet girl. She was 23 years ald. She joined the church when quite young and was a faithful member until the end, always ready to do anything she could to help. She loved her church and Sunday school, and will be missed in her class. Val was a good Christian girl and was loved by all that knew her.

Orange Chapel has lost one of its best members, but we know Val is in heaven waiting for us to come. We know that we ought not to grieve, but we loved her so. The Lord knows best and He never makes a mistake, and we know Val is freed from the burdens and cares and sufferings of this life and has gone home to rest where no suffering and heart-aches come, but we will miss her so! She will be missed in the home. She was always ready to do anything, and it was a pleasure to her to do what she could to help.

She left father and mother, three brothers and two sisters, and a number of other relatimes, and many friends, but she is just over there, waiting for her kindred and friends.

The funeral was held at Orange Chapel church by her pastor, Rev. H. L. Isley. He made a beautiful talk. Her body was quietly laid to rest in the cemetery. The pall-bearers were the young boys of her class and the flower girls were the girls of her class. With heavy burdened hearts they paid their last tribute of respect to their loved one. Her class gave a beautiful wreath of flowers. The grave was covered with flowers and ferns. With sad hearts we tried to sing. Ben and Ola Williams sang two beautiful duets; one was, "Waiting Over There," the other, "Safe in the Arms of Jesus." With broken hearts they sang the best they could.

We trust we can all bow in humble submission to God who does all things well. The dear bereaved ones have our prayers and sympathy. May we all live a life such that when the Lord calls us we will be ready to meet Val in that home over there, where there will be no parting and we'll never say good-bye.

A Cousin.

Edmonds.—W. R. Edmonds died January 2, funeral services January 3, after which the remains were laid to rest in Clarke's Chapel cemetery. Funeral services were conducted by the writer. We were pleased to have present at the services ex-Mayor Gallatin Roberts of Asheville, who spoke of the good traits of Brother Edmonds' life. Brother Roberts has known him for more than 40 years. He climaxed his speech by saying Brother Edmonds was in every respect a man.

Brother Edmonds had been a member of the church for 45 years. The writer has known him about two years. He was interested in his church.

His companion preceded him about six months ago. She was about 80 years old. He lacked a few days of 85. They lived together more than 60 years.

In their going Clarke's Chapel has lost two of its oldest and most faithful members.

Two sons, A. F. and J. W. Edmonds of Asheville, and daughter, Mrs. H. G. Garrisoon, survive, besides grandchildren and great grandchildren, also a number of friends.

May God comfort them all.

Sincerely, B. M. Williams.

—Alexandre Gustave Eiffel, canstructor of the famous Eiffel Tower in Paris, died there December 27, at the age of 91. Eiffel was one of the most famous engineers of Europe. He built some of the biggest bridges and viaducts in France and other countries. He was laughed at when he suggested the great tower for the Paris Exposition of 1889. Most engineers thought that a tower 300 meters (about 985 feet) high could never be constructed. But Eiffel built his tower and it remains to this day the highest structure in the world.

A WORD OF APPRECIATION.

I am sure I voice the feeling of all the superannuates when I say we are grateful to Brother Wills and all who contributed to the Christmas fund, in response to his appeals and efforts, and also to Brother N. M. Harrison, Jr., and to the young people who contributed through him. We not only appreciate what was contributed, but more the spirit behind it all.

MARRIED.

On December 24, 1923, at about six o'clock in the parsonage of Forsyth charge Mr. Henry A. Waller and Miss Essie Clement were happily married, the writer officiating. This was a beautiful but quiet wedding, only a few friends being present. Mr. Waller is the son of Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Waller who are members of our Maple Springs church. The happy young couple are to make their home near Maple Springs church. We wish them a long and happy life. Geo. L. Curry.

TWO OFFERS OF FREE TITHING LITERATURE.

We hereby offer free, postage paid, to any minister who asks for the number needed, a sufficient quantity of the new pamphlet, "Winning Financial Freedom for Pastors and Churches," to furnish one copy to every member of the official boards of his church. THE SEAM BELOW THE BOTTOM.

"Ye shall receive power, the Holy Ghost coming upon you." The Master's word is in accord with all the deep laws of human personality. Jesus satisfies all the deep hunger of the soul, the hunger for peace, for security, for love, for the assurance that life will not be in vain, and, not least, the hunger for power, power to live well, and power to serve effectively. The Holy Spirit of God releases all the secret, undeveloped powers of the soul.

A certain Durham coal mine originally worked two seams of coal, the top seam and the bottom seam. Eventually they were nearing exhaustion, and a deeper boring resulted in the discovery of a still lower seam which was known henceforth as "the seam below the bottom." We have had a very similar experience in our souls. We have exhausted the powers of the human spirit which lie near the surface, but we have not yet begun to develop the deeper powers, the resources of the seam below the bottom.

There is too wide a gap between our dreams and our business. Our prayers are the revealing vision of the men we should be, but we are not nearly as good men in our offices and our factories and our homes as we are in our prayers. If only we lived more nearly as we prayed, the world would be compelled to take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus.—William T. Way.

"Not all the heroes fall on fields of glory,
Not all brave deeds are told in song and story;
But they are heroes who, with hearts aglow,
Hide deep within their breast their weight of woe,
And then with faces shining lift the load
'Neath which another staggers on the road."

Whitakers, Whitakers Charge.—Our pulpits are being well filled now. Dr. Dixon was followed by Rev. R. M. Andrews who we all feel like belongs to us. Of course we enjoyed him thoroughly. Then came our pastor, Rev. F. W. Paschall, for the holidays, preaching the fourth and fifth Sundays. Every one who heard him seemed well pleased with him, and we are looking forward to his coming to work with us. While he was here we decided to have our special meeting in May and we are so glad Dr. C. M. Compher has promised to come back to us at this time. We are hoping and praying for the salvation of so many of our people,—heads of families who are out of Christ. Brother Bethea is so good to come to us every first Sunday night. He even came last first Sunday night, when it was so extremely cold we could not get a car to move so we missed hearing him. I guess the reason his car worked that day was because of the excitement of that wonderful pounding. Yesterday morning we were delighted to have Dr. T. M. Johnson preach for us in the morning and lecture to the young people in the afternoon Both were good and much enjoyed by us all. Last night Mr. H. A Garrett made us a talk regording our Home he being in our midst to get some orphan children. We are so glad to think these little ones can be taken into our Home, where we know they will have the very best of training. Our Sunday school is doing very well considering the cold weather. On Christmas eve night we gave our Sunday school a Christmas tree; all the little folks seemed to enjoy it.

Again we wish to thank all of our pastors who have come to our assistance in our time of need, and also to thank their congregations for being willing to give up their service in order that we might be served.

One of our girls (Lucy Nunnery) is working for the scholarship in getting subscriptions to the Herald. I certainly hope she may succeed, for she is a deserving girl, and I've felt all along that I hoped some way would be opened up whereby she could go to our college. Best wishes to the Herald.

—Forty-seven county Sunday school conventions were held in the first six months of the State Convention year, from April 1 to September 30, 1923. The State Association furnished two speakers for each convention. In these forty-seven conventions 886 Sunday schools were represented by 288 preachers 454 superintendents, 2,077 teachers. The estimated attendance was 12,950 people.

A NEW START.

By Henrietta Heron.

A new start is a new inspiration. We all feel the need of it at times. We find ourselves wishing and saying: "Oh, if I could just start over again!" Well, that is just what the new year gives us an opportunity to do. No matter what the mistakes of the year that is gone, no matter what the lost opportunities, the heartaches, the failures—the new year offers a new start—and 365 clean pages.

What goes on the pages only you can determine!

There is a challenge in that. No one else can write the pages for us any more than some one else can make our character for us—we must fill the pages and work out the character for ourselves. The first page is fair and white,—it is free from blots and stains—yet it can not remain empty—something must be written upon it. What shall it be?

Here is a suggestion. Try to live the new year one day at a time. If we look forward to 365 days of keeping our temper, controlling our tongues, doing the kindly things, it seems like a big task; but any boy or girl worth while can live their best for one whole day. Then, they can add another day to that record—and still another, and another until the year rolls up a glorious account of beautiful days beautifully lived.

Here is another suggestion. Do not be too much concerned about what you do—rather be concerned with what you are. Try keeping your thoughts and hearts right. Determine to be gentle and kind and generous and unselfish and self-controlled in your own inner thoughts; be master of your heart and feelings, and resolutely keep only the best therein, and your outer life can not help but be beautiful and lived in a beautiful way.

A new start—a right heart and noble thoughts—one day at a time—here is our golden opportunity to live "the life beautiful."

Mebane. — The December meeting of the Young People's Auxiliary of the Mebane M. P. church met at the home of Beatrice and Margaret Qualls. The meeting was opened by our vice president in absence of the president. After a short business session a very interesting program was rendered. We are just completing the study of our book, "India on the March," which has proved to be both helpful and instructive to our band of workers. We are very fortunate to have as our instructor of this book our pastor, Dr. T. M. Johnson.

As a proof of our interest in our mission work we have ouside of our regular dues and society obligations sent to Mr. Minnis, our missionary of India, ten dollars to be used as he thinks best for playground equipment for the girls and boys of India.

At the close of our meeting the hostess served a salad course, and a pleasant social hour was enjoyed by all. Our January meeting will be held at the home of Edna Cate.

SATAN'S RIGHT OF WAY.

I found when I was studying law that there was a law of "reserved right." For instance, suppose I should sell ten thousand acres of land, and should retain one acre in the center. I would have a right to go over those 9,999 acres to get to mine. One trouble with us is that we reserve a room in our hearts which belongs to Satan, and he knows it and uses his right of way.—Record of Christian Work.

It matters much whether you are really good, or only wish to appear so.—Latin Proverb.

they have been the world leaders in the matter of the development of the printing art. Nowhere else on earth do we find such mammoth plants devoted to the art preservative. Nowhere else do we find all classes of periodical literature so widely circulated. The American newspaper affords a field of interesting study within itself.

Intelligent people have now reached a point where they are forced to take into consideration the time that shall be given to the matter of newspapers. If one determines to keep in close touch with the local press the State and National press, the best literature in his chosen profession, and other publications various and sundry, he will soon find that he is face to face with the question as to whether he has any time left for the reading of books at all. The "newspaper fiend" is becoming a very numerous type of individual.

The newspaper is for the most part just what it proclaims itself to be, a paper for the dissemination of news. Its province is news; its aim in existence is news; it is measured as a success or a failure by its ability to gather and present the news. If it has nothing else upon its pages it must have the news.

We must go to books for the digested and accumulated wisdom of the past; for the serious and weighty conclusions of the best minds of all ages. We must go to books for the basic material for all progress; for the records upon which all further steps are to be based. To secure that substantial mental food needed by the robust mind we must turn to books. In books we have thought preserved, pruned, freed from extraneous matter, and left as a rich store for all time.

The newspaper is for today; the good book is for all time. We must have the newspaper to keep our touch with the world's progress; but we must surely have our books to hold our place among the thinkers whose work contributes to the progress of our time and of all times.

We have given to our newspapers the tribute of becoming a newspaper reading public; now let us not neglect our books and libraries because such is the case; rather, let us give to the books upon our shelves all the more consideration, and the serious effort required to read and digest these books will give us a robustness of mind not otherwise attainable.

THE SECRETARY AT THE IOWA-MISSOURI CONFERENCE.

As the name suggests, this conference lies partly in the State of Iowa, and partly in the state of Missouri.

The attendance was good, notwithsauding the fact that Millersburg, Ia., the seat of the conference, is an inland village several miles from the railroad. Quite a number came in their own automobiles, others joined together and came in parties, and all who came by train were met as requested, and returned to the railway station when they desired to leave. Every courtesy was shown to the visitors, and all seemed to greatly enjoy the visit to Millersburg.

The forward step taken this year was in the election of a traveling president. This subject has been under discussion for several years, and the experiment has been tried before, but this time it is believed and hoped it will be no longer an experiment. The full time superintendency is greatly needed in this fine conference. Dr. C. J. Nutt, who was elected to this important office, has served the conference twice before as president. This in itself speaks of the high esteem in which he is held by his brethren.

This conference had suffered much from the death and removal of its ministers, and at times there has been a feeling of discouragement due to this fact. But at the recent session there were a number of new men for the itinerancy, the most of the self-supporting charges were supplied with pastors, and the work is in a very hopeful situation.

Your Board of Home Missions has been assisting in the support of the work at Keckuk, Iowa, since its organization, and is still making a small appropriation. However, the work is making progress under the leadership of Rev. J. C. Leonard, and we are quite hopeful that this year will see Keckuk accepting responsibility for self-supoprt.

At Kahoka, Missouri, your board gave assistance some years ago, then turned the charge over to the conference as a finished piece of work. But deaths, removals, and difficulty in securing the right men as pastors, had a discouraging effect upon the work. Rev. H. E. Marshall was assigned to the work at Kahoka and Carmel, one year ago, with instruction to give attention as far as possible to all our work in that district. He has had a fine year, and returns with high hopes for the future. Soon he must have another man to take over a part of the work which he has undertaken to do in that section of Missouri. We greatly need another minister to relieve Brother Marshall.

Rev. R. Underwood of the Fort Smith-Oklahoma Conference is doing good work at Harmony, the church which became so well known under the leadership of Rev. C. R. Green. Last year Brother Green resigned the work, and was transferred to Farrar, Iowa. We will hear more from Brother Green in the near future.

Charles H. Beck.

THE PLAN OF SALVATION.

Salvation is by faith. The individual is saved by faith. The church and ministry can do its work only by faith.

Faith, while it takes to itself other elements, consists essentially in making God in all His attributes, and the things of God, real to the soul. We speak of believing that God will do this and that and the other thing, and of trusting in Him; and this believing we think of as being faith. A little reflection, however, will make it evident to us that it is because we know God, have a realizing sense of God, that we believe God will do this and that. In other words, we must see that all believing in God rests upon or flows out from a knowledge or realization of God or that the essential foundation in faith is making God real to the soul.

Tremendous forces inhere in Almighty God. When the church and ministry make God in all His attributes gloriously, blessedly, and tremendously real to the soul through faith, they come into vital connection with these forces. Then these forces work mightily in them and through them mightily in the hearts of vast multitudes. Christ says to His disciples, "If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed . . . nothing shall be impossible unto you." If the church and ministry make God in all His attributes gloriously, blessedly, and tremendously real to their souls through faith, and abide in this faith, it is not impossible for them to lead a billion and a half of souls, if not in a generation, at least in a comparatively short time, to a saving knowledge of Christ. And there is nothing that can stay them in their onward sweep to victory. On the other hand, if they see God only vaguely in shadowy outlines, they can do very little in making the world truly Christian. The Master told His disciples when they had failed to do what they were commissioned to do, "Ye could not do it because of unbelief."

The tremendous forces that inhere in God are the attributes of Almighty God. Make the infinite goodness of God real to the soul through faith, and it puts forth energy in the soul and produces results in it. Make it more and more real through faith, and it puts forth greater and greater energy in the soul and works larger and larger results there. What is true of the infinite goodness of God is true of His infinite greatness, is true of His infinite holiness, is true of every one of His attributes. Each attribute puts forth energy peculiar to itself, and works results peculiar to itself. The combined result wrought by all the attributes is that life in the soul which was in Christ our Lord. When some of the attributes are made less real to the soul than others, the result is a lopsided Christian life. There is no limit to the energy that the attributes will put forth and to the results they will produce in the soul, except the limit God Himself has imposed upon our ability to make Him real by faith. "Beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, we are changed into the same image from glory to glory."

Christ came into this world to be the light of the world, to show unto us God. In Him was life, and that life was a copy of the life that is in God, the Father. He lived out this life in the midst of humanity, that everybody everywhere might see and feel and realize the beauty, the grandeur, the excellences and blessedness that there are in that life. Then He says, "Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip? he that hath seen me hath seen the Father; and how sayest thou then, Shew us the Father? Believest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me?"

If Christ had shown us the infinite love and goodness and mercy of God by living them out before us and had stopped there, there would have been no Calvary. But Christ did not stop there. He had come to show us God in all of His attributes. God is infinite in holiness, righteousness, and justice. Holiness was part and parcel of His own nature. In order to salvation it was necessary to enable everybody everywhere to make the holiness, righteousness and justice of God gloriously, blessedly, and tremendously real to their souls through faith, as well as His goodness, love, and mercy. But because the carnal mind is enmity against God, it was impossible for Christ to do this by living out the holiness, righteousness and justice of God without drawing upon Himself hatred, persecution, and death. Christ knew this from the beginning. Hence we see the holy, just, and perfect One deliberately giving Himself to die upon the cross that the unholy and unjust may have eternal life. And in offering Himself He showed once for all time the tremendous awfulness of the nature of sin, that it is murder against God, actual murder of the Son of God, and murder of heart against God. the Father, thus opening the way for everybody everywhere to come to a deep sense of the imperative necessity of seeking salvation. It was absolutely necessary that Christ should die, since He could not, because of the antagonism of the human heart, show us God in all His attributes without giving up His life. And this giving up His life was the crowning act in a glorious revelation of God, whereby Christ laid an immovable foundation for the faith of every one who comes into the world

In connection with the world program we are told by the religious press of the desperate needs of humanity, that the not distant future may hold in store for us things awful beyond anything the world has even seen, and that Christ is the only hope of the world. And having gone thus far, the leadership of the church begins to flounder about as if it were shrouded in darkness or in a dense bewildering fog. We are being told of the Sermon on the Mount, and what would be the condition of things if every one would shape his life in harmony with it. The Golden Rule is being spoken of, and the results that would come if it were observed. Then, all the precepts of Christ are mentioned. But it is said these are not quite adapted to the conditions of today. They would have to be changed in form at least.. We are also told that if the United States would join the League of Nations, very much would be accomplished. Then, various activities and efforts are urged upon the church.

There are, however, some fundamental facts that appear to be quite forgotten or lost sight of. It seems to be forgotten that salvation has to do with the inner life, and only indirectly with its outer form or expression: that the tremendous forces inhering in Almighty God are the only forces that can uplift humanity and transform souls into the image of God; that these forces put forth their energy only as the church and ministry come into vital connection with them by making God in all His attributes real to their souls through faith; and that Christ came to earth so to reveal God as to lay an immovable foundation for the faith of everybody everywhere.

It is supposable that Satan knows the Sermon on the Mount by heart, that he knows the Golden Rule and the Ten Commandments, and all the precepts of the Old and New Testaments; that he has known all these for nineteen hundred years and more. And yet he is Satan still. Hold up before carnal minds all the precepts of the Word—do it morning, noon, and night, and continually—and carnal minds are carnal minds still. "What the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh." But bring these carnal minds into vital connection through faith with the forces that inhere in Almighty God and there is a mighty transformation. They come to love the Lord their God with all their mind and heart and strength, and their neighbor as themselves and they run in the way of His commandments. The church and ministry need to keep in mind, that, no matter how great things they seek to do, no matter how far-reaching the plans they make, and no matter how intense efforts they may put forth, they will succeed in building up the kingdom of God among men only in proportion as they make God in all His attributes real to their souls through faith. CHRISTIAN ENDEAVROR TOPIC FOR SUNDAY, OCTOBER 21.

What Is Christian Citizenship?

"For Zion's sake will I not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest, until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth." Isaiah 62:1.

A Christian citizen is one who is working out in society the ideals of the Master, helping to carry on the work of human redemption and betterment.

When Christ was on earth He set an example of unselfish service to mankind, and He left this service to be carried on by the citizens of His Kingdom; those who would have for their aim the same justice, brotherhood, and good-will of the Gospels which inspired the Apostle Paul to follow in His foot-steps.

Today, as never before, there is a need for sturdy, faithful-hearted Christian citizens. A crisis confronts our nation. Materialism, greed, selfishness, sin, are common enemies of ours. The moral war is yet on. Many of the multitude today as of old are without a shepherd to guide them. Many are daily succumbing to the down-pulling forces of modern society. The Christian citizen of today is confronted with the work of applying the principles of the Gospel of Christ to the tangled problems and complicated life which modern civilization has created. Hungry nations must be fed, shelter and clothing must be provided for the homeless and the destitute. We have given millions to aid the war-stricken countries of Europe, but still they cry for more. Bishop W. A. Chandler says:

"More recently wise men have begun looking to spiritual forces as the only remedy for the woes of a wounded world, and the only certain cure for the ills of Europe, especially. We have tried feeding and clothing the needy there, and the more we give, the more voices cry 'Give! Give!'

"What Europe really needs is to see a wide-spread revival of religion in our own country. Such a revival in the United States would raise the spiritual temperature of the whole world. What we need, and what they need is honest-to-goodness religion."

Christian citizens are awakening to the fact that their supreme duty, and most strategic opportunity are not the reclamation of the adults but the religious education and nurture of children. The conviction is becoming clear that the relative lack of vital power and constructive influence of the church can be traced to its past failure or indifference to the religious training of childhood. Upon the Christian citizens of today rests the responsibility of training the child of today to possess a true, rich, and appealing concept of God. He must know about God, know about the Bible, and know about the church and its works.

To knowledge must be added religious attitudes, interests, ideals, loyalties, appreciations and emotions, volitions, and the expanding consciousness of God in the life. He must be taught right religious habits.

The home should be a place of sound religious training as it is there the child receives most of his ideas, ideals, and beliefs concerning industry, law, government, morals and religion. He also receives many ideas and ideals from the school and Sunday school. Christian parents and teachers are ever needed to guide these little ones.

Christian citizens share with God in the building of the world in which they dwell, in the creation of an ideal human world after the pattern which Christ gave us when He was on earth.. He has entrusted to His citizens here the work of enlarging the members of His Kingdom, of taking the gospel to those who do not belong to it; of winning souls to Him.

This demands the union of forces: the conservation of strength and the enrichment in heart that Christ revealed in His prayer to His Father.

Unselfish service; sympathy towards those who need it; love for our fellowmen, and kindness to all; these were His principles. Let them be ours, likewise, and may we, as Christian citizens, carry out the ideals that He established for us. Nila Amick.

This week Brothers R. C. Causey and W. T. Hanner join the F. R. Stout $500 Club.

Last week through an error Rev. A. G. Dixon was listed for $375; should have been $500, so the additional $125 is reported in this week's list.

PAY UP.

We are still in the receiving line; ready to receive whatever you give. And we may say we are thankful for what we are about to receive, but never so thankful as when we receive. Now is a good time for everybody to get even with their college pledges. So come along, friends, let's pay up and be done with that phase of it.

THE GOAL.

We are yet far from the goal but we are not despairing; if all of our people who are interested in the college will do what they can we shall be sure to come out on the top. Look at Tabernacle this week; here is a fine example of what can be accomplished with a determined effort. A few months ago it did not look like it was possible for Tabernacle church to secure its quota. Some of the leaders were without hope, but we have the joy this week of reporting this church over. We congratulate them and we want to thank heartily all who have had any part in this achievement.

Fraternally, R. M. Andrews.

Philadelphia, Greensville Circuit.—We are progressing nicely in our work here at Philadelphia. Our Sunday school attendance has increased lately and I hope it will continue to increase every Sunday. We have for our superintendent now Brother J. S. Branscomb. He has been very prompt since he was elected, so let us folks co-operate with him and make our school even better yet. No Sunday school superintendent or pastor can accomplish much without the prayers and co-operation of the Christian people. Prayer is the keynote to success.

We were glad to have Miss Laura J. Reed with us last night. She spoke in behalf of the Woman's Home Missionary Society. I'm very glad to say that she organized a society here, starting with thirty-one members. There was a large crowd out to hear Miss Reed and I'm sure every one enjoyed hearing her.

The revival meeting which began at Matthews Chapel the first Sunday, closed last Thursday afternoon. They had a glorious revival. Mrs. A. G. Dixon did most of the preaching; she did just fine. The attendance was good throughout the meeting and I'm sure everyone enjoyed hearing both Mrs. and Mr. Dixon's interesting sermons.

Well, Philadelphia paid up the preacher's salary last week, I'm very glad to say. I certainly hope Greensville circuit will pay out in full this year. You can, if you will only do your duty, Greensville circuit, so get busy! Conference is almost here. Let us pray that it will be a success.

Best wishes to the Herald and all its readers. Dora Pearson, Reporter,

PHYLLIS' PARTY.

''Smells nice and piny,'' said Ruth, lazily, sniffing the warm fragrance.

''Let's make a playhouse of pine boughs,'' said Marian. Too much in a hurry for steps, both climbed over the railing and jumped to the springy moss below.

''I wish there were some other little girls,'' said Ruth, half an hour later, peeping out of the tiny bushy playhouse. ''All these houses —three, four, five, on the road half-way down the hill—and nobody in them but grown-ups. Mother said so.''

''I wonder if mother is sure,'' sighed Marian.

''That's what I asked her,'' said Ruth, ''and she said she was sure as sure, and she began at the first house—you know that cunning low brown one with the pretty garden—and she told me who lived in every one, and there wasn't one single little girl or little boy.''

''Who does live in that cunning brown house with all the flowers?''

''What's the cat's name?''

''O, mother didn't know that!'' laughed Ruth. ''She stopped there once when she was up here looking for a place, and the lady gave her a cup of tea and a piece of delicious cake —chocolate cake with chocolate frosting as thick as that—and she saw the cat and he was 'normous, and he slept on a pillow on the table on the piazza, and the lady was afraid he'd catch her pet chipmunks.''

''I never heard mother tell about him.''

''Well, she did, and the pet chipmunks ran to the lady and ate peanuts out of her hand, and the only way she could tell them apart was that one's tail was bushier than the other's.''

''I'm going down some day with mother, if there's a cat and cake and chipmunks,'' decided Marian.

''Cake was with tea,'' said Ruth, ''so I don't s'pose we'd get any. I wish a little girl lived there.''

And what do you suppose happened the very next morning? The farmer man who drove over the hilly roads early each morning to leave milk for all the families in the community left with the milk for the Burnam family a square white envelope addressed to Ruth and Marian Burnam!

''For us?'' cried the two little girls, at the breakfast-table, and mother nodded and watched as Ruth slit it open.

''Why, she says, mother,'' began Ruth, excitedly, ''that she'd like Marian and me to come and stay all the afternoon and play with Phyllis, and maybe you'd come at four for tea!''

''Who says?'' asked mother.

''And she says Phillis hasn't had any little girl to play with her for a long time and she's lonely,'' finished Marian, joyously.

''Who says?'' asked mother for the second time.

''Who is Phyllis?'' asked Ruth and Marian in one breath, and then they all laughed, and Ruth said: ''It's from Mrs. Merton. You said she lived in the little brown house with the garden and the cat and the cake and the chipmunks.''

''And she says''—Marian took up the tale —''that we needn't let her know, but just be sure to come if we can, 'cause she and Phyllis will be 'xpecting us. Whose little girl can Phyllis be, mother?''

After luncheon, as soon as they had put on clean dark gingham dresses, Ruth and Marian scampered down the woodsy path, across the sweet sunny meadow, and were soon knocking at the door of the little brown house. They listened hard just a minute before they knocked, but no little girl's voice did they hear.

''My dears, come in!'' Mrs. Merton greeted them. Sure enough, mother was right about the '''normous cat.'' There he was at her heels.

''What's his name? We know all about him,'' said Marian, feeling at home at once. Then, suspicion flashing upon her, ''Your cat's not Phyllis?''

''No, oh, no!'' said Mrs. Merton. ''Just plain Peter is my cat. Phyllis is waiting for you in the front east room. You don't know how glad she is that you've come to play with her.''

Mysterious it certainly was. Why didn't Phyllis come to meet them at the door? Was she sick? So mysterious it was that both Ruth and Marian found themselves unconsciously tiptoeing after Mrs. Merton, noiseless as mice. One look into the little east room and they understood.

''Oh!'' said Ruth. ''The darling!''

''Oh!'' echoed Marian. ''Her arms out to us!''

In a tiny chair in the middle of the rug sat Phyllis, blue-eyed, flaxen-haired, pink-cheeked. Dressed in a dainty white muslin frock she was, with a white garden hat hung over one arm.

''For you to open,'' said Mrs. Merton, ''and all the things inside for you to play with. I do my best to make Phyllis happy, but she'll tell you herself that it's little girls she really needs. She thinks little fingers are best suited for buttoning and unbuttoning tiny buttons.''

What was in the trunk? What wasn't in the trunk! To begin with, the trunk itself was shiny black leather with real straps and a real wee key, and on one end in white letters was ''P. M.'' ''Phyllis Merton!'' crowed Marian. And inside, a tray with two partitions, slippers, socks, brush and comb, handkerchiefs—yes, with lace on them—and hats, as many as six—straw hats for summer, and for winter a darling ermine cap with a tippet and muff to match.

''Oh!'' and ''Ah!'' and ''Ah!'' and ''Oh!'' were Ruth's and Marian's remarks.

And in the bottom of the trunk, dresses and dresses, pink, blue, white, and blue-and-white checked aprons, and coats, and a parasol, and petticoats, and all the other clothes any doll ever thought of having. Oh, now I've told! But you've told long ago that Phyllis was a doll and that she looked as much like a dear little girl as ever a doll could.

At four came mother, and twice she knocked and nobody heard her! So in she walked, and guided by gay voices, looked into the east room, to see Ruth and Marian on the rug, dressing a flaxen-haired doll, with wee doll dresses and slippers and hats scattered about them. On the rug, too, was Mrs. Merton, looking on, and close by her side, curled in a ball, was old Peter-cat, his eyes shut to the vanities of Phyllis' wardrobe.

''Hush!'' said Mrs. Merton, and scratch, scratch, something scuttled across the piazza floor! ''They're waiting for us, but don't hurry, they're never far away.''

Sure enough, on the piazza, at Mrs. Merton's first call, two chipmunks, fat, saucy, bright-eyed, scampered up with tails whisking. Tame? They ate out of any one's hand, ran up into any one's lap, and the door was safely shut on Peter.

''Have I had Phyllis since I was a little girl?'' said Mrs. Merton, in answer to mother's question, as they were all telling what a lovely play-party they had had. ''No, indeed! I have her now, perhaps, because I never had the kind of doll I wanted when I was a little girl. And perhaps I have her,'' looking down into Ruth's and Marian's rapt, upturned faces, ''so little girls will come to see me sometimes. Houses without little girls in them sometimes feel empty.''

''May we come again, then?'' It was Ruth who spoke, but four brown eyes pleaded the question.

''The oftener you come, the happier Phyllis and I will be,'' said Mrs. Merton. ''We sometimes get tired of just ourselves, and even of old Peter.''

On the way home Marian said suddenly: ''She remembers just 'xactly how it feels to be a little girl! And all the time she played with us we felt just as if she were a little girl like us, didn't we, Ruth?'' A happy pause as all three rested a minute on the upward climb, then Ruth paid childish tribute.

''Why, mother!'' she said in the voice of one making an unexpected discovery. ''Is that what makes the difference in grown-ups—that the nicest ones remember how everything felt when they were little?''—Rose Brooks, in Zion's Herald.

SERMON TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

The Love of God.

Text: ''For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.'' John 3:16.

This verse is what Martin Luther called a little Bible. For most of the great doctrines of the Holy Scriptures are mentioned or implied in this passage. The world of sin and sinners, of suffering and sorrow, of disaster and death, is mentioned. The words, ''God gave'' embody the great facts of the incarnation, life, ministry, crucifixion, and resurrection of Jesus Christ. The terms, ''shall not

A VERY URGENT CALL.

My dear Brethren of the North Carolina Conference:—Mr. T. S. Coble, a member of the Methodist Protestant church at Haw River, N. C., writes as follows: "Just writing to let you know that our church was burned on the night of the 22d about midnight. We had a thousand dollars insurance on building, and we are going to try to raise a thousand among ourselves but it will take four or five thousand to build another as good as we had. We would like to know if the Board of Church Extension will help us any in building. We have never called on the board or the conference for any help financially in the history of our church, but we have always lived up to our obligations to the conference."

The Board of Church Extension has no money just now to help this needy place nor any other. We wish we did have it; for it would certainly be worthily placed in responding to this urgent call and great need, but as your Board of Church Extension has not the money and therefore cannot send it something must be done.

A Bond of Sympathy.

Trouble and affliction always binds Christian hearts together. If your neighbor's house had burned last week and he were in need of your help your heart would go out to him sufficiently to give him a lift materially.

The Haw River church is the neighbor and fellow worker of every other Methodist Protestant church in the North Carolina Conference. The people there are in distress because their church home lies in ashes. They need our immediate help to rebuild their house of worship that they may continue their splendid record of service for the Master. The most of us will go up next Sunday to our own comfortable house of worship, and may God help us in that hour to remember in a material way our sister flock at Haw River.

Please Do This Without Fail.

Let every pastor where there is preaching, and every Sunday school superintendent where there is not preaching on the 3d day of December for whatever purpose Methodist Protestanats are gathered in any place of worship, take an offering, a good liberal one, and forward at once to Mr. J. Norman Wills, Greensboro, N. C., this amount to be used for the rebuilding of the Haw River church. If for any reason this cannot be done on December 10th, then be sure not to delay it beyond December 17th. Suppose the conditions were reversed, would you like the Haw River people to help you? If so then you help them.

The King's business requireth haste, so please be prompt. We will expect all your gifts to be in by December 15th.

Individuals May Give.

Individuals are also asked to respond to this call at once. If you could walk over the grounds and see the ashes of that burnt church and thus see and realize the need you would respond with five, or ten, or twenty-five dollars to this immediate and imperative need. This is to be a free-will offering, just the hearty response of those who feel a brother's care.

Confidently expecting a most liberal response, we are

Yours in the Master's service,

A. G. Dixon.

TWO DORAN BOOKS.

The George H. Doran Company of New York publish many books. Here are two that have come to our book table and been read with interest:

"Ann and Her Mother" is a book presenting in dialogue form many interesting reminiscences of a minister's wife and daughter. The amusing and the saddening are both recalled and discussed calmly at such a distance from the events that the reader can enter into the spirit of the comment. This book is probably more interesting to women than to men.

"The House of Five Swords" is a stirring romance of the world war, written by Mr. Tristram Tupper, son of a prominent Baptist minister. The events of this story are out of the ordinary, yet are such as might have occurred in a time like that. The interest is sustained throughout. There is not a tiresome chapter in the book. To add to the fascination of the book, there is the omnipresent love affair involving the heart of a most interesting girl and young woman. All things turn out well in the end notwithstanding the imminent danger at times to the hopes of the reader. Those who begin to read this book will be loth to lay it aside until the end is reached.

A Sweet Dream Shattered.—The programs of men are often thwarted, the best-laid plans and the most commendable schemes often fail of realization. A few days ago a young couple who were soon to be married started out in an auto for a joy ride. They had driven only a short distance when they encountered a passing train at a railroad crossing. Their car was scattered in parts for a distance of many yards. the woman was taken up dead, and the man was taken to a hospital where he died a few hours later. A sudden end to their earthly hope.

—Last Sunday afternoon Bishop Cannon, of the M. E. Church, South, spoke in Greensboro of conditions in Turkey and of the duties of Americans in relation thereto. He told how the Turks had driven the Armenians from their homes out into the deserts and mountains to perish with hunger and cold—"a bloodless massacre"—and had taken possession of their property. Thus thousands of Christians had died martyrs to their faith. He thinks this policy of extermination being pursued by the Turks should be thwarted by a warning from the American government. He had talked with Secretary Hughes about it. He thinks citizens should write to their representatives in Congress urging them to take the necessary step to prevent further atrocities by the Turks. He thinks the Turks would back down in the face of the danger our threats would present, and that actual war would not be necessary. But if war be necessary, he intimated that it would be justifiable. In the present stage of the case, the least we can do is to feed the hungry, starving Armenians who have been driven from their homes. All Americans are asked to contribute to Near East Relief liberally. Sixty dollars will save a life for a year.

—Rev. Raleigh A. Hunter of Winston, occupied the pulpit of Grace church last Sunday, morning and night. His preaching was well pleasing to those who heard. Pastor Stubbins is convalescing, but was not able to preach or even be present last Sunday.

—Rev. L. S. Helms has arrived in Democrat to take up his new work. He went from Virginia in his Ford car and enjoyed the mountain scenery on the way.

—Mrs. J. N. Garrett is visiting relatives in Asheboro.

A Swift Star.—From Harvard Observatory comes the announcement that the speed of a certain star has been calculated from observations of its movement, and found to be 2,500,000 miles an hour. Try to realize it. The earth is about 25,000 miles around. If you should drive round the earth in an automobile at the rate at which this star is traveling, it would take you 36 seconds to make the trip. And when we remember that the star is an immense body, many times larger than the whole earth, we begin to have some inkling of the force required to move it at such a rate. Truly the Creator is a great and wonderful Being.

REMAKING THE WORLD—AN OPTIMISTIC VIEW.

A spirit of idealism—a spirit that would shape the actual world of man, including the natural order, into the kind of world it ought to be—is moving over the earth. The breath of spring is blowing on men's minds, and the blood of youth is leaping in their veins.

No less comprehensive an affirmation would begin to tell what is happening in the world today, happening and bothering so many minds, desirous of less motion and commotion. A spirit of idealism is moving in the hearts of men and women—a spirit of idealism that cannot find expression in the old formulas and forms and is seeking new channels.

We may, if we choose, say that modern science has made us to believe with all our hearts that everything can be improved and no problem is insoluble. Surely science hath begotten a mighty faith.

Or, if we prefer, we may say that religion has once more come to its own. As two thousand years ago, or thereabouts, it forsook the smoking altars and no longer lingered over fading parchments, but went out into the fields and market-places and shops and streets, so now once more, casting aside the old wine-skins and abandoning the patching business, the faith of men in God, in life, in the world is recreating all things.

Every practise, every custom, every institution, is being subjected to a thorough overhauling. All things are being sifted before the judgment seat of an increasingly intelligent public opinion. Engineers with indomitable wills, and with shouting, carry water, light, and power across mountain ranges to desert places. With the abandon of crusaders, but with the leaven of life and not of death, men battle against infection and have set out to abolish all disease. From the laboratories of manila the news is flashed: "We have a serum for leprosy." We rejoice, but we expected it! Social science would make the feeblest productive, would redistribute equitably all wealth and abolish poverty. Court procedures shall not escape. New schools for old, new churches for old, new societies for old! All policies are subject to revision.

At the works of the National Cash Register, Dayton, O., there is an interesting exhibit. It is what is called a "grave-yard," where lie discarded cash registers. It is really a junk-pile. But every little crossroads village has its junk-pile where you will find piled up abandoned machinery and appliances. Sometimes I think a library is a very interesting and orderly junk-pile, but a junk-pile for the most part. For books these days are hardly off the press before they are out of date. Think of the junk-pile in Europe where are to be found crowns and crownlets of kings and kinglets, treaties, agreements, scraps of paper, constitutions, red books, yellow books, scepters, and what not!

I have been looking around for a symbol for this new spirit, which breathes upon everything and it lives. I have thought we might take Mr. Luther Burbank, the wizard of the plant world, or Mr. Edison, who has no end of buttons to press. Or we might take Mr. Hoover, who one day is gathering up millions of dollars and train-loads of grain for the poor folk starving on the white fields of Russia, and the next is down in Arizona consulting with engineers who purpose to make the Nile of the Southwest flow where they bid it; who would make "Every grim ravine a garden."

But the other day, while on an elevator, I saw a youth, perhaps eighteen years of age, come out of an office, probably from a clerk's desk. I noted a fire burning in his eyes and then saw a magazine crammed down into his bulging coat pocket, and on the magazine in bold type ran this word: "Radio!" I put the story together. It was not hard to do. This boy was sitting on a three-legged stool to get bread and butter, but in his heart was the mighty ambition to make a worthy bequest to the world. Doubtless he will not fail!

If we would appreciate what is happening in the world today, we must stand back. Step back as far as the ridge of Waterloo, 1815, and look down the years from that vantage-point. What a panorama stretches before the eyes of any man who has not lost the power to see! It is not a wide stretch of country as we count time or space, but think of the achievements crowded into that stretch of time and space! Steel, concrete, the gasoline engine, all manner of electrical appliances, the airplane, wireless, radio! But no less inspiring are the changes political—the spread of the white race over the earth, and the displacement of autocracies by representative governments from Russia to South Africa. Or the changes in educational policies and the passing of the old classical ideal and the coming of the kindergarten and high school, the university of tomorrow. Or the mighty humanitarianisms that have blossomed out within these years, the missionary movement, the philosophy of personalism, and the growth of the international mind.

Not since time began has the mind of man been so stimulated by events and by his masteries over the material forces of the world. Never before have such mighty ambitions beat in the heart of mankind. Nor cán it be said that the spiritual life of man has been increasingly at a disadvantage.

I have read somewhere that when President Harding selected his cabinet he sat in a room on the walls of which were a portrait of Lincoln and another of Roosevelt, and before him was an open Bible. As he thought of a man as a possible member of his cabinet, he asked himself this question: "Is this man the kind of man Lincoln or Roosevelt would have selected, and would his selection meet with the approval of the God of this Book?" At least the story is true to the mental processes of Mr. Harding and to the idealism of our time.

Doubtless there are those who will not accept this interpretation of contemporary spiritual life. For there are those who think we are on a down grade to the abyss. There are those who think God cannot do anything with our present civilization but destroy it. There are those who think that Western civilization has been swept from its moral moorings and is engulfed in a sea of materialism. One great preacher has spoken of our generation as a sick, delirious child. And not a few are crying out for the hills to fall—if not on them, at least on our modern world and its modernity!

Meantime, Mr. Bryan, who a short time ago was striving to save the world from being crucified on a cross of gold, is now in the middle of the road, waving his hands frantically and shouting to us that the teachers of youth and the preachers of religion are guiding the unsuspecmting multitude straight for the ditch!

We need not be blind to the black areas on the spiritual map of the world, where ignorance and superstition and sin still have their habitations, to believe that the spirit of idealism is moving in the hearts of men and women today. There are literally millions who live now as if there were no God and as if Jesus Christ had never lived upon the earth. It is true that there is in the world much of vulgarity, narrowness, violence, strife, hatred, prejudice, and spiritual poverty. It is also true that the confidence and hope and optimism of today may easily degenerate into a foolish self-confidence. But the opposite of foolish self-confidence is not fear and whining but courageous faith in God and life and man.

The story is told of two men on a walking tour in Spain. They pitched their tent one night in a high pass of the Pyrenees. Toward morning a mountain storm swept down out of the sky upon them and blew their tent away. The thunder pealed and the lightning flashed, while the stones and dirt tumbled down the mountainsides. One of the travelers, strange to that kind of situation, asked in alarm, "Is this the end of the world?" "No," replied his more experienced friend, "this is the way the day dawns in the Pyrenees."

The Seer of Patmos, having done his stint in the stone quarries, sat down and took up his pen and wrote: "I John [as if he would remind them that he too was living in their times and was a fellow sufferer doing hard labor in the stone pits] saw the holy city coming down from God out of heaven, appareled as a bride adorned for her husband." It was the last time he had his immortal pen in hand, and these are almost the very last words he wrote his brethren in Christ. John had felt the hardness and degradation of the life of that old Roman world, and he had pictured it as a beast sprawling over the earth. But he could see emerging, under the inspiration of the gospel, a new, fine civilization, like unto a bride, and he was sure it would yet cover the earth.

Certainly those who fill out their pictures of despair today by patching together passages from the Apocalypse, instead of looking at life steadily and seeing it whole, misuse the Revelation of St. John the Divine and do not do as he did. Were he here now, I feel sure that he would see that God is once again making all things new.

There are just two words more that ought to be said, that must be said. First, much of this idealism is the creation of the preaching of Christianity, and even though in some measure it may not be a complete response to that preaching, it ill behooves the followers of Christ to hold aloof from the spirit of idealism moving men's hearts. The real danger to the church now is that it may be left standing gazing up into the sky and not having an "understanding of the times."

On the other hand, let it be borne in mind by the young idealists of today, that the spirit of idealism which is rejuvenating the world takes its rise in the heart of Christ and must keep close to Him for light and guidance, for He is still the light that lighteth every man coming into the world.—Rev. James Allen Geissinger, D.D.

"FOOLISH TALKING AND JESTING."

The amount of light, frivolous, foolish, silly talk indulged in by church folks is not a little. Not by all church folks, but by many. Any at all is too much. The effect of all such talk is damaging to both talker and hearer. We have in mind a species of "jesting"—the saying of things that are not meant; neither is their opposite meant—they are not irony, but lying. But some would-be defender of all such talk is ready to say, perhaps, "Oh, we must not be 'long-faced' and solemn." No, indeed; but this does not give us license to act the clown, be frivolous, light, and silly, much less to act the fool. There is a quiet, serene dignity that is characteristic of the true child of God, that goes with cheerfulness and sunniness of disposition that is apparent to all. This in no wise forbids the smile or laugh, at the right time, in the right place, and at the right thing. But it is not the "laughter of the fool," like "the crackling of thorns under a pot," as the wise man says, Ecc. 7:6. If we have right hearts and right heads we will not laugh at the misfortunes or discomforts of others. We will not laugh at the profane, or obscene remark, or suggestion. But these things will stir our righteous indignation and contempt, rather than a laugh or smile.

A few texts of scripture which have impressed us much for more than forty years, with their seriousness, we wish to notice: "Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers." Eph. 4:29. Not that which is "corrupt," but that which is in contrast—good—"that it may minister grace to the hearers." Not contamination to the hearers. As the verse following implies, "corrupt communication" "grieves the Holy Spirit of God, whereby we are sealed unto the day of redemption."

In the fifth chapter and fourth verse of Ephesians Paul continues thus: "Neither foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient: but rather giving of thanks." Instead of our being engaged in "foolish talking and jesting," Paul would have us giving thanks. What a contrast! But here is something still stronger. Something that should cause every light, frivolous, foolish jester to tremble with apprehension. "But I say unto you," says Jesus, "That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment. For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned." Matt. 12:36, 37. This statement of Jesus shows that not only profane words, "corrupt" words, false words, foolish words, but idle words are to be given account of in the day of judgment. So the poet:

"And must I be to judgment brought,
And answer in that day
For every vain and idle thought,
And every word I say?"

Jesus says, "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh."

So the quality of one's words, the nature of one's conversation, is an index to one's heart. "As he thinketh in his heart, so is he." Prov. 23:7. As he thinks in his heart, so he speaks with his mouth. "The mouth of fools poureth out foolishness." Prov. 15:2. "A fool uttereth all his mind; but a wise man keepeth it in till afterwards." Prov. 29:11.

"If a man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body." James 3:2.

Practically every one will admit that profanity, obscenity, etc., are wrong; but that just lightness, foolishness, jesting, etc.—"having a good time," as is often said, is a wrong, some may try to deny. But the above cited scriptures must settle it forever, that all "foolish talking and jesting" are a "grief to the Spirit," hurtful to the spirituality of the jester, and of the hearers of all such, and must be accounted for in the day of judgment.

MOTH-EATEN TREASURES.

"I just love this china," she said. "I wish we could use it more. Why don't we? The most frugal meal would be a feast if we ate it off these dishes; but you only get them out on state occasions."

"I am trying to keep them for you," answered her mother. "When I am gone and you have a home of your own, you will have them. Then you will be very glad that I did not use them every day and let them get broken or chipped."

"But, mother," said Betty, half laughingly, "suppose I did not live to grow up. Wouldn't you be sorry then that I had not had a chance to enjoy them? And—should I have to keep them shut up to save them for my little girl? What is the use of having things?"

"Betty is right," said Aunt Martha. "It reminds me of old Ben Hale. He started out determined to be a rich man. He scrimped and saved and slaved. He said when he had made so much—$50,000 I think it was—he would retire and enjoy life. But, deary me, when he had what he had started out for, he could not do anything but scrimp and save and slave."

"And it reminds me," laughed Mr. Morgan, coming in from the kitchen, "of John, Jr. I went over to borrow Mr. Grey's ax. Junior had a speckled apple in his hand. His mother had cut out the speckled places, but he was half crying. 'I just wish I could have one all good apple once. I always have to eat the speckled ones'."

Mrs. Morgan laughed. "Cousin Anna was here yesterday. She had a lovely lavender evening gown last year. It cost so much she was very choice of it. I doubt if she wore it half a dozen times all the year. Now she is invited to a wedding next week, and the dressmaker has told her it will have to be all made over to look up-to-date.

"I remember seeing something like this the other day: 'Some things that come to those who wait are badly both-eaten.' I did not think much about it at the time, but I am inclined to think now that there is a good deal in it. Maybe we are all of us eating speckled apples in one way or another most of the time. Anyway, from now on I will try to have you all get what pleasure you can out of our things before they get specked or moth-eaten.

"Betty, put on your best dress this afternoon, invite your belovedest chum Olive to take tea with you, and we will use the china. You do not seem to me in any immediate danger of passing away."—Kate S. Gates.

HINDERERS.

One of the easiest things in the world to do is to hinder. It requires neither skill, zeal nor intelligence. We only have to put ourselves in the way, and by the slightest endeavor, we may hinder ten times as much as we might be able to help.

There are so many things that hinder in the work of the kingdom: persons who have but little power or talent to accomplish work in the Master's cause can hint and sneer and find fault and thereby separate friends, alienate co-workers, hedge up paths and cripple the influence of others, and having done this drop into their natural obscurity, useless and forgotten, but leaving behind them a trace of mischief and trouble which may remain long after those who caused it are dead and gone.

Thus many a willing heart has been stung and pierced, many earnest and willing hands have been tied and crippled in their ministry; all because those who would not help have sneered and objected until they have taken away the key of success and will not enter themselves, or suffer others to go in.

How careful should we be not to lay, neither by word or deed, obstacles in the path of those who are seeking to do good to men. If God has not given us the ability to do much, let us by all means beware of hindering others whom He has more bountifully endowed.

It is a lesson that Christians as well as children should learn: "If you will not help, do not hinder."

"What would my church be, if every member were just like me?" W. D. Reed.

Roberta.—The regular service was held Sunday morning. The Sunday attendance was 91; on account of the bad weather it was slim. We did not have service Sunday night on account of service at the Roberta Baptist church by the "Little Boy."

Twenty-four people along with the pastor attended the Thanksgiving service at the orphanage Home in High Point. All reported a nice time. It was a pleasure to meet friends of the past, such as Rev. and Mrs. E. G. Lowdermilk. Brother Lowdermilk was pastor at Roberta for a while.

We will have with us the third Sunday in December the "Little Boy" from Kannapolis. He is one of our small ministers, his age is under fourteen. Master Zimmerman can make interesting talks; everybody is invited to attend these services.

We have two marriages to report of members of our church: Miss Daisy Garmon to Mr. W. L. Blackwelder of Concord; Miss Minnie Garmon and Mr. Walter Ritchie of Concord. Mrs. Ritchie was a trained nurse of Cabarrus.

We have lots of sick folks in our community; it will take up too much space to mention them all.

Mr. Fred Furr and Mr. Fred Love will be with us a number of days during Christmas holidays. They are at Rutherford College studying as ministerials. We are proud of these young men to go from our church and preach the gospel.

Best wishes to the Herald and its readers.

VISITATIONS.

It was my pleasure to be with First Church, Winston, recently. We had a very fair size congregation and the people gave us good attention and the pastor hopes to put First Church, Winston, on the Honor Roll of churches which have found a subscriber for each member. This is not an impossible task for every church. It will, of course, be harder for some than others because some churches have more members in them who never pay to any cause, but as a rule there can be found enough of those who do pay to make up for this deficiency.

I heard the other day of a church with just around two hundred members, most of them working people, and yet they raised four dollars per member for their orphanage. I would like to match that record for our college in our campaign for the Girls' Dormitory.

But back to Winston: this little, loyal band has grown some in numbers during the past few years and has greatly increased in efficiency. I rejoice with them in their progress and am praying that it may increase as the days come and go.

Last Sunday night I was with the Burlington people. House was full and the people were patient in hearing us and we believe there will be a strong effort made here to find a subscriber for every member of this church. Our people here are spreading out. Having bought a lot in west Burlington, their thoughts are turning westward and their hopes are that it will be a splendid move for Methodist Protestantism in the metropolis of Alamance.

This week I go east and will visit Creswell, Whitakers and Roanoke charges on this visit. I am booking dates for January and February and will be much pleased to make as many engagements on week nights as possible. You understand, I am showing views of the college as it is to be with some beautiful views of Bible scenes.

THE THANKSGIVING MEET.

Superintendent Garrett and I sent out a number of invitations to the nearby Sunday schools to meet at the Children's Home on Thanksgiving afternoon and go over the grounds there, then to visit the college. There were people present from as far away as West Forsyth, Concord, Mebane, and quite a number from churches closer by. The meeting was a real success in point of attendance for the first one, more than enough people present to fill the chapel and the Home. The children gave us a service of songs and we had a season of fellowship with our folks before going over the grounds.

Come again, friends, we want a host of you to be there next year. Then we want to have the service in the college chapel. But, by the way, all of us must send in our payments in order to keep the work going on. For, unless we get the money we will be compelled to stop work.

UP TO DATE.

In checking over our list we find that the subscribers at the following churches have paid up to date, i. e., have paid at least two instalments of their pledges:

Maple Springs, Forsyth Charge; Glen Raven, Glen Raven Charge; Hobbs Chapel, Greensville Charge; Friendship Church, North Davidson Charge; Piney Grove Church, Kernersville Charge; Gray's Chapel, Randolph Charge. These churches are leading and it is in order for others to fall in line. We are most anxious to collect all payments when due; we have made our building plans with this in mind and we must collect them if the work shall go on. So come along with your payments.

Woody, Siler City, one quilt, pillow cases and towels; Highland Community Sunday School, Post toasties, corn flakes, oatmeal, pickles, rice, fruit, sugar and honey; Forsyth Dairy Company, three gallons ice cream; Dr. J. Henry Cutchin, Whitakers, one of those big sacks peanuts.

We are profoundly grateful for all that has been received and if you started anything to us and you have not seen it reported please notify us that we may trace it.

That must have been very touching to see the Haw River Sunday school meet on the ground where their church had burned only a few days before and take their Thanksgiving offering for our Children's Home. It was especially appreciated because they could have said as many do, "We need all we have to rebuild."

We were pleased to have so many of our people from the various churches to pay us a visit on Thanksgiving. After a short program by the children the plant was inspected and then a visit to the College showed all that the Methodist Protestant Church has decided to do something for our young people.

Sunday night our children assisted the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the First Church, High Point, in the regular Thanksgiving meeting and the offering was $128.50. H. A. Garrett.

Mt. Pleasant, Mt. Pleasant Circuit.—On the first Sunday in December Brother Millaway filled his second apopintment at this place. He gave us an exceptionally fine sermon. We are glad to have Brother Millaway living among us and hope to work together this year to the very best advantage.

The Baracas' and Philatheas have something "on foot" for Christmas. What it is will be disclosed later. The primary department will render a short program Christmas Sunday.

On December 4 Uncle Josephus Isley was buried at Mt. Pleasant. "Uncle Jo" was one of our oldest and most faithful members, having been a church member for 60 years. He will be missed. Reporter.

"Bless the Lord O my soul, and all that is within me, bless his holy name."

If the whole Christian world could voice this sentiment, in twelve months the world would be like heaven. Brother Neese preached from this text yesterday. Ruth Fletcher.

FORWARD STEPS BY THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S BOARD.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Young People's Work the president of the Board was authorized to employ Mr. Lawrence C. Little of Louisiana as field secretary. Mr. Little has been employed and will commence work with the board the first of February. Mr. Little takes Miss Juanita Hammer's place, who has served as field secretary for the last two years.

At present Mr. Little is field secretary for the Louisiana Christian Endeavor Union. For several years he has served with the Christian Endeavor people in that and other states. He is well known in Christian Endeavor circles throughout the South, and is recognized as the leading secretary of the southern states.

Mr. Little is a ministerial student, a candidate for the ministry in the Methodist Protestant Church. In connection with his work with the Young People's Board he will continue his studies at one of the institutions of the state. Mr. Little has worked this way with the Louisiana Union, and despite that fact has won for himself a reputation throughout the South.

Commencing the first of January a section of the Methodist Protestant Herald will be devoted to the young people's work in the State. It is the aim of the board to have this section carry helpful and inspiring matter for the young people and the workers with young people. It is hoped that each week one or more reports from some Christian Endeavor society, or societies, and Sunday schools over the State will be run in this section. The superintendents of the different departments of the work will from time to time write discussions from their department for this section. The Christian Endeavor discussions will be written by some of the young people from different parts of the State, instead of by some of the ministers as hitherto has been done. Reports from the district chairmen of the progress of the work in their respective districts, and of the rallies and district meetings held, will appear from time to time. Through these columns the young people will be kept informed of the plans for the Young People's Summer Conference.

The same department superintendents were appointed by the board, who are as follows: "Organized Adult Work," Rev. G. L. Curry, Charlotte; "Christian Stewardship," Rev. N. G. Bethea, Brinkleyville; "Children's Work," Mrs. J. S. Pritchard, Henderson; "Mission Work," Miss Sallie Barnhill, Enfield; "Teacher Training," Miss Mary Young, Henderson; "Young People's Work," Rev. E. C. Cowan, Cherryville; "Rural Church Work," Rev. R. C. Stubbins, Greensboro; "Sunday School Architecture," Mr. James Sullivan, Greensboro.

These superintendents are supposed to be experts in their respective fields, and are appointed for the purpose of assisting those who need their assistance. It is the hope of the board that you will call them to assistance when you need them.

The conference has been divided into thirteen districts, and a chairman appointed for each district. The chairman is to advance the work of the Young People's Board in any wise way. The chairmen are, First District, Rev. H. F. Surratt; Second, Mr. W. P. Garrett; Third, Mr. Phil S. Dixon; Fourth, Mr. Ferdie Stout; Fifth, Mr. Floyd Amick; Sixth, Mr. F. R. Ross; Seventh, Mr. R. H. Shaw; Eighth, Mr. J. Henry Speas; Ninth, Mr. Moton W. Glenn; Tenth, Mrs. D. A. McLaurin; Eleventh, Rev. Nebula Britton; Twelfth, Rev. B. M. Williams; Thirteenth, Mr. J. E. Ghant.

It is the hope of the board that each chairman will, some time during the spring or early summer, hold a district young people's rally. The district having the largest enrolldent will be presented a banner by the Young People's Board. Hold oyur rally, Mr. Chairman, write up a report of it, and send same to the Young People's Section of the M. P. Herald, and I will get the enrollment there.

N. M. Harrison, Jr.,
President Young People's Board.

THAT JOURNAL MATTER.

I am indebted to some friend (wish I knew who) for setting forth with such clearness, in the Herald of last week, my Journal position. My friend has done this so well that I do not need to add anything but my thanks, and to express the hope that this may correct any misapprehension that any one may have had in regard to the matter. S. W. Taylor.

November 29.

THE SECRETARY AT THE TEXAS CONFERENCE.

The Texas Conference was held in Cooper this year, the beautiful little county seat of Delta county. Those who attended former conferences know that we were well cared for by the hospitable people of that church. The reports from the charges were not up to the standards of some former years either as to additions to the church membership or as to money raised for church purposes. General financial conditions have not been good and too many charges have been without pastors during the past year. Very many times a pastorless church means a church doing little or nothing and all too often is followed by a report of an extinct church and an order of the conference to sell the property. There have not been ministers enough to supply all the charges in the conference and some whose services might have been secured are engaged in secular pursuits because of a lack of adaptability to the pastoral office or an inability to maintain their families on the meager salaries offered. The matter of a part time, poorly paid ministry is one of the greatest of our denominational problems in this section of the church.

The Board of Home Missions has not attempted to meet this need on account of a lack of funds. If salaries could be guaranteed, it is probable all the men needed could be secured. This would require something like $5,000 in the Texas Conference, but would be an investment worth-while.

In this conference your Board of Home Missions is assisting in the work at Fort Worth, Paris and Corsicana. It is hoped and expected that the latter church will become entirely self-supporting within the next year. Rev. W. A. Sanders is its pastor. The work at Paris has presented many difficulties on account of the very destructive fire of 1916 in which both our church and parsonage were destroyed and in which many of our people were reduced to poverty. We look forward to a successful year under the leadership of Rev. L. W. Shivers.

At Fort Worth the work is being retarded by the lack of proper equipment. The new church cannot be built this fall on acocunt of financial conditions and the little chapel would need extensive repairs. A dwelling house has been rented and will be used for church purposes during the winter. Th new church must be built, however, at the earliest possible date. We have here a nucleus of fine people. Under the efficient leadership of Dr. A. F. Hess a good work can be done if proper equipment can be provided. We have a beautiful location in one of the finest residence districts of the city.

Dr. Sanders who has served the conference for so many years as President, requested that his name be not used this year. The conference elected one of the younger men to this office. We predict success for the work of the conference under the leadership of Rev. J. S. Hunter.

Properly cared for our work has a great futute in the "Lone Star" State.

Charles H. Beck.

HAVE YOU ORDERED YOUR EDUCATIONAL DAY PROGRAMS.

On December 1 orders for Educational Day programs have been received from nearly every conference in the denomination. This general interest is most gratifying. For the information of the readers of our church papers we are giving the number of orders received by conferences:

Alabama, 3; Arkansas, 5; Florida, 1; Colorado-Texas, 1; Eastern, 18; Fort Smith-Oklahoma, 7; Georgia, 1; Indiana, 29; Iowa-Missouri, 14; Illinois, 9; Kansas, 4; Louisiana, 1; Maryland, 32; Michigan, 25; North Carolina, 62; Ohio, 37; Onondaga, 9; Pittsburgh, 12; Texas, 1; Virginia, 1; Washington, 1; West Virginia, 16; total, 289.

You will note that North Carolina leads the list. This is part of the indirect results of their interest in their own college enterprise. One of the striking things is that North Carolina is one of our most progressive conferences touching other philanthropies of the church, such as the Children's Home and in the building of new churches and the opening of new charges. There would seem to be a direct relationship between interest in Christian Education and the prosperity of the conference organization.

The orders that have been received are appreciated, but less than 300 orders from 2,000 Sunday schools does not inspire any great spirit of enthusiasm. There is still time to order these programs if the orders are mailed at once. George H. Miller,

Secretary Board of Education.

A Busy Pastor.

When people say the pastor is not a busy man, read them this story of the activities of an Ohio pastor. Not every pastor is so busy, to be sure, nor are all as capable of doing so many things well as is this man. We will not name him here, but if we should say that this man never side-steps a duty laid upon him by his conference, that he never fails to give his best thought and effort to the work he undertakes, that he usually succeeds in the thing he attempts, and that he keeps sweet, Ohio folks could almost guess his identity. Here is a partial list of his recent activities. In addition to his pastoral oversight of a church of 450 members, he is treasurer of the church extension board, is on the conference faculty, is historical secretary, member of the president's parsonage committee, chairman of his sub-district, president of the county ministerial association; helped in a county Y. M. C. A. canvass for $10,000; gave four weeks to the "dry" campaign in the county; took part in the county conference of the State Federation; entertained in his church the National Reform Association; assisted the Red Cross in its campaign; is chairman of the group for the general conference budget; expects to conduct a campaign for the Methodist Recorder. To cap the climax, the parsonage must have a new furnace, to cost $300, and the gas supply is low.

A Suggestion.

An Indiana pastor suggests a Ways and Means department for the church papers, and that this secretary furnish the material. We are wililng to do this if the brethren will send us the material and the kind editors will grant the space. Next week we will offer a series of report forms that are being used in connection with the monthly business meeting. Brother pastor, have you hit upon some plan or method that you have found successful and desire to commend to others? Let us have it, at St. Joe, Indiana.

—To prevent destructive activities on Hallowe'en night by youngsters, Independence, Kan., gives a big party for the children, the agreement being that they shall run the town to their hearts' content on that day. A big bonfire ends the day's play and the children go home and stay there. They have parades, and school is dismissed early in the afternoon so all can participate. Merchants and business men foot the bill.

Bethel, Alamance Circuit.—The Bethel people were pleased to have Rev. G. W. Holmes remain with us as pastor. After listening to his good and instructive sermons for five years, we would have hated very much to give him up. May we members of Bethel church all stand loyally by him, co-operating with him in the up-building of Christ's kingdom in our church and neighborhood and make, as he says he wishes, his sixth year here the best yet. He filled his regular appointment the third Sunday in November, giving us a good sermon.

We held the Alamance District Missionary Meeting at Bethel the fourth Sunday in October. We had an interesting program and a very attentive andience. We trust that missionary interest is growing in our district. We have organized a home missionary society at Bethel, which will take the place of the Egg Club. Mrs. W. A. Foust was elected president, Mrs. A. L. Foust recording secretary and treasurer, and Mrs. J. M. Foust corresponding secretary. We have only nine members yet, but as the society is just organized, we hope to grow. Are hoping to organize both home and foreign societies in some of the other churches.

Our Woman's Foreign Missionary Society met the first Sunday evening with Mrs. J. B. Bivins. Subject, "Being About Our Father's Business." Talks were given on the subject and select papers read, also a discussion on the questions taken from our Missionary Record, using song, "The King's Business." Next meeting to be held with Mrs. Lon Stafford first Sunday in January at 2:30 P. M. Subject, "Thankfulness."

Our Sunday school is progressing nicely with Mr. Lon. McPherson superintendent. Thanksgiving service was held in connection with the Christian Endeavor the fourth Sunday and the first Sunday a splendid talk, or almost a sermon, was given on Thanksgiving by Prof. J. A. W. Thompson and was much appreciated and enjoyed by all who heard him. Our day school is progressing nicely under the management of Prof. J. A. W. Thompson and Miss Marcia Foust. We appreciate their interest.

Mrs. J. H. Allen is very low with pneumonia and her daughter, Mrs. G. W. Foust, with grippe. May the Lord bless and restore them to health.

Mr. G. N. Stafford of Greensboro was a visitor at Bethel last Sunday. He used to be a resident of the Bethel neighborhood and all were pleased to see him.

Mrs. J. M. Foust, Reporter.

Orange Chapel, Saxapahaw Circuit.—Home Mission Band. This little Mission Band was organized last June with nine members and they now have 12. They are doing a real good work with Mrs. Daisy Lewis as their leader.

For their November meeting they had a Thanksgiving service at the church with the following program:

Song. Roll Call and Reading of Minutes of Last Meeting. Prayer by Myrtle Thomas. Song, "Bring them in." Recitation, Vella Faulkner. "Little Housekeepers," by five girls. Recitation by James Quackenbush. Duet, Paulette and Margaret Edwards. Recitation by Vivian Crawford. Collection was taken by Martha Quackenbush and Margaret Edwards; amount, $5.93. This collection was a special Thanksgiving offering to the orphanage.

Mrs. Effie Thompson.

Teer, N. C.

Bessemer City Circuit.—This entire circuit has entered into the new conference year with zeal and enthusiasm that promises a good year. We are glad to serve for another year upon a work where the people start in the beginning to do things, and with the Master leading and the start that has been made we feel that a prosperous year is before us.

The first quarterly conference recommended that all claims be paid by the week and both churches accepted the recommendation and have started to meet all claims weekly. With this movement and other interest that is being shown we feel that all claims will have been paid before the year comes to a close.

Large Sunday schools are doing good work at both churches. Lincolnton has an average attendance of about 155 with a much larger enrollment. The Sunday school collection is about $7.00 each Sunday.

Bessemer City Sunday school is large and the work is above the average. The enrollment is large and the attendance is over 100 and the collections are good.

The cottage prayer meetings are doing great good on this work. Men and women are being saved and the churches made stronger both spiritually and numerically.

Prayer meeting was held at the parsonage the last Saturday night, and while pastor and family were waiting for the people to gather in a knock was heard at the back door, which seemed a little strange, but as the door came open we looked into the smiling faces of a pounding party that proceeded to cover our kitchen table with things too numerous to mention but we can say that no hunger is felt about the parsonage, and the prospect for feeding is good for the future. After looking at the bundles, bags and buckets of good things that were placed on our table we proceeded immediately to invite the prayer meeting every Saturday night. We are not sure that they will all start with a pounding but we know that when the good people of Bessemer City gather at the parsonage that something is left to make us glad. We thank each one for the good things presented to us.

C. E. Phillips, Pastor.

Draper.—It has been some time since we have made a report, but our work here is progressing nicely. Our beloved pastor has returned to us for another year and we are planning to make the coming year better than the past.

We had our first quarterly conference Saturday, December 2. Almost all of the members were present.

Brother Morgan filled his regular appointment last night and delivered a wonderful sermon, his text being, "What seek ye?"

We are planning to have a Christmas entertainment with a tree for the kiddies. They are all looking forward to a visit from good old Santa Claus. We hope he will bring each one something.

We ask the prayers of all the brethren that our little church may continue to grow and prosper.

GENERAL COMMISSION ON ARCHIVES & HISTORY
THE UNITED METHODIST CHURCH

''EVERY DAY IN EVERY WAY I AM GETTING BETTER.''

A Visit With Emile Coue, Founder of French School of Autosuggestion, Whose Slogan Is the Rage and Whose Teachings Are Restoring Many to Health and Promise to Revolutionize Education.

A striking vogue has been attained by the method of psychological healing taught and practiced by Monsieur Emile Coue, of Nancy. In almost every city in Europe it has come to be almost a habit for friends to greet each other smilingly with the question: ''Have you done you Coue this morning?'' or even less formally, ''Have you Coueed?''

Instead of the conventional, ''Very well, thank you,'' it is not unusual to hear in reply to the greeting, ''How are you?'' on the street or at the breakfast table, ''Every day in every way I am getting better and better,'' intoned with distinct emphasis.

When I was in London everyone was talking of the 'miracles'' performed by M. Coue during his week of lectures and treatments earlier in the spring. Learned psychologists of the unversities were warmly discussing pro and con the Coue ''method.'' The papers were full of him and several books upon the man and his method were published. Such lively interest was roused in my mind that I then determined to take an early opportunity of journeying to Nancy to observe M. Coue's work at first hand and if possible have a talk with the man whose methods, in the opinion of many, ''are destined, in conjunction with the teachings of psychoanalysis, to effect a renovation in psychology, medicine and education.''

Arriving at Mt. Coue's home on the Rue Jeanne D'Arc, a stone's throw from the Nancy Passion Theater and passing through the little garden surrounding his modest domicile, I crossed a path which led into an inclosure lined with flowers and shrubbery, one corner of which was occupied by what might once have been a stable or garage, but which was now a pavilion. It was not yet nine A. M., but people were coming from all directions; some afoot, others in taxis or private motor cars, some in wheel chairs or on crutches, helped in painful progress by friends or relatives. The large upper room of the garage was already well filled and some were sitting on the stairs while others waited their turn seated on benches and chairs in the garden.

Coue's clinic was already in full swing. He is a typical Frenchman, chubby, and comfortable looking of medium height, clear complexion, bright twinkling black eyes and, despite his nearly 70 years, shown in white hair mustache and imperial, alert and active in his movements. After a brief preliminary talk, which could hardly be called a lecture, he outlined the underlying principles on which he has steadily and surely built up the practical methods of what is coming more and more to be called the ''New Nancy School''—this in contradistinction to the older school of suggestion which made Nancy and its university world-famous and which has for more than 30 years been identified with the names of Liebault and Bernheim.

Coue's system is simplicity itself. It consists in bringing the individual into realization through actual demonstration in practice of autosuggestion as a force as old as the world and one inherent in all of us—a force of incalculable power for good or evil.

''Autosuggestion'' is defined as ''the realization of an idea in the subconscious mind.''

We are all practicing it consciously or unconsciously all the time in every word we utter and every thing we do.

Autosuggestion, according to Coue, is based on the fact that in every man there exist two distinct selves, both intelligent. One is conscious and the other unconscious or subconscious. These selves are not in opposition to each other, but are complementary. They differ not in one being ''good'' and the other ''evil,'' but rather in the fact that one is conscious and the other unconscious. Just because the subconscious mind, or self, is unconscious it generally escapes notice and with most people fails to receive the recognition that is its due.

Coue is unique in the position that it is through the imagination and not through the will, that his unconscious or subconscious mind, which presides over the functioning of the individual organism, is also the active and dominant agent in all our actions of whatsoever nature. In this, he challenges and controverts practically all the teaching of the psychology of our day. In fact, he declares that all the voluminous popular writings that emphasize the cultivation of the will are mistaken and mischievous. The dictionary definition of will as ''the faculty of freely determining certain acts,'' he insists is utterly false, the will we so proudly boast always yielding to the imagination when the two are in conflict.

In a little talk I had with Coue privately in his garden seated under a tree, he very quietly and surely called my attention to certain familiar facts of everyday experience and observation that support this seemingly paradoxical attitude. Lay a 12-inch plank 30 feet long on the ground and almost anyone would easily walk from one end to the other of it without stepping off. But if this plank is placed at the height of the towers of a cathedral, few would be capable of advancing even a dozen steps along it. Before one had taken the third step he would begin to tremble and in spite of every effort of the will one would certainly fall to the ground. You imagine that you cannot advance, and you cannot; that you will fall, and you do fall. Vertigo attacks persons at great heights because of the picture created in the mind of falling, and this picture transforms itself into fact in spite of all the efforts of the will. Moreover, all the efforts of the will only intensify the tendency to fall, and the more violent and strenuous the efforts of the will, the quicker do we bring about the very opposite of the result desired.

Another familiar illustration of this ''law of reversed effort,'' which is Coue's immensely important contribution to the great realm of our knowledge of applied psychology, he points out in the case of a person suffering from insomnia. If the sufferer makes no effort to sleep, but lies quietly in bed simply thinking that he is going to sleep, he will soon go to sleep. If, on the contrary, he tries to force himself to sleep by an exertion of the will, he will remain awake, and the more he tries to sleep, the more restless he becomes.

Have not most of us noticed that the harder we try to remember a name or date or quotation that we have forgotten, the more it eludes us, until at last we give up trying to remember and substitute in our minds the idea, ''I shall remember it presently,'' for the idea ''I have forgotten.'' Then the name pops up of its own accord without the least effort.

It is to this all-important control of the imagination that Coue leads us through the conscious and practical knowledge and use of the tremendous power of the subconscious mind, by autosuggestion.

How to saddle and bridle the unbroken horse of the imagination and break it into carrying us safely and surely to the goal we really desire to reach is the problem which Coue solves simply and with scientific certainty. He tells us: ''If you persuade yourself that you can do a certain thing (a thing within reason, of course) you will do it, however seemingly difficult or even impossible it may appear. If, on the contrary, you imagine that you cannot do the simplest thing in the world, it becomes impossible for you and mere molehills become unscalable mountains. The neurasthenic who believes himself incapable of walking even a few steps without becoming exhausted, finds it impossible to walk. We bring all our weaknesses, miseries, and diseases, ''bad luck'' and incapacity, on ourselves through yielding to unconscious wrong autosuggestions; all these ills may be removed by consciously giving ourselves the right autosuggestions. There it is in a nutshell.

Coue's direction HOW TO PRACTICE AUTOSUGGESTION is as simple as Columbus' standing of the egg on end, and as easy as rolling off a log. Here it is in his own words:

''Every morning before getting up and every evening as soon as you are in bed, shut your eyes and repeat 20 times in succession, moving your lips and counting mechanically on your fingers, or better on a string with 20 knots,the following phrase: 'Day by day, in every way, I am getting better and better.' There is no need to think of any particular trouble you want to get rid of, as the words 'in every way' cover everything.

''Further, every time in the course of the day or night that you feel any distress, physical or mental, immediately affirm to yourself that you will not consciously contribute to its continuance and that you are going to make it disappear. Then isolate yourself as much as possible, shut your eyes and, passing your hand over your forehead, if the trouble is mental, or over the part affected if it is bodily pain, repeat with extreme rapidity: 'It is going away, it is going away,' keeping this up as long as it may be necessary. With a little practice, the distress, whether mental or physical, will vanish in from 20 to 30 seconds. In practicing autosuggestion, it is extremely important carefully to avoid any effort.''

To return to the clinic of the Monday morning of my visit. Having completed the little talk of which the foregoing forms the gist, Monsieur Coue paused to roll a cigarette with the dexterity of Bill Hart and, lighting it, took a few whiffs with evident enjoyment. Then he turned to one after the other of his patients and in kindly tones and sympathetic gave one after the other individual attention.

''And what is your trouble, Madame?'' he inquired of a lady evidently in much pain.

The lady, a newcomer, declared that she was suffering from a raging headache. The trouble had been chronic with her and all ordinary methods had failed to give relief.

Coue smiled sympathetically and passed his hand over her forehead saying rapidly—so rapidly that it sounded like a bit of unintelligible jargon, suggestive in a way of the mumbled cooing of a dove—"se passe, se passe." Telling the lady to keep on with this affirmation, he passed to a heavy-set man who had came in leaning on a stick and supported by a friend. This man declared that he feared he was a victim of creeping paralysis. He was barely able to move his right arm or leg.

"That is because you think you cannot move them," said Coue pleasantly. "So long as you believe that you cannot and tell yourself and other people that you cannot, you will not be able to do so."

The man protested that he did not quite see what his thought had to do with it. There was his limp leg and arm; they had been that way for months and no matter how hard he tried he could not move them.

"An ounce of the right autosuggestion," said Coue, "is worth a pound of effort of the will— a ton of such effort. The harder you try the more impossible it will be for you, so long as you believe you cannot. Let me show you that you cannot do what you think you cannot do and that you can do what you think you can do."

And he took hold of the man's hands and joined them with fingers interlocked squeezing them together. "Now," said Coue, "hold your hands together; tighter, tighter. Keep on holding them together tight and think think hard: 'I cannot get them apart.' Well, you cannot, can you?"

The patient tried till his face was suffused with blood from the effort. "You see you cannot because you think you cannot and the harder you try the harder your hands close. Now think (with sudden sharpness) 'I can open my hands—of course I can!" And the man quickly drew his hands apart and joined in the general smile.

Coue then seemed to forget him and turned back, as by hazard, to the lady, saying, "How are you now?"

She started. "Why, I am quite well; my headache has quite vanished."

And so he went on around the circle, accompanying his directions and assurances with a pleasant smile, smoking nonchalantly the while Suddenly he turned back to the paralyzed man and told him to lift his arm. The man, a bit shamefacedly, said he could not.

"You can if you think you can; I know you can!" The healer spoke with a tone ofabsolute conviction. "Now stop trying and think, think hard: 'I can lift my arm.' Shut your eyes and don't think anything else. Say it and believe it. Now lift your right arm!"

His eyes still shut, the man slowly lifted his arm about an inch. "Higher!" commanded Coue. "Higher, still higher!" Coue kept on until at last the man had his arm well up in the air. Again the healer turned to other patients with gentle, encouraging assurances and insistent and explicit direction. After a while, he again turned back to the supposed paralytic with suddenness and told him to stretch forth his right arm, having him repeat the action several times. Then he was called on to stand up. The patient reached for his stick, but Coue put it out of his reach and declared, "You know you can stand up if you will kindly favor me by just thinking you can, instead of you can't."

Soon the man was on his feet and Coue taking him by the arm told him to honor him by taking a little walk around the room. At first slowly and a bit painfully, but soon with more assurance and ease, the man was walking Then Coue withdrew his grasp from the man's arm and as he was about to seat himself said quietly and very gently, but firmly, "Now you see that you really have the use of your arms and legs. Don't be afraid to use them. Just to prove it to yourself and to me double up your right fist and hit me a good strong blow on the chest."

Joining in the general smile, the whilom paralytic raised his fist and struck out with such force that Coue would have been toppled over if he had not caught and braced himself. By this time, the whole room was laughing heartily and Coue seemed to enjoy the joke as much as anyone.

To a person who complained of fatigue, Coue said, "Well, I know what that is. There are days when it tires me to receive people, but I receive them all the same and all day long. Do not say you cannot help it. One can always overcome oneself. The idea of fatigue brings fatigue. But the idea that we have a duty to perform always gives us the strength for it."

To another he said, "The cause which prevents you from walking, whatever it is, is going to disappear little by little every day. You know the proverb: 'Heaven helps those who help themselves.' Well, stand up two or three times a day, supporting yourself on two persons, and say to yourself firmly: 'My kidneys are not so weak that I cannot stand; on the contrary, I can because I think I can.' All that we think becomes true for us. We must not allow ourselves to think wrongly."

To a patient suffering from diabetes, he said: "Continue to use therapeutic treatment. I cannot promise to cure you, but I can tell you how to cure yourself. All you have to do is to make your autosuggestions night and morning. Under this faithful use of autosuggestion, I have known diabetes to disappear completely."

"You, Monsieur, tell me that you are in pain; but I tell you that from today forward, the cause of this pain, whether it be called arthritis or anything else, is going to disappear with the help of your subconscious mind, and the cause having disappeared, the pain will gradually become less and less and in a short time it will be nothing but a memory."

I had an interesfing talk with a famous Edinburgh preacher who had gone all to pieces with nervous prostration following severe war and after-war strain, so that he had been obliged to give up his work. He told me that he had suffered for many months from acute insomnia and restlessness. He suffered tortures and felt that he was on the brink of madness or suicide. One after the other, eminent physicians had proved incapable of helping him beyond giving temporary relief by the administration of anodynes. So he had journeyed from Scotland to see what Coue could do for him. He confessed to skepticism as to the new autosuggestion, but coming to the clinics day after day for two weeks, the apparent miracles that he witnessed in hundreds of cases had brought him to the realization of the power within himself to conquer his trouble and he was, in fact, tremendously encouraged and beginning to get a sure grasp on himself through the new hope kindled in his heart by witnessing these facts. He looked confidently forward to taking up his church work again with more energy and deeper understanding than ever.

In our chat after this afternoon clinic, M. Coue told me that he had treated more than 250 cases in the course of the day and that the day was an average one. He was not at all tired and declared he could go on until midnight if necessary. In fact, after an early and light dinner—he is practically a vegetarian and lives very simply, rising early in the morning to work several hours in his garden before the clinic begins—he disposes of a considerable correspondence answering personally 30 or 40 letters from patients and disciples. Many of the most remarkable cures effected through his method have been in the cases of persons living at a distance from Nancy and who had simply read and followed the directions printed on a leaflet for free distribution and which I have quoted above.

I have been under the impression that he was a professor in the University of Nancy and that he had, as a "psychologist of the chair," simply developed and carried into practical aplication the teachings of Liebault and Bernheim, in which I myself had been much interested as long as 30 years ago. He surprised me by telling me that he had never been a professor or teacher; that while living at Troyes he had, during certain brief visits to Nancy, attended one or two of Bernheim's famous free clinics, subsequently reading Bernheim's book. But his own life-work had, for the most part, been in the field of industrial chemistry, in which field he had invented and put upon the market about 100 processes and preparations that are today widely used. Almost from the first, he had reached the conclusion in his own mind that not the hetero-suggestion of the hypnotists of the old Nancy school and of that eminent American practitioner, Professor John T. Quackenbos, formerly of Columbia University in New York, but autosuggestion was the real agent in the marvelous healing and correction of moral and mental defects and delinquencies credited broadly to "Hypnotism." This conclusion was strengthened by his reading of several American exponents of what has come to be known as the "New Thought" movement.

About twenty years ago, he retired from active business to devote his entire time and energies to "helping sick and suffering people to help themselves," as he put it. He insists that he never healed anybody in his life, that what he accomplishes is not due to any special gift in the way of personal magnetism, or unusual powers of any sort. Blessed with an excellent constitution, he has never had a serious illness. Asked if that meant he had not first tested his method on himself, he laughingly replied: "Oh, yes; for instance, one cold damp day last spring while I was bending over for a long time bottling wine in my cellar, I had what might be called a touch of lumbago. Interrupting my bottling for a few moments, I rubbed my painful back and said, as I instruct my disciples to say: ''It is going away, going away, going away,' (''se passe, se passe, se passe''). And it went away—and did not come back.''

I mentioned several books about him and his method which are just now the talk of Paris and London. ''I have not read them,'' he declared, ''I am so busy with my work of showing people how to help themselves in what seems to me the simple, common sense, as well as certainly scientific way, that I have no time to read.

''I do not know anything about psychoanalysis, and I do know, as a result of practical work with thousands of sufferers from all parts of the world during the past 20 years. just what my own method is and what it will do. So, believing in the wise old saying, 'Cobbler, stick to thy last,' I am content—for the present at least—to hold fast to its divine simplicity.''—Paul Tyner, in The Dearborn Independent.

A GIRL WHOM EVERYBODY LOVES.

''Mother,'' asked Lutie, ''may I have two little apples instead of one big one in my luncheon today?''

''I'm sorry, dear, but there is only one big apple. I used the rest for pies yesterday and kept this one out for you.''

Lutie went into the pantry and inspected the apple thoughtfully. Her face cleared. It is such a big one! Are apples very dear, mother?''

''Why, rather, at this season; but there will always be as many as my little girl wants to eat.''

''Oh, yes, I know that; but there is a girl in our class who never has an apple in her luncheon. There are four girls in their house and three boys, so it takes a lot of bread. She says her mother has to bake every other day. So if apples are dear, I suppose that is why she never has one. This is so big I can give her half. You see if it was a small one she wouldn't want to take half of it, for fear I might not have enough.''

''I shall order more today, so there will be plenty in the morning,'' said mother.

Lutie laughed. ''I want to tell you such a funny thing, mother. You know I have four gingham school dresses, but where there are four girls that makes one apiece; so Mary's mother washes theirs out Saturday morning and irons them Saturday afternoon. They have some old dresses they wear at home. She must be a very smart woman,'' said Lutie.

Mother laughed, too. ''Very clever indeed. Did Mary tell you that?''

''Yes. She said she knew we'd notice she wore the same dress, and that she was afraid that we would think that it was never washed.''

''You might put in another piece of pie or cake for her, too,'' said mother, but Lutie shook her head.

''I think I better not do that; she mightn't like it. At school we don't give each other pie or cake or bread, as if we were poor folks, but candy and apples—we all give each other those,'' she explained.

''So Mary isn't poor folks?'' asked mother.

''Why, Mother Rolston!'' exclaimed Lutie, with a shocked look. ''Mary Dalton poor folks. I should say not. She is the head girl in our room. She sits in the back seat in the first row and takes care of the copybooks and notebooks. She is head of her class, and last month she had the highest grade in the school —the whole school—the whole school—the whole school, mother! She never whispers nor plays in school; and we hardly ever do, either, because we are afraid Mary might see us. I'd almost rather teacher would see us whisper than Mary. You see, mother, we have a new teacher every year, but we always have Mary. She is so good and sweet that everybody loves her.''

''I see,'' said Mother. ''I think she is a very rich girl.''

''Yes, indeed!'' cried Lutie.—Exchange.

''YE ARE THE SALT OF THE EARTH.''

But the spiritual bankruptcy of ''the salt'' means the moral bankruptcy of ''the earth''!

Does this explain the world's present demoralized condition? (''The darkest period in history,'' says a great Chihago daily.)

Does it explain the wave of lawlessness sweeping over America and the world? (United States Solicitor General J. M. Beck calls this, ''The Age of Lawlessness.'')

Does it explain the enormous increase of crime in the United States? (Four hundred per cent from 1912 to 1921.)

Does it explain the amazing growth of the divorce evil? (A tremendous ratio, reaching in some sections from ten to twenty per cent of all marriages.)

Does it explain the terrible prevalence of social immorality? (Polluting an average of five out of every eight young men throughout the nation, says the health commissioner of a great city.)

Does it explain the growing industrial turmoil? During the past nine years, ending with 1922, there have been 26,000 strikes, as against 25,000 during the twenty-five years from 1881 to 1906.

Does it explain the domestic unhappiness. the juvenile delinquency, the lack of parental control, the desire for the frivolous and superficial, the inordinate love of money, the petty thievery and the gigantic robbery, the betrayal of public trust, the disregard of God's holy day, the banishment of the Bible from our public school system, the aversion to restraint of every kind? Does it explain the moral deterioration of multitudes at home, and the growing hostility to Christianity in large sections of the world abroad,

If so, then indeed ''judgment must begin at the house of God.'' If the moral rehabilitation of the earth is dependent upon the spiritual rehabilitation of the church, then let the latter begin at once! For judgment of sin and confession of sin on the part of the church mean purging, and purging means revival, and revival evangelization, and evangelization not only the salvation of multitudes, but the quickening of the moral conscience of the masses.

For the sake of Jew, Gentile and Church of God, the present all-but-extinguished spark of life in the church needs the united breath of multitudes of intercessors to fan it into world-wide living flame. Pray for revival!

FROM THE U. S. GOVERNMENT.

Owners of War Savings Stamps, purchased in 1918, are adxised that they are due and payable at their face value of $5 each on January 1, 1923. Advance presentation for immediate exchange for Treasury Savings Certificates or for payment at maturity, may be made now at post offices, banks and trust companies. Holders may apply to exchange the whole or part of their 1918 War Savings Stamps at maturity value for Treasury Saving Certificates to be dated January 1, 1922, with the difference either way to be paid in cash or they may arrange for full cash payment to be made at maturity. Immediate payment will be made in cash of any difference due the holder if he takes the largest possible amount of Treasury Savings Certificates in the exchange.

The Treasury Savings Certificates, offered in exchange for War Savings Stamps at their face value of $5 each, are a government security similar in all respects to the War Savings Stamps, i. e., yielding four per cent interest, compounded semiannually, if held to maturity, or three per cent simple interest if redeemed prior to maturity, except that they are issued in denominations of $25, $100, and $1,000.

An opportunity is thus offered for the reinvestment of funds on a most attractive basis. Holders of $25 in War Savings Stamps can now obtain a $25 Treasury Savings Certificate and $4.50 in cash. $100 in War Savings Stamps will be exchanged for a $100 Treasury Savings Certificate and $18 in cash. An owner of $1,000 in War Savings Stamps can get a $1,000 Treasury Savings Certificate and two $100 Treasury Savings and $16 in cash.

Possible delay and confusion may be avoided by prompt presentation of the War Savings Certificates, series 1918, at post offices or banking institutions.

Graham.—Since last reported we have held all regular services with good attendance. On Sunday, December 3, we had 161 present at Sunday school. Mr. Spencer preached two splendid sermons. At the night hour we held a Thanksgiving service and a special offering was taken for the Children's Home.

The senior Endeavorers have sent a Thanksgiving box to the school at Pine Ridge.

The hearts of the people of our church were made sad on November 17 by the death of Mrs. John McPherson, who had been confined to her home for a good while. While able to attend church she was very faithful.

The first quarterly conference will meet on Saturday night before the third Sunday in this month. All members are urged to be present. Reporter.

PRAYER ASKED.

Dear Readers of the Herald: Our son Bernard, who has been in high school at Greensboro, has been very sick for nearly seven weeks, and it seems that all medical aid fails to cure him. We believe that thourgh prayer and faith he can be healed. We ask every Christian who reads this to pray for his recovery. Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Apple.

Reidsville, R. 2.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

Asheville.—Brother and Mrs. C. A. Isner left Asheville October 19, with the love of our membership and many friends outside our church. On October 20 four of our members held a conference; with prayer they began to lay plans for financing the work of our church. On October 22 Brother Homer Casto gave a most helpful message to us. On October 27, a larger group of our members met; with prayer they adopted more definite financial plans. Each one of the nine present subscribed a definite sum to be paid monthly—the total amount subscribed was $650. The writer conducted the morning services on October 29, November 5 and 12. To date all except 25 members have subscribed $1744. These subscriptions were rounded up by the time our new pastor, Brother L. W. Gerringer, arrived on November 18. We were all very glad to welcome him. He found the little church a unit in prayer and confidence and determination to take care of him and his family, and to follow his leadership. He preached Sunday, November 19, morning and evening. His sermons were well received. Brother H. Freo Surratt and bride delighted us all by spending a few days in Asheville, arriving the day after their beautiful wedding at Grace church, Greensboro, and remaining through Sunday, the 19th of November. They were guests of "Mother" McCormick at 319 Merrimon Avenue, where Brother Gerringer was entertained a few days upon his arrival. The kind hostess declares that she never had more delightful guests than these. Brother Gerringer was ill last Sunday, and Dr. Manly preached in his stead. Dr. Manly is a retired minister of the United Brethren Church. This Wednesday night our first quarterly conference will be held. Next Sunday morning the newly elected church officers will be dedicated by a special service in connection with the communion service. Some of our most active members are out of the city. Misses Norvella and Verdie McIntyre are teaching in Washington, N. C. Misses Udora Younginer and Kathleen Swain are at the N. C. C. W. in Greensboro. William A. Swain, Jr., is at Chapel Hill. J. E. Swain has been in Charlotte for more than a year, a specially appointed referee in the case of Hardaway vs. the Southern Power Company. Brother Asa Hardee of Henderson, N. C., who has been here for several months for treatment, has our deep sympathy for the loss of his father, Brother D. W. Hardee.

Philadelphia Greensville Circuit.—It has been quite a long time since we have reported, but we are still at work.

We are very glad to have our pastor, Brother James Trollinger, back with us for another year. We have found that Brother Trollinger is a true minister of Jesus Christ and we appreciate his co-operation and kindnesses during the past year. We hope that we will make this one of the greatest years' work yet, so let us all co-operate and pray together and make this a prosperous year.

We were very sorry to see Brother Helms leave, for he was a good man and neighbor and seemed to be liked by all whom he came in contact with. It is hard to find words to express the sentiment of this community on the departure of Brother Helms and family. We extend our good wishes to him in his new work.

Our Sunday school is progressing very slowly. The attendance is very small and it can be made better, so let's get busy and boost our school and try to get more people to attend. Our superintendent made a fine talk last night on the following passage: "Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord."

We are planning to render a Christmas program on Monday night (December 26. In connection with this, we will have a Christmas tree.

Brother Trollinger is expecting to hold Thanksgiving service at Hobbs Chapel Thursday morning. We hope there will be a large crowd present, for I think every one should attend some Thanksgiving service,and we all have so much to be thankful for. Best wishes to the entire work. Pray for us.

November 28.

Shelby.—We arrived at Shelby on November 21. On the night before we left Caroleen some of the good people came in and brought some good things. Mrs. N. M. Renhardt gave us a big shoulder of fresh meat. Grandma Renhardt gave us a purse. Mrs. H. C. Ward and Miss Crary Blanton gave Mrs. Ridenhour a nice bed spread. We never lived by better neighbors where we ever lived than we had in Caroleen. May God bless them all.

A word about Shelby. In regard to our new charge, Shelby was made a station at our last conference. I was pastor of Shelby church last year. I am starting in on another year. I found Shelby people all right. They stood by me last year. I find them better this year. I never served better people. We are building a parsonage. Hope to be in it in a few days.

J. M. Ridenhour.

From Rev. D. A. Braswell.

On the third Sunday of November we were delighted to have the following brethren of the West Lexington Methodist Protestant church to pay us a visit: C. B. Yates, H. C. Koonts, J. A. Easter, David Brooks and Roy Burton. They brought us $20 in money, a hundred pounds of flour and some other provisions. I understand this was given by the members of the West Lexington M. P. church. May our Father continue to bless all those dear people. I love them, they are worthy of love. I did love to serve the good people on the Lexington Mission. I never served a kinder people in my life. Oh, how it pained my very soul to give them up. I never gave up the work until I saw I had to do it for their sake. When I reached Hamlet I saw I was not going to be able to serve them. Then I sent a telegram back to Conference and asked to be released from the work so they could get another man. The reason I went to my son at Hamlet, I was suffering so much I feared my wife could not stand the shock. I have no words to tell you all how I suffered for about two weeks. I could not eat nor sleep. I had been unwell for about six weeks. I had a severe attack of "flu," and before I had recovered from that this growth in my mouth inflamed, and it would not yield to any treatment. I had been bothered with a growth in my mouth for, over twenty years. I have had the radium applied four times. Dr. James thinks he can kill it if he can reach it with the radium. He said it would take a long time to kill it, as it was a case of long standing. I was at Hamlet again last week and had my mouth examined by two of the best doctors in the state, and they both decided that I had a cancer of the mouth; they say I am improving. When Dr. James looked in my mouth he said, "You are better. But," he said, "Radium has not done it all." He said, "Somebody has been praying." I said, "Yes, Dr. James, all the North Carolina Conference prayed for my recovery," and I said, "That is about all I have done since I got so bad." Brethren, continue to pray for me. I want to get well and get back in the work if it can be the Lord's will. I love the work, and I want to do a few more years' work before I die. I want to thank all who have sent me kind letters of comfort. God bless every one of them. I also thank Rev. R. M. Andrews for $5 he sent me some days ago. Brother Ed. L. Green sent me $5, for which he has my heart-felt thanks. I truly thank every one that has donated anything to my expense and comfort. You all know that the radium treatment is very costly. I was not prepared to meet the expense, but I believe my friends will stand by me in this hour of sore trial. It seems strange on Sunday morning to have nowhere to go. We shall be glad to hear from any of you, brethren, and will be glad to have any of you visit us when you can. We were glad to have Frank Wicks and his daughter Agnes and his little son Edgar, Miss Nellie Bean and Miss Velna Koonts visit us some time ago. They are members of the West Lexington Methodist Protestant church, and came all the way from Lexington to visit the pastor. May our Father continue to bless every member of our beloved Zion. Pray for us. Your humble brother in Christ,

D. A. Braswell.

Concord, November 28.

Spring Valley, Vance Circuit.—We are very glad to have Brother Neese returned to us for another year. This is his third year, and we hope it will be the best one we have ever had.

We have just closed a revival at this place with Brother Pritchard as pulpit help. Several reclamations and four additions. We are planning to have a Thank-Offering Service December 3. 7:30 P. M. The public is invited.

A gloom was cast over our community Saturday night, when the explosion of Mr. R. D. Turner's light house was felt throughout the country, doing several hundred dollars' damage, and worst of all seriously injuring Brother Turner. He was taken to Sarah Elizabeth Hospital at once, and died Monday morning.

We are glad to learn that Mrs. Neese, who has been sick for several days, is much improved. More news: born to Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Baskett, a daughter, Josephine Cole, November 22.

This church was on both honor rolls at Conference. We are planning to remodel our church and add Sunday school rooms in the near future. Best wishes to Herald and readers.

Reporter.

Shady Grove, Tabernacle Circuit.—We have completed a successful year at Shady Grove. We paid off everything for last year and some little debts that were behind from the year before.

Our Sunday school is progressing very nicely. We do not have as many present as we would like, still we have an interesting Sunday school, and are feeling some day there will be a larger number; but it is not always the largest crowd that accomplishes the most good. We just want to continue with our good work and let our lives shine, and prove to the world we are a live band and that each one of us is going to be worthwhile.

In the short journey of life there are only two roads for us to take, the pure one, and the impure. We who are trying to live a Christian life will meet with many difficulties while traveling the pure road, but we must look to our Father in heaven who does all things for the best, and we must pray so earnestly that He will give us strength and power to resist the many, many temptations. Those who are traveling the impure road do not realize the great danger they are in. We want to be so we may have an influence over them and let them see the good and beauty of living a Christian life and what the great reward will be. There are so many young people of today who look for their pleasures in the worldly things which are only the gratification of the senses, and finally ruin their character. The duties of a Christian are to lead these boys and girls to the light. The way may seem dark and dreary sometimes and we may think some are deep in sin, but if we will only have faith in God, and put our whole trust in Him, we will accomplish good sooner or later, for there is no limit to the possible achievements of faith.. For "All things are possible to him that believeth." "He that believeth on me, the works that I do, shall he do also, and greater works than these shall he do, because I go unto my Father."

We were glad to welcome two new members to our church last Sunday, Mr. Luther Pegg from Sandy Ridge church, Oak Ridge, and Mr. Thomas Neece from Mt. Pleasant M. P. church.

Our former pastor, Rev. G. F. Millaway, filled his last appointment the second Sunday in November. We regret very much to give him up, as he has been of great help to us during the past five years. We want him to ever remember his many friends in his prayers. We gladly welcome our new pastor, Rev. J. A. Burgess.

Our missionary meeting was held at the home of Mrs. Walter Glass Saturday afternoon, November 25. After a real interesting and helpful meeting we were ushered into the dining room where refreshments were served and were enjoyed by all present.

Thomasville.—The first business session for new conference year was held with fair attendance of the leaders of our church. Rev. R. S. Troxler was chairman of this meeting, Miss Myrtle Perry secretary, H. S. Hankins press-reporter, J. N. Myers steward. Many phases of our church were discussed, new plans made and arrangements for efficient workmanship were made for the promotion of our Lord's kingdom in and around Thomasville. We will be very glad to have the annual conference meet with us next year. Reporter.

Fairgrgcve, Haw River Circuit.—There has not been a report from this church in quite a while; but we are still moving forward. We were indeed glad to have our pastor return to us, for another year. He has started the work off with a progressive spirit, and we are sure the coming year's work will be inspiring to us all. On the last fourth Sunday he gave us an interesting sermon.

The first quarterly conference met at this church Saturday, November 25. Conference business was transacted and Brother Lowdermilk reminded us that if we are to accomplish the work that our Master has for us to do, we must co-operate with him, and with each other.

Some time ago Miss Annie Forrest visited us and organized a Foreign Missionary Society. On last Sunday we completed our organization and discussed interesting subjects in regard to the society. Our meeting adjourned to meet again the third Sunday.

Ethel Richardson.

Reminiscent.

I wonder if I have arrived at the age at which I might be pardoned for indulging in reminiscences. The last issue of the M. P. Herald is to some extent responsible for my feelings this Sunday afternoon. First, I notice that President Dixon makes a report to the Herald under the caption of "The Work and the Workers." I do not think he could have chosen a better caption and yet during the time I was president I wrote under that caption. Some years afterwards when Dr. Johnson was president he also used the same caption and when I told him I felt complimented he said he did not recall my having used it; but that he was not going to change on that account and he did not, so go ahead, Dr. Dixon. I have no copyright on it.

Second, when I read Brother Hunter's very cheerful and cheering report from Winston it recalled my pastorate there when I was a young preacher. How kind the people were—how they went out to hear my little sermons—generally 20 minutes long, and the many evidences of esteem and appreciation they showered upon us. Mr. O. W. Hanner, one of the honored leaders of the church there, joined during my pastorate. Through all the years since he has stood manfully by the church and is truly honored by the entire membership. Brother Wm. N. Pegram and his [illegible] wife were there at that time and moved down on Flat Rock circuit about the time I became pastor there and back to Winston a little before I closed my 17 years on Flat Rock, so it came to pass that they have heard me try to preach oftener than any one else now living. May Winston church go forward under the leadership of her consecrated and fine spirited young pastor.

Then I thought of Kernersville and the great leader I found there in the person of the devout, serene and sweet spirited J. C. Roberts and his lovely wife—her health was shattered and the beauty of face had been marred by pain and suffering and yet I wrote "his lovely wife" thoughtfully and advisedly. Then somehow my mind turned to R. E. Patterson of Liberty for so many years my close friend and I tried to pray that we might have more men in this day who love the church and who honor the powers that be and are willing to fall in line even when all things are not to their liking. May all who read remember the Bible injunction, "touch not mine anointed and do my prophets no harm." Since writing the above it has been my privilege to hear Brother R. A. Hunter, Winston's beloved pastor, preach in Grace church, Greensboro, on some of the great promises of God to all those who are honest with God and who walk uprightly. The sermon was truly inspirational and I at least went away helped as no doubt many others did.

Shelby.—Our Sunday school is growing in number, also in collection. I will not tell the amount of today's collection, but will say this much: We have one very old man in our men's class. He is not so well lately; he sent a check today to the amount of $4. He is not a member of our church. We are going to put forth a special effort to get all children in Sunday school somewhere. Our Sunday school is half little boys and girls.

Our church officers have been elected for the new year; all the old officers were re-elected.

Mr. S. B. Short was elected secretary of our Sunday school. We surely appreciate his service.

We are so glad the Annual Conference made a station of Shelby. Two years ago this charge had three churches, last year two, and now each of the two has been made a station.

We are building a six-room bungalow on the church lot. Hope to have the parsonage completed by Christmas. "Oh," some will say, "what a burden for a few, paying the pastor, building a parsonage." Yes, quite a lot for a few, but if God be for us, who can be against us?

We are indeed glad to have our same pastor with us again—I won't say this year, for we hope to have him return next year. Let us give him untiring support and pray that God will bless our efforts. A Member.

P. S. We are very proud of Rev. T. G. McAllister, of our town who entered our conference and now is pastor at Caroleen.

Thomasville, First Church.—Since conference the work here is starting off nicely. Everybody seems to be taking hold of the work with more zeal. It is always a pleasure to work when folks will help, so we will all work together to see what can be done.

Our Sunday school, with Brother C. F. Finch as superintendent, is moving along nicely. He is always on the job, with something new and interesting, so what we need now as much as anything else, is more room, which we hope to have soon. We are "full-up" and can not get any "fuller," so about the only thing to do is to move out.

We have plenty of folks who ought to be in Sunday school, and we want our part, and expect to have them.

Our Christian Endeavor society has elected Brother D. R. Connell as president, and I am sure he will make a good one, and I believe that every Christian Endeavorer will stand by him and help him in every way possible.

The Christian Endeavor societies, the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies, and the Ladies' Aid society, all did fine work last year, and I am counting on them to do better work this year.

We received many tokens of appreciation during the year, which were apreciated very much by both preacher and family.

And on the 10th of November this preacher had a birthday, and received two real nice presents, one barrel of fine large red apples from Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Dameron and a nice Duofold fountain pen from Dr. R. V. Yokely.

And now here comes the surprise to everybody; on the night of the 27th of November the good people of our church wanted to show their appreciation to their new pastor and family, so a good number of them came in with arms full and loaded down the dining-room table with all kinds of good things to eat (a real thank-offering), such as one can beries, four pounds dried fruit, one large beef roast, five pounds coffee, three large boxes oatmeal, two pounds butter, 33 pounds sugar, 12 pounds lard, two cans jelly, three pecks Irish potatoes, one peck sweet potatoes, one gallon milk, two cans of catsup, three boxes of Post toasties, two cans of beans, one can honey, two cans peaches, one can cherries, two quarts of beans, one barrel of flour, one real good cake, one nice ham, 18½ yards of real nice dress goods, and two handkerchiefs.

I would like to give the names of all who took part in the pounding, but do not have them and might miss some names; the Lord knows and he will richly bless you for these nice tokens of appreciation. And I hope to be able this year to give you my very best service.

We want to thank Mrs. W. S. Myers for attending to our little baby girl so well. She makes a real good nurse. Many thanks to all.

I am yours for service. R. S. Troxler.

Burlington.—Good services were held by the Burlington church last Sunday. There were 314 in Sunday school, an increase of 36 over the previous Sunday.

The morning church service was well attended. The Lord's Supper was administered, preceding which the pastor delivered a brief talk aprropriate for the occasion.

The Christian Endeavor societies held their meetings at the regular hours. The senior meeting at 6:30 was conducted by Miss Alta Glenn, and the topic, "Better Speaking," was discussed by several members of the society, including Rev. Ivey Crutchfield, ministerial student of Elon College, who was a visitor in the meeting.

At the evening church service, beginning at 7:30 o'clock, Dr. R. M. Andrews, financial agent of our college enterprise, was present with his stereopticon outfit and presented an illustrated lecture, showing a series of religious pictures, followed by pictures of our Seminary at Westminster, Md., Dr. J. F. McCulloch, principal founder of our college, and pictures of the present new college building, besides pictures of the proposed college buildings and dormitories. Following the showing of the pictures, Dr. Andrews delivered an address on the need of colleges, declaring that there were colleges older than our republic. He showed very convincingly that colleges are needed to furnish men for the responsible positions of the national government, and also showed that the Christian colleges furnish the ministers of the gospel and the leaders of the church. Pledge cards were delivered to the congregation. The church was almost filled with people who seemed to be interested in the college enterprise.

All regular services will be held next Sunday. C. B. Way, Reporter.

Thomasville.—We have had a good day. Our Sunday school numbered 207 with a collection of $14.50 for our Children's Home. In the absence of Supt. C. F. Finch, D. R. Connell presided. Rev. R. S. Troxler gave us two excellent sermons. Christian Endeavor changed its time of holding meetings from Friday night to 6:30 Sunday night. All departments of this church seem to be in fine shape, all working harmoniously for the betterment of all concerned. We are looking forward to great things for Christmas. Yours for the Master. Reporter.

Pinnacle.—Our first quarterly conference was held at Pinnacle on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in November. Owing to the fact that the pastor is in "bonds" the conference was held in parsonage. All churches were represented and a progressive program was adopted for the new year. It is already fruiting. Amount raised on salary up to December 1, $160. The outlook is splendid for a good year. W. D. Reed.

Mt. Zion, Pinnacle and Mt. Zion Circuit.—We are very glad indeed to have our pastor returned to us. Our hearts were saddened to learn of the accident of Brother and Mrs Reed and little grandson. Brother Reed suffered a broken shoulder and other injaries. Mrs. Reed and the baby received a few cuts and bruises.

Brother Reed was with us yesterday afternoon, and held a Thanksgiving service. We also elected our officers for the new year. Contribution was taken for the Children's Home. The amount will be reported by the secretary treasurer of the Sunday school.

We are planning to have a Christmas entertainment.

I am glad to report the health of Mrs. O. P. Jones has been restored. She is one of our faithful Sunday school and church workers.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Jones have moved into our midst. Mrs. Jones is our former organi ist. We welcome them into our Sunday school again. Mrs. K. D. Brown, Reporter.

Forsyth Circuit.—We have been trying to carry out the request of the last Annual Conference, to hold a Thanksgiving service in every church, or at least take an offering for our Children's Home at High Point. As there are six churches on this charge, we could not hold a Thanksgiving service at each church on Thanksgiving Day, but we have used the preceding and following Sundays to consider the many things for which we should return thanks to Almighty God. Thanksgiving afternoon we had preaching, and a testimony meeting at Oak Grove church. The congregation was not so large, but we believe every one present enjoyed the service. In the evening of the same day we held a Thanksgiving service at Maple Spring church. At this church we had as large a congregation as at the usual church services. One of the interesting things to the pastor was the decoration of the altar around the chancel rail, with corn, sweet potatoes, Irish potatoes, wheat, corn meal, flour, jarred peaches and preserves, apples, fresh meats, etc. Near the close of the service Mr. Ira Baity presented the above gifts to the pastor and family as a Thanksgiving gift.

As we have not written to the Herald since Conference, we wish to tell of the great surprise pastor and family received fifth Sunday from Hickory Ridge members. After closing the morning service, pastor and family came out to the car and found it loaded with good things to eat, such as jarred peaches, preserves, dried apples, several bags of flour, butter, potatoes, two large light Brahma pullets, abundance of sugar, spices of all kinds, soaps, and other things that come in handy in housekeeping. We will not try to mention any names, but wish to thank each one of them for their gifts. It encourages us to work the harder for so appreciative people, and we only hope that our service will be such as will help in part to reward them for their kind remembrances.

There are many things to encourage us on this charge. At the request of some of the Union Grove members, I helped them to organize a prayer meeting last fourth Sunday night. Some thought it best not to use the Christian Endeavor pledge at present, but we elected officers, and agreed to use the Christian Endeavor prayer meeting topics. We are expecting them to go forward in the Master's work. I do not have the oportunity of being with the different churches in their prayer meetings very often, but I have been told that they are doing good work. All of the six churches have some kind of a prayer meeting, but one; we are hoping it will not be long until they will organize also.

Quarterly Conference.

The first quarterly conference of Forsyth charge wil convene at Winston-Salem Methodist Protestant church Saturday before the second Sunday at two o'clock in the afternoon. Important business will be transacted, so please be present. E. A. Bingham.

Reidsville.—Our pastor preached a splendid sermon yesterday morning, using as his subject "Christ's Poverty—Our Riches." He told of how we through His poverty became rich, and of what a wonderful thing it is to have the love of Christ abiding within our hearts, and how little we cared for worldly things when we became fully consecrated to Him.

We did not have any service at night due to the revival meeting in progress at the Presbyterian church. A union service was held in that church.

Mr. G. M. Reed led the Christian Endeavor meeting. A good program was rendered and special music was furnished by Misses Blanche Weatherly and Effie McCollum.

Several out-of-town visitors were present at our morning services; among them was Miss Mabel Williams of the Bonlee High School faculty. We are always glad to have visitors and welcome them to all of our services. Madge T. Dixon, Press Reporter.

DIED.

Williams.

David B. Williams was born November 21, 1852; departed this life November 27, 1922. His suffering, though intense, was not extended beyond a few hours. He was seemingly in good health till about two o'clock last Sunday evening, when seized by violent pain. The doctor was called. A few hours later he was carried to Watts hospital, Durham. All that human hands and medical skill could do could not stay the icy hand of death. At about five o'clock on Monday afternoon his enrollment was transferred from the living to the dead. He walks, he talks no more with us. His spirit rests, his soul liveth in the spirit land. We view today his mortal remains. This is not Brother Williams, but the tenement, the house of clay; the spirit, the soul, has gone to God who gave it.

The deceased was married to Miss Sallie J. Hayes February 22, 1872. In the bond of affection and love they lived and raised a family of eight children, four sons—W. F. Williams, Hillsboro; E. H. Williams, Mebane; E. E. Williams, McKenney, Va.; and H. C. Williams, Hillsboro; and four daughters—Mrs. L. B. Roberts, Mrs. C. G. Ray, and Mrs. A. C. Haistings of Hillsboro; and 41 grandchildren an earth's stage of battle, to mourn the loss of father and grand father. Little Bessie T. Williams died at the tender age of four years. The wife, companion and mother preceded the father about six months ago.

Brother Williams was a good citizen, a true husband, and a loving father. He was a member of Chestnut Ridge Methodist Protestant church. His last years were marked by regular attendance and faithfulness to his church and God. He was his pastor's friend and I feel very keenly the loss of this good man. He had his human faults as all of us have We could not be human without them. He had many true and stately qualities; these we should emulate and throw a mantle of charity over whatever faults he may have had We shall miss him. The children, his fatherly advice; the county and state his citizenship; the church his presence and support.

His funeral was conducted by his pastor, Rev. H. L. Powell, assisted by Dr. T. M. Johnson, Mebane, N. C. A good congregation assembled to pay the last tribute of respect to this, our brother, who has crossed over to the other country where companion and loved ones are. His mortal body was laid to rest in Chestnut Ridge cemetery to await the resurrection of the dead. May the Lord bless the bereaved and comfort them. By pastor.

H. L. Powell.

Mrs. John Dixon.

Mrs. Nannie Ellen Sharpe Dixon—the faithful wife of John Dixon, after several weeks' suffering, died at Rainey Hospital, Burlington, on October 10, 1922, at the age of 6[illegible] years and 19 days. Since she was a child she had been a member of the Methodist Protestant church at Mt. Hermon, and one of its most faithful and best members. Rev. J. A Burgess—a former pastor—had been selected some years ago to conduct the funeral. The music also had been selected by her. It consisted of an organ voluntary and phonograph music only. A large concourse of people attended the funeral. The floral tribute was magnificent and varied. The body was laid to rest in the cemetery at Mt. Hermon. May sustaining grace be given to her companion.

A. O. Lindley.

Mrs. Neese.

Tempa Ellen Neese—the mother of the late "Mac" Neese and the widow of the late Jacob Neese, was suddenly called home on October 20, 1922, at the age of 68 years, 11 months and 25 days. When young she became a follower of Jesus Christ and joined the Methodist Protestant church at Friendship; which church relation she held till death. She was a faithful mother, good neighbor and a servant, faithful, of her Lord. Three of her children had passed on before her. One daughter, Mrs. Mary Shoffner, is left to mourn for her. Her funeral services were conducted by her pastor and the body placed in the cemetery at Belmont, in the presence of a host of friends. May the presence of Him Who is able to supply our every need, comfort all the sorrowing ones.

A. O. Lindley.

Isley.

Elmer J. Isley, the infant son of John and Sallie Isley, died November 23, 1922, at the age of one year, four months and 20 days. A short funeral service was held at the cemetery at Friendship; its body was interred. May the thought that Elmer is with the angels above comfort the hearts of his parents.

A. O. Lindley.

Isley.

Sister Rosa Isley, wife of Brother H. E Isley, was born January 23, 1881. She departed this life November 4, 1922. The deceased was born in Chatham county. In her early girlhood she came with her parents to Burlington to live, and the remainder of her earthly life was spent in and around this place. When quite young Sister Isley became a Christian and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church. Later she transferred her membership to the Methodist Protestant Church, where it remained till her death.

The married life of the deceased began in 1895 when she became the wife of Brother Isley. This relation was spent in happiness and contentment till death broke the union.

The passing came as a great surprise, and cast a pall over the community. For months she had not been well, but she was up and able to do most of her house-work. Upon the recommendation of her physician she underwent an operation from which she was not able to rally. Everything possible was done for her, but her condition seemed beyond medical skill. And so she went—quietly and trustingly—back to God. Our hearts go out in sympathy to the surviving husband, the parents, brother, and other relatives. May the God of all comfort sustain them, and sanctify his affliction to their eternal good.

Sister Isley was a good woman—good in character, and good in works. Her gentle nature, her unassuming manner, her unselfishness, and the genuineness and dependableness of her goodness won for her the confidence of all who knew her. The large number at her funeral and the many beautiful flowers show the high esteem in the community in which she lived and served most of her earthly life. Her life was like the moving stream that grows deeper and wider and more powerful as it reaches the great ocean. She has gone from us; but the influence of her good life lingers, and will not soon be lost.

The funeral service was held in the Burlington Methodist Protestant church, conducted by the pastor. Interment was in Pineview cemetery. S. W. Taylor.

November 29.

Coble.

Julius Clarkston Coble, who was killed in the felling of a lodged tree, was born November 6, 1870, died November 23, 1922. He was converted a number of years ago and united with Fair Grove Methodist Protestant church and had lived, we are informed, a consistent Christian life.

He is survived by his father, mother, wife, three children, three brothers and one sister, all of whom keenly feel the absence of one who was near and dear to them.

At three P. M. on the day following his death the funeral was conducted. Rev. Messrs. W. F. Ashburn, Henderson and the writer taking part in the services, after which, in the presence of numbers of friends and relatives, his body was laid to rest in the cemetery of the above-named church. He will be much missed as a husband, father, friend, church member and neighbor.

May God greatly bless all those bereaved on account of the departure of one who went so suddenly, so quickly, yea, in an hour, no doubt, when they thought not.

E. G. Lowdermilk, Pastor.

Julius C. Coble was born November 6, 1870, and died November 23, 1922. He was converted and joined Fairgrove M. P. church August, 1914. He lived a Christian life and was ready when the summons came. He is survived by his aged father and mother, wife and three children, three brothers and one sister.

Funeral service was conducted by his pastor, Rev. E. G. Lowdermilk, assisted by Rev. W. F. Ashburn and Captain Henderson, of the Salvation Army. His body was laid to rest in the churchyard to await the resurrection morn.

Called home from service to reward,
Called home from toil to rest,
Thy soul from earthly scenes hath gone
To dwell among the blest.
Called home, with every trial o'er,
With every cross laid down,
Thou hast obtained with wondrous joy
A bright unfading crown.
O, deathless land, where thou hast gone,
O home so pure and fair,
Again we will meet to part no more
When we shall enter there. V. S. C.

FROM BROTHER E. C. HARRIS.

I was at the closing of our late conference and heard read the report of the Finance Committee and the discussions that followed. It seemed to me that the report was a just and reasonable one and needed no trimming. The amounts for the various interests of church recommended were none too great, and if our people were taught to have some systematic way of giving our treasury would be able to have enough to meet any reasonable claim of the church. People do not do many things they are not taught to do. I am an old church member and have attended as many church services as the average member, and I do not recall ever having heard but a few sermons on giving systematically; but one on tithing. This was by our late W. A. Bunch, which resulted in my becoming a tither. What proportion we should give in this age, I doubt that the Word teaches. We are living in the age of grace, and giving is a grace, a disposition created by the Spirit. In 2 Cor. 8:7, we are exhorted to abound in this grace. The law imposed giving as a divine requirement, Christian giving is voluntary, and a test of sincerity and love. If there is a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not. Every man according as he purposes in his heart, so let him give, not grudgingly or of necessity. If we sow sparingly, we reap sparingly, if bountifully we reap bountifully. God is able to make all grace abound towards you. Paul had this disposition created by the Spirit and shows this fruit of grace when he becomes foremost in exertions for the relief of those whom he had by persecutions robbed of their all. Many today are persecuting the church of God and robbing Him of what is His, and will continue to do so until they accept the free grace of God and let Him create within them a new heart. Then, like Paul, will they exert themselves to relieve the saints of God by giving Him of their means and entire life if necessary. "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store as God has prospered him." Every one of you, no one exempt, not even those in limited circumstances. "Lay by him," have it ready. Paul does not advise us to make a daily or weekly offering always, but he does advise us to lay up something the first of every week—set it apart, have it ready to give when we see one of God's children in need. "As God has prospered him." Whatever we may have by prosperity acquired. To one he gave five talents, to another two, to another one; from each was expected a fair rental. We should give because Christ gave so much for us. "Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ that though he was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich." Through gratuitous love, the Lord emptied himself of his previous heavenly glory, for our sakes.

It is not demanded of us to give till we become poor, but without impoverishing ourselves. We should relieve others with our abundance. If the Lord did so much more, and at a greater cost for our sakes, should we not do an act with love for his church, at so little a sacrifice. Christ suffered poverty by giving—we become rich. The privilege of giving is universal (according to ability), to rich and poor. Giving is to be proportioned by income. The Old Testament proportion was the tithe—one-tenth. We are living in the dispensation of grace, and I am fully persuaded that as much is expected of us as those living under the dispensation of the law—and even more. Let us not fail as did they. Be that as it may, we, in this enlightened age, are far behind in giving, to those living four thousand years ago. They tithed everything. In the time of Hezekiah, they brought in abundance, the first fruits of corn, wine, oil, honey and all the increase of the field, the tenth of all things brought they in abundantly and laid them in heaps. Then Hezekiah questioned with the priests, and the chief priest said, "Since the people began to bring the offerings into the house of the Lord, we have had enough to eat and have plenty and the Lord hath blessed his people and there is a great store left." And they had to prepare chambers in the house of the Lord to hold the tithe and the porter distributed them when and where needed—did not have to take a collection every time some one was in need, had it ready by everybody giving the tenth.

If any one will tithe, put in God's treasury one-tenth of all you get, at the end of the year you will find you are no poorer and God's treasury richer. And another thing you will find that you will have given more than you ever did before. People who have a disposition to give (created by the Spirit) and realize that giving is a grace, never have any trouble about what they should tithe. I recognize the fact that all of us are on rented ground, and the Landlord is justly entitled to a fair rental and it seems to me that a tenth is as little as any of us could conscientiously give. If we would all tithe we would have money enough to pay every missionary in home and foreign lands, take care of all young, a handsome living, build all the churches needed and have a big account to our credit. I believe in some definite plan of giving, and if we ask God He will show us the very best plan. I appeal to every one to try it and see.

"There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth, and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty." "The liberal soul shall be made fat: and he that watereth shall be watered also himself." On every American silver dollar is stamped, "In God we trust." Yet some people seem to act as if they can not trust Him with more than a penny or nickel to send His gospel to a heathen land. Such inconsistency! Like Job, we should say, "Though he slay me yet will I trust him." "Blessed is the man that maketh the Lord his trust. He that putteth his trust in the Lord shall be made fat." "God is not unrighteous, to forget your work and labor of love, which ye have shewed toward His name, in that ye have ministered to the saints, and do minister."

I can not stop without saying simply giving or tithing will not save us. A self-righteous man once stood before Jesus and prayed thus: "I fast twice in the week and give tithes of all I possess." Yet he was not justified, failed to get the blessing. We have no inherited right to claim any reward, for a servant has no merit as he only does that which is his bounden duty. Our best performances bear no proportion to what we leave undone. All strength comes from God, but God has promised of his own grace to reward the good works of his people. It is His promise, not our merits which would make it unrighteous were He not to reward his people's works. God will be no man's debtor, but acts of love must be done for His name's sake; be patient, persevering, resting on hope and faith unto the end.

"Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

Fairfield.—The first appointment was filled the fourth Sunday in November. We found a large congregation of the good people of Fairfield and some from other churches to preach to. Having served these good people before as pastor, it was like going back home. Going on Saturday we found their doors wide open and a hearty invitation to enter from each one. It is a great pleasure to go to the homes of people who extend a welcome as "big" as their homes.

The people of Fairfield believe in Uncle Sam's war motto, "You work and I will feed you," and they put in practice what they believe. For proof, when we began preparing to leave we found some of the people taking a great interest in the "Ford" and upon examination we found it being filled with good things to eat, such as sweet potatoes, Irish potatoes, chickens, jelly, preserves, peanuts, and sausage. We thank each one for their gifts.

Fairfield is in good condition for a prosperous year. A good live Sunday school is running so fast that they say that winter can't stop them this time. We are glad to see a good Sunday school running all the year.

The people of this charge made a rush for the top on the first day, making a good payment on pastor's salary and some on conference claims. With the start they have made and the determination they show, you may look for Fairfield on the Honor Roll before the year is out.

C. E. Phillips, Pastor.

Graham Church.—Everything seems to be starting off well on the new year. We had a large congregation at both the morning and evening services yesterday. We held our Thanksgiving service last night, and took an offering for the orphans' Home, which amounted to $36. The Sunday school collection yesterday was also given to the Home, which amounted to $14.57. Total for both collections was $50.57. Our Sunday school is growing in interest and increasing in number. The Christian Endeavor society is doing a good work. We are very grateful to some of our people for fresh meat, sausage, sweet potatoes, canned fruit, fresh fish and oysters.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society will meet at the parsonage next Saturday, three P. M.

The first quarterly conference will convene here Saturday night before the third Sunday in December.

ODELL'S, INCORPORATED, GREENSBORO, N. C.

Asheboro.—First I wish to express to the people of my former pastorate my apreciation for the many evidences of their love which still follows me, and some of it in a very tangible way, having since my last report received, among other things, cash gifts from five individuals totaling $75. For these gifts I am grateful, but for the spirit that prompted them more. May God continue to add His blessings to the Reidsville church.

Every act and system has its measure and kind of compensation. One of the rewards of the itineracy is that it gives the minister an opportunity to explode the erroneous conception that one church or community has, or might have, a monopoly on loyalty and goodness. Despite the limitations under which we began our work the people of Asheboro, from the very first, have been gracious, generous and kind, and everywhere there has been manifested a splendid spirit of co-operation as we have aprpoached the task before us, which within itself already insures at least a degree of success.

There are many encouraging observations about the church and its membership which might be noted. However, many of these would only be a restatement of the characteristics common to all progressive churches. Yet every church, like every individual, possesses certain distinguishing characteristics which differentiate it from others. With the Asheboro church this distinguishing characteristic, in my opinion, is to be found in the large percentage of children and young people that attend its services, especially the preaching service. Last night we had twenty-seven children in the junior choir and a goodly number throughout the congregation, and this is not an exception, but the rule, and those who have assisted in the development of this situation deserve credit. Another thing that strikes the newcomer is the large number of people found here related to various ministers of our conference, among whom we recall the following names: Bunch, Moton, Stowe, Lowdermilk Auman, and others.

A pall of sorrow was cast over our entire church and town Saturday morning by the death of Mrs. Jennie Hancock, mother of Mrs. William C. Hammer. The funeral was conducted from the home Sunday afternoon. The pastor, Dr. Whitaker, a former pastor, and G. S. Bradshaw of the Greensboro Bar, and Mrs. Robertson of the Greensboro College for Women, both intimate friends of the deceased, took part in the service, during which a concourse of friends gathered about the home and cemetery to pay their last tribute of respect to the life and worth of this beloved woman.. A more complete obituary will doubtless appear later.

Our people, at the church service last night, were delighted by the presence, and edified by a splendid message by Dr. C. L. Whitaker, on Prayer. Dr. and Mrs. Whitaker have many friends in Asheboro and both pastor and people are always delighted when they can come our way. H. F. Fogleman, Pastor.

December 4.

Haw River Church, Glen Raven Charge.—Our new pastor came to us on the second Sunday of November, He brought us a fine gospel message which was enjoyed by all present. He is making a good impression on our people here. It is believed among us that he is the right man in the right field among us at this time.

We were made very sad on Thursday morning, November 23, to learn of the destruction of our church building by fire. Although we do not know just why some things happen yet we believe that our heavenly Father governs all things well. Our faith is anchored in Him, for we believe that all things work together for good to them who love and serve the Lord. Our people are planning to rebuild just as soon as possible. We are planning to build a modern church which will cost around $10,000, so you can see, my dear readers, the optimistic spirit that possesses a small band of Christian workers who do not possess so very much of this world's goods. And you can readily see that we will need your prayers and financial support in this great undertaking. So we are taking this means of informing our people in North Carolina of our great need. We ask each pastor and Sunday school superintendent to take an offering for us. Any amount large or small will be greatly appreciated. Send all contributions to Miss Espa Bullard, Haw River, N. C.

Brother, sister, help bear the burdens of the weak. Give and it shall be given unto you, said the great teacher. Yours for the church of Christ, D. I. Garner.

PRIZE OFFERED.

For the best sentence quotation from your pastor's sermon next Sunday we will send a small prize to the hearer who reports it to us.

We mean that the prize will be sent to the one who sends the quotation that is adjudged best of all sent.

SENTENCES EXTRACTED FROM LAST SUNDAY'S SERMONS.

''The great trouble with the church today is that we are preaching reformation instead of regeneration.''

''How about your title in the eternal life?''

''Praise God for the blessings of the whole nation today.''

''Every one who is content and has a happy disposition must have trust in the Almighty.''

The prize goes this week to Charles B. Way, for the first quotation—from a sermon by Rev. J. M. Morgan.

"PATIENT CONTINUANCE IN WELL-DOING."

We read a good story recently in which the heroine, passing through series after series of calamities, was enabled to bear up through all by her knowledge of Bible teaching, and one of the texts that came to her when she was on the point of giving up in despair was this phrase from Paul's letter to the Romans. "Patient continuance in well-doing."

This story impressed upon our mind the value of this exhortation. It is indeed a gem. Every person should carry it about as he carries a highly prized ring or other token of another's regard.

There is divine wisdom, sublime optimism in this text. It implies that there is something to be hoped for in the most desperate condition. The apostle at once refers to the greatest of all rewards, the greatest possible reward, that is sure to crown the efforts of those who endure and labor on to the end, even eternal life.

What though earthly prospects fail or the things we had hoped for prove a great disappointment when we gain them: this great hope of eternal life cannot fail if we rightly pursue it, and when we find ourselves in sure possession of the great prize, instead of a sense of disappointment, we will be filled with joyous surprise that our fondest expectations have been so far exceeded. "Ear hath not heard nor eye seen nor the heart of man conceived the things that God hath prepared for them that love Him."

Our present part is patient continuance in well-doing. We are not to become impatient because of delay. We are not to cease from effort because we see no hope of reward. Much less are we to turn from well-doing to evil doing. Just keep on doing good, trusting as the apostle declared, that our labor shall not be in vain in the Lord.

—The missionary meeting on Tuesday brought Rev. E. G. Lowdermilk to our office for a little while. He brought Mrs. Lowdermilk and Mrs. Vance to the meeting.

WILL THE COLLEGE MATERIALIZE?

Bro. J. R. Stone, Esq., raises this question and answers it. There should be but one answer in our minds regarding this. Of course all things future are contingent. Even the "everlasting hills" might be moved into the sea, or the solid earth itself might dissolve in vapor. But assuming that the world continues and that men continue to live in the world, and that the Methodist Protestant Church continues on its high mission, there should be no other expectation in any of our minds than that we will build the college. We can't be consistent and not build it. We can't be true to our church and not build it. We can't be true to our young people and not build it. We couldn't be true to Christ and not build it.

A Christian college is a trainer for Christian service. Instead of making men haughty, it makes them humble. Instead of developing the spirit of self-seeking, it develops the spirit of self-sacrifice.

A Christian education adds immensely to the usefulness of people not merely by developing power and skill in action, but still more by developing the spirit that makes men wish to do good to others.

We are glad our people are coming to realize the greatness of their obligation and privilege and opportunity in this matter. The amount that Bro. Andrews reports pledged encourages the hope that the whole amount needed will be secured.

Let the man that has not pledged feel the responsibility that is upon him. He is the man that is keeping the college from immediate materialization. But we have faith in him. Though he is slow, we feel that he is sure; that he will come in and give the impetus that will give ultimate success.

Commissioner of Revenue Watts says that the law permits him to grant extensions of time to taxpayers for filing income tax returns from March the 15th, in cases of sickness, absence, or other disability, or whenever in his judgement good cause exists for such extension. The law requires interest at the rate of six per cent per annum from March 15th, to the time of payment to be paid where extensions are granted. Extensions will be granted upon application where lawful cause is shown, but in all cases the interest required by law will be collected.

—Rev. G. A. Laughlin, of Cedar Falls, spent last Sunday with his son in Greensboro, attending Grace church morning and evening. We were pleased to have a call from him Monday morning. He reports considerable progress for his town economically. The mill company will build a new mill and expect to raise the dam across the river ten feet higher. They are already building houses for more employees.

A CORRECTION.

In my report to the Executive Committee just published, it was made to appear that the receipts for the quarter of several of the Boards, were rather large. Two of these, in question, were the Board of Home Missions with receipts of $52,651, and the Board of Education with receipts of $22,944. The actual receipts from the churches for the Board of Home Missions were $5,612, and the balance, $47,039, was borrowed money, balance from last quarter, refunds, etc. The Board of Education actually received from the churches $6,941 and the balance $16,003 was borrowed money, balance from last quarter, etc. I am simply making this correction so that the impression will not be made that these boards are being better supported by the church than they really are. H. C. Staley, Treasurer.

ATTENTION, PASTORS.

At our last conference Dr. Lewis recommended that two persons be appointed "to serve as a medium through which the various boards of the church may operate in special presentation of their work in the Annual Conference." I was appointed to represent the educational and young people's interest, and Dr. Miller and Dr. Dixon are already linking up their work in our conference with this new plan. The definite thing that Dr. Miller is asking your committee for is a list of persons who are really interested in religious education. His plan is to build up throughout the entire church a strong organization in the interest of our educational work.

Will each pastor please send to me the name of one person from each church—either man or women—who is really interested in this work with whom Dr. Miller may correspond? Please give post-office. This is important, and it is earnestly hoped that every pastor will respond at once. S. W. Taylor.

THREE KINDS OF COURAGE.

There's the courage that nerves you in starting to climb
The mount of success rising sheer;
And when you've slipped back there's the courage sublime
That keeps you from shedding a tear.

These two kinds of courage, I give you my word,
Are worthy of tribute—but, then,
You'll not reach the summit unless you've the third—
The courage of try-it-again!
—Roy Farrell Greene, in The Little Soldier.

A REJOINDER.

Some years ago, on being called upon to reply to remarks that had been made, Bro. Bethea said, "Brethren, when I hear nothing I usually say nothing." And that is ordinarily a good rule, and one that I had thought of adopting at this time, but I received communications from some of our leading brethren saying that they hoped I would find time to reply. But, brethren, while I appreciate your letters, honestly, is there anything to reply to? I can make some remarks about what one brother called, "Ledbetter's piece."

He tries to put ridicule in the place of argument, and would laugh poor old Dr. Adam Clark and poor little whitaker out of the case. I knew he was a great laugher. Laughter may carry him through in some cases, but not always.

Bro. Ledbetter attributes to me ideas or theories which he knows I never advanced, which he knows cannot be fairly deduced from anything that I said, and which I suppose every one in the conference but Bro. Ledbetter knows I do not entertain.

Then he dismisses Dr. Clark from Methodist Theologians with a wave of the hand.

But HE says that Dr. Clark said, "Impossible to sin against the Holy Ghost, thus setting aside the eternal truth of God as being applicable in modern times."

But what did Dr. Clark say? In the reference which Bro. Ledbetter gives, he says, "Let it be observed that no man who believes in the divine mission of Jesus Christ, ever can commit this sin." Do you think it is fair to attribute to Dr. Clark things which he did not say?

He says, "Look in your Conference Journal just a minute": all right, two of them, if you wish. Yes, I see that there were 234 children baptized last year, but I did not know that Bro. Ledbetter was responsible for half of them. He has more influence than I thought. But I notice that at the conference of 1920 he was assigned to the Shelby charge. I suppose that he served it. I do not know that he did. Perhaps he did not. I look in my Conference Journal for 1921 and find that not one infant baptism was reported from Shelby charge!!!

One of our leading ministers in writing to me says "I think Ledbetter would do well to read Ralston again."

I have a letter from another one of our leading ministers that I would like to have published just as it is, but had he wanted it published, I reckon that he would have sent it to the editor instead of to me.

Bro. Ledbetter says that he is a Methodist of the old type. Well, I do not know what he calls the old type.

Dr. Asa Shinn, a leader of the Methodist Protestant Church in the days of its early trials, who was recognized as one of the clearest thinkers and most cogent reasoners of his or any other time, states the Methodist dictrine as follows:

1. Adam was the general representative of his posterity.
2. We derived from him a nature prone to evil continually.
3. All mankind are subject (or liable) to sufferings and temporary death, in consequence of the original apostasy.

According to Bro. Ledbetter none of these could be true.

So I suppose that he will dismiss Shinn from among Methodist theologians as he did Clark.

A Methodist of the old type? Not according to Ralston, not according to Shinn, not according to Clark, not according to Watson.

But Bro. Ledbetter is a continual surprise to me. He tells when folk believed like he does that "90 out of every hundred of our people were Christian." Those were indeed "the good old days." His information is wonderful, "and still the wonder grew, that one small head could carry all he knew." But when was that—what date? Where did you get your figures? Who is the authority? I did not know that there was a time, since Adam fell, that this was a fact.

THREATENING INTERNATIONAL INJUSTICE.

Look on the map of North America, in the northeast corner, close to the Arctic Circle, at that little island called Iceland. Not quite so large as the state of Ohio, and with about one-fifth the population of Cincinnati. Settled originally by people from Norway, Scotland and Ireland. Having 20 volcanoes they have struggled against various eruptions, against severe weather, sickness and disease. They suffered much from the evils of strong drink which was extensively used until about 30 years ago, when, having made a scientific study of the subject, a reaction set in, and they demanded protection by their government from alcoholic liquors. Seeing the benefits of partial prohibition, they were eager for entire prohibition which they secured on January 1, 1915.

Now what do we see? Spain rising in her might saying unless she is allowed to send into Iceland her strong wines she will retaliate by putting such duties on Iceland's exports to Spain as will throttle her commerce. As fish constitute from 60 to 80 per cent of Iceland's exports, and half of these go to Spanish ports, it would work great hardship upon her fishermen and the commerce of the country.

Had Iceland discriminated against Spain by receiving importations of alcoholic liquors from other countries, or even allowed the manufacture of the same in her own country, it would be a different matter; but they were barred from every source. So Spain is in the position of dictating to a small, helpless nation what laws she shall make to protect the health, morals and well-being of her own people.

Norway having suffered also from the use of strong drink, has for the last 100 years been freeing herself from this evil, and now has a bill before Parliament for permanent prohibition. Spain is threatening her with reprisals if she does not admit her alcoholic liquors. She proposes also to flood little Finland, a prohibition country, with her strong wines by bringing pressure to bear on her commerce.

It is unthinkable that a powerful nation should be allowed for financial gain to force a weak nation to strike from its statute books laws passed by force of public opinion for protecting the health, morals, and industrial condition of its own people.

You would be horrified at the thought of a strong nation withholding vaccine and antitoxine from a small nation that their traffic in coffins might not be curtailed. But with the facts of modern science before you, are you certain that the death rate would not be as great from forcing alcoholic liquors upon a dry nation? Vice diseases are acknowledged to be the greatest foe to the human race; and as they result from immorality which is tremendously increased by the consumption of alcoholic liquors even in moderate quantities; and as tuberculosis causes the second largest death rate, and "alcohol opens the door for this disease," as well as for many others by lowering resistance to disease, the forcing of alcoholic liquors on a "dry" nation might increase the death rate more than withholding antitoxins from them!

We once took up arms against Spain for her inhuman treatment of Cuba and gave that country her freedom.

Senator Wesley L. Jones has offered a resolution in the Senate of the United States urging that strong nations no longer bring pressure to bear upon weak ones to interfere in any way with the internal policies of the latter, or to force alcoholic liquors on them, or the traffic in opium upon China. And that if they persist in doing this "That the United States should consider what proper means may be used to vindicate its domestic policy and secure the recognition of those principles of self-determination and the rights of small nations that should be fully recognized by all Christian and civiiized nations."

Do you not want to do your "bit" in this matter by sending just a line to your senator asking him to vote for the Jones Resolution relative to the rights of small nations?

This resolution is in accord with the spirit which triumphed at the International Conference just closed in Washington under the splendid leadership of President Harding and Secretary Hughes, aided by the foreign delegates, when for the first time in international conferences a spirit of Christianity triumphed and nations consented to do by other nations as they would be done by. The prayers of a war-weary world were offered for months for the success of this conference and a new light has dawned upon the nations. No longer can be allowed such unjust treatment of smaller nations as interfering with their internal policies.

"TIMES HAVE CHANGED."

Yes, but wherein? Has God changed?

Has the Book changed?

Has the human heart changed?

Has man's need of a Savior changed??

Have the awful facts of sin and death and hell changed?

Has the utter hopelessness of man apart from Christ changed?

Has Christ's willingness to save to the uttermost all who come unto God by Him changed?

Charles G. Finney and Dwight L. Moody believed that revival was necessary in their day. Wherein have the times so changed in a brief half-century that revival is not necessary in our day?

If God is the same, the Book the same, the human heart the same, man's need the same, sin and death and hell the same, man's hopelessness apart from Christ the same, His willingness to save the same,—if all these are the same, then what is not the same?

Ah, it is the professing church itself which has changed. It has all but lost its consciousness of God, its literal interpretation of the Book, its keen sense of sin, its travail of soul over the sinner, its anointing of the Spirit, its piety in the home; it has lost its savor, its unction, its testimony, because it has all but lost Him.

The professing church has changed. It needs reviving!

"Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works; else I will come unto three quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent" (Rev. 2:5).

Great Commission Prayer League.

A Request for Prayer from an Ohio Pastor.

(February 17, 1922. Similar to hundreds received.)

"The drift from God and the church is heart-breaking. Everything the devil and worldly people can do to draw from the path of righteousness and piety is being done. Our city high schools gave a great ball last night in the largest auditorium in this city, and our young people are being drawn into these through the city high schools. I have a splendid company of young people in my church and Sunday school, but they are being ensnared by an awful pressure, ostracized and ridiculed because they do not go in the devilish whirl of the dance and other questionable things. . . . I cannot endure present conditions. They must be changed. I am spending today in fasting and prayer. Oh, that God would break forth in a mighty saving manner! Pray, Pray, Pray!"

HOW TO HAVE BETTER SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

Since beginning to work in Sunday school I have observed that our teachers as a whole are not as familiar with the lessons as they should be. I am of the same opinion as "A Reader." Our teachers should put more time into the preparation of the lesson.

I have in mind three teachers whom I know personally, and they study the lesson the entire week, using the lesson text or the daily readings for their daily devotions, and when they come before a class they are just as fully prepared as any preacher I know, because the mind is completely filled with the lesson, and the class goes away better fitted for the coming week.

Another thing I notice is lacking: those in the class do not study the lesson In a great many cases they do not know the subject of the lesson, and the golden text is entirely out of the question. I believe that this is a greater drawback than the other.

If our teachers are God-called, and Spirit-filled, the teaching will not be a task if the class prepare the lesson, but will be a pleasure.

Let us try to encourage "A Better Prepared Lesson" and with better preparation of teacher and pupil, we will have better Sunday schools. J. L. Trollinger.

WHY PEOPLE SLEEP IN CHURCH.

Stanley T. Williams, in the North American Review, discusses in an interesting manner some matters which pertain to realism in the class room. We quote: "In studying Tennyson's 'Lotus Eaters,' realism is the thing. 'What I do,' said one of these, with definite implication, 'is to close every window, draw the curtains, turn on the heat, and then read the poem in a dreamy voice. When I finish,' triumphantly, 'every man in the room is asleep.' This was superb. Next to distributing lotus-blossoms, what could be better?" This is also the method of many a church janitor. The janitor more often than the preacher is the one who hands lotus-blossoms to all who are in the church. A drowsy congregation is not so often truly chargeable to a prosy preacher as to a stupid janitor. There is a certain type of church janitor who is opposed to changing the air in the church more than four times a year. He seems to enjoy an atmosphere mellowed and enriched by the inspirations and exhalations of many Sabbath days. The atmosphere gets richer and also somewhat thicker as the days and weeks go by.. All fresh air is rigidly excluded. Poisonous gases manufactured in the furnaces are added to the already overweighted atmosphere. People come and drowse, and some of them depart with a splitting headache, and others depart in bitterness and malevolence of soul. This is not a case of the Lord failing to use the preacher, but is an illustration of how adroitly the devil may use the janitor.—United Presbyterian.

CHURCH COLLEGES.

Discussion in the paper in regard to Goucher College reminds us of something that was said to us a few days ago by the president of a certain college. He said the history of education in America had been that most of the great institutions of learning were founded by churches, but as they grew they became such a financial burden that the church reached out to the public for assistance, and this eventually changed the character of the institution, so that it has been extremely difficult for the church to keep its hands on the educational institutions which she herself has founded. The ambition to have great institutions ofttimes runs away with the discretion of the church, and in order to get these immense institutions they have appealed to the outside people and eventually lost control of them.

This would not be so serious if it had not resulted in practically de-Christianizing our education. That is the outstanding fact in the great educational institutions of the day. If the secular world takes over the education, it will eventually destroy the Christian character of education, and practically ignore the existence of a soul in man. We had an editorial sometime ago concerning a speech made by the president of Johns Hopkins University which recognized this fact as one of the outstanding developments in modern education. We do not believe that the church ought to let go of any of its denominational colleges. They had better remain small and true to Jesus Christ than to grow big and dethrone Him.—The Methodist Protestant.

"HOW OLD ART THOU?"

On the tomb of Dwight L. Moody, at Northfield is graven the sentiment: "He that doeth the will of God abideth forever." The passing of the years has ever served to remind us of the rapid flight of time and the amazing brevity of our life on earth. But our faith reminds us that lives lived for God and humanity defy the grave.

Some are old at forty. Others, thank God, are young at seventy and eighty. Some are weighed down with the burden of the years, although they have wasted their most brilliant opportunities and made no real contribution to the life of the race.. Others taken away in early years, have liveed much and well and done a work that the world can not forget.

"Some singers sing their whole lives long,
  Then die at last, unknown, unheard;
While others sing but a single song—
  And the world remembers every word."

There is no time to be lost. It was said of a certain Frenchman that "he lost an hour every morning and then spent the rest of the day in trying to catch up wit it." It is folly to persuade ourselves that we have more time than we need. God gives not one second too much—but he does give us enough to fulfill his purpose. "Millions of money for a moment of time," cried Queen Elizabeth, at the last, after sixty years on the throne. Happy are they who realize the value of time before it is too late, and resolve to put out of life all that robs it of its value and usefulness, its permanence, stability and power.—Exchange.

TALKING THINGS OVER.

One little hour alone with thee
  To talk things over, just to pour
My troubles in the ear of One
  Who trod this self-same way before.
To share my grief with One who bore
  More patiently than I the load,
Who knew the world—his world and mine—
  Who knows each pitfall on the road.

I cannot ask my earthly friends
  To share the burdens of the day,
I dare not trust my way to them—
  For trusting, I might walk astray.

So many things that hedge about,
  So many questions puzzle me,
That I must have a little while
  To talk things over, Lord, with thee.

AMOUNTS PLEDGED BY THE DISTRICT AND THE NUMBER MAKING PLEDGES.

Below we are publishing in tabulated form by charges and churches, the total number of pledges made to the college and the total amount subscribed. Some of these charges are not listed under churches, the amounts when sent in did not show what church the one making the pledge belonged to; we therefore simply gave the charge credit. We are hoping that there will be substantial additions made at every church before the campaign closes. This week we publish the amounts in the first three districts; next week we expect to continue publication.

WE LACK $176 958.05 OF BEING TO THE GOAL—

That is, we have subscribed $123,051.95 to the college up to date. What has been done is a token of what may be done, if all of our people will do so well as those who have done their part. It is easy to see how the goal may be reached. But it is a most difficult thing to reach it. As the list which is being published in this letter and to be continued next week shows, there are many churches which have as yet done practically nothing for the college. The problem the campaign committee is trying to solve is how to reach these unreached, uninterested people in our church and to secure from them a pledge for our college. Again I want to urge upon every pastor and every leader in our church to come to the rescue to help us out.

BELMONT CHURCH, MT. HERMON CHARGE.

I visited this church last Sunday and although it was raining there was present a very good congregation. They gave good attention to the message and we got a few pledges. Quite a number have promised to send theirs in this week. Do not disappoint us, friends; we are depending upon you, if you fail us, the college will most surely fail.

Rev. J. B. Sisk has been released from serving Rockingham Charge on account of poor health. Fraternally, R. M. Andrews

IS THE COLLEGE A REALITY?

Dear Brother McCulloch: I want to express myself in my simple way as to the Methodist Protestant College. Is it a reality? While the college question has been on the shelf with us for a long time, in fact, so long that it has caused a great inconvenience to the denomination, it has caused so many of the loyal members to seek an education outside of the bounds of the North Carolina Conference, it has retarded the growth of our church, it has lowered the standard of an educated ministry, and dealt a blow and set-back to all other vocations of life. Therefore I must say we cannot fail to make the college a reality. As a denomination we must strive to win the goal and avail ourselves of the opportunity and the encouragement that has already come our way. However, with the college almost in sight some of our people that claim to be loyal members seem to have no mind to work. If all our people could see the assets obtained by the erection of a great institution of learning, I believe they could not help responding to the cause that would swell the fund to such proportion that would enable us to build and equip a college that in the near future we will look upon with pride, not with a haughty spirit, but proud that we can lend a helping hand to humanity and build up an educated citizenship that will be an honor to the cause of Christ and the future generation and blessing to our beloved Zion. Some will say, "Oh, I can't help to build a college to educate other people," which would seem to indicate a selfish motive. I have one son now in Western Maryland College and he will complete the college course in that institution and also take the Seminary course and try to prepare himself for the ministry, but I cannot say because he is 400 miles from home that I have no interest in the college. Perhaps some time in the future we can look back and see the results of our meager help and say, I am proud that we gave our bit to help build the college. I still say, we must make it a reality and go forward. With the site in hand and the fund already pledged and in hand we must go forward. I want to be able in the near future to see the first shovel of dirt removed and then keep the dirt flying until completed. I trust our people will come across with their means and co-operation and relieve Bro. Andrews and the other committee of their arduous duties. I was not born with a silver spoon in my mouth, hence am not able to do great things in a financial way, but this does not lessen my interest in same. Hope before the college is completed I will be able to render still more service. I still say we must go forward.

Charlotte Tidings.

Where, O where is the Charlotte reporter? Surely she is lost, strayed or about to be stolen. Her not being on the job is the reason for the Tidings to appear over the pastor's name again this week.

Our Christian Endeavor Society enjoyed one of the most pleasant evenings on Feb. 17th in a very well arranged and interesting Valentine entertainment. Between thirty and forty of the young people gathered in the Sunday-school room of the church and engaged in games that furnished plenty of wholesome amusement for all present. After a sufficient time was devoted to the games, candy, made by the young ladies themselves, was served. So the sweet was made sweeter. A large box had been arranged in which were deposited valentines by the young people for each other. As the valentines were distributed it meant lots of fun and happy hearts. This happy hour was closed with a prayer as the pastor invoked blessings upon these promising young people. We believe all went home happier and better by their having spent this happy hour together.

In the parsonage on the evening of Feb.23, the Ladies' Aid Society rendered a most beautiful and inspiring George Washington birthday entertainment. The rooms were beautifully decorated with potted flowers, flags and red, white and blue draperies. The entertainment consisted of a number of patriotic songs and recitations. Dainty refreshments were served consisting of cake made in colors, red, white and blue, cream, cherries, pickles, coffee and chocolate. There were between forty and fifty persons present on this occasion. Our Ladies' Aid has been a strong factor in our church since it was organized. This entertainment is an evidence of its healthy condition at the present time.

Among our sick people are Mrs. C. B. Muse who is in the Presbyterian Hospital and Mrs. Sallie C. Shue who is sick at her home 26, S. Graham Street.

Henderson.—Among the many things of interest for the past week was the Washington's Birthday social given by the Young Ladies' League on the evening of the 22nd. An interesting programme had been prepared which was greatly enjoyed by almost a house full of people. After the programme was rendered refreshments were served, consisting of tea and cake. The cakes were cut in form of hatchets which was very appropriate to the occasion. The Young Ladies' League is one of the live organizations of the church and has for its president Mrs. H. A. Jordan. This organization pledged Five Hundred Dollars to the new college and made their first payment last fall. In addition to this they are supporting a girl in our Chinese School. Hats off to the Young Ladies' League.

Yesterday was a rainy day but there were 154 in Sunday School and a reasonably good congregation at the morning service. The pastor along with all other pastors in the city, preached on law enforcement. Last night was the Thankoffering service of the Foreign Missionary Society and the service was under the direction of the Pres., Miss Mary Young. The pictures belonging to the Board of Foreign Missions were shown on the screen and were accompanied by a lecture by Rev. C. W. Bates. The audience was large for a rainy night and the collection amounted to about seventy dollars with many of the Thankoffering boxes to be brought in later. This offering to go toward building the Woman's department of the Hospital at Kalgan, China and is a worthy undertaking. The Ladies of the Missionary Society sold pies and cakes Saturday and made about Twenty Eight Dollars. Hats off to the Missionary Society. J. E. Pritchard.

Lebanon, Lebanon Ct.—The work here is progressing very satisfactorily, yet there is room for improvements. With the advent of spring, the renewing of life in all nature, I trust that our spirits may be revived and our energies expand to a great bursting forth of new life, new growth and beautiful accomplishments in all our daily duties, till we shall with grateful hearts and praiseful hearts soon look out upon a world of purer life in a more contented and consecrated people.

On the second Sunday in March, our pastor has announced that he will at the regular eleven o'clock service baptize children. All parents who desire to consecrate their babies to the Lord, will please take note and present them at time for baptism.

At some early date it is announced also, that there will be a memorial service held in Lebanon Church for our honored dead. Our pastor will be pleased to talk with any members of the congregation who wish to discuss this matter in making arrangements for the service.

The sermon last Sunday by Bro. Suits was most excellent—full of strong points, timely facts and sound doctrine. When we members of Lebanon Church shall have finished our labors here and are called to account for our deeds we cannot say that we never were told that opportunities never come our way, for our minister has certainly covered the decalogue in the preachings from time to time. He has kept ever before us the Truth—the "Thou Shalts" and the "Thou Shalt Nots," he has labored in love and patience and if any are ignorant of their religious duties it is because having ears they heard not, having eyes they saw not and refused to keep their feet in straight paths. Mrs. J. W. T., rep.

NOTES.

—French engineers are in Detroit studying American methods of automobile manufacture. Their plan is to use some of the large munitions factories of France for making automobiles, using modern machinery and American methods of quantity production.

—The American cardinals of the Roman Catholic Church have asked that hereafter the time between the death of a Pope and the election of his succesor be increased to fifteen days. It is now ten days, which seldom permits the Americans to arrive in time to take part in the election. Pope Pius is said to look with favor on such a change.

—Dick, oldest work-horse of Providence, R. I., died last week. He was 37 years old. For twenty-three years, since he was brought to this country from Canada, Dick had been hauling ice delivery wagons in Providence.

—Unemployed men held a mass meeting in Vienna, Austria. They demanded the discharge of all women employees of the government and the filling of their places by married men.

—An official account of the death of the ex-Czar of Russia and his family has been published by the Soviet government of the Ural District. It tells the story of how the Czar and Czarina, their four daughters and young son, and four other members of the household were shot in cold blood by order of the Ural District Soviet on the night of July 16, 1918, at Ekaterinburg. The bodies and clothing were burned next day in a nearby wood.

—Ten thousand Mennonites are moving from Canada to Mexico. Through their bishops, members of this sect have bought 250,000 acres of farmland in Chihuahua.

—Secretary and Mrs. Hughes are in Bermuda on a two-weeks' vacation. The Secretary of State is resting after his labors at the Washington Conference.

—General Pershing's nephew, James F. Pershing, Jr., has a new position as assistant to the State Prohibition Director of New York. During the war young Pershing enlisted as a private and was promoted to the rank of second lieutenant. He is choosing prohibition enforcement work because he wants to continue to ''do his bit as an American citizen.''

—Retail prices of food dropped five per cent during January, according to the figures of the Department of Labor. Fresh eggs showed the greatest decrease in price.

SUNDAY SCHOOL FORCES OF AMERICA UNITE.

For about four years the Sunday School Council of Evangelic Denominations and the International Sunday School Association have been negotiating a merger that would practically put the Sunday school forces of America into one organization backed by all the territorial and the denominational forces. This merger was completed in the recent meeting of the Sunday School Council and the International Executive Committe meeting in Chicago, February 14 to 17. Following is the report of the committee which was adopted unanimously by both sections.

A. G. Dixon.

* * *

Report of Committee of Reference and Counsel.

The Committee of Reference and Counsel presents the following plan for a merger:

1. The reorganized Executive Committee of the International Sunday School Association, based on the agreement of co-operation and Exhibit ‘‘A’’ (January-February, 1920) is the merged body of territorial and denominational forces as formerly represented by the International Sunday School Association and the Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations.

2. This merged body shall be called The International Sunday School Council of Religious Education.

3. The International Sunday School Council of Religious Education shall appoint a Committee of Education composed of not more than sixty members.

4. The International Sunday School Council of Religious Education shall set up groups of professional workers, the chairman of each of which shall be a consulting member of the International Sunday School Council of Religious Education.

These groups shall be such as Children's Workers, Young People's Workers, Adult Workers, Directors of Religious Education, Denominational Editors, Denominational Publishers, etc.

5. We recommend that in harmony with this plan of merger the Executive Committee of the International Sunday School Association request the Congress of the United States to amend the charter by changing the name, ‘‘The International Sunday School Association’’ to ‘‘The International Sunday School Council of Religious Education.’’

6. Pending the change of the legal name of the organization by Congressional action, we recommend the business of the organization shall be conducted under the new name.

7. We recomend that the International Executive Committee be requested to revise its by-laws in harmony with the foregoing provisions.

THE RESPONSIBILITY OF THE OLDER CHRISTIAN TO THE YOUNG CONVERT.

It is well that we are beginning to realize that it is as necessary to ‘‘stand by’’ the young convert as it is to win him to a decision for the Christian life. To some of us it seems nothing short of a crime against the young Christian and the kingdom of God diligently to seek his conversion and then when he is won well-nigh forget him.

Why not a crusade in which each recruit will have some older Christian ‘‘stand by’’ him until he is assimilated into the life, the spirit, and the service of the kingdom? It is for the purpose of suggesting how one may helpfully ‘‘stand by’’ these new disciples that the following paragraphs are written:

1. Set before him an example of what a Christian ought to be and do. A life more than a word is the best argument you can give for the worth-whileness of the Christian life. Being an example of what we want others to be is a very large part of what is meant by the phrase ‘‘stand by.’’ It lies back of all the other suggestions.

2. Be a friend to him. Friendship is one of the closest and most effective relationships of life. If you can be the kind of a friend that he needs and he comes to the place where he chooses you because of that friendship, there is no possibility of measuring the uplifting influences you will have over the young convert. As a friend, why not become familiar with his interests in school or college or business or sport? Discover the department of life in which you can serve him the best and reach him the quickest.

3. Regular church and Sunday school attendance. That church attendance is necessary on the part of the Christian goes without saying. No Christian can afford to neglect this means of grace. In the case of the young Christian, to fail here is to fail altogether. It is important, then, that you ‘‘stand by’’ your friend at this point. Why not for the next six months attend the evening as well as the morning service, ‘‘for his sake’’? Can you get him located and interested in a class in the Sunday school? By all means do so if you can.

4. Help him to form Christian habits. Good habits are potent allies that re-enforce the will in the acquiring of Christian graces and in the accomplishment of Christian tasks. Besides the habit of regular church attendance, there is that of prayer and Bible study. How much more Christlike our friend's life would be if of him, as of Christ, in these things it could be said, ‘‘As was his custom.’’ If he is absent from church service, how helpful it would be call and ascertain the trouble. You may prove to be ‘‘a friend in need’’ and thereby become a friend for life. If he happens to be out of town, why not show your interest by a letter?

5. The mid-week prayer service. Whatever may be pointed out as to the weakness of the class or prayer-meeting, it cannot be denied that there is a definite, recognizable, spiritual deposit accruing from united prayer. As for real, thoughtful Christian testimony, it is at least as profitable for Christians in the strengthening of their faith and growth in the Christian graces as is the serious exchange of thought of the members of the staff for the maintenance of the morale and the success of their enterprise. It will prove to be an incalculable value for the thoughtful young Christian to give expression to his own experience. It will help him think through his religious beliefs and strengthen and deepen his religious convictions. There is need that the whole body of Christians ‘‘stand by’’ each other in this important means of grace.

6. Church membership. It may be possible for one to retain a live Christian experience and to develop a beautiful, sane, and effective Christian life without uniting with the church, but it is not probable. The chances are at least ninety-nine to one against him. In union there is strength, not only for the organization, but for each member of it. One with God can chase a thousand, but two with Him can put an army of ten thousand to flight. By union the ability of each one is increased no less than fivefold. If you would ‘‘stand by’’ your friend in a very helpful and efficient way, do everything that lies in your power to have him unite with the church. By so doing he will have the whole membership to ‘‘stand by’’ him in his efforts to develop a well-rounded Christian life and thereby make more certain his stability of character and his value to the kingdom of God.

7. Good literature. A well-chosen leaflet given to him or a good book loaned to him may be able to help you ‘‘stand by’’ your friend when he is alone in his room or during the leisure moments of the day. If he had one of the church papers come to him regularly, what a fund of religious information and inspiration he would acquire, and how much more interested he would be in the kingdom of God upon earth! If he is able and you get him to subscribe for a church paper, you may be sure you have secured a worth-while helper in your effort to ‘‘stand by’’ your friend.

8. Personal Work. The Christian life is much more than ‘‘being good’’; it is also ‘‘going about doing good’’ as Jesus did. It is of little use to be good without doing good. The purpose of salvation was not simply to save people but to make saved people saviors. Jesus set at work the persons whom He called to be His followers. They sought out their friends. How many times of some one or another of them it is said, ‘‘And he brought him (his friend) to Jesus.’’ The best way to stand by your friend is to help him to ‘‘stand by’’ the program of Jesus. By saving others he saves himself.

9. Better human relations. The object of redemption was not only individuals, not even all the individuals in the world, but the world itself—that is the relations of men, their contacts and their methods of getting on. The purpose of the church is to save the world. If you want to help your friend in the development of a well-rounded Christian character, you must lead him to see that to be a Christian means an effort on his part to create a real brotherhood on earth, and to remove from the community everything that makes it a place unfit for the children of God to dwell in. To get rid of the blight to our fellow men caused by the saloon was a Christian achievement. This good work must go on until a change is effected in every practice, device, and system that now upholds injustice, destroys brotherhood, debases life, or ruins character. You must help your friend not only to pray ‘‘Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven,’’ but to ‘‘stand by’’ that prayer until it is answered.

10. The program of Jesus. To be a Christian according to Jesus is to qualify in body, mind, and heart so that one may help Him carry out the program He brought into the world and to inaugurate which He gave His life. It includes everybody—the whole world round. It touches every phase of every life. It is summed up in the phrase ‘‘The kingdom came roaring through the forest; there was thunder and rain, and all the trees swayed and twisted in the wild wind.

A tall pine came crashing to earth and pinned the hunter beneath it. He was not hurt, but he was a prisoner; in spite of his struggles he could not free himself.

Three times the sun rose and set, and still the hunter could not get free. He had no food and no water and grew very weak and faint.

On the third day three of the Little Brothers of the Wood, a squirrel, a rabbit, and a chipmunk, found him. They loved the hunter, for he had always been kind to them.

"Let us help you, brave hunter," they said. But they were too small to lift the tree, and at first it seemed as if they could do nothing for him.

Then they went in haste and called all the other Little Brothers of the Wood in council. Said the oldest and wisest Brother of the Wood, "We must send a message to the Wise Chief; he will send help to the hunter. Who among you will go and bear the message?"

Each of the Little Brothers of the Wood was eager to be the messenger. While they were trying to choose the swiftest among them, a beautiful gray bird flew over the council tree. He was on his way to another council tree—a tall pine at the edge of the forest where all the birds were meeting.

"He will be the best choice," said the oldest councilor. Then he called to the gray bird and asked if he would take a message to the Wise Chief.

The gray bird flew down and alighted on a low branch. Then the Little Brothers of the Wood found a piece of smooth birch bark, and the hunter cut a message on it in pictures and signs. That was the way the Indians wrote their messages in the long ago.

The gray bird took the piece of bark in his bill and flew away with it.

Fast and far the bird flew. He flew over the birds' council tree; all the birds called to him, but he would not stop. He flew through a black cloud filled with rain, and out of the cloud into the clear hot air; he flew through wind and shadow, sunlight, sunset, and dawn. He flew on and on, with birch bark held fast in his bill, until he came to his journey's end. Then he winged his way into the Indian lodge and laid the bark at the feet of the Wise Chief.

When the Wise Chief had read the message he sent many men who were brave and fleet of foot over the far-away trail to find the brave hunter. All the way the beautiful bird flew low and guided the braves. When he stopped, they stopped; when he flew on, they followed.

The hunter was safe and happy when the braves found him. He was still pinned beneath the tree, but he was not in pain, and the Little Brothers of the Wood had brought him berries and water and kept him company all the while.

The rescuers lifted the tree from off the hunter and carried him to his far-away wigwam.

To this day the Indian people love the pigeon, the beautiful gray bird that carried the message, and that tribe of Indians to which the brave hunter belonged still draw upon their lodges and wigwams rough pictures of the messenger bird.—Ellen Miller Donaldson, in The Youth's Companion.

THE FACE OF JESUS.

O Face, above all others fair,
And calm with peace divine,
Unfurrowed by the lines of care,
What strength and grace were Thine!
One look could hope and joy impart,
And smile away the fears;
Or it could break the traitor-heart,
And melt it into tears.

O Face, that saw the Hill of Death,
Yet would not turn aside,
But gave for man its latest breath—
Face of the Crucified!
What gracious words Thy lips could speak,
Sweet as a pleasant song,
With benedictions for the meek,
But woe on woe for wrong!

O Face, so strangely, sadly marred
On that last cruel day!
Lined with its blood-sweat, bruised and scarred,
As if by beasts of prey!
Well might the sun refuse to shine,
And veil his face, to see
The shame and sorrow that were Thine
On the dark Calvary!

O Face, so glorious and divine,
Look on this longing heart of mine,
And leave Thine impress there!
Thy smile can make the dark things bright,
Bid shadows flee away;
And in Thy light shall I see light—
The endless, perfect day!

WALKING WITH GOD.

We have just crossed the boundary-line between the Old Year and the New. We would be more or less than human did not solemn thoughts fill our minds today.

Perhaps our hearts tremble as we begin the New Year, and listen for the hoof-beats of God's possible providences before the year shall close. What messengers shall come? Shall some dark shadows fall over home or heart? Who can tell? Thank God, no one can tell. We go out into the opening year trusting in His Divine care and almighty love:

Let us, like Enoch, "walk with God" through the months and days of this New Year. To walk with God we must go in the same direction; "two cannot walk together except they be agreed." Enoch walked and walked with God till they reached the limits of time and earth; and still kept on walking with Him—walked into eternity, into heaven: walks with Him still. Some who begin the year with us will end it with God. God alone knows what of trial this year has in stock for each of us. But above all the sounds of life's trials shall be our note of triumph in God, who will bring us off more than conquerors. "He hath done all things well."—Examiner.

Some one has said that an optimist is a man who can scent a harvest while snow still covers the ground. But I read a better definition than that. It was in a story. The young man in the story was trying to establish himself as a peach-grower. He had worked for years, and invested his all in a peach orchard, which at last bloomed bounteously—and then came a frost. He didn't go to church the next Sabbath, nor the next, nor the next. His minister went to hunt him up, and inquired the reason. The discouraged young fellow exclaimed: "No, and what is more, I'm not coming any more. Do you think I can worship a God who loves me so little that He will let a frost kill all my peaches?"

The old minister looked at him a moment in silence, and then replied kindly: "Young man, God loves you better than He does your peaches. He knows that, while peaches do better without frosts, it is impossible to grow the best men without frosts. His object is to grow men, not peaches."—Rev. J. F. Cowan.

"THE JUST FOR THE UNJUST."

Christianity is not a clever contrivance for outwitting justice. In Christ we do not outrun justice. Justice itself, by a mystery we can neither understand nor explain, has been satisfied by Christ. The mystery of the Cross lies within that thought. Now and then we seem to see somewhat of its meaning. God is just, and yet the justifier of the ungodly; Christ bore our sins in His own body on the tree; He suffered, the just for the unjust; He was wounded for our transgression; He was bruised for our iniquities. When we are weariest, saddest and most severe with ourselves, we hear these words, and they are full of rest, hope and music. We see the light, and call it Heaven. The refuge in Christ is based upon confession, repentance and restitution. It is not set up for righteous men, but for men unrighteous and lost.—Joseph Parker.

PUNISHMENT OF INGRATITUDE.

When I consider how the goodnes of God is abused and perverted by the greatest part of mankind, I cannot but be of his mind who said: "The greatest miracle in the world is God's patience and bounty to an ungrateful world." Oh, what would God not do for His creatures, if thankful, who thus heaps the coals of His mercies upon the heads of His enemies? But think not, sinners, that you will escape thus. God's mill goes slow, but it grinds small. The more admirable His patience and bounty now are, the more dreadful and insupportable will be that fury which ariseth out of His abused goodness. Nothing is blunter than iron; and, yet, when sharpened, it hath an edge that will cut mortally. Nothing is smoother than the sea; yet, when stirred into a tempest, nothing rageth more. Nothing is so sweet as the patience and goodness of God, and nothing so terrible as His wrath, when it takes fire.—Gurnall.

GOOD ADVICE.

The late Sir Frederick Treves, who was surgeon to the King of England, was asked one day to send a message to boys. The great man—who had made his own way in life—said:

"Don't bother about genius, and don't worry about being clever. Trust rather to hard work, perseverance, and determination. The best motto for a long march is, 'Don't grumble, push on.' You hold your future in your own hands. Never waver in this belief."—Selected.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

New Hope, Vance Circuit.—It has been quite a while since you have seen a report from us, but we are still living.. Our Sunday school has been small on account of rain and snow but the number does not always make the best Sunday school. We feel sure that God is always present. It rained us out last first Sunday but did not rain Bro. Neese out. He is always there and never fails to give us a good helpful sermon.

Our Christian Endeavor society and Woman's Missionary Society are still growing and we enjoy them so much and feel that we are helped by every meeting.

Mrs. John Reddick has returned home from hospital after a serious illness bringing with her a little daughter, Elizabeth. We all welcome her back home, and hope that she she will soon be entirely well. We are anxious to have her back at church again. Best wishes to all,

Mrs. A. L. Hollaway,

Casual Observations.

The late "talk" through the papers about the infant state of the human family has been and is very interesting, and all should try to be glad of it, so glad as to "agree to disagree" or do better.

The various suggestions help us to think, and the subject is worthy of more deliberate attention. Once, at a good man's house, one [illegible] a neighbor young man and the old man of the good family arranged for a debate. They had the good man of the house to serve as president and judge. They being vigorous speakers, debated on their subject with great interest, to the two debaters.

The old man and the young men had been hard at work during the day, and while the good man was well set with his chair leaning back against the wall, he tired, soon fell into a sound sleep; but they went on through their debate.

After they came through they aroused him up from his "sweet sleep" and asked "how did we come out?" He at once said. "I think that you came out about even."

The moral and spiritual state of infants is a question of vast import, and it may be hoped that those who are disposed to write on the subject will read up and think and pray, and see facts so clearly that they will come out about even because Moses and the prophets came out about even, and the Son of God taught clearly, and He made no mistakes about His teachings. Again, the impulse is to urge the sincere friends to "search the scriptures," and to read and pray and write up. This controversy should stir up excuse to look well into the various turns of human nature. Able instructors tell us that the way to study human nature is to study ourselves. Before you form conclusions and write, think back as far as you can to your infant days, and think upon your notions, and your emotions—but keep the Word of God in mind.

W. F. Grabs.

P. S. Since writing the above I have been to Tabernacle and heard Bro. Hamilton preach. He preached well for us, and the people are attending, with interest. The revival spirit was in the congregation. God owned the word, and preacher and people were revived. The Sunday school has started up well at Tabernacle. Mrs. Masencup, who was superintendent of the Sunday school last year, serves again. Women do well in the Sunday schools. Amongst our quiet country people, in the schools, week and Sunday, it seems that the women serve better than men. These remarks are only casual.

First Church, Concord.—The Sunday school attendance was very good Sunday considering the rainy weather. A special offering was taken for the Near East Relief. Immediately after Sunday school a good many of our people motored to Kannapolis, where Bro. Shelton preached at 11 o'clock in the Y. M. C. A. We have a good many Methodist Protestants there, some very loyal ones, too, and they are very anxious to have a church there. A Sunday school is to be organized and steps taken to secure a lot and we trust that before very long they will have a church of their own denomination to worship in.

Louise, child of Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Hunter, was run over by an automobile Saturday and sustained several painful injuries, but not so serious. Mrs. Shelton, our pastor's wife, has entered a High Point hospital for treatment. We trust she may soon be returned to us.

Our special meeting begins the first Sunday in April. Rev. N. G. Bethea is to assist our pastor. Bro. Bethea is remembered pleasantly here, and we are looking forward with pleasure to seeing and hearing him again.

Mrs. D. A. McLaurin.

Beulah, Mecklenburg Circuit.—Our pastor, Rev. Mr. Carson, filled his appointment today with a splendid sermon. His subject was "A Christian Hero." We are always glad to have him with us, and have grown to love him dearly

Our Sunday school is still moving along as usual. Although the progress seems very slow, and the attendance small, still, we hope for larger crowds when the weather gets better. Our collection went to the Children's Home today. We have been very careless as to that, but hope to make up for past neglect this year.

We are planning to hold a revival meeting some time soon. Readers, pray for us that we may have a wonderful meeting.

We are also thinking of organizing a Christian Endeavor soon. Let each and every one of us get busy and make the best year yet.

Buncombe Charge.—I will preach at Clark's Chapel first Sunday in March, 11 A. M. Democrat same day, 3:00 P. M.

The second quarterly conference will be held at Mt. Zion Saturday before second Sunday in March, preaching at 11 A. M., dinner on the grounds, conference at 1:30 P. M.

Let all the officials please come. Important business, Candidates for delegate to nominate,

B. M, Williams, Pastor,

Porter, Stanly Circuit.—Our beloved pastor, Rev. A. Ridge, filled his regular appointment Sunday afternoon, and preached a most excellent sermon. As it was raining the congregation was smaller than usual. Our Sunday school is still moving along nicely considering the rough weather and bad roads. There were 40 present Sunday. The collection Sunday was taken for Children's Home as usual. We are glad to have Mrs. G. H. Thompson back at church after being absent two Sundays on account of illness. We have no sickness to report at this time, for which we are glad. We are hoping when the weather gets better to see all our people at church. If they would only realize it, they are missing the greatest opportunity of their lives. We need their presence and help. Pray for us at Porter, for we feel we need your prayers. Love and best wishes.

February 27.

Burlington.—Attendance at Sunday school and all other services of the day last Sunday was small, owing to the rainy and disagreeable weather.

There is some sickness among our people here this week. One death has resulted. C. A. McPherson, father of several members of our church, died last Saturday afternoon. The funeral was held in the home Monday afternoon, conducted by Brother Taylor. Rev. H. L. Isley, former pastor of Oak Ridge charge, a student at Elon College, who resides in Burlington, is ill with influenza. His brother, Willie, has been sick but is much better this week.

In our report last week we made an error in stating that the amount received at the Thank-Offering service was to be sent to the mission school at Pine Ridge, Ky. The offering was for the Woman's Foreign Missionary board and will be used by that board for the missionary work in China.

The second Sunday in March is the day on which our church will take a vote on the proposition to build a hut on the church property in the rear of the present church building. The proposed building will be a separate building from the church, and is designed for use by the Sunday school and church. At least two Sunday school classes will hold their meetings in the hut if the church decides to erect it. The new building will be used also for holding socials, entertainments and church suppers, if erected.

Dr. W. A. Harper, president of Elon College, will speak in our church next Sunday night on the subject, "The Pre-Eminence of Chist." We hope to have a large congregation present.

C. B. Way, Reporter.

Pleasant Grove, Lebanon Circuit.—We are still doing very well considering the bad weather and small attendance that we have had for the last few months. There are a faithful few that come regardless of the weather, and the weather hardly ever gets too bad for our good pastor to come. Our Sunday school superintendent has been on the sick list, and this has crippled our school for the last few weeks. We have Sunday school every first Sunday at ten o'clock and preaching at 11; also every second Sunday at ten o'clock, and every third and fourth Sunday we have Sunday school at two and preaching at three. Our Sunday school secretary has been right sick with "flu"; hope he will be able to attend soon. Also Bro. B. G. I. James and family have not been able to attend services lately on account of the "flu."

We will have communion service at our church the first Sunday in March after the 11 o'clock service. We hope we will have a large attendance at this service.

As I am not the appointed reporter, and this is my first attempt, I will close, hoping that they will make the next attempt.

A Reporter.

Friendship, Haw River Circuit.—Our work is still existing, though it is not what we would like it to be. We are having Sunday school every Sunday with as large attendance, I guess, as can be expected under the circumstances. But our roads are getting in a better condition and we are hoping for better work this spring.

Last Sunday our pastor, at his regular appointment, delivered a very interesting explanation on our lesson. We would like to have our lessons explained just so every Sunday. Our regular collection went for the Near East Relief instead of for the Children's Home. We would like to give to both every Sunday and more than we are, but since we cannot we give our most, and yet it is only a bit, and send our prayers for them.

Our missionary society has planned to meet next Sunday, immediately after Sunday school. All members and those who are interested in the work and wish to join are requested to be present. With best wishes for the Herald and its readers,

Draper Station. — We have a nice little church built here and a number one Sunday school for the length of time it has been started. Doubtless all of the churches or people have seen the picture that was in the Herald week before last. We have come to the place where we have not got room enough to take care of the people. We are trying to raise enough money to build a class-room for the young men. I would like to ask if any of Methodist Protestant Sunday schools would like to give $100 towards this building. The cost of this building will be about $150. If any Sunday school feels like giving to this cause, it will be highly appreciated. If any wish to give, please send it to W. H. Troxler, committee. W. H. Troxler, Reporter.

Gillburg, Vance Circuit. — There has not been a report from this place in some time, but on account of rough weather the congregation have been small at each service. Our pastor, Rev. W. H. Neese, filled his regular appointment this morning at 11 o'clock. He gave us a splendid sermon from Luke 10:33. We were all very sorry that Mrs. Neese could not be present at this service on account of sickness. And we hope that she will be able to be with us again soon. With love to the Herald and its readers. Reporters.

February 26.

Roberta.—Good attendance at church Sunday, considering the bad weather; 87 present, $3.99 collection. Large number at preaching services. Rev. J. T. Sisk preached a most wonderful sermon founded on Eph. 5:18, last clause, "But be filled with the Spirit." He also announced his text for tonight: "Foolish quartet." Our church is progressing very nicely in its church works or efforts. We have organized a boosting club, which I think will be of much interest and benefit to church and community too.

The health of our community is not very good at present. Mr. Merin Dulin has been suffering right much in the past week; we wish him a speedy recovery. Miss Bleak Broon is still very seriously ill. She has been quite sick for almost two months with inflammatory rheumatism.

Rev. J. T. Sisk went to annapolis this afternoon. They are making every effort possible in trying to erect a Methodist Protestant church at that place. We wish every one who is endeavoring to do this will see a great benefit and success in the near future.

We are very sorry to learn that Mrs. Adam Blackwelder was called to the bedside of her daughter, Miss Ida Blackwelder of Charlotte, almost two weeks ago; her condition is very critical yet. She has undergone an operation at the General Mercy hospital and still remains very serious; we trust she will soon be able to be out again. C. C., Reporter.

Glen Raven.—I will tell the Herald readers something of what we are doing down this way. Sunday schools are good considering the bad weather and the much sickness. Pastor visited ten families today, Monday, all more or less sick of "flu," more than 30 cases.

We are trying to pay off our church debt this month. Cash and subscriptions to the amount of $360 have been already secured. In a business meeting yesterday, Sunday, a board of parsonage trustees was appointed to act until the next quarterly conference, and they were directed to buy at once a lot on which a parsonage will be built in the near future.

All are hopeful of a good year. Glen Raven has some, yes many, of our very best people. Pastor and family are being remembered very kindly in a material way. Now if, with what we are doing in a material way, we can have a great spiritual awakening this year, a great work will have been done here. Will all pray for us? Yours fraternally,

J. A. Ledbetter.

Greensboro.—Sunday, February 26, was observed as Missionary Anniversary Day at Grace church. At the morning service the pastor, Rev. R. C. Stubbins, preached a most interesting sermon on "Relatives." He reminded us that all the peoples of the earth make up one great family, and that no branch of the family can hope to attain the highest blessings for itself until it reaches out and does its best to lift up all the other members of the family, sharing with them the blessings that have come to it through the love and the knowledge of the Savior.

At the close of the sermon the congregation was given an opportunity to reach out this helping hand to our brothers and sisters in China, by pledging the necessary amount for the salary of Dr. Fleagle, the medical missionary this church has been supporting. This was quickly done.

At the evening service Rev. Wade C. Smith, of "The Church by the Side of the Road," gave an illustrated lecture, bringing home, through his beautiful and impressive pictures, the wonderful opportunities we have in helping our less favored "relations," both in our own and the foreign lands, by giving our money, our prayers and, best of all, our own selves. The thank-offering was taken at the evening service. Mrs. R. H. B.

First Church, Thomasville. — Last Sunday was a good day for us, even though the weather was bad. We had 207 present in Sunday school, and at 11 o'clock we had a fine service, for we preached to the Juniors, and they are always a good bunch to preach to. I try to preach to them every fourth Sunday.

We are expecting to have a lively time in our Baraca class for the next few months. We have put on a "balloon contest," and they want to take a trip to the moon; if they do, it will be a fine trip, and we do not want any man in Thomasville to miss it. It starts next Sunday morning at 9:45 in the M. P. Baraca room. Get aboard, lots of fun on this trip, you can't afford to miss it. See Captain L. B. Dameron, who has charge of the red balloon, or Captain W. J. Loftin, who has charge of the blue, and get a ticket. Fare reasonable.

We are getting along very well. We need just a little more co-operation among our members. I wish that every Methodist Protestant in Thomasville would ask himself this old, old question, and answer it: "If every member of my church were just like me, what kind of a church would my church be?" Come when you get ready, stay at home when you get ready. I would to God that some folks had a little more self-conceit, or confidence, or something, to make them feel like the church could not get along without them. Well, we have the muddiest, the hottest, the coldest, the windiest, the darkest, the most lonesomest way from our home to the church, so when we hear all these excuses, and many others, we can not blame folks much for not going.

More news. At the M. P. parsonage last Saturday evening at eight o'clock Miss Carrie Underwood became the bride of Mr. Max Moore. We wish for these two young people a long and happy life.

We want to thank Mrs. Owens, Mrs. Russell and Mrs. Gardner for plenty of good buttermilk, Mrs. Murphy for sweet milk; Mrs. W. S. Myers for plenty of good salad; others for oranges and apples for children.

I shall look for you all at church and Sunday school next Sunday morning.

R. S. Troxler, Pastor.

Clark's Chapel, Buncombe Circuit. — We were very glad indeed to have with us last Sunday at 11 o'clock Mr. J. S. Riddle. He preached a wonderful sermon, using as his text, "Behold, I am here, Lord." We are just having a splendid Sunday school, considering the inclement weather and muddy roads. The attendance and collections are good. Plans are being made for a ten days' singing school the second and third weeks in April, hoping this will prove beneficial to the church and Sunday school. Best wishes to all.

Complaining thoughts soon make complaining speech.

PETER GETS ENGAGED.

Now since Peter was by no means ignorant or entirely innocent in regard to the romantic inklings he had excited in every church he had served, I nearly lost my patience with his diffidence in this his first really serious affair, before he came in one evening, smiling like a blessed lamb, and informed me that Reba Woodberry had promised to be his wife.

I said the right things. Reba was a nice girl. She would make him a good wife. I entirely approved of his choice and I hoped they would be happy. But I could not help feeling sad for myself, wondering a little about what would become of me now, in spite of the fact that he assured me tenderly that we would all live happily together ever after. Two can do it but I doubt if three can.

I went to my room that night feeling like the last withered leaf on a naked bough with a cold wind rising. I noticed particularly how stiff my knees were when I knelt to pray that the Lord would bless my son and make him a good husband, and cause his face to shine as this girl who had promised to be his wife. But when I tried to think of a prayer for myself, tears came instead. I could only think of William and wish for the old days we had spent together.

When there is nothing else you can do for yourself it is a great relief to weep, and I must have let go a bit because presently I heard Peter tap at the door.

"Mother!" he called.

"Yes. Peter." I answered, making haste to get in bed.

"Are you all right?" he wanted to know.

"Yes," I answered.

"I thought I heard you—"

"You did," I interrupted quickly; "you heard me sneeze. I am catching cold."

"May I come in?"

"No, Peter! Go to bed," I answered in my maternal voice, which was normally irritable.

There was a silence, then: "Mother!" he called again in softer tones.

"Yes, my son."

"You are the best mother in the world," he announced.

I was in a mood to feel that this was highly probable but I had the grace to remain silent.

"And no woman can take your place in my heart," he added.

"I know it, Peter, now go to bed. You will catch your death in that cold hall."

Jealousy is a queer thing. You may think you are free from it but you never are. It is the possessive case of all human nature. We cannotescape it. esspecially when we are about to lose something which always belonged to us. I was honestly glad Peter had chosen a wife. I was willing that he should love and cherish her. What hurt me like the sharpest pain was the fact that I could no longer do the things that I had always done for him. I might as well be a portrait of myself hanging on the wall!

The next afternoon I was sitting in the corner beside the fire in the parlor with my mending basket, and I was trying to thread a needle, when I heard the swish of a skirt. The thread shot past but not into the needle, and I looked up to see Reba Woodberry standing a little wistfully just inside the door, flushed, smiling, but with her hand behind her still grasping the knob, not entirely sure of the situation.

Before I could move or speak a word of welcome she flew across the room, kissed me and exclaimed, "Let me do that," in a tone which implied that it was a perfect outrage for a woman of my age to be obliged to thread her own needles.

"My dear, Peter would never have thought of doing such a thing for me," I quavered.

"You really do need a daughter, you precious darling!" she exclaimed, regarding me tenderly.

"Yes," I answered tremulously, "at my age a daughter will be very comforting. I have often thought if Peter had been a girl he would know when I am not feeling well. As it is, he never does unless I tell him."

We had some talk after this. I told her how good it was of her to marry Peter. He needed a wife. She said she was proud to be chosen, and that she regarded my son as a great man.

"Peter does very well," I answered dryly. There was no need to raise false hopes about his perfections. Lovers have them but husbands do not.

"He has promised to make me happy," she answered, probably in rebuttal.

"Well he won't," I returned.

"Why?"

"Because no man ever did or can make a woman happy. They can only make us patient and long suffering and maybe, good," I answered.

The weather of her countenance changed. The bright skies of her eyes darkened at me, you understand, not Peter.

"He will do the best he knows," I went on ruthlessly. "He will remember for a long time to help you up and down the steps. He will pick up your handkerchief if you drop it, because he has been taught to do those things. And he will kiss you when he goes out in the morning if you train him to it. But he won't if you don't. Men are children. You can never let up on them."

She said she supposed so, but in a tone that implied that she did not believe a word I was saying.

"You realize, my dear, what a serious thing you are doing when you marry a Methodist preacher?" I began again.

She hoped she did.

"It is not like marrying an ordinary man," I told her.

"Oh, no, of course not."

"You enter a difficult family, the church, not as a member, but as the daughter-in-law of the congregation, so to speak. You surrender many pleasures and companionships. Peter will be your only worldly amusement and he cannot be worldly at all."

"It will not be so terrible, all that, with Peter to love me?" she asked.

I regarded her a moment in silence. I saw my own youth sitting there untried by the griefs and the hardships of the years I had known. And suddenly I remembered the yield of these years; a good conscience, peace, all the memories of William, my son. What immeasurable rewards had been mine!

"No, my dear," I answered, drawing her close to my knees. "You will have your cares and your burdens. Every woman does. But you will always have honor and respect. You will move in the best society. You have chosen a great career. I haven't a doubt, Reba,—laughing at my own thought—that they who were the wives of preachers in this world will be leaders of the highest society in heaven! They will know so much about the manners and customs of that place by faith!"

Just then Peter came in. Reba sprang to her feet, and we all laughed together and love abounded.—From My Son, by Corra Harris (Doran).

BANTY.

Ban-ty is the pet name we have given to our lit-tle brown hen. Such a dear little hen she is, and such a dear goodmoth-er she was when her eggs hatched, and her wee chicks came out. Oh, the care she took of those chicks, scratching round to find food for them in the day-time and keeping them warm under her wings at night.

And I want to tell you a-bout the way Ban-ty loved a lone-ly chicken, whose moth-er had left it out in the cold.

"Kwee, kwee," cried the little chick, pit-i-ful-ly, com-ing up to Ban-ty, who was sit-ting on her nest, with all her own chicks warm and snug un-der her wings, "kwee kwee, please take me in, I am so cold and mis-er-a-ble by myself."

"You poor lit-tle thing!" said moth-er-ly Ban-ty. "Move up, chicks, and make room for a stranger." And she lifted her ti-ny brown wing, and let the lone-ly chick creep under.

The lit-tle stran-ger was hun-gry as well as cold. Next morn-ing it pleaded, "Please will some-one get me some break-fast?"

Ban-ty had her own chicks to feed, how-ever, and they kept her so bus-y that she had hard-ly time to snatch a mouth-ful for her-self, let alone feed a stranger. But the poor chick kept cry-ing out so pit-i-ful-ly that the lit-tle moth-er hen took pit-y on it and found some food for it, too.

Ev-ry night af-ter that Ban-ty put the chick to bed with her own, and eve-ry day she fed it, un-til it grew big and strong, and was a-ble to look af-ter it-self. Was she not a kind, thought-ful lit-tle brown hen? And would you not like to do some-thing kind for some-one else, as Ban-ty did?—Selected.

TOUCHING GRATITUDE.

There is a very touching little story told of a poor woman with two children, who had not a bed for them to lie upon and scarcely any clothes to cover them. In the depth of Winter they were nearly frozen, and the mother took the door of a cellar off the hinges and set it up before the corner where they crouched down to sleep, that some of the draft and cold might be kept from them. One of the children whispered to her, when she complained of how badly off they were: "Mother, what do those dear little children do who have no cellar door to put up in front of them?" Even there the little heart found cause for thankfulness.—Spurgeon.

NOTES.

—During the year 1921 the Southern Railway System operated 179,835 passenger trains. Of this number 172,182, or 95.1 per cent, ran on schedule or made up time while on the Southern, and 166,277, or 92.5 per ment, reached final terminal on time, according to announcement made by Vice President Henry W. Miller, in charge of operation.

—Schools in all parts of North Carolina are taking advantage of the aid offered by the University's Bureau of Design and Improvement of School Grounds. The bureau's field secretary has already visited fifteen communities since the college year began and has requests to visit as many more. The secretary, Mrs. W. J. Matherly, who is an expert not only in trees and shrubs, but in laying out paths and roads and playgrounds, makes her trips upon the invitation of school officials, or parent teachers' associations, or sometimes county or town commissioners. She prepares plans of grounds, recommends shrubs and trees to be planted, and gives advice on the general layout. This service is free. The only cost to the school or community is the expert's traveling expenses. Churches and charitable institutions are served, in the same manner as schools, when they ask the bureau's help. Those who want to know about the work may get from the Extension Division of the University, if they apply for it, a pamphlet giving the principles of school-ground beautification and telling what plants are best for various soils.

—Greensboro has combined nine benevolent interests in a budget called ‘‘The Community Chest.’’ These are American Red Cross, North Carolina Children's Home, Board of Public Welfare, Camp and Playground Association, District Nurses, Salvation Army, Boy Scouts, Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A.

—The Southern Railway announces that it will put in round-trip tourist rates to mountain and seashore resorts for the coming summer season at 80 per cent of the double one-way fares.

—Stars can now be successfully photographed in daylight. From Mount Blanc at 12,000 feet altitude, a French scientist has succeeded in photographing stars up to the seventh magnitude.

—One twelfth of a second is the minimum time required for the transmission of an order from the mind to the muscles, according to a prominent psychologist before the Academy of Sciences in France.

—The wolves of Russia are starving and are haunting the towns. American Relief Administration workers go armed to protect themselves from the animals.

—By spilling tepid water into it at the rate of two barrels a second, the Rock River in Illinois, a navigable stream, has been kept from freezing for five winters over 13 miles of its length acording to a prominent engineer.

SAMMIE.

Mother and daddy and Billy Boy had gone to California for the winter, so Betty Lou had come to grandfather's farm for a long visit.

One morning she was standing on the back porch, looking off over the fields, when down in the south meadow she saw some little white objects frisking about in the sun.

‘‘Grandfather,’’ she cried, ‘‘do come and see what these funny little white things are down in the meadow.

Grandfather came out on the porch, put on what Betty Lou called his long distance glasses, and looked down in the meadow.

‘‘Why, those are my lambs,’’ he laughed. ‘‘Thirty-nine of the finest merinos in the country. Want to go down tonight and help me salt them?’’

‘‘I'd love to,’’ cried Betty Lou.

Such a bleating as there was as they came to the meadow, and the little creatures came crouding up to the fence.

‘‘Aren't they dear?’’ exclaimed Betty Lou; ‘‘so soft and wooly. O grandfather! look at that little fellow over there. Isn't he cunning?’’

‘‘He does seem friendly,’’ said grandfather. ‘‘Here, see if he'll eat the salt out of your hand.’’

‘‘Oh, he does, he does!’’ cried Betty Lou. ‘‘May I have him for my very own?’’

‘‘Remember he won't be a lamb always,’’ grandfather warned her.

‘‘When he gets to be a big sheep I'll give him back,’’ promised Betty Lou. ‘‘What shall I call him, grandfather?’’

‘‘Let me see,’’ said grandfather, looking very wise.

‘‘I know,’’ cried Betty Lou, ‘‘I'll call him Sammie. Then everyone will know he's an American.’’

‘‘All right; Sammie it is,’’ agreed grandfather. ‘‘I suppose you'll have to mark him to tell him from the others?’’

Sammie was petted and coaxed and made a regular little playfellow, but at night he always went back to his companions, where, huddled close together in the sheepfold, they all kept nice and warm.

At Christmas time Sammie had a beautiful new ribbon and a little bell with a clear, musical tingle.

And then came a big blizzard. It began New Year's Eve and was so terrible that no one could venture outdoors. When Betty Lou looked out in the morning it seemed like a different world. A great white blanket was over everything, and no sign of lambs.

Just then she saw grandfather with Jim and Ben, the hired men, coming from the barn through what looked like a deep trench, with the snow piled on either side.

Betty Lou ran out on the porch.

‘‘That's just what we're going to find out,’’ answered grandfather, as they went into the tool house.

They came out with shovels and pitchforks, and started off down the trench again. Betty Lou watched them as they climbed out of the trench and waded across the fields in the deep snow.

Pretty soon she saw them coming back, each holding a funny looking bundle which they carried into the summer kitchen..

‘‘Yes, dear; the blizzard came on so suddenly the little things couldn't find the way back to the shepfold, and were all buried in the snow, which really kept them warm. So frandfather has built a big fire in the summer kitchen and hopes he can save them.’’

The men, with some of the neighbors, kept bringing in the little white bundles, until grandfather counted 38, but Sammie was not among them.

‘‘Do let me go look for him,’’ begged Betty Lou. ‘‘I know all the nice sunny places where he loves to lie. I'm sure I can find him.’’

But grandfather said no. It was hard enough for the men to wade through the deep snow. It was getting late and the men were all tired.

Betty Lou could hardly keep from crying, but she knew crying would do no good. Then kind-hearted Ben said, ‘‘You bundle her up good and warm, Mrs. Mason, and I'll carry her. It won't hurt her a bit, and maybe she can find Sammie.’’

So grandmother put on Betty Lou's sweater and coat and leggins and cap, Ben swung her up on his broad shoulder, and they started off. Grandmother could see the red cap bobbing up and down as they went along the trench, then out in the fields. They went around the sheepfold, and Ben poked and peeked into every nook and corner where he thought Sammie might be.

Just as he said, ‘‘I'm afraid we'll have to give it up, Betty Lou,’’ Betty Lou gave a little scream, for peeping through a little crack in the snow was the end of a red, white and blue ribbon. As Ben carefully lifted the snowy bundle, Sammie's bell gave out its musical tingle.

So Betty Lou, with a loving pat now and then for the precious bundle under Ben's arm, rode proudly home, where before the warmth of the great fire Sammie was soon frisky and happy again.—Exchange.

NEEDED TUNING.

‘‘Why should I go to meetings always?’’ asked Ethel.

Her grandfather was silent a moment, then said, ‘‘Tell me, child, has the piano-tuner been here yet? You said that the piano needed tuning.’’

‘‘No,’’ was the reply; ‘‘I am still waiting for him; the piano needs tuning badly. I tried to play last evening, but my playing was a dismal failure.’’

‘‘Now, see, my child, our souls are like a musical instrument. The strings become slack, and out of tune very quickly; they must be tuned up from time to time.’’

‘‘All strings—goodness, faith, courage, generosity, reverence, love—all grow less vibrant in us, without our knowing it even. But when we hear the Gospel proclaimed at The Army, we see how we have lost tune. We are tuned up once more to what is the true pitch of righteousness. But the tuning does not last, and so we must go regularly to have our soul set aright.’’—Selected.

DIED.

Death of Mrs. J. H. Balentine.

Mrs. Clara Medlock Balentine, wife of Mr. John Henry Balentine, of near Ware Shoals, died at her home Friday morning about one o'clock, February 3, 1922. She had been sick three weeks with pneumoniia. She did not have very much to say in her last illness, as her suffering was so great, but the life she had lived told the story of her work well done, and of faithfulness in all her works and ways. She was 58 years old, having been a Christian 40 years; she had been a member of Harmony Methodist Church for 20 years, and was a useful and helpful Christian. She loved to do good and help others. Cheerful in disposition and devoted to her loved ones, she made her home the happiest of places. For 12 years she taught the infant class at Harmony and was much loved by all of her pupils, and by all with whom she came in contact. Mrs. Balentine was the oldest child of Mrs. Martha Medlock. There is a genuine grief throughout the community where she lived, for she was loved by all. The funeral took place Saturday afternoon at Harmony church conducted by Rev. J. G. Harley and Rev. J. P. Coleman, who spoke of her beautiful Christian life, and of her gentle, loving and unselfish disposition. The death of this good woman is a sad loss, but the sorrowing ones are comforted in the thought that it is God's will. The following survive her: her husband, Mr. John Henry Balentine; four children, Mrs. C. F. Beeks, Mrs. Herbert Beeks, Miss Virginia Balentine and Henry Balentine, all of near Ware Shoals. Her mother, Mrs. Martha J. Medlock, brothers and sisters, Messrs. Arthur and Joe Medlock and Mrs. Emma Pickens of Greenville, Mrs. Mattie Downey of Laurens, Mr. Walter Medlock of Ware Shoals, Mrs. Nannie Balentine, Mrs. Callie Moore, Mrs. Cornelia Taylor, Misses Kate, Sudie and Julia Medlock of near Ware Shoals. Those acting as pall bearers were Messrs. Land Balentine, Thomas Downey, W. H. Balentine, Eddie Pitts, Travis Taylor and Parrott Knight.

J. F. Vickrey Dead.

Jonathan Fields Vickrey, aged 92, died at his home near Level Cross in Randolph county on the 22d day of February, 1922, and on the following day his body was laid to rest in the Timber Ridge cemetery, on the same farm and plantation where he was born and raised and spent all of his long and useful life, and which his grandfather, Christopher Vickrey, gave as a burying ground and where his father, M. D. K. Vickrey, was buried. It was his request to be buried by his father. At the age of 20 he was married to Nancy E. Lamb, and to this union 12 children were born, 10 of whom are still living, the two oldest daughters, Mrs. John Farlow and Mrs. L. M. Caudle having preceded him several years. The surviving ones are: Mrs. J. E. Rush, Liberty; Mrs. K. G. Coltrane, Randleman, R. 1; Mrs. A. W. Davis, Sophia, R. 1; D. W. Vickrey, Randleman, R. 1; Mrs. E. L. Hayes, Randleman; R. C. Vickrey, Randleman, R. 1; Mrs. T. E. Marley, Pleasant Garden; Mrs. J. S. Davis, Sophia, R. 1; W. D. Vickrey, Randleman, R. 1; Mrs. A. G. Toomer, Pleasant Garden. He had 81 grandchildren and 84 great-grandchildren.

He was reared by Baptist parents and was a Baptist for some years after he was married. Then he joined the Methodist Protestant Church. He is the last one of the old members that built the old church house at Level Cross. He was a faithful and official member there. As long as he could he went to preaching and Sunday school regularly, but after he was so old he could not go he spent most of his time while he could see reading his Bible. But for the last two years he could not see to read and he often said to his children that his life was just a book or bundle of prayers, and he would say to us, he was just there waiting for the Lord to call him home.

MYSTERIOUS HEAVENLY VISITOR.

A strange ball of fire, rising in the west and rushing at great speed toward the east, was seen by officers and passengers of the ship Vauban on the night of January 12. The Vauban was then a few miles south of the equator, reports Second Officer Francis Blessing. The flaming mass had a tail like a comet. It seemed to be only a little distance above the earth. In two or three minutes the huge meteor—if such it was—had disappeared below the eastern horizon. Meanwhile the sea and sky were as bright as midday. When the Vauban reached South American ports with the story experts were sent out from the observatories at Rio Janeiro, Montevideo and Buenos Aires to question the ship's officers about the mysterious traveler of the sky.—Current Events.

BROTHER TURNER IN HOSPITAL AT BURLINGTON

Brother J. B. Turner, member of the Burlington Sunday School and Church, entered Rainey Hospital here Tuesday night of this week, being subjected to an operation. He will probably undergo a second operation, owing to the acuteness of his condition.

Brother Turner has been a very active worker in our church here, especially in the Christian Endeavor Society. He has aided greatly in the music of the society.

Friends of Brother Turner throughout the North Carolina Conference will regret to learn of his affliction We are sure that he will appreciate the sympathy and prayers of all Methodist Protestants. A card or cheerful letter from any one, especially from Christian Endeavorers, will be highly appreciated, and will encourage and comfort him during the weary hours that he will spend in the hospital.

Send any cards or letters of cheer to J. B. Turner, care of Rainey Hospital, Burlington, N. C.

A STORY OF THE PAST.

This story takes us back to the time when our state was not fully civilized; to the time when great courage was required to protect our cities and towns and our farm-houses from hostile attacks. We do not mean the days when wild Indians roamed through our forests and were likely to sally out at any moment and attack the white people with tomahawk and scalping-knife. Nor do we refer to the time when onslaughts of bears and panthers and wolves upon herds and flocks were common occurrences. We refer to the days when our country was infested with bootleggers.

"Bootleggers! What were they?" we hear you ask.

Well, they were a kind of men, but they were enemies to their kind, and had to be guarded against. They carried most dangerous weapons and used them on people who were off their guard. They were not permitted to do it openly, for laws had been made against it, but they carried on their evil work secretly, often under cover of night.

The time we are writing about was back toward the beginning of the year 1922. At that time, Greensboro was partially civilized, but there were many of its people that were so ignorant and unconcerned about their own welfare that they fell willing victims to the bootleggers. It seems strange to tell, and you may not believe it, but there were some people in those days who would actually hire the bootleggers and pay them money to come and attack them with the terrible weapon already referred to.

The government had forbidden the manufacture and sale of this weapon, so terribly destructive had it become. But the class of people described above were so eager to be smitten by it that they offered large sums of money to those who would come and smite them. The temptation was too great for the bootleggers. They responded with eagerness, and weapon factories sprang up in all sorts of out-of-the way places. But the government had detectives and prosecutors and where most of the people sided with the government, these factories were soon found and closed, the equipment being carried away or destroyed. Territory from which these factories had been driven was called "dry" territory. Territory that harbored those factories was called "wet" territory.

At the time to which we refer, the territory near Greensboro had become so "dry" that it did not supply the boot-leggers with all their business demanded, and they were compelled to bring in from a distance the weapons of their warfare. They might have used the railroad cars, but this was a dangerous thing to do, so liable were they to be detected. They had to rely upon a more secret means of transportation. There were in use in those days rude vehicles called automobiles. They ran along on the ground on wheels, but they were very heavy and required a solid road-bed. The public roads, improved with a view to these heavy vehicles, were the only roads to be thought of in using them. But the public roads were under the eyes of vigilant policemen. What was to be done? The boot-leggers considered the matter and decided that the thing to do was to use the public roads at night when the policemen were asleep.

To the north of North Carolina lay the state of Virginia, and this state had considerable wet territory on its southern side. Weapon factories abounded there, and Greensboro bootleggers heard about it and went thither with a great convoy of those rude vehicles (automobiles), to get supplies, just as the sons of Jacob went down to Egypt in the days of famine. They had to pass through the county of Rockingham — we believe it was called,—but they arranged for their return trip to take place in the night time, lest they should be seen and the nature of their business suspected. As an additional precaution they sent ahead a man with an unloaded vehicle to spy out the way and come back and report.

At the time of our story the chief police officer of Rockingham county—they called him sheriff or some such name— was a man named Sand or Sands—or was it Grit? At any rate he had the grit to waylay this band of bootleggers with a few brave men whom he called to his assistance. They waited for hours by the side of the road. They saw the forerunner of the bootleggers pass and saw him go back to report that the way was clear.

It was a hazardous undertaking to try to bag game of the bootlegger variety—far more dangerous than hunting bears or even lions, for the bootleggers went armed with guns and did not hesitate to shoot those who interfered with their unlawful business.

But the police officer and his men could not consider their personal safety. They had a duty to the people that had chosen them to protect society, and they were men enough to stand in the place of danger because it was the place of duty. So they stood that night near the side of the road and waited for their game.

One o'clock came, two o'clock came, but still no bootleggers. They began to think that their watch would be in vain, when suddenly their ears were struck with a sound they knew at once was made by those rude vehicles, the automobiles. (They made a sound that is hard to imitate, but it was easily recognized after being once heard.) Their nerves grew tense, their hands seized with a firm grip their guns, and they stepped forward to the side of the road. On came the convoy. They counted one, two, three, four, five automobiles. The moon was shining and the bootlegger that headed the procession stopped his car.

What was to be done?

That was the question in his mind. There were but two things possible. Flight was out of the question. They must either give battle or surrender. Which should it be?

While he was pondering this question, it was settled for him by the spirit and action of Sheriff Sands (or was it Grit?) and his men. They made it apparent to the bootleggers that the safest thing for them to do was to surrender, and surrender at once. And this they did.

Seven bootleggers and five autos and great quantities of the borbidden stuff were taken in charge.

This adventure was but one of many back in those half-civilized days. It makes strange reading: it is hard to believe that men ever had such enemies as bootleggers, but the evidence of their existence in those days is just as strong as the evidence of the existence of savage tribes of men or savage beasts in earlier days. Let us rejoice that we have come upon better times.

She had many friends among the students of the State Normal where she was for a time in charge of the Infirmary. Her brothers live near Mebane. Burial was in Concord. Her husband is a brother of Rev. W. F. Kennett.

THE SPIRIT OF OUR MINISTRY.

Let us take to our hearts a lesson,
Few lessons could braver be,
From the ways of a brainy business man
We rarely fail to see:
Before him lies the invoice clear,
He studies it with care,
The stock receipts, expense and balance for the year,—
And shall he take another dare!

The invoicing custom of business men so impressed me this year that I invoiced my investment in the ministry. I made note of the spiritual stock on hand at the beginning of last year, then the receipts, disbursements, gains, losses, victories, defeats and finally the balance at the end of the year. Facing the invoice squarely, I was forced to admit that some of the failures were due to the spirit of my ministry.

Then I began to think about my friends. I thought of a certain minister who is physically weak, hampered with intellectual limitations and a personality none to strong; yet, as I marvel at his success in the ministry, upon close inspection I find it is due to the spirit of the man behind the message. I thought of another friend who is blest with physical fitness, mental prowess, excellent education, strong personality and a working knowledge of the Bible; and yet his proud critical, dictatorial spirit makes him next to a failure in the ministry.

It is impossible to deceive as to the spirit of our life work. We may cover our ignorance with a glamor of worldly wisdom, assume a greatness to which we are strangers, and display a heavenly holiness to which we are filthy foreigners and get by with it for a time, but eventually our real spirit, unmasked and unadorned, will find adquate expression in the issues of life.

According to 2 Cor. 5:18-20. the minister of the gospel is an ambassador for Jesus Christ. To him has been "given the ministry of reconcilation: to wit: that God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself."

God has committed to him the Word of reconciliation. Through him God appeals for reconciliation with lost men. The minister stands in Chris't stead and prays: "be ye reconciled to God." Holding in his heart the credentials of his ambassadorship; a twice born man, absolutely surrendered to God, filled with the Holy Spirit, conscious of his personal commission to preach the gospel to souls for whom he is burdened; what must be the spirit of this man in the exercise of his prerogatives as a reconciling representative of Jesus Christ in this world? Shall it be the arrogant, unbelieving, self-centered, Christ-rejecting spirit of this age? No indeed! Shall envy, lust, strife and greed for place, property and power be uppermost in his thoughts each passing hour? A thousand times no!

What then shall be the spirit of our ministry as ambassadors for Jesus Christ in a world whose spirit is foreign to the Spirit of our Saviour?

First, let us apply this question to our personal spiritual life. What spirit shall characterize our secret Bible study, prayer life and the reading of devotional books? Let us beware lest familiarity with sacred subjects breeds contempt for the quiet hour with God. In our haste to minister to others we are prone to neglect the ministry of the Holy Spirit in our own hearts. How can we consistently and affectively beseech other folks to be reconciled to God unless we are fully reconciled to Him through Jesus Christ ourselves? It is impossible to lead men into the height, depth, length and breadth of the love of God unless Christ makes his home in our hearts. Let the spirit of dependence, reverence and faithfulness characterize our personal devotions.

The second question concerns the spirit of our ministry in our homes. The spirituality of our churches can be measured by the prevailing spirit of our homes. While striving to meet the spiritual demands of our congregations we often fail to minister to our home circle. Faithful observance of family worship and a spiritual life in harmony with our prayers fills the home with love, loyalty, peace, purity and good cheer, indeed a wholesome atmosphere. But on the other hand: What cruel fate is this by which we are all cursed,

That they who love us best should know us at our worst;
While those we chance to meet in station great or small
Receive from us our kindest word, the sweetest smile of all!

Why should our wives and children, who sacrifice more than we think, receive the bitter reaction of the contentious business meeting? Or, should it be said of us as was said of a devoted minister of another generation: "His home life was his greatest benediction to his church?"

We next inquire as to the spirit of our study. With what spirit do we enter our studies? Is it a spirit of drive, drudgery and drastic duty or the vital force of honest toil, lovingly given in the freedom and joy of a life fully yielded to the Holy Spirit? What spirit speaks to us from our mottoes, pictures, desks, magazines and books? Should one of our members suddenly step in would he find himself in a lion's den, critic's cage, a scientist's laboratory; or would he realize that he was in the presence of the Bible, a man of prayer, a practical man in the realm of literature and the best methods of church work, and above all a man indwelt by the Holy Spirit whose life is consumed with the master passion of winning men to Jesus Christ and establishing them in the most holy faith? Happy is man who is refreshed by a personal interview with a spirit-filled pastor in his study! Happy is he minister whose study is the place where he consciously receives from God through prayer and through mental industry the messages he delivers to the people!

In the pulpit the ambassador for Jesus Christ stands in the place of Him who died upon the cross and rose again beseeching men to be reconciled to God. What spirit shall be manifested in the eyes, voice, countenance, Bible reading, expression, manner, message, delivery, conclusion, appeal and invitation of the ambassador? Shall the pulpit be a place to exhibit education, parade eloquence, display intellectual brilliancy or prattle platitudes? Shall it be a place to plunge into sensationalism, put on a pageant of dramatics, make a stage play of wit, ride a hobby, pamper a pet or club an enemy? Indeed not! The true ambassador is so deeply impressed with the responsibility of his position and the delivery of the God-sent message that each word and action reveals Jesus Christ, the spirit of reconciliation and a burning desire for men to get right and stay right with God. He has no time for pretentious humility, professional dignity, belligerent eccentricity, popular sophistory or personal glory. He is lost to self in the glorious ministry of reconciliation. Denounce all sin he must without fear or favor but with the force of infinite compassion say to the sinner: "Behold the Lamb of God!" The supernatural element predominates his life-work. With Paul he can say:"My speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power: that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." 1 Cor. 2.4-5. It can be said of him as was said of Stephen in Acts 6:10: "They were not able to resist the wisdom and the spirit by which he spake."

The success or failure of the business meeting of the church depends very largely upon the spirit of the pastor. As members of the congregation look steadfastly at the minister in the pulpit on Sunday they see a face like that of an angel; but strange as it may seem, at the next business meeting they see a preacher who looks, speaks and acts like the devil. Why this paradox? Is it a case of dual personality? I think not. It is a case of spiritual failure in the business meeting. We appreciate the pregorative of leadership. All of us like to see our programs prevail. But when our leadership is challenged, when we are unjustly criticised and our plans are thwarted, when there is heated debate and we suddenly awaken to the fact that we are not only on the defensive but actually defeated; then beware of the spirit which is liable to display anger, revenge, sarcasm or self-pity. This is no time to read the riot act or resignation but a gracious opportunity for humility, kindness, courage, cheerfulness and the evident control of the Holy Spirit. Church members expect the preacher to keep his head when they lose theirs. How to conquer sharp words with kind replies, falsehood with truth, hatred with compassion, deception with candor, doubt with faith; how to vanish cowardice with heroism, confusion with order, selfishness with sacrifice, pride with humility, and jealousy with generosity; how to successfuluy meet hard problems with adequate solutions, great opportunities with well prepared plans, delicate situations with delightful tact, financial complications with God's system of finance and how to overthrow rule or ruin with submission and success in the business meeting depends very much upon the indwelling, predominating spirit of the ambassador of Jesus Christ.

What spirit shall distinguish the minister of the gospel while attending the social functions of the church? Shall he forget that he is a pastor as soon as he enters the place where the people are assembled and pull off all kinds of hilarious stunts? Or shall he stand apart from the common herd with unapproachable dignity and exclusive sanctity while his announced appearance is a signal for silence as he impresses each wiggling boy and giggling girl with the solemnity of the occasion? Between these two extremes there is a happy medium for the spiritual expression of the ambassador of Christ in social life. The consecrated pastor is an inspiration to the social affairs of the church. His awakened social consciousness is alert to every opportunity for service. His personal touch at social functions may lead many a soul from darkness to light. His spirit of love, joy, good-will and helpfulness will permeate the whole church. Strangers will be welcomed at the church, the sick will be visited, the neglected will be found and the destitute will be clothed, warmed and fed. "The fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law" in the Bible or in the social functions of a true church. The spirit and letter of proper conduct for pastor and people is clearly and accurately stated in 1 Cor. 13:4-8: "Love suffereth long and is kind; love envieth not; love vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in eniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth; beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things. Love never faileth."

Let this same spirit fill the soul of the reconciling representative of Jesus Christ as he calls in the homes of the people. Great is the need in these days for advice, encouragement, instruction, comfort, admonition, prayer and personal evangelism. The heart to heart talks in the office and home enrich the mutual understanding, delightful fellowship and efficient service of pastor and parishioner. As a rule a home visiting preacher will have a church-going congregation. The grouchy, grumbling, gossipping pastor controlled by a haughty, censorious, self-centered spirit will break this rule. The cheerful, patient, industrious, inspiring minister filled with a lowly, appreciative, Christ-centered spirit will make this rule. Shall our people smile or frown when we approach the door? The story is told of a little girl who rushed into the house but stopped suddenly and stepped softly as she astonished her mother with this question: "Has Jesus been here?" "Why, no, my child," came the answer, "what makes you ask that question? Our pastor called a few minutes ago, that's all." "Well, mother," said the child thoughtfully, "every time he comes I feel like Jesus is standing around here, somewhere, after he is gone." Oh! that our spiritual personality were such that we could leave in each home the presence of Him we preach. Then we would not only be welcome but indispensable visitors among our people.

"Pharaoh said unto his servants: 'Can we find such a one as this, a man in whom the Spirrit of God is?' " The answer to this question takes us back to the first consideration: the spirit of our devotional life. The time we spend alone with God and His Word determines largely the spirit of our ministry. Are we yearning for others to behold the beauty, grandeur and glory of our Christ? Then we must has His Spirit in our hearts and homes. Abiding confidence in the fundamentals of Christianity, right relations with God through Jesus Christ, surrender to his will and separation from sin, the indwelling of the Holy Ghost and the joy of His fellowship, a deep appreciation of our position as ambassadors for Jesus Christ and a vivid consciousness of our responsibility to men to be reconciled to God; a prophetic vision of the times in which we live and the inspiration of that "blessed hope"; the personal return of the Lord Jesus to make up His jewels and establish His kingdom are each vital and determining factors in the life, spirit, power and success of our ministry.

Whether in our home, study, pulpit, or business meeting, whether on the street, train farm or in the shop, office and store, whether at the entertainment, social function, preacher's meeting, Bible conference or convention, let us seek that "closer walk with God" which will enable us to reveal the presence and Spirit of Jesus Christ, "in whom dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily" and clearly demonstrate to the folks we meet that "we are complete in Him."

And when at last by saving grace,
Before the Judge of all the earth we stand;
When we behold His glory, see Him face to face,
The invoice of our ministry will then lie open in His hand;
His searching eyes so closely scan
Each page, each thought, word, deed and plan
That we begin to tremble, oh! so much afraid,
Lest some most secret sin before Him is displayed,—
When suddenly, His eyes aglow with love divine,
His face lit up with glory dazzling in each line
He speaks, with voice so deep, with words so kind:
"I see the spirit of your ministry, indeed I find Myself revealed in each appeal you made,
I heard your prayer, I heard you say: 'Be reconciled to God;'
I saw men yield, believe, be saved with my own blood;
Through all the years, 'mid toil and tears, my hand upon you laid,
I saw my Spirit then revealed amid the stress and strife,
Contending for the faith 'mid all the doubts of earthly life;
In study, pulpit, home or street, on land or sea,
With love you spake the words I bid you speak for me."
Again the Great Judge speaks, with deeper tone: "O faithful soul, well done!
'Tis then, ambassadors, 'tis then, we'll know the worth
Of Him whose Word we preached while here on earth!
What rapturous joy, when faith is sight, as on his face we gaze,
We with our crowns laid at his feet are "lost in wonder, love and praise!"

THE TEMPLE CLEANSED.

Soon after the feast in Cana of Galilee Jesus went to Jerusalem to the passover which was kept there at this time. We have often read of the temple at Jerusalem and the glorious one which Solomon built and which Nebuchadnezzar's army threw down and destroyed after the Babylonish captivity. The Jews built a new temple but not so large and beautifnl as the first. This second temple was rebuilt and beautified by King Herod and the Jews were proud of it and admired it very much. But they did not honor it in the way God's house ought to be honored.

When Jesus came into the temple he found people there selling oxen and sheep and doves, these animals were used for sacrifices. But they should not have been sold within the holy walls of God's house. Jesus was very angry with the people who were buying and selling in the temple. He drove them all out and the sheep and oxen and threw down the tables and poured out the money and said to those that sold doves, take these things away, make not my Father's house a house of merchandise.

The temple belongs to God and therefore Jesus would not let it be dishonored. We like the Jews have temples for the worship of God How do we use them? We never see people buying and selling in our church but there is a way of dishonoring God's house without doing this. How? By bringing worldly thoughts into his holy temple.

Some people perhaps think about their money, some about their shops, some about their every-day work and business, some about their pleasures or their fine dress while they are in God's house. They think of these worldly things instead of thinking of God and Christ and Heaven, instead of confessing their sins with all their hearts and asking for pardon and grace. This makes God very angry. He gives no blessings to these careless worldly minded people. They go away from the house of God with his frown upon them and not his sweet smile on our faces. If we wish for a blessing when we go into the temple of God we must pray that all our vain, foolish, worldly thoughts may be taken away before we go there and ask God Himself to take possession of our hearts.

I am writing this letter for the benefit of us M. P. Church people and that we may try to make God's House a house of prayer and honor, and respect the temple in a holy way, and not make it a house of merchandise or a den of thieves.

THOUGHTS ON METHODIST PROTESTANT HERALD OF MARCH 9.

Firstly, the comparison of statistics of different denominations; secondly, the president's interesting and progressive letter; thirdly, R. N. Hauser's plain business-like college talk; fourthly, Bro. Taylor's interpretation of Matt 5:18. These all interested me and I enjoyed reading them. Also Bro. Reed's gentle reminder to the ministerial brethren. Was especially pleased by the manner in which Bro. Thompson and the editor discuss a great question. The reports were fine.

PRESIDENT'S LETTER.

LOYALTY—

In certain quarters it is the custom to make little of denominations and denominational loyalty, prefering to appear broad-gauged by discarding such barriers as are marked out by organized churches. These people have a certain corner of their lips which they raise when they speak of church loyalty; they get their noses just a little out of line and have a tone of scorn in their voices as though it were an evil thing to love one's own more than to love that which is foreign to us.

There are a few simple fundamental principles which they ignore, if they are not entirely ignorant of them. Love is one of the most selective emotions the human heart possesses. It has a different degree of warmth for every person it knows. Does not, possibly cannot, love two people alike. I do not believe the many times married person ever loved the different wives or husbands alike—there was a difference of degree in the warmth of affection for every one.

Then, too, we never love in general but in particular. Man must first love one person truly before he can love more than one at all. If it is possible for a child never to love father or mother, brother or sister, then that person is incapable of loving. If one hates his native land, has no warmth of feeling for his birthplace, then to widen the scope of land to six continents does not increase his patriotic fervor.

In like manner, those who do not love some denomination because it has in its folds some church somewhere at whose altars he found God, then you might put him in the biggest denomination or put them all together and you would not make him love them any more than he did the local church.

Therefore we must be loyal to father and mother, to brother and sister, to husband or wife before we will really be loyal to others outside these relationships. And we must be loyal to the land of our birth or we will not know how to love the strange land separated by the seas. So must we be loyal to a denomination, let it be little or big, matters not; we must be loyal to it before we can be used of God in his organized church. Christianity is organized, and those who will not be amenable to organized activities will have but little or no part in its achievements. Love your church. serve your church, make her history glorious; for by so doing you may prove your love for your Lord.

USING INSTEAD OF ABUSING THE CHURCH—

I have often wondered at the way some people have fallen in with those who abused the church. They seemed to be good people, at least appeared to desire to do good, but when some boisterous preacher whose main efforts seemed to be to abuse the church instead of denouncing the devil and his ways, came along, they fell in with him and left the church. Then all that the church stood for and attempted to do were despised by them.

And there is another class who appear to think that while Christianity is vital and important it does not matter much whether the church succeeds or not. They seem to think that men ought to be good and do good, but how, when and to whom are not questions in which they are interested. Their interest in Christianity centers around their own experience which is altogether a pleasant affair, which has not faced evil nor tried to help those who were oppressed by the evil one.

This latter class threatens to do the cause of Christ more real harm than the first. Christianity is an organized force. It has set for itself certain tasks and it requires of its members certain duties. This organized form is the church. The church has its stated times for assembling its members together, it has certain prescribed standards set for them; therefore the church is more likely to do something for God as a body of workers than are those who ignore the church or denounce its members. According to my observation, if a man will not render a religious service as a member of the church, there is little reason to hope that he will render one after he has separated himself from the church. The trouble with a church when it is idle or slothful is not that it is organized, but that it is not vitalized. And it is certainly true that the breaking up of the organization will not vitalize the membership.

THE APRIL CAMPAIGN—

In our April campaign we have fixed the following order: Family Altar, Stewardship or Systematic Giving, Life Work Recruits, and the College. We would like very much to have this order preserved, if possible.

OUR GOAL—

One thousand new Family Altars, 1,000 new pledges to give proportionately; 500 Life Work Recruits, i.e., those who will offer to give themselves to devote their lives to the ministry, to missions, to deaconess work or some definite religious work; and 5,000 new pledges to the college.

Distributed as follows: Five altars for every church, five pledges to give proportionately from every church; two Life Work Recruits from every church, and to all churches that have already made pledges one-third of the entire membership should make a pledge to the college, or a number of pledges eqnal to this.

The Perfect Score is 100, the five Family Altars count 25 points, the five pledges to give proportionately count for 25 points, the two Life Work Recruits count for 25 points, and one-third of the entire church membership making pldeges to the college count 25 points, making a total of 100 per cent.

It had been my plan to put in eight days on Halifax work, closing the college campaign March the 19th: but sickness in our home broke up the plan, so as Mrs. Andrews was convalescent I asked pastor Hutton to allow me to go with him to Palectine and Gideon's Grove churches on his work. But the weather again became disagreeable, and almost prevented the afternoon service.

At Palestine there was a very good congregation, notwithstanding much sickness in the community, and these people enjoy hearing preaching; I enjoyed preaching to them. At Gideon's there were several loyal, faithful members present and we hope the service was not altogether in vain. They are here talking of a new church. We hope that these two little churches will add quite a number of pledges to the college during the April campaign.

I have been kept out of the field for ten days by sickness in the home; hope soon to get out. Fraternally yours,

R. M. Andrews.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR APRIL 2.

BETTER BIBLE-READING. DEUT. 6:1-9.
(CONSECRATION MEETING.)

DAILY READINGS.

Monday-Ps. 39:1-13; Tuesday-Heb. 5:10-14; 6:1-3; Wednesday-Col. 3:12-17; Thursday-Matt. 4:4; Friday-Rom. 15:4-14; Saturday 2 Pet. 1:16-21. (What is the main thought in each day's reading?)

The Bible is a surprising Book. And our attitude toward it is equally surprising. After all these centuries of printing, it is still the most largely printed book. The issue of the latest best seller is a mere handful as compared with the number of Bibles that come from the press. An author is exceedingly complimented if his book is translated into as many as twenty different languages. The Bible is approaching its seven-hundreth different translation. Millions of them, in all the tongues of earth. Verily they read "in their own tongues the wonderful works of God" It is a universal Book. That is the secret both of the vast number of copies and their wide distribution as to language. It has a message for the universal heart, a message no other book can supply.

And yet, in spite of the fact that it is the largest seller, the most printed, the commonest book among us, it is surprising that we know so little about it. We are amazingly ignorant of its contents. We own it but we do not possess it; we have it but we do not know it. Wherein is the secret of our failure to be men of the Book? Part of the answer is to be found in the old saying, Familiarity breeds contempt. If we had never seen this Book before, it would have a wonderful message for us, we would read it with intense delight. You doubtless remember how the French savants greeted Franklin's reading of the Book of Ruth—they were amazed at the beauty of it, astounded that there should be such a book in literature of which they did not know. But we are not much better off.

Putting aside the primary purpose of the Book, the story of how God has revealed himself and his purposes to men, and thinking of it only as literature, the reading of it is wonderfully interesting. Here are thrilling stories of adventure, great orations, passages that have no parallel. And all of it missed because we have gone at it in the wrong way, have thought of the Book as a dry, dusty, almost musty, volume. How should we read it to behold wondrous things?

1. As a general rule—don't read it through. I know a certain man who has "read it through" some fifty times. But I doubt if he has been greatly profited by the exercise. It is that. You'll have to grit your teeth and perform all sorts of vocal and mental gymnastics if you get through. You're wasting time to read it that way.

2. Read it topically. Take any good concordance—and a Bible isn't worth a great deal unless it has a good one in it—and take some great subject like faith, or prayer, or the offices of Christ— there are a thousand others —and read every reference on that particular topic. You will be surprised to see how the Book is interwoven.

3. Read it by characters. David is a rather disjointed individual if you read only Second Samuel. Read all the Bible says about him. And so with Moses, Elijah, Paul. There isn't anything more interesting in literature than biography, and no biography more interesting than Bible biography, "These were men of like passions with ourselves." not saints who walked the earth in the long ago, apart from the temptations of men. See how they met and overcame their trials.

4. In the reading of the Gospels, I would suggest a little book that has helped me greatly. It is call "His Life," and is published by Hope Publishing Company, Chicago. This weaves the four Gospels into one continuous story. We need to read the separate Gospels for each writer has a particular purpose in writing, but it will be much more helpful to get the whole narrative in a connected way.

5. Read it in both the Authorized and Revised Versions. And with these have also a copy of Moulton's Modern Reader's Bible, or Moffatt's "A New Translation of the New Testament," or Waymouth's translation. These all bring shades of meaning upon the old Book that make it new. It will be well also to have a Bible Dictionary—Davis' or the International —and a good one-volume Commentary. (Dummelow's is good.) These will help to explain much that the text itself does not tell us.

6. Above all read it for what it is: God's Book. It is His message to you. When we pray, we talk to God; when we read his Book, he talks with us. Be quiet when you read, be intent to know his will, be reverent as in a holy place. It is God's Book, none other is like it or can compare with it. We cannot, dare not, read it as we read another book.

ORIGINAL SIN.

We made the statement some time ago, that some persons are so poorly informed as to the doctrines of their own church, that when some one states or defends some of these doctrines somebody thinks that they are NEW, and are up in arms at once, in holy horror, at what they suppose to be rank heresy. This has been abundantly demonstrated by things that have been stated in the discussions which have appeared in the Herald during the last few months.

The merest tyro in theology ought to know that theologians distinguish between "actual sin," and "original sin," for the Bible makes this fundamental distinction. Actual sin being the "trangression of the law," while original sin is that native, innate, inborn, inbred corruption that prompts or leads to the transgression. Paul calls it in Rom. 7th chapter the "sin that dwelleth in me."

We've felt for many years that there is more need of teaching and preaching on this than nearly any other subject, inasmuch as the masses of the people have utterly no conception of sin but the outward act, not knowing that the depraved, corrupt inner nature that leads to the act is sin. This is the root of the whole trouble—"sin that dwelleth in me." It is called "original" because it is first, or primary; it is called "inbred" because it is bred in us by nature;it is called Adamic, because it has descended by the natural laws of generation and heredity from Adam. And of course this involves, or includes infants as well as adults. No one of Adam's race is excluded. We have said this prefatory to giving the teaching of the most of the leading churches in their confessions of Faith, Articles of Faith, etc.

The first we give is article VII of the Methodist Protestant Church, of original sin, and is as follows:—"Original sin is the corruption of the nature of every man, that naturally is engendered of the off-spring of Adam whereby man is very far gone from original righteousness, and of his own nature inclined to evil, and that continually." Page 29 of Discipline.

Next we give Article VII of Religion of the M. E. Church South, called "original or birth sin." "Original sin standeth not in the following of Adam (as the Pelagians do vainly talk) but it is the corruption of the nature of every man, that naturally is engendered of the offspring of Adam, whereby man is very far gone from original righteousness, and of his own nature inclined to evil, and that continually." Page 15, Discipline, M. E. Ch. South.

We have not the discipline of the M. E. Church (North) but am sure it is the same as that of the Methodist churches, it being the original Methodist church of the U. S. In the third place we give a part of Article IX of the Protestant Episcopal church, which is also the same as that of the church of England. One of the 39 articles of the two churches, called "Original or Birth Sin."

"Original sin standeth not in the following of Adam, (as the Pelagians do vainly talk) but it is the fault and corruption of the nature of every man, that naturally is engendered of the off-spring of Adam; whereby man is very far gone from righteousness, and is of his own nature inclined to evil, so that the flesh lusteth always contrary to the spirit." Page 514 Book of Prayer.

Note that the word "man" as used in these articles of faith is used its generic sense, signifying man as a whole.

From the Westminster Confession of faith, Pages 32-34, we quote as follows, chapter VI, article II, III, IV, "By their sin," referring to Adam and Eve's sin," they fell from their original righteousness, and communion with God, and so became dead in sin, and wholly defiled in all the faculties and parts of soul and body."

"They being the root of all mankind, the guilt of this sin was imputed, and the same death in sin and corrupted nature conveyed, to all their posterity, descending from them by ordinary generation."

" From this original corruption, whereby we are utterly indisposed, disabled, and made opposite to all good, and wholly inclined to all evil do proceed all actual transgressions." As some readers will know, the Westminster confession of faith is the Creed of the Presbyterian Churches. Perhaps the Cumberland Presbyterians may differ on decrees and election. Next we quote from page 60 of "The Standard Manual for Baptist Churches," by Edward T. Hiscox, D. D., Article III—The Fall of Man.

"We believe the scriptures teach that man was created in holiness, under the law of his Maker; but by voluntary transgression fell from that holy and happy state; in consequence of which all mankind are now sinners, not by constraint but choice; being by nature utterly void of that holiness required by the law of God, positively inclined to evil; and therefore under just condemnation without defense or excuse."

We have given the belief, or faith, of all the great, leading orthodox Protestant churches of christendom, save the Lutheran churches, as we do not have their articles of faith, but we are morally sure that they agree on the question of original sin with the others named.

Having given the belief of orthodox Protestentism on the question of original sin, now we will show that Romanism agrees on this point with Protestantism.

We quote from "A Catechism of Christian Doctrine," prepared and enjoined by order of "The Third Plenary Council of Baltimore." For sake of brevity we will give the answers, and not the questions; A. On account of the disobedience of our first parents, we all share in their sin and punishment, as we should have shared in their happiness if they had remained faithful."

"A. Our nature was corrupted by the sin of our first parents, which darkened understanding, weakened our will, and left in us a strong inclination to evil." "A. The sin which we inherit from our first parents is called original sin." "A. This sin is called original because it comes down to us from our first parents, and we are brought into the world with its guilt on our soul." This is all from page 14, questions 45 and 48 of the above Catechism.

These questions from the creeds (beliefs) of practically all the orthodox churches of christendom prove that the theory that children are born pure and holy is the rankest heresy. This is the heresy of Pelagins, a British Monk of the fourth century, who not only denied hereditary sin, but any connection between sin and death, and conversion through grace. Unitarians, who deny the divinity of Christ, the personality of the Holy Spirit, are Pelagians, and so are the Campbellites, both denying conversion as an experience, for according to their theory of sin there is no need of conversion.

We will say in conclusion, that the doctrine of original sin permeates the whole Bible from Gen. to Rev., inter-woven in its very tixture from start to finish. So understood by all the leading churches—crystalized in their Creeds, Confessions of Faith, Articles of Faith, etc. Taught by practically all the great theologians of both the Calvinistic and Armeninan Schools—both by Protestant and Catholic alike—the truth, is, the reverse is the rankest heresy, and ought not to be tolerated among evangelical churches. As to Methodism, when we consider such a galaxy of notables as the three Wesleys, Fletcher, Watson, Clark, Ralston and a number of others that might be named, we as Methodists ought to at least pause and consider, before we deny and denounce this fundamental doctrine of Methodism and of Christianity itself. Dr. Clarke was one of the greatest scholars, not only of Greek, Hebrew and Latin, but of nearly all the oriental languages, being characterized by Chas. H. Spurgeon as the "prince of commentators." Spurgeon was a prince of gospel preachers in his day, drawing thousands to his tabernacle, and leading hundreds to Christ, and ought to be a reasonably competent judge.

Finally those who believe in the native holiness of children, either do not know their Bible, or do not believe it. They may know it in patches, but not as a whole.

SELF-DENIAL WEEK FOR HOME MISSIONS.

Passion Week will soon be here. In many of our churches suitable services are being planned in memory of the passion of our Lord. What more fitting than to meditate during these solemn anniversary days upon the great facts leading up to the crucifixion of Jesus? He bore in his own body the penalties of the sins of the world.

But Jesus was not only crucified—He rose again from the dead! Our faith is not in a dead Christ, but in a living Lord. "Christ is risen from the dead"—"As in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive." "It is sown in dishonor; it is raised in glory." "The first man is of the earth, earthy: the second man is the Lord from heaven.""As we have born the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." "If we suffer with him, we shall also reign with him."

Oh that will be, glory for me,
Glory for me, glory for me.
That will be glory, be glory for me."

There is another side to this matter. The last message of the Master to his followers just before the cloud received Him up out of their sight called us to a recognition of our responsibility in connection with the establishment of His reign in the world. He led them out on the Bethany road where every memory was sacred, and lifted up His hands and blessed them. While they looked He went away on the wings of the morning. The angels said He is coming back again, and we wait for the day of His coming with glad anticipation.

Before He went away He opened their understanding; showed that it was necessary for Him to suffer, to die, and to rise from the dead; and taught htem that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name among all the nations.

And this is the Bethany message. "Ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria and unto the uttermost part of the earth." Acts. 1:8.

"I gave my life for thee,
My precious blood I shed,
That thou mightest ransomed be,
And risen from the dead.
I gave, I gave my life for thee
What hast thou given for me?"

In these Lenten days, culminating with Passion week, and Easter, the Methodist Protestant people, with all other christians, should give themselves seriously to a consideration of this important duty. The Board of Home Missions has been given the responsibility of caring for that part of this great commission having to do with the Jerusalem, Judea, and Samaria of the Methodist Protestant Church. We have never had so great an opportunity, so large a program, nor so tremendous a responsibility. This Board needs $50,000 within the next sixty days if it is to meet the imperative demands of that Bethany message. The sum named can be secured if our people will practice self-denial for even one week, and turn the fund over for this special work. This will be credited on the budget, and will be a wonderful help to your Board of Home Missions. The offering will be large if all practice self-denial.

Jesus said, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself." Luke 9:23.

MARCH THANK-OFFERING MONTH FOR WOMAN'S HOME MISSIONARY WORK.

March has been set aside as Thank Offering Month for The Pine Ridge Mission School, which is maintained by the Woman's Board of Home Missions. The North Carolina Branch has been asked to raise $1200 for Pine Ridge and special efforts are being put forth this month to raise the entire amount. Mrs. F. R. Harris and Mrs. Henry E. Powell of Henderson are sending out literature and Thank-offering boxes for this much needed phase of Home Mission work and it is hoped that every Methodist Protestant in the North Carolina Conference yill co-operate. Miss Hester Stuart of Burlington Home Missionary Auxiliary has challenged 12 Societies in the State to raise $100 each.

This is a progressive step for this wide awake organization. How many will accept Burlington's challenge? If your church cannot do it alone, can you not induce your circuit to assist? The Board has extended many kindnesses to the North Carolina Branch in helping the Children's Home and let us rally around and lend a helping hand to Pine Ridge.

spite of the lack of funds, the new building has been completed at a cost of $10,450.00 including light and heat. Debts are now to be cared for, notes are due in March, April, May and June, amounting to over five thousand dollars.

In the past three years 158 different girls and boys have been enrolled in the day school. Dr. and Mrs. Woodford have four Sunday Schools under their care, with a total enrollment of more than three hundred. They have also organized two Y. P. S. C. E. and one Junior C. E. Society.

Do your best, workers—fill your Thankoffering boxes or send an offering direct to Mrs. H. A. Garrett, care of Children's Home, High Point, N. C.

With sincere good wishes,

Truly,
Mrs. Wm. C. Hammer

We thank Rev. M. C. Wilson, Lometa, Tex. for his contribution. It is a part of his tenth.

We are pleased to inform our readers that the Christian Endeavor society of Tiffin, O., has renewed its pledge to clothe a child for another year.

Continue to watch the Herald report to see if your offering has been sent in. Please do not hold over until next month.

We enjoyed a visit from Miss Maud Isley last week, who was one of our teachers last year.

We would like to hear from more of our Sunday schools. It seems some of them must have gone into winter quarters; if so, we hope they will take on new life now that spring is here.

THE EASTER PROGRAMS ARE READY.

Sample programs for Easter, with other special literature, have been mailed to all the pastors and Sunday school superintendents whose names are on file in this office. The package sent contains

One copy of our new Easter program, entitled, "Risen from the Dead."
One copy of our home mission booklet, entitled, "Missions in America."
One copy of a small leaflet entitled, "A Long Way to Go."
One Decision Day record card.
One announcement of our 34th anniversary service.
One order card for the convenience of the proper officials.

If you are the pastor or superintendent, and did not receive this package, kindly address the office at once, and a duplicate package will be sent to you.

It is quite important that the orders for the Easter programs be sent in at once. Delays sometimes occur in the mails, and you should have the programs on hand ready for rehearsals at the proper time. It is our desire to supply all the Sunday schools with the programs needed to enable them to properly prepare and render the service. It is difficult to know just how many of these programs to have printed, but in these days of high cost of printing the tendency is to keep the totals down to the actual needs for the sake of economy. We think we have all that will be called for this year, and will run a second edition if it becomes necessary to do so, but all of this requires time. You will therefore see why it is quite necessary that all the orders be sent in at the earliest possible date. We can serve you better now than will be possible at a later time.

The program is pronounced by competent critics to be the equal of the best that is being issued this year. The music is by our own Rev. W. B. Judefind, a song writer of considerable note, and a member of the Maryland Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church; the literary material is abundant, allowing a wide range of selection; and the press work was done in our own printing establishment. If your school should find the music too difficult for the entire school, select your best singers as a choir for the occasion. If you desire something more elaborate, it can easily be secured from our publishing houses, or any one of a number of dealers in special music. In any case hold a service, emphasize the home missionary idea, and make an offering for our denomination budget.

We have a limited number of the booklet, "Missions in America," and the leaflet, "A Long Way to Go," which we will send postpaid to all who may desire them, and who will make such a request. Act promptly, as you will be disappointed if you delay action. We would like to distribute all that we have, and would publish a larger edition if the expense of so doing was not so great. Perhaps later our funds for propaganda will not be so limited, and we can build up a larger mailing list.

One other word. Until this year, the Board of Home Missions has received the entire offering at Easter. By a recent ruling of the Executive Committee, all funds for which credit is desired on the budget must go into the budget for distribution. We will get the use of the money at once, but in the ultimate distribution we will have our percentage of the budget. Therefore, we must urge that all our Sunday schools help to put the "get" in the budget for the local church. If we can be of service in any way, we are yours to command,

Charles H. Beck.

OUR HIGH POINT COLLEGE.

Some of the leaders of the Methodist Protestant Church have been trying for several years to do something for the young people of the denomination and all other denominations, in this State, who wish to get an education. Their hopes are about to be realized in a new college at High Point. Our leader, Dr. Andrews, has done more, perhaps, in this campaign, than any other one man, for which much praise is due, but Bro. Andrews cannot build this college himself. If he were financially able to build it, he could not manage it without the co-operation of the denomination. This will be a denominational college and we hope that nearly all of our people will put something in the building fund so they will call it "our College."

The erection of this college at High Point will mean a great deal to the students in the Children's Home. They would have the advantage of a college education which they, perhaps, would not have if it were located elsewhere. Now, the most important part is team work to get the money to build the college. It is up to us to get more of our people interested enough to put their money in it. Now let us all put our shoulder to the wheel and shove forward, if we do it will move; then reach down and get hold of another spoke and shove again. Keep repeating this movement until our hopes are realized. We must not be too easily discouraged, like Rev. W. D. R.'s delegate who went to Conference and heard two preachers debating on a very important subject with so much enthusiasm that he thought they were quarreling. If this was the cause of his falling from grace he did not hit the ground very hard.

Just as I expected, off my subject. Honest, my fellow church workers, will you not make a pledge for the Methodist Protestant College? if you cannot make a large pledge, make a small one. Make it payable any time between one and five years. We want your name enlisted on the record of College donators, so that you will be interested in the success of the College. To my friends who say they are not able to help build a college, let me say, Do you work three hundred twelve days in a year to suport your family? Don't you think you could give at least one day's work each year for five years to the college enterprise? The preachers will keep on preaching if you do not help to support them. The missionaries will continue to work in the foreign fields whether you aid them or not. The college will be built whether you help or not. The question with you will be, Have I used the means the Lord has intrusted to me to glorify Him? All that you have belongs to the Lord and the rent is now due, put it into the new College where it will help prepare the young people for leadership. The world is calling for leaders and there is no better way to get them than to train the young people in the college. Our boys and girls are knocking at the door of the Methodist Protestant College: if we do not open this door to them we will be held responsible for their future welfare.

C. G. Hunter.

—A letter to the Herald from one of Rocky Mount's excellent ladies contains this good word: "I am especially interested in the Methodist Protestant College enterprise. Would be glad to do anything in my power to help. Have asked two M. P.'s if they would help and they said they would. Have not been appointed a collector but feel so interested, just talk it to any one that seems to care about it." Such a spirit as this good lady has, possessed by all our people, would soon build the college; but her spirit is catching, as much so as the "flu." Look out! it may get you.

—The work of returning bodies of American soldiers who died in France has been finished. In all, 45,023 bodies have been returned. There are still in England several hundred bodies of soldiers who died there. Ninety-seven will be sent to this country at the request of relatives.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONVENTION.

The Denominational Convention will be held in the Victory Memorial Methodist Protestant Church in Indianapolis, Indiana May 11 to 14.

The opening session will be held on Thursday evening May 11th, and the closing session will be on Sunday evening May 14th. Our three churches in Indianapolis are planning to entertain a great convention, so plan to go for the very first session and stay until the close. I already have word from a goodly number indicating that they expect to go. Are you planning to be there?

Boost the convention among your workers and young people. Select one or more to go from your charge and get your Sunday school and Christian Endeavor Society to assist in paying the expenses of the trip.

Expenses.

The necessary expenses will be railroad fare, $1.00 per day for meals, and $2.00 for registration fee. The entertainment will be on the Harvard plan, lodging and breakfast free and $1.00 per day for the other two meals. The registration fee is $2.00 for each delegate until a charge has registered and paid for three delegates, and after the three have been paid for such charge may register free of cost as many as come.

Preachers Note.

Indianapolis is in Eastern Clergy territory, so if you live in Southeastern or in Western Clergy territory you will need to have the Eastern Clergy permit to get into Indianapolis on Clergy fare. The same is true with reference to getting into Pittsburgh, Pa., to the Inter-Board meeting on May 18 and 19. If you desire the clergy rates you would better investigate this. Application for permit should be made in the usual way to Mr. C. L. Hunter, Manager Eastern Clergy Bureau, 143 Liberty Street, New York City.

Delegates to Pittsburgh.

If you have been chosen to represent your conference in the Pittsburgh meeting, May 18 and 19, you can attend the convention in Indianapolis May 11 to 14 without a great deal of additional cost. Look into this and plan to be in the convention. Those desiring entertainment during the convention should write Rev. J. L. Buckley, 1928 Woodlawn Avenue, Indianapolis, Ind., so he will get your letter on or before May 1st, 1922. Those having agreed to take part on the program need not write. I will send in that list.

Yours for a great convention,

3919 Carlisle Avenue, A. G. Dixon.
Baltimore, Md.

WHY THE BOARD OF HOME MISSIONS NEEDS MONEY.

In our first paper we discussed the policies and program of the Board of Home Missions and began a study of the fields under the care of the Board. In this paper it is our purpose to continue that detailed study of the work.

In Kansas City, Kansas,,we have had some of our most difficult problems to solve. However, we have never had a finer outlook for the work of the denomination there than we now have. We have transferred the work of the downtown People's Church to the University district and renamed it The University Church. A fine stone building is being erected, made possible by the sale of the downtown property, by assistance from the Kansas Conference, by heroic work on the part of the local people, and by a contribution and loan from the Board of Home Missions. Our work has been done in a dwelling house and conditions have not been favorable, but we are making fine progress with a Sunday-school of 132 enrolled. The board assists in the support of the pastor.

At Westheights, we have the nucleus from what was formerly known as the Chelsea church, this was a small but plucky band of people, but were so limited in the old location as to make ultimate success almost impossible. The new location is about a mile and a half from the University Church, and in one of the finest residence districts in the city. They have worshipped for a year and a half in a two story dwelling house, which will become the parsonage when the church is built. The work is making fair progress, but it cannot do much more until the church is built. Plans are being prepared, and the contracts will soon be let for the Sunday-school section. The Board assists in the support of the pastor here.

At Gordon Place we have a small congregation, but hemmed in by negroes, Roman Catholics, and a cemetery, with other stronger churches in keen competition for the support of the Protestant white people of the district. It is the judgment of the Board that a new location is desirable for this congregation, and certain propositions were made some two or three years ago. At that time however the Board wos making no contribution to the work, and the local people did not see the wisdom of accepting the suggestions made. It would be fine if they were ready now to join with our churches in this three church program for Kansas City.

In Seattle we have great opportunities and great responsibilities. Our splendid First Church is one of the leading churches of the city. Our two mission churches have fine opportunities but cannot serve their respective communities satisfactorily with their present equipment. Building is imperative at both Ravenna Park and Seaview Park, and the best results will be secured if the buildings are erected together and at once. No other city in the entire nation is so under-churched as Seattle, with the exception perhaps of San Francisco. The latter city has a large Catholic population ministered to of course by non-Protestant agencies. Other denominations are working near us, and we have only been able to keep our fields through the good offices of the city Church Federation. We cannot always retain them unless we supply adequate equipment at an early date. The small frame chapels are completely outgrown, and the people of the communities are asking why we do not proceed with our building program. The churches themselves inquire why we can build elsewhere, and not in Seattle? It is hard to get them to understand that money can be borrowed to complete our buildings in our Eastern cities, but no Protestant Church has standing in a Seattle bank. Our people are not able to build without large assistance from the Board, and our demands have been so great that until this hour we cannot tell how soon building can be started in this great city of the Northwest. We assist in the support of two men in Seattle.

At the West End Church, Greensboro, N. C., additional equipment is necessary. This can be provided by the local congregation if they can secure such assistance as our other churches in the city can give them. We supplement the salary of the pastor. At Charlotte, N. C., we have a loan, and are assisting in the support of the pastor. Adjoining lots are to be purchased under certain conditions, and your Board has pledged to see that the money needed shall be provided from some source when the estate must be closed. At Asheville, we have a loan, and assist in the support of the paster. At Lexington the plans call for a new church at an early date, and your Board is being asked to assist both in building and in the support of the pastor. At English Street, High Point, small assistance is being given, but later when the church requires a full time pastor, our obligation will be greater.

At Savannah, Georgia, and San Antonia, Texas, colored congregations are asking for help. At Jacksonville, Florida, we have a promising new mission, but the time has come when they must find a place of their own. Up until this time, their services have been held in a rented store-room. They are planning to erect a small chapel soon because we cannot assist them in building. We help to support the pastor, and his time would be much more valuable to the kingdom in a suitable building. There are a number of open doors for us in Florida but we cannot enter without money.

At Montgomery, Alabama, the time is here when new buildings should be erected. This will require the sale of the old properties, the purchase of a new site, and the erection of a new chapel, or one unit of the church. We have one of the best men in the Alabama Conference here but he cannot do much more until some step is taken to build. The property titles are in the hands of your Board, and we are looking for a market, but the building ought not to wait until a sale can be consummated.

We assist in the support of pastors at Mansfield, and Magnolia, Arkansas; at Quinton, Comanche, Hugo, Idabel, Eagletown, Haworth, Redlands, and Pine Creek, Oklahoma, and several of these churches need assistance to secure adequate equipment. This is especially true of Hugo and Idabel, and Magnolia needs a new church. A little encouragement on the part of the Board would inspire the heroic people composing these churches to undertake worth-while building enterprises.

In Texas, we have a promising work in Paris, though it has suffered almost every form of disappointment; at Corsicana a new church is imperative if we are to hold our place in the city; at San Angelo, a new church should be erected soon if we are to develop our work; and at Fort Worth, we are barely marking time for lack of an adequate building. We assist in the salaries in all these places. Fort Worth is one of the most important cities of North Texas. We have a very fine location, but we cannot build churches without money.

There are other agencies employed by this board, and other lines of service are being rendered. We assist in the salary of conference missionaries in Georgia, Ft. Smith-Oklahoma, Arkansas, and North Mississippi. We assist in the payment of church debts. In the list of work being done in the Indiana Conference we did not note assistance being given at Muncie. This church has been greatly discouraged and disheartened on account of its heavy debt. But with a donation from the Board of Home Missions, and encouragement from the Conference about $7,000 will be paid on the debt within the conference year, and the church will be able to handle the balance.

I do not think any other agency of the church is doing more for the denomination on the small contributions made by the church. This is a plain heart to heart talk to you as fellow-members of the Methodist Protestant Church. We cannot carry out this program without a much larger sum than we have ever yet had placed at our disposal. This is an unfinished program, every item of which comes build elsewhere, and not in Seattle? It is hard within the classification adopted by the General Conference.

We should have $50,000 between this and April 30th. If the Methodist Protestant Church would take herself seriously in her Home Mission work, every dollar of that sum can be provided at Easter. We will welcome inquiry, suggestion, and constructive criticism. We are looking for a number of interested people who believe America should be made Christian, and who are willing to support their belief by their money.

We must save America to save the world.

CHARLES H. BECK.

NO ONE NEEDS ME NOW.

An unhappy woman who had lost the mother so long dependent on her was urged to take life more easily than she had done hitherto, and to make a business of enjoying herself. But this program did not appeal to her. Life no longer interested her. "There's no one who needs me now," she announced, "and I need to be needed."

That woman was not exceptional. She voiced a universal want. There is no satisfaction in life like being needed. Sometimes the conscientious older daughter, who is her mother's "right-hand man," who assumes the responsibilities of the home as a matter of course, and is a second mother to the younger children, looks half enviously on another girl who never has to do anything she does not feel like doing, who is responsible for nothing but pleasing herself. "Oh," thinks the girl of many burdens,' "how nice it would be to be like that!"

And that is the biggest mistake you are likely to make in a hurry. It is not "nice" to be like that. To be absolutely care-free means that no one needs us, that we are not necessary anywhere. And it is that consciousness which makes wealth and leisure a mockery in so many cases.

Everyone needs to be needed, and there comes a time in every life when existence seems unendurable without that knowledge. Unless you are doing something useful, unless you are helpful somewhere, unless your affection is the daily bread of some heart, life is sure to lose its savor.

Whether you know it or not, you need to be needed. Be thankful if you have a share in the work of the home, if you have responsibilities, if father counts on you for certain services, if mother depends on you. To be needed, it is the fundamental longing in every heart, the salt of life, without which there is no flavor in existence.—Selected.

GOD'S PEOPLE DISTINCT.

"And I will put a division between my people and thy people: tomorrow shall this sign be."—Ex. 8:23.

This may happen in the time of judgments, when the Lord becomes the sanctuary of His saints. It is very conspicuous in the conversion of believers when their sin is put away, while unbelievers remain under condemnation. From that moment they become a distinct race, come under a new discipline, and enjoy new blessings. Their homes, henceforth, are free from the grievous swarms of evil which defile and torment the Egyptians. They are kept from the pollution of lust, the bits of care, the corruption of falsehood, and the cruel torment of hatred, which devour many families.

Pharaoh has a people, and the Lord has a people. These may dwell together, and seem to fare alike, but there is a division between them, and the Lord will make it apparent. Not for ever shall one event happen alike to all, but there shall be great difference between the men of the world and the people of Jehovah's choice.

Rest assured, tried believer, that though you have your troubles, you are saved from swarms of worse ones, which infest the homes and hearts of the servants of the world's Prince. The Lord has put a division; see to it that you keep up the division in spirit, aim, character and company. — Charles H. Spurgeon.

THE UNAPPRECIATED GIFT.

It is said that a miniature silver egg was once presented to a Saxon princess by a royal visitor. Somewhat surprised that she should receive a gift of such a character, she let it lie neglected for some time among other possessions. But one day, picking it up idly, she discovered a secret spring, and on pressing it a door flew open, disclosing a jewel of exquistie workmanship.

Thus do gifts come to us from the King. It takes more than a careless glance to discover their value. The Bible, for instance, is a gift of infinite value, but how many of us appreciate its worth? It is not until some deep life experience touches the hidden spring that we have revealed to us the radiant promises of His love, and come to understand the full magnitude of his gift. From that hour, His words take on a lovelines never before perceived, and we learn to cherish them as jewels only the King himself can bestow.—Exchange.

CREATION OR GENERATION.

When I recently wrote a brief communication for the "Herald," I little knew what I was getting into. Perhaps, had I known, I would have held my peace.

And "now" Prof. Thompson goes after me. No, Professor, I have not forgotten my catechism nor my Systematic Theology, nor some other things.

I agree with some things that Bro. Thompson says, but I really do not know what he is trying to prove. I wish, however, to notice two statements which he makes.

"Bro. Dosier's statement that human souls are not created but generated is too foolish and absurd to consider." I suppose from this that Prof Thompson takes the position that human souls are created. But who creates them? The Lord God? Very well. Then he says: "I believe that every human being in infancy has in its nature the latent germ of original sin as the result of Adam's fall." I would like to ask if the infant comes into the world with the latent germ of evil, and if not when does he get it? If the soul is not generated, what has the fall of Adam to do with it? Or is not the germ in the soul? If the soul is created and not generated, and if it is created by God, then God must put into the soul of the "infant" when he creates it, or very soon thereafter, the germ of original sin. In that case God is responsible for original sin and Adam is not? I know of but one other conclusion, and that is the sin is not in the soul but in the body.

To none of the above can I agree. I am still willing to stand by the statement which he criticises, that children are from their parents, that is, by generation. I did not think it necessary to say by generation, for I thought that every one would know what I meant.

C. L. Whitaker.

Allow me to congratulate Bro. J. F. Dosier on his splendid article, "Creation Versus Generation," appearing in last week's Herald, and to add a few statements to what has been written on the subject under consideration. Not that I am seeking to enter into the arguments—because I really do not wish a place in these discussions (I am no student of theology, nor claim to know much on the subject); but there is one very important point (to me) which I have not seen brought out and I feel like telling it to those who do not see it clearly as I see it. I believe I am right and believe it is right to pass it along. However, if I be in error, any reader may feel at perfect liberty to tell me wherein I err in this matter without fear of causing an offense. Bro. Dosier has clearly pointed out Scriptures that prove man is born in iniquity. Now read 1 Cor. 15:22: "For as in Adam all die so in Christ shall all be made alive." Children, therefore, are born in sin but the atonement was made which saves the child from that inborn sin, the Adamic sin. Although Christ's death on the cross redeems the world from sin, that is, the Adamic sin, it does not take away the nature of a human being, the natural tendency of the finite being to err. Jesus Christ came into the world to save that which was lost, that is, in a lost state, was lost by that Adamic sin. So, if a child die in innocency, while it is unaccountable, it is saved by the redeeming blood of Christ. But Jesus Christ's death on the cross did not blot out the sins that people are daily committing in the body—our own sins. Reader, if you enter into eternal life when you shall have ended this life on earth, you will be there by grace. But if you fail to hear the "Well done" of our Master and enter into eternal death, you will be there because you did not repent of your own sins (not the Adamic sin) and believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. It will be your lack of faith. Nobody living in the world today shall suffer eternal punishment because of Adam's sin, but because of the sins committed in the body. Every man shall give an account of the deeds done in the body—his own deeds.

Mrs. J. W. Thacker.

FOR MORE SPIRITUALITY.

Please allow me space to say Amen to what Bro. Reed said in regard to arguing through our Church Paper as some do. It's true that our pastors are looked upon as our examples in the christian life. This being so I think our pastors ought to be good examples for us to follow. It is true Christ is our example. You don't find many churches where the membership is better than the pastor's example. Neither will you find all the churches as good. I think our pastors ought to be consecrated men and I believe they are, to a great extent. It seems to me that at times some say things that don't fit very well for our children to read and consider.

This is with no ill feeling toward any one. Yours for a better spiritual church,

A. L. BERRIER.

TO THE WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETIES.

The Thank-Offering.

Did you have it in February? If not, try to hold a public service yet and tell the public what the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society is doing in the foreign field and what they are planning to do and give them an opportunity to help carry on the work.

Have the thank-offering boxes opened and send all thank-offering money to Miss Velna McCulloch, Greensboro, N. C., and tell her it is the thank-offering from your society and she will know that it goes to the building fund.

Let us not confuse things. There was a report in a recent copy of Methodist Protestant Herald of a Woman's Foreign Missionary Society holding a thank-offering service and sending the offering to Pine Ridge (a home mission work).

Please report to me the amount of your offering so that I can get my report in shape for branch meeting.

Mrs. C. L. Whitaker,
Thank-offering Secretary.

—Leon McCulloch and another man represented the Westinghouse Electric Company in a recent meeting of engineers and metallurgists in New York City. "Experiments with Sherardizing" was the subject of Leon's paper.

—Rev. R. C. Stubbins used several hymns very effectively in last Sunday evening service. He gave some account of the writing or special use of these hymns and then they were sung.

PLAYING HORSES.

"What shall we play?" asked Pat of the other three children. "It is so fine and warm out of doors. Hurry up! What do you say, Kate?"

"Shall we have a skip?" asked Kate "That is what I should like."

Kate laughed. "Well, I don't mind," she said." "I'll play whatever you like."

"Let's play horses," said Cuth. "Kate's rope will make fine reins for me, and I know where there is a piece for Pat and Ned—near the wood-pile. Come on, all!"

So they all ran with Cuth to the wood-pile and found the other rope, and then Cuth became Kate's horse and Neddie Pat's. Of course, the two horses had to have names—Pat called his "True Boy" and Kate called hers "Stamper." For True Boy stood quiet and good while the reins were tied round his arms, but Stamper plunged and reared in a wild way.

"My horse is very frisky today," laughed Kate. "Wo-a, Stamper!"

But away went Stamper as soon as the reins were tied, tossing his head like a mad thing. Down the path and out into the dusty road, across the green field, and over the brook at such a speed.

"Wo-a! Wo-a!" cried Kate. It only seemed to make him go faster. On he flew. Kate's arm ached with the pull.

She had to drop the reins at last and let Stamper go. She sat down among the daisies on the bank and pretended to cry. But it was only "pretend." That is why Pat and Cuth and Ned all like to play with Kate. Instead of getting cross with them when they are rough, as some girls do, she turns it all to fun.

Soon Pat and True Boy came trotting by.

"Why, what is the matter, lady?" asked Pat. "Can I help you?"

"O sir, my horse has bolted," cried Kate, "and I don't know how I'll get home tonight!"

Jumping Rope.

"I'll catch him for you, lady, on my trusty True Boy," Pat told her. "Gee-up, True Boy!" and off they went after the runaway.

Stamper was right across the field by this time, but True Boy's legs were long. Soon he caught Stamper's reins as they trailed on the grass, and still with many a kick and prance, he was led back to Kate.

"Oh, thank you, kind sir," she said, "and thank you, True Boy. "My Stamper is a good horse, but he has been kept indoors so long by the rain that he has grown wild."

Then Stamper (he was Cuth really, you know) thought it was a shame to tease his kind sister any more. So he trotted all the rest of the way as good as gold.

"I'm tired of horses," said Pat then. "One good turn deserves another; let's have Kate's game now," and in a minute or two the rope was turning merrily. "Jump in, Kate; you first!" cried the boys.

"How glad I am," thought Kate, as she jumped, "that mamma taught me not to hold out for my own always. It is so much nicer to have the boys pleased to play."

Then she skipped up to a hundred and one and her cheeks were like two roses when they all ran home to tea.—The Little Soldier.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

Burlington—Last Sunday was one of the best days for the Burlington church and Sunday school this year. The attendance in Sunday school was 347, an increase of 18 over the previous Sunday. The senior Baraca class had 90 men and boys present. The Sunday school raised about $140, which was to pay off the indebtedness of the Sunday school. The senior Baraca class contributed nearly $50 of the offering. Prof. C. C. Haworth, superintendent of the Burlington graded schools, was an attendant in the Sunday school, speaking to the senior Baraca class during the lesson study period. His talk was well received by the large body of men in the class.

Pastor Taylor conducted the regular preaching service at 11 A. M., and gave the congregation an inspiring and helpful sermon on the text, "Draw night unto the Lord, and He will draw nigh unto thee."

Rain fell here Sunday afternoon and night, consequently the attendance at the evening services was smaller than usual. The senior Christian Endeavor society held their meeting at 6:30 with a fairly good attendance and helpful discussions by the members. Rev. C. B. Riddle, editor of The Christian Sun, of this city, was the speaker at the evening church service. He delivered the second of the series of addresses on the general theme, "The Pre-Eminence of Jesus in the Home." It was an excellent sermon, delivered in a very convincing manner, and there were many favorable comments on the discourse.

Next Sunday night we are to have the third of the series of Snuday night addresses on the Pre-Eminence of Christ. Gilbert T. Stephenson, of Winston-Salem, will be the speaker next Sunday night. These special addresses on the very important subject are proving very helpful to the large congregations that have been hearing them. The fourth address of the series will be heard on Sunday night, April 9, and Bro. J. Norman Wills, of Greensboro, will deliver the address.

Pinnacle.—Since coming to this field we have found enough to do to keep us continually on the move. Looking after the sick and burying the dead have taken much of our time. Since coming to this charge we have attended nine funerals; the last being the sainted mother of Mrs. J. D. Mikels, who was a member of the Baptist church. A week ago we buried our beloved brother, James Mikels. Three of these funerals were at the Baptist chuurches, one at the M. E. church, four at our church, and one at a Primitive Baptist church, our first experience in a Primitive Baptist pulpit.

Easter services will be held at Mt. Zion church third Sunday in April. Pinnacle and Shoals, too, are expecting to hold the service.

Our second quarterly conference will be held at Mt. Zion on Saturday before second Sunday in April instead of the third as announced. Brethren, please announce this change.

Wife has been at Greensboro for two weeks attending our daughter, who is very sick in Greensboro hospital. We earnestly desire your prayer for her recovery. W. D. Reed.

Mebane Mission Band.

The William Nicholson Mission Band met in the Methodist Protestant church Sunday afternoon at two o'clock. There were 29 members present. Our collection amounted to $3. We had a nice program. We sang three songs and our president read our Scripture lesson. and several had pieces to read. We had a very interesting meeting. Margaret Qualls.

Mebane.—We held our home mission thankoffering service Sunday night. On account of the bad weather there was not such a large crowd. Our service consisted of a musical program. Dr. Johnson presented the Pine Ridge work in his usual impressive way.

We are planning for a good and a helpful time at branch meeting. We hope to have a large attendance. We are working on our pageant. We have a full month for April. for we got behind at least two weeks during the "flu' epidemic. Most of our people are on the road to recovery, for which we are very thankful. Bro. J. W. Nicholson and his daughter, Margaret, are among the last to be sick. Both are beginning to sit up now and hope to be out soon.

Haw River.—The second quarterly conference of this charge will convene at Midway church on Saturday before the second Sunday in April. Preaching at 11 A. M., dinner on the ground, quarterly conference in the afternoon.

Come out, brethren, and let us plan some for the extension of the kingdom of our God

E. G. Lowdermilk, Pastor.

Missionary Services at Fallston.

The District Missionary Meeting of the Methodist Protestant Church was held at Fallston in Friendship church on Saturday, February 25. We had two services, one at 11 o'clock and another at one. The pastors from the different charges present were: Rev. A. L. Hunter of Fallston, Rev. E. G. Cowan from Bess' Chapel, and Rev. J. D. Morris from the Cleveland charge. We also had representatives from the Shelby charge.

At the 11 o'clock service the devotional was conducted by Mrs. A. L. Hunter, district chairman, after which the pastors of the charges represented gave us some interesting talks on missions.

We had dinner on the ground, and then reassembled for the afternoon service. During this service papers were read on the following subjects: Our Present Responsibilities in the Foreign Fields, The needs of Our Home Missions, Why We Should Be Interested in Missions. Also the question box was conducted by Mrs. A. L. Hunter.

Every one present seemed to enjoy the services, and I believe each of us went away with more enthusiasm for mission work and with a greater determination to do our best for the mission cause. Hester Bingham,

Corresponding Secretary.

Old-Time Quilting.

The old-time quilting parties are not forgotten by all, for at the home of Mr. and Mrs. T. G. Perry Monday evening, March 13, about a score or more young people, boys and girls, met at the call of the Young People's Home Missionary Society of the First Methodist Protestant Church.

This society decided at the regular monthly meeting held on March 6, 7:30 P. M., at the home of the president, Mrs. J. W. Boyles, to furnish a room at Alvin Drew mission school, Pine Ridge, Ky., which is a school for girls and boys.

Three nice quilts were made to help furnish this room; these quilts had names of some of the donors on them, the boys of society to pay for the cotton, linings and thread used. This occasion proved to be a most enjoyable affair, piano and victrola selections added much to the pleasure of all.

Thomasville, N. C.

Draper Station. It has been quite a while since we have let you all hear from our church, but nevertheless we are still living and not dead as some may think. By part of the mill work shutting down we have been crippled somewhat in our work, but we are still striving to do our best. We wish the prayers of all for our young church that we may grow and prosper.

To the pastors: If any wish my help in revival work I will be glad at any time to do what I can in the name of the Lord.

D. A. Morgan, Pastor.

March 20.

Friendship, Haw River Circuit.—As spring begins to open our church attendance begins to increase. Today's service was attended by an unusually large crowd. As many step out of their "winter quarters," where there should have been a home worship, into the public worship again, may they offer a strong hand to help make this a most successful year's work. After hearing Bro. Lowdermilk's sermon this morning on "Go Forward," how can we go backward and not lend a helping hand? Let us push on together.

Previous to the preaching of the sermon three delegates were elected to attend the Sunday school convention at Charlotte.

Our missionary society is to meet immediately after Sunday school next Sunday, March 26, and glad to say, the members of Brown Summit society will be with us. We feel that they will be of great help to us.

Lelia Wagoner, Reporter.

March 19.

Lebanon, Spring Church Circuit.– The readers of the Herald will be glad to know that the work is moving along nicely at Lebanon. Now that the bright, sunny days of spring are with us we are looking for even greater results.

Rev. J. L. Trollinger, our new pastor has already found his way into the hearts of the people here. His preaching is of the constructive type, free from all excitement and undue pressure, spiritually strengthening the members, who are looking prayerfully to the future as the greatest in the history of the church. Under the leadership of this good man we confidently believe the Lord will direct both church and pastor into greater heights of usefulness for his kingdom.

The Sunday school is flourishing under the leadership of our able superintendent, Mr. W. H. Camp. We are planning to buy a new organ in the near future. We have a splendid choir, with Miss Bessie Jordan as organist. Mr. W. H. Allen has charge of the choir! the improvement under his leadership is marvelous.

If any of you readers would like to see a real live working church and Sunday school, just visit Lebanon Methodist Protestant church and see how we do things here.

Josie Camp, Reporter.

West Forsyth Circuit.—The second quarterly conference will meet at Union Hill church on Saturday before the second Sunday in April at 1:30 P. M.

On next Sunday, the 26th of March, we will begin a revival meeting at Harmony Grove church. Rev. N. M. Harrison of Greensboro will come to help the pastor on Monday. He will remain with us till Saturday. Bro. J. W. Johnson of Hight Point will be with us Sunday morning with some of the well known singers of High Point. They are known as Crouch brothers, W. T. Kennedy, J. B. Swaim and some others whose names we do not have. We expect 1,000 people to attend. Bro. Johnson, who is one of the best singers in the State, will conduct the singing.

A. M. Hamilton.

Friendship, Stanly Circuit. — Sunday was another good day for us. Mr. Ridge filled his regular appointment with a good sermon; theme, "Out of Touch With Christ." Every time he preaches we think that is the best, but next time he has something better. Our congregation was off some Sunday owing to so much sickness.

Our Sunday school is good; 119 present, collection $3.27. Prayer meeting was rained out Sunday night, also Ladies' Aid society. Prayer meeting every first and third Sunday night at seven P. M. What has become of Rev. Mr. Reed? We have not heard anything from him in a long time. Maie Hatley, Reporter.

Orange Circuit.—To the official members of quarterly conference: The second quarterly conference of this charge will convene at Union Grove on Saturday before first Sunday in April; preaching at 11 o'clock, dinner, business of the quarterly conference. The presence of each official of each church desired Brethren: I am counting on you to be there Come and be on time for preaching, which should be more important than eating. We may have a monkey to show. Please take due notice hereof and govern yourselves accordingly.

H. L. Powell, Pastor.

Spring Hill, West Thomasville Circuit. — Bro. Moose filled his appointment Saturday night with an excellent sermon on the subject, Ye shall all be judged according to your works. A splendid one Sunday on the Prodigal Son. As many are inquiring about us, we are still at the same place and having service every first and third Saturday night, 7:30, and Sunday at 11 o'clock. Just come around to see us and hear what we have for a preacher and I am sure next time you will want a seat with us.

Bro. W. W. Tise was elected Sunday school superintendent. Sunday school will reorganize first Sunday at 10 o'clock. Parents, all come and bring your children. We will have a class for you and a teacher thrown in.

All-day service on Easter Sunday; song service at 10 o'clock, Easter sermon at 11 by Bro. Moose, dinner on the ground, song service in evening, conducted by Bro. J. B. Swaim and Bro. J. W. Johnson. Everybody invited to come.

Reporter.

Mt. Pleasant, Mt. Pleasant Circuit.—We are still very much alive at Mt. Pleasant, even though we have not been saying much about it. We reorganized Sunday school last Sunday with officers for the ensuing year as follows: S. R. Stafford, superintendent; W. A. Stafford, secretary-treasurer; Mrs. H. Floyd Amick, organist. The outlook for the year is very favorable.

Last Sunday was Dixie Endeavor Day in our church, and Bro. Burgess gave us an exceptionally fine sermon. His theme was "Christian Endeavor." We believe it was one of the best sermons we have ever heard from him, and that is saying a great deal. An offering was made for Christian Endeavor extension work in Dixie. Yours in the work.

H. Floyd Amick.

Fairview. — The congregation were very much disappointed Sunday when we learned that Bro. Reynolds was sick with "flu" and would not be able to preach. We hope the attack is not a severe one and his recovery will be speedy. Although the day was rainy a very good crowd was present. We were glad to have some of the members of Liberty Hill to worship with us Sunday.

The Sunday school is progressing nicely under the management of our faithful superintendent, Mr T. B. Nalley, and we hope as the spring months come it will continue to grow There are several families in the community who do not attend Sunday school and our aim is to get them in it, for we believe everybody ought to go to Sunday school. Reporter.

Zoar, Mecklenburg Circuit.—In spite of the stormy looking weather, Sunday was a good day for us at Zoar. Pastor Carson delivered a splendid sermon.

The congregation was rather large considering the weather. But I wish so much that more people could have been out to hear the good sermon. Immediately after service Bro. Carson administered the Lord's Supper.

Our Sunday school is doing very well now considering all things. Quite a number of our members have been sick. My mother (Mrs. W. C. Hartis) has been sick for weeks. Please pray for her that she may soon be in health again. We have also missed Mr. W. W. Osborne at Sunday school and preaching. He has been in the hospital but is at home now, and getting along fine Mr. Lewis Wilson is real sick—has "flu," I think. Let us hope and pray that that great epidemic will not get in full swing like it has been in the past few winters.

With best wishes to the Herald and its readers, Bertha Hartis, Reporter.

Mt. Hermon Church, Creswell Circuit.—Our work has been somewhat hindered during the past month by bad weather and roads; the first Sunday, though, was a splendid day in more than one respect; right good crowds at church services, and the day was pleasant and bright. Our pastor has a splendid message for us at every service. We observed communion and a good number of people took part.

We are hoping to have as large a number as we can to our young people's summer conference which is to be held in June at Rehoboth church.

We are not making much progress in our Christian Endeavor, but as the spring has opened up now hope our young people will take renewed interest. Callie Barnes.

Graham.—We had a very good attendance and offering at Sunday school Sunday, there being 160 present and $6 73 offering. We were glad to have several visitors at this service.

Mr. Spencer preached two splendid sermons; from the subject, A Great Man, a Mighty Man, But a Leper, at the morning service, and from the subject, The Man Who Forgot God, at the night service.

The Endeavorers are still at work, and have very interesting meetings. Regardless of the rain Sunday the Juniors had a very good attendance and a helpful meeting.

The seniors held a social at the parsonage on Thursday night. A very good number of the Endeavorers were there and seemed to enjoy it very much.

A program for our Easter entertainment is being prepared by Mrs. Spencer, Miss Linner and Miss Goley.

We are very glad that Mrs. V. N. Clark, who has been sick, is improving nicely.

Mrs. Martha Jane Neese died on last Thursday. She had been sick for about a week when she was called home. She was an earnest Christian and will be missed very much. To the bereaved family we extend our deepest sympathy. Reporter.

Anderson Circuit.—I am still in bed suffering from a relapse of influenza. My entire family has had the disease, but no one relapsed except myself. I am now improving and hope to be out soon.

Through the paper I wish to say to the people of this charge that I shall not be able to meet any March appointments. However, I expect to be at Liberty Hill the second Sunday in April and Fairview the third Sunday.

G. L. Reynolds, Pastor.

Matthews Chapel, Greensville Circuit.—Here we come again with just a few lines. We are still on the job, if we are slow. Yesterday was a good day for us. We had all-day services as we expected, and also a good congregation, but not as good as we would have had if the weather had been more favorable and the road better. We are also sorry to report there is right much sickness in and around our community. Miss Mattie Wren, who has been sick for several months, is improving, we are glad to say. Mrs. J. W. Edwards has been very ill for the last two weeks with malarial fever; she is improving.

We are expecting a full attendance at Sunday school soon as spring opens, and we are also expecting to reorganize our Christian Endeavor.

Several of our members attended services at

Our services were very brief Sunday afternoon, for Bros. Trolinger and Helms were called to conduct a funeral. Reporter.

March 19.

Whitakers Christian Endeavor Society.

Whitakers C. E. Society has lived through the cold and rainy winter and accomplished some things worth while. We have had some very interesting topics, and splendid leaders, and, I am sure all who have attended have been greatly benefited.

We have had some good times, too; on anniversary night we were very pleasantly surprised to find a banquet awaiting us. The table was beautifully decorated in our C. E. colors, red and white. Hot chocolate and a delicious salad were served. Mrs. J. M. Cutchin, Jr., the leader for the evening being "Toast Mistress," called on Prof. McLee who gave us a very unique toast in poetry. Mrs. J. H. Cutchin was then asked to give the C, E. history from the beginning to the present, which was instructive as well as entertaining. Mr. Surratt, our pastor, then prophesied the future of Christian Endeavor. I think I can truthfully say he "dipped into the future as far as human eye could see" and there beheld a bright and wonderful future for the Whitaker's C. E. Society.

Our Society has recently bought one share in the support of C. E. Missionaries in Foreign fields. We hope to add to this a little later. The society is planning a library which we feel will be of great help and much pleasure to all. A committee consisting of Mrs. L. L. Draughn, Rev. H. F. Surratt and Mrs. J. H. Cutchin were appointed to draw up the rules. We are anticipating much enjoyment, and hope to soon have our library in use.

With lots of good wishes to all C. E. workers.

MARGARETTE A. BRASWELL,
Corresponding Secretary

Bess Chapel Circuit.

Bess Chapel has not reported for some time, but we are still alive and things are going along nicely. During the bad weather Sunday school and church services were very poorly attended and on several occasions we had no service at all on account of the bad weather and the terrible conditions of the roads, but glad to report that as the weather is getting better our attendance is getting better also. Had a nice crowd for the past two Sundays for both services, and we hope to add more each Sunday from now on to the S. S. Roll. We hope to begin having preaching service at night real soon; that will give us two services a day. So altogether the out-look is brighter than it has been so far. We are planning great things here this summer: pray for us that we may accomplish much in the Master's cause.

Bro. T. M. Foster, though better and able to sit up some, is still sick and has been since Christmas day. Sister Dora Beam has been very sick in the hospital at Lincolnton for the past two weeks, having undergone three operations; she seems to be doing nicely. We hope for both these good people a speedy recovery, for we miss them so much both in the home and at church. Bro. John Heavener who underwent an operation three weeks ago has returned from the hospital and is getting along fine. Have been quite busy for the past two months visiting. Lots of my people I have not been able to visit yet; the roads are so bad that I could not get there, but as spring opens up and we get some way to travel we expect to visit every member of the church. There is some little influenza in our community but nothing like an epidemic as yet, and we hope to escape this year. During the warm days the farmers were busy in the field from daylight until dark and it made one think that spring was here sure enough, but I fear we will have a few cool days yet. This section was visited last night by a heavy thunder storm and a real hard rain. Best wishes to the Herald and all its readers.

Whitakers, Whitakers Charge.

Although the bad weather has continued, all of our appointments have been filled. Yesterday our pastor gave us a splendid sermon on the "call to the ministry." On the Sunday before he preached to us on the "call of Samuel." It is time these sermons are being preached if we are to keep the ranks filled, and we must have a larger number of ministers at home if we are to send out missionaries. I notice Mr. Minnis is to leave us for India. While we feel we need them here, they are needed worse there, and it has been such a long, long time since North Carolina has sent a missionary, (I mean our church) that we should feel thankful and proud to have these men go to represent us in heathen countries.

Our Sunday School hasn't gotten back to its normal condition yet, on account of weather conditions; Our Ladies' Aid and Woman's Foreign missionary societies met this afternoon, we did not have a large attendance but had a good meeting. We decided to have a bazaar in about two weeks. Our Christian Endeavor society has had some interesting programs lately ; so I am told; haven't been able to attend yet on account of bad weather and bad roads. At the meeting week before last I think it was decided we take a share or stock in the C. E. missionary; also at this meeting it was decided to order a number of books to begin our library. One important feature of our "Ladies' Aid" and "Woman's Foreign Missionary Society" this afternoon was the addition of a new member, Mrs. J. W. Hull. We are indeed glad to have her join us and believe she will be a big help to us. How we did enjoy seeing the picture of our college. It seems our dream of many years is about to be realized: We should thank God and take courage.

At our meeting this evening we turned in our "thankful boxes," amounting to $7.65. We are hoping for greater things in the future.

Best wishes for all the readers of the Herald.

THE HAND-BOOK.

A single copy of the 1922 Hand Book for S. S. and C. E. Workers has gone out to all the ministers and Sunday School Superintendents and lay delegates to the last sessions of the annual conferences in so far as we have these lists. We have so far been unable to get minutes from some of the conferences, so if you have not received a Hand Book it is because we have not your name and address. A form letter was inclosed in the package asking you to write for more of the books if you could use them wisely.

Thank You.

We stated that we had 8,000 copies for distribution. Many orders have come asking for from 5 to 100 copies, and with these orders have come many kind expressions of appreciation for the great amount of information in so compact a form. Several have been kind enough to suggest that the book should have a much wider circulation. We thank you, and would be glad if we were able to put it into every Methodist Protestant Home; but for lack of funds we have had to limit the number published. At our request the manager of the Stockton Press is keeping all forms, so if the present supply is exhausted and the funds can be had we can have another edition printed.

These Hand Books cost us about eight cents apiece to get them to the people, and if some one will devise some plan by which several thousand more of them may go out we shall be glad.

A small self addressed post card was also sent out with the Hand Book hoping to gather statistics conserning our C. E. Societies. Many are coming back with the desired information. We hope every one who has either one or all three of the C. E. Societies in your church will report. If you have the three societies then you need two more cards. Please let us know and cards will be sent. Thank you for this and all your co-operation. The Young People's Work is going fine, thanks to every body who is helping. Yours in the Master's service,

A. G. DIXON.

THE BOY AND THE DRAGON.

A little boy, four years old, was very much impressed by the story of "St. George and the Dragon," which his mother had been reading to him and his sister, and the next day he said to his father:

"Father, I want to be a saint!"

"Very well, John," said his father, "you may be a saint if you choose, but you will find it very hard work."

"I don't mind," replied John. "I want to be a saint and fight a dragon. I am sure I could kill one!"

"So you shall, my boy."

"But when can I be one?" persisted the child, "and where is the dragon?"

"I will tell you when he comes out," replied his father, so the boy ran off contentedly to play with his sister.

In the course of the day some presents came for the two children. John's was a book, and sister Catherine's was a beautiful doll. Now, John was too young to care for a book, but he dearly loved dolls, and when he found his sister had what he considered a nicer present than his own, he threw himself on the floor in a passion of tears.

His father, who happened to be there, said quietly, "John, the dragon is out!" The child stopped crying, but said nothing. That evening, however, when he bade his father good-night, he whispered, "Father, I'm very glad Catherine has the doll. I did kill the dragon."

DIED.

Mrs. Esther May Dodson, the daughter of Bro. James A. Hughes, died February 20, 1922. She was a member of Harmony Methodist Protestant church, where she always was interested in her church and pastor, but we believe our loss is her gain. She leaves to mourn over her death her father, four brothers, four sisters, husband and three children. She was a loving wife and faithful mother. Our sympathy goes out to all the family. May God bless her husband and help him to remember God knows best. She was born December 29, 1890 and died February 20, 1922, aged 32 years. T. E. Martin, Pastor.

Jesse Franklin Yates was born June 15, 1860, and died February 25, 1922. On February 28, 1881, he was married to Miss Callie Elizabeth Younts. To this union were born three children. Mr. C. B. Yates, Mr. Henry Yates, Miss Myrtle Yates. They all survive him, and are active members of the Methodist Protestant church at Lexington.

Brother Yates professed faith in Christ in 1881 and united with the Fairfield Methodist Protestant church; and when he moved to Lexington he moved his membership to the West Lexington Methodist Protestant church where he remained a faithful and highly esteemed member until death. The writer had been his pastor for three years and about four months, and during that time found him to be the pastor's friend. He could not attend church, owing to his affliction, but he was interested in the church. His own loved ones will miss him, his neighbors will miss him and the pastor will miss his warm welcome in the home. We hope to meet him in the eternal home of the good. Our hearts go out in sympathy for the bereaved wife and the grief stricken children. May our heavenly Father comfort them in their sorrow.

The funeral was conducted in the West Lexington Methodist Protestant church by the writer, after which his body was laid to rest in the cemetery to await the resurrection morning.

The many beautiful flowers and the large congregation that attended his funeral services, and the many good things that were said about his godly life, tell how much his neighbors esteemed him. Be faithful, dear mother and children, and meet father in heaven, for I believe he is there.

Your pastor, D. A. Braswell.

Julian Dotson, a member of Chestnut Ridge died March the 11th, aged 49 years and 15 days. Bro. Dotson had been critically ill for several months. He bore his affliction with fortitude and courage and was hopeful of getting well to the very last. He leaves a widowed mother with seven small children, an aged father, two brothers and one sister to mourn their loss.

The funeral was conducted by his pastor Sunday afternoon at three o'clock. A large congregation assembled to pay a last tribute of respect. His mortal remains were laid to rest in Chestnut Ridge cemetery.

May God graciously bless the bereaved companion and the dear little children, and He who hath promised to be a husband to the widow and a father to the fatherless provide a way for them.

Very truly, H. L. Powell, Pastor.

A Card of Thanks.

I wish to express the deep gratitude of our now bereaved and bleeding hearts to our many friends of Mebane and Chestnut Ridge community for the support and untiring kindness to my husband during his continued illness, to me, and my children. We can not forget you, dear friends, and pray God's blessings upon you. Mrs. Julian Dotson.

SHIRKING DECISIONS.

The difference between the people who make up their minds promptly and those who hesitate and postpone is not so much a matter of ability to decide, as to a willingness to do it. Many people seem to have a singular reluctance to make a decision. They will ask the advice of those whose judgment is no more reliable than their own, and follow it, seemingly with the thought that they are escaping responsibility.

A boy had been told to meet a farm wagon on a corner half a mile from home, in order to receive some chickens for the Sunday dinner. The farmer was detained and did not come, but the boy who had been accompanied by his pet dog continued to wait on the corner, till his mother became alarmed at his non-appearance and instituted a search for him. When his father came home that evening and heard the story he said, "But how did you come to do so foolish a thing, my son? You were to meet Farmer Snow's wagon at 1 o'clock and common sense should have told you that after you had waited an hour it was useless to wait any longer."

"Well, it wasn't my fault," said the boy. "I left it all to Rover. Every time I asked him if we should stay longer he wagged his tail and that meant yes. If he had barked, that would have meant no."

"Oh," said the father, "that alters the case. I was grieved to think that a son of mine, grown to be as old as you are, should not have better judgment, but I did not know what to do about it. It appears that you did not use your judgment, but left a dog to decide a question that concerned you. In that case, I think you will have to be punished." And so the boy went to bed several hours before his bedtime.

People who do not like to make decisions try to persuade themselves that in following the advice of another they have escaped responsibility. But that is not the case. The responsibility for acting wisely is a personal one and it cannot be shifted to another's shoulders. You have a right to ask advice, and it is your business to listen to advice when it is offered, but when it comes to making up your mind nobody can do it for you. Every attempt to substitute something else in place of deciding a question in accordance with your best judgment is a form of shirking for which there is no excuse.—The Little Soldier.

WHAT WE MAKE IT.

Many of us have been wondering what the New Year has in store for us. We have thought, perhaps, that some unforeseen event might occur which would lighten our burdens, double our joys, and speed us through the passing months by a shining way, with music in our hearts. It may be so, but the chances are that the year will be exactly what we make it. It will be a good year for us—if we make it so.—New Orleans Christian Advocate.

RECEIVING AND GIVING.

"And they were all filled with the Holy Spirit." Only as we are suffused in the power of the Holy Spirit can we become the media which communicate this spirit of God to others. He that ascended on high and received the Spirit, and poured it forth on others, links us to himself in this holy life, so that we may receive the Spirit in order that we may pour it forth upon others. For those who thus yield to that Spirit there shall be repeated the experience of the first Pentecost, the baptism of fire that destroys the impure and energizes the life, the blowing of the wind of God, the flowing of the river that quenches our thirst, and then becomes the very means of blessing, through us, to other men.—G. Campbell Morgan.

YOUR HOME.

What makes a real home is not its wealth or its furnishing, but its family ties and its spirit of love.

Some of the happiest homes are the homes where the furniture is plain, and where the life is simple, but where all share alike, and where each member cares for the interest of all the other members. If you are so fortunate as to have such a home, do not allow yourself to be discontented if you cannot have all that girls with more money have, and do not let the other members of your family sacrifice more than they ought to sacrifice for you. Learn to take your share of the burdens and of the doing without, and do it with a cheery, sunny spirit. It is true that you may miss some pleasures, and you may be barred from some circles if you have not wealth enough to keep up with them, but wherever you are there always will be some enjoyments beyond your reach, something that will belong to others, that do not belong to you. If you really are worth while you will not lack either friends or happiness because you sometimes may lack dollars; you will be liked for what you are. Take heartily and happily of all the brightness and happiness that come your way, but do not forget to put first things first.—Selected.

COUNTING OUR MERCIES.

Counting up our mercies and our everyday reasons for gratitude, looking at the hundred little things and large things, gentle words, loving smiles, flowers sent to cheer us, children to greet us, old friends to advise and middle-aged friends to uphold us, good books to read, dear songs to sing, meetings in gladness, even parting in hope for the better life, we do not know where to end the list. The only thing to do is to live always in an atmosphere sweet and vital with thanksgiving. "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow!" Margaret E. Sangster.

THE LITTLE RED BUSH.

O the little red bush, it was brave, it was gay,
On the hilltop so dreary and bare!
When summer was over and skies were dull gray,
And the cold winds were fighting for victory there,
In the midst of the stone
And the stubble, alone
Flamed the little red bush.

Thought the little red bush, "Down below where it's green,
May be easier living than here;
'Twould be pleasant to grow there, where one must be seen,
And not have to make ev'ry bit of good cheer
For yourself all alone
In the midst of rough stone—
Just one little red bush.

"But it's here I've been set by the Planter, who knew
Where a little red bush ought to be;
So instead of complaining, the best thing to do
Is to flame, O so brightly! that some one may see,
And be glad that alone
With the stubble and stone
Grows one little red bush."

—The British Weekly.

GOD LOVES YOU!

Weary, tired, gloomy, glad or cheerful, look up and smile. God is love. God loves you. Think over these things with something more than thoughts.

"God is more near to our souls than our own bodies."

"The Lord thy God is in the midst of thee, a mighty one who will save; He will rejoice over thee with joy, He will rest in His love; He will joy over thee, with singing."

"A root set in the finest soil, in the best climate, and blessed with all that sun and air and rain can do for it, is not in so sure a way of growth to perfection as every man who may be whose spirit aspires after all that which God is ready and infinitely desirous to give him. For the sun meets not the springing bud that stretches toward him with half that certainty as God, the Source of all good, communicates Himself to the soul that longs to partake of Him."

"Be quiet; look up, smile back to God His love-smile. We are all of us the offspring of God, more nearly related to God than to one another, for in Him we live and move and have our being.—Rev. John T. Wilds.

"LADIES FREE."

In a recent advertisement of a dance there appeared this statement: "Admission: gentlemen, $1; ladies, free." Dancing is quite strenuous exercise. It is as strenuous as walking, or running, or rowing. Why are gentlemen who think that they are not able to do much walking, running, or rowing, willing to pay one dollar each to dance for five or six hours? And why are ladies willing to submit to such strenuous and long-continued exercise? And many of these ladies are too delicate to wash dishes. There is a reason for this strange attraction of the dance.

Why do not the sexes dance apart? Why does not each one dance alone? If partners are necessary, why don't the men choose partners of their own sex? And why don't the ladies prefer to dance with partners of their own sex? There is a reason. Do you think that a dance could be kept going until the wee hours of the morning with men dancing with men alone, and women dancing with women alone? Do you suppose there could be any dance at all if the sexes were compelled to dance apart?

The dance is the devil's insidious but gigantic scheme to destroy manly and womanly virtue. The dance supplies a measure of pleasurable sexual excitement that is most dangerous to social purity. The dance has the tendency, first of all, to break down those barriers of gentlemanly reserve and womanly modesty that a holy God has set up between the sexes for their mutual protection. In the second place, the dance, by virtue of the close contact of the dancing partners, is calculated to stir up such unclean thoughts and desires that ought to shame the devil himself. The step from unclean thoughts and desires to unclean actions is a short one. And millions take this step into sexual, social and eternal ruin. And it is no wonder that the large majority of fallen women declare that they took their first downward steps in the dance hall. And the number of fallen men who have gone out of the ball-room to curse the world far outnumber the fallen women.

Is it not high time for the churches, parents and teachers to awake to the magnitude of this damnable evil? Has the ungodly world rocked the churches to sleep on this great moral question? Is it not the sad fact that many professing Christians have gone into partnership with the devil in promoting this body and soul-destroying past-time? Is it not worth while to make the supreme effort to save from this satanic snare the precious souls for whom Christ died?

"Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."—The Word of Life.

FORGIVENESS AND FEAR.

There is forgiveness with God, that he may be feared. Fear in the Bible is not terror. He whose sins are forgiven is not afraid of God, and has no reason to be. Perfect love casteth out such fear. Christian fear is reverence and consecration. David prayed, "Stablish thy word unto thy servant who is devoted to thy fear." With him the word meant service or obedience. The forgiveness of sin should be the beginning of a life devoted to the service of God. It will be so with those who appreciate his mercy. They will make known his goodness, and others may unite with them in praising his name.—Sermons for Silent Sabbaths.

FOR THE DEATH PENALTY.

The proposition to abolish the death penalty did not meet the approval of the late Dr. Edgar E. Folk, who said: "The object of punishment is threefold: (1) As a penalty, for the crime committed. (2) As a preventive, to keep the criminal from committing a similar crime. (3) As a deterrent, to keep others from committing similar crimes. In the case of murder, rape, and such crimes capital punishment is (1) the only adequate punishment: (2) the only thorough deterrent, and (3) the only sufficient preventive. The death penalty is necessary, therefore, as a protection to society, and must be preserved if society is to be preserved."—Kind Words.

"DO THEY NEED ME?"

A youth in the employment of a large manufacturing concern in Pittsburg, Pa., left one Friday evening to stay over Sunday. On Monday he wanted to stay a little longer, and telegraphed to the firm, "Do you need me? If not, I shall stay."

No response was received, which so alarmed him that he hurried back at noon. Finding everything all right he was reproaching himself for his haste, when his uncle, one of the heads of the firm, sent for him. He found the old gentleman holding the telegram.

"My boy," he said sharply, "this telegram, I understand is from you. It reads, 'Do you need me? If not, I shall stay.' Did you send it?"

"Yes, sir," came the answer, meekly.

"You did! Then let me tell you, sir," thundered the uncle, "that I have been here forty years, and they don't need me!"

The telegram was laid down, and the head of the establishment picked up his pen.

The nephew knew that the interview was over, and just as he was closing the door he heard his uncle mutter, scornfully, "Do they need me?"

TOO SOON.

God sometimes calls those servants home
Whose years are in their prime.
But He has better measures than
The pendulum of time;
Some workers quickly do their task,
Of service and of love,
So their promotion early comes
To higher work above.

God loves them, and He spares them much,
Not theirs to wait alone,
And feel the ache of useless years,
With strength and vigor gone;
They are not stranded derelicts
While tides go rushing by,
They do their part and win the race
And then they gently die.

Not theirs to lift their fading eyes
And find no comrades left.
Not theirs to dwell among the graves
Forsaken and bereft;
They pass from work to better work,
And rest before the noon,
Ah! God is very good to them,
They do not die too soon.

—Marianne Farningham.

THE QUILT SQUARES.

I am sure those who have not completed theirs are doing their best to get them filled in spite of the muddy roads and other hindrances. Won't those who have already sent in their money and not the squares mail them to me at once, as we must get the quilt ready for quilting before the branch meeting?

EDUCATING OUR CHINESE BOYS.

A number of years ago when the Boys' School in Kalgan was under the Women's Foreign Missionary Society a number of scholarships supported by Sunday-school classes, Endeavor Societies and individuals were available for helping worthy boys secure an education. The need of this kind of work has not decreased during the last few years. Indeed it has greatly increased as our church has doubled and trebled in membership and influence. But as far as I know there is only one boy supported by any society in our church. Another lady who was formerly a member of our church but who has moved away has continued to support the boy she has helped for a number of years. Very, very, often there are worthy boys with whom a little help would mean the difference between an education to make them useful in society and illiteracy to make them a burden in society. I have heard a missionary relate how one of the more famous of the early Chinese pastors once said as he saw a muck raker going along the road. "But for the grace of God I were such a man as that." And through the grace of God and the benevolence of his people many boys may be led out into fields of usefulness for Christ and the Church.

A scholarship in our Kalgan Boys' School only costs $25 a year. That is not very much to you people with your lands and houses but it means opportunity to a boy out here. Now I do not know whether a scholarship can be applied on the "Budget" or not. Secretary Klein can tell you about such things but I do know that it can be applied very fully and freely to the education of worthy Chinese boys. Of course not every boy who enters the doors of our schools is going to go out to be a Luther, or a Wesley, or even a lesser light in the church but we can expect a goodly number to be leaders in our Kalgan church and many more to be vastly more useful to Society than they were before. A new scholarship plan has occurred to me which ought to be a great help to the work here, and of interest to the church at home. Our church has spread into almost fifty different villages where we have a fair number of church members. It has occurred to me that it would be a very good thing to have a village scholarship. This scholarship woud be granted to a deserving boy in each village—preferably a graduate of the local Lower Primary School where there is one—and held by him until he shall have completed our schools here or such higher schools as it may seem wise to send him to. In case the boy will not be able to keep up with his school work the money spent upon him will not be lost as he will most naturally return to his home village and there even a boy with a little education can be of great service in leading the local church. One boy from each village on a scholarship would make it more likely that other boys from that village would come to our school and so the Kalgan schools would be connected up with our work scattered all over this section.

But whether this plan seems best or not certainly we should have every one helping as much as possible to train these boys. As far as possible we have always tried to keep people in touch with the scholarship pupils whom they were supporting and often there have been letters to the people to encourage them. We are still ready to take time from our other work to promote your interest in our scholarship pupils both for the sake of the good it will do you and for the sake of the good it will do our boys out here.

A number of our best of the younger workers have been scholarship boys formerly. Liu Kuei I elected one of our delegates to the National Christian Conference in Shanghai next May and a helper in our evangelistic work as well as the most satisfactory teacher of Mandarin that Dr. Fleagel has ever found is a conspicuous example. He will be well remembered by Pittsburgh friends as "Billy Sunday." Wang Wan Fang who has completed two years in Jefferson Academy, Tungchou, and spoken of by his teachers there as the brightest of our boys from Kalgan, is out of school this year and is doing good work at Chaikoupu outstation. Six of our old scholarship boys are in schools in Peking and Tungchou, and others are in training for service in other lines where they are not supported by our Mission. Wang was formerly supported by friends at Marion Station, Md. There is no doubt that this form of service is a wise one. Every missionary usually picks some worthy boy or girl to help in school. Shall we not enlarge our activities and pick out one for you?

If you want a scholarship please write to Secretary F. C. Klein, 316 N. Charles St., Baltimore, Md. Or if you want to write direct to the Mission field you may. In sending money to the Mission field, do not trouble with money orders, or getting the money exchanged into local Chinese currency. That only makes trouble for yourself and for us. Send the money in a draft on New York City and we can use it to the best advantage.

Yours to help the least of these,

CHARLES S. HEININGER.

A WORKER'S PRAYER.

Lord, speak to me, that I may speak
In living echoes of thy tone;
As thou hast sought, so let me seek
Thy erring children, lost and lone.

O lead me, Lord, that I may lead
The wandering and the wavering feet!
O feed me, Lord, that I may feed
Thy hungering ones with manna sweet.

O strengthen me, that while I stand
Firm on the Rock and strong in Thee,
I may stretch out a loving hand
To wrestlers with the troubled sea.

O teach me, Lord, that I may teach
The precious things Thou dost impart;
And wing my words, that they may reach
The hidden depths of many a heart!

O give Thine own sweet rest to me,
That I may speak with soothing power
A word in season, as from Thee,
To weary ones in needful hour.

O fill me with Thy fullness, Lord,
Until my very heart o'erflow
In kindling thought and glowing word—
Thy love to tell, thy praise to show.

O use me, Lord, Use even me
Just as Thou wilt, and when and where,
Until Thy blessed face I see—
Thy rest, Thy joy, Thy glory share.

JUDGE CLARK ON GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP OF RAILROADS.

Walter Clark, Chief Justice, of the Supreme Court of North Carolina, predicts that government ownership of railroads will be the ultimate if not the immediate result of the present railroad strike. He not only predicts that it will be so, he argues that it should be so.

His prominence will attract attention to his opinion and arguments. His views on the control of public utilities have been stated before and he has been by some classed with the socialists.

But his opinions and utterances must be judged by their inherent worth; they cannot derive any merit from the position to which he has been exalted by the votes of his fellow-citizens.

With the great respect which most of us entertain for Judge Clark, one wonders whether his judgment may not be at fault from lack of practical experience in the business world and also from the possession of a temper that notwithsanding his years of judgeship may not always be thoroughly judicial.

Still he may be right in his opinion that the government should control the railroads and other public utilities. The question is of great importance and should be thoroughly studied by the American people before making a radical change. It is important first of all to know the truth, to see and understand the facts. Public statements do not agree as to the facts. One statement of the facts would make the impression that vast wealth is being taken from the public and heaped up by the railroad managers. Another statement would make the impression that just dividends cannot be paid to stockholders because of insufficient revenues. One statement would make the impression that our recent trial of government control (in war-time) proves conclusively that government control is not most economical or best. Another statement would make the impression that transportation must fail utterly without government control.

It is a question of two sides and both sides should be given full and fair consideration. It cannot be rightly settled without a study of many complex elements.

Mr. Clark's fundamental position seems to be that a few men will take advantage of the opportunity to control public utilities and will rob and oppress and almost enslave the many. Granting that this is true, the question of remedy or prevention may have more than one answer. There is government regulation as well as government ownership. The government can demand reports and can tax incomes.

Mr. Clark charges that the legislation against trusts has proven useless and that income and inheritance taxes are evaded. This is discounting the efficiency of government. If the government can't function to regulate, how can it efficiently control?

Mr. Clark points out that in all other countries most if not all public utilities have passed into public ownership. England was behind other European countries in this movement, but in 1870 the telegraph lines became public property and in 1914 (the year the war began) railroads were taken over by the government. This may or may not argue for the same thing in the United States. The fact that it has occurred does not of itself prove that it is better so.

Mr. Clark charges that at the close of the war the former railroad executives organized union-wide propaganda to decry the success of government operation. This is a serious charge and surely it would not have been made by Mr. Clark without evidence to support it. But it does not prove that private ownership is not best. Those railroad executives might have believed it best and might have been guilty of using bad means to promote what they thought was a good end.

The objection that there would be political danger in so great an increase in the number of government employees as would result from taking over the railroads is answered thus:

"If the government can operate as it does the postoffice with 600,000 employes; and if it can operate its navy and its army, without private ownership and not for private profit, it can certainly operate its public utilities in the same manner."

But this really does not meet the objection, though it may perhaps be met on other grounds.

We are glad to see men of wide knowledge and of fair-mindedness like Judge Clark take part in the discussion of this immensely important public quesction. It is out of the thought of many such minds that the truth will at length emerge.

TWO IMPORTANT PUBLICATIONS ON PROHIBITION.

A short time ago the Manufacturers Record, of Baltimore, published letters from hundreds of leading men of affairs expressing their judgment as to the effect of the prohibition of the liquor traffic. This was regarded as "the most important publication ever issued in this or any other country on Prohibition." Certain it is that it bears strong testimony to the merits of prohibition; 98.50 per cent of these men of affairs favor prohibition in some form; 85.50 per cent favor strict prohibition; only 1.25 per cent are against the Volstead law. Mr. Richard H. Edmonds, editor of the Manufacturers Record, has done the country an important service in securing and publishing these letters. The publication would make a book of 150 or 200 pages and sells for 50c a copy.

Now the Board of Temperance of the Methodist Episcopal Church issues another important work nearly as large on "How Prohibition Works in American Cities." This also indicates the great value of prohibition even in the great cities that have heretofore been the principal strongholds of the liquor traffic. For instance, in Louisville, Ky., there were 3,624 arrests for drunkenness the last year of liquor, and only 412 the first year of prohibition. A business man of that city testifies: "Louisville today is a paradise compared to what it was before Prohibition went into effect." Other large cities show similar improvement.

Fair-minded attention to the revelation of these two publications can, we think, leave no doubt in any mind as to the worth of prohibition.

COUNT THE GOOD DAYS.

During the closing months of his life Gladstone suffered intense pain. He bore it heroically rather than submit to an operation which might result fatally. When a friend wrote to him expressing grief at his sufferings the great statesman replied, "No doubt I have suffered a good deal during the last six months, but then I had ten hundred and fifty-six months almost without pain." That is Christian arithmetic. That is the kind of reckoning that brings sunshine even in the midst of darkness. life is a matter of emphasis. It is possible so to emphasize six months of sickness that they over-balance in our minds and the minds of our dear ones more than a thousand months of health. Gladstone was a statesman of the Kingdom of Heaven as well as of the United Kingdom.—Exchange.

MARKING THE COUNIRY CHURCH.

I have many times wished that country churches were marked so I would know what churches they are when I pass them by the roadside. Some time ago I passed a nice brick church located in the grove by the roadside, and just as soon as I had an opportunity I inquired of some one to know what church it is. The person of whom I made inquiry did not know, but I kept on asking until I did find out.

All churches might receive helpful and inexpensive advertising in this way. Our church, for instance, not being so large as some other denominations, is not well known in some sections. Suppose the stranger, in passing, were to see some of our nice country churches marked, "Shiloh Methodist Protestant Church," "Tabernacle Methodist Protestant Church," or whatever the name may be, the probability is that the impression would not be lost, and the church would get some favorable advertising. It is not at all improbable that he would have occasion to comment on it fifty, a hundred, or may be, five hundred miles away. And besides, it would be gratifying to Methodist Protestants, in their travels, to find, here and there, marked Methodist Protestant churches.

It seems to me that this matter is worth while. I should like to know the name of every church that I pass in my travels, and I suspect that I am not totally different from others in this respect. I wonder how many churches we have in the country that the passing stranger would know are Methodist Protestant churches. I passed one of our churches in High Point a few days ago and was interested and pleased to see an attractive sign conspicuously placed, "English Street Methodist Protestant Church." Every one who passes there can know at a glance what church that is. And this ought to be true of all of our country churches. At least, it does seem so to me. S. W. Taylor.

REORGANIZING A GREAT MOVEMENT.

Unquestionably the most informing, and impelling movement in the interest of missions was that which was promoted and carried to success by the laymen of different denominations.

It was not of mushroom growth, nor was it of sporadic outbursts, neither of limited, localizeed results.

It was conceived in prayer born of a great need, sustained by devotion and unselfish service, and reached from the great centers to the utmost confines of the participating denominations.

Its array of facts and figures in leaflets, booklets and posters, its corps of well-informed and forceful speakers, its practical and efficient plans, and the great objective towards which all tended arrested attention, enlisted support, and led to its incorporation as a distinct part of the regular workings of not a few denominations and their many local churches.

It is doubtful if foreign missions ever had such a vivid and convincing presentation to the people of North America, and if pastors and church members were ever given more satisfying reasons and workable plans to accomplish their share of the Kingdom's work, and if more recruits for the foreign field and resources for the development and extension of all interests abroad were ever secured, and if such good business methods for the conduct of church affairs were ever submitted.

Having accomplished so great and good work, and having suspended operations without any discredit to its leadership, or any impairment of its plans, and because conditions have rapidly changed in most churches "under the budget system, with the danger of neglecting to emphasize the missionary appeal in churches," and because many leaders feel there is an increasing need for the activities of the laymen in disseminating information, and presenting the claims and urgent needs of both the foreign and the home fields, and for securing the marked benefit of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, a meeting was held in Chicago composed of "representatives of 19 different communions."

After full discussion, it was unanimously decided that the need for the movement is greater now than when it was organized in 1906, and definite action was taken towards its reorganization under the former name.

It was recognized that present conditions are such that the activities of the movement would not be in conflict with other activities, and that the time has come to have the laymen "give themselves in increasing measure, and in increasing numbers to the extension of the Kingdom of Christ, leading them to study, to pray, to give, and to work in order that the great commission of our Lord may be carried out."

The function of the movement "is purely educational, inspirational and practical, and it is neither an unionizing nor a federating agency, and it administers no missionary funds, and its platform is utilized solely in urging laymen to faithful service in carrying out the missionary programs of their respective churches, and its program will require a minimum of machinery in addition to what already is in the field."

The Board of Foreign Missions approved the re-organization of the Layman's Missionary Movement, and instructed its Corresponding Secretary to co-operate in carrying forward its plan. Fred C. Klein.

HOW TO DISPOSE OF CARE

There is such a thing as care. Who does not know it by experience? Who has not felt it in his heart? How heavily it presses there, and it pierces, too. It is a burden; and it is also a sting. Nothing is more unfriendly to happiness than care. It is hard to be happy with a load on the heart. The objects of care are almost innumerable. What shall I eat, what shall I drink, and wherewithal shall I be clothed, are only a few of its anxious interrogations, and they are among the least important of them. These concern ourselves, but care often forgets itself in its solicitude for others. Parents, especially mothers, know what I mean by this. But I need not attempt to explain a word that expresses what we all feel.

There is a care both for ourselves and others which God Himself has cast upon us, and of which it would be sinful to make any other disposition than he has made of it. But over and above this, there is a large amount of solicitude and anxiety which we lay upon ourselves, and which is unnecessary, useless, and injurious. This is the care that is unfavorable to happiness. The other is friendly to it. It is very desirable to get rid of it, since it does us harm and does no one good. Nothing is more hostile to the successful care of the soul than the pressure and poignancy of the care of which I speak. "Careful and troubled about many things," we intermit or entirely overlook the care of the "one thing needful." But what shall we do with it; how get rid of it, since to bear it is so painful to our feelings, and often so ruinous to our better interests? We may divide it with others to some little extent. There is such a thing as sympathy. There is such an operation as unburdening the mind to a fellow-creature. And I will not deny that there is some relief in it. Yet the very etymology of the word, "sympathy" evinces that it is no remedy. It is, after all, a suffering together. A great deal of what constitutes sympathy is grief that we can but grieve, sorrow that we can but succor. Mixing tears does not diminish their bitterness, but weeping with those who weep does not wipe away their tears. They weep on, and the only difference is that we weep with them and our tears may be said to dilute theirs. There is a better way of disposing of care than to cast it on our fellow-creature. Indeed, what fellow-creatures can we find who have not enough of their own to bear, without receiving an additional burden from us? What friend has not himself surplus care to dispose of?

There are some who cast off care without reference to what becomes of it. They sing, "Be gone, dull care." These are the reckless. Care may go at their bidding, but the worst of it is it is sure to return again, and it comes back a heavier burden, duller than before. This is not the way to dispose of care. Yet there is a way whereby all excess of anxiety may be effectually removed, and the heart be left with all its tender affection, and yet with no more solicitude than such as the blessed in heaven might feel without diminution of happiness. It is to cast care on God. That is the true and only effectual way to dispose of care. He can take the burden, however huge and heavy. On one can doubt that, but some ask, Will he? May I cast it on Him—I, such a one as I, cast my cares, the whole multitude and burden of them, on such a being as God? I know the government of the mighty universe and the providence which extends to the minute equally as to the magnificent, reaching low as to the falling of the sparrow, and the numbering of the hairs of the head, does not distract or burden Him. He can take a larger charge and not feel it. But will He? Will such greatness stoop to such littleness, such holiness come down to such vileness? Yes, it will, for condescension is one characteristic of greatness; and "the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." But why do I reason? Does not the Holy Ghost say by David, "Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he shall sustain thee," and by Paul, "Be careful for nothing"? And does not Immanuel Himself say, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest"? No longer ask if you may, but use your privilege. Here is your authority. The Lord says you may do it. It is our duty, as well as our privilege. So far it is from being presumption to cast our care on God, it may be a sin not to do it.

This is the way to dispose of care, and it is no matter how much there is to it. God will take it all. It is no burden to Him. Many have made this disposition of their cares, and all testify how willingly He took and bore them; and if at times they took back the burden, yet willingly He received it again when again it was cast upon Him.

There is a reason given by Peter for casting care on God, that is inexpressibly touching. He says, "Casting all your care on him," and then follows no flourish of rhetoric, no parade of reasons, but this—O how happily selected, I would say, but that he wrote by inspiration, which does everything felicitously —"for he careth for you." Why should we care for ourselves since God cares for us. Here is a topic not for the meditation of an hour merely but for eternity. He careth for you. Can it be? O why should he? What a thought to carry through this vale of tears, and to go down with into the deeper valley of death, that God cares for me! He concerns Himself about me. Some poor saints think nobody cares for them. But God does. Is not that enough? He that regards the cry of the raven, and gives all the fowls of heaven their food, and decks the lilies of the field, doth much more (?) care for us. He concerns Himself for His creatures, will He not much more for his children? Are we not of much more value, whom no less a price could redeem than the blood of His Son? Let this suffice for us.

I know not anything that goes so soon and surely to my heart as the sight of a poor sobbing or sorrowful looking child, an orphan, or worse than parentless, whom no one seems to care for. But if I weep at such a sight, it dries up my tears to think that there is, after all, one who cares for the poor child, even He who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me." O come, let us cast our care on God. Let us go to Jesus for rest. In Him we can find sympathy such as man can feel, with support such as only God can afford. There we shall meet with such pity as at first weeps with the sufferer, and then wipes away his tears. Surely He who bore our sins will not refuse our cares. "Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows."

THE LITERARY DIGEST POLL.

By R. L. Davis.

The questionnaire now being sent out by the Literary Digest asking for a straw ballot on the matter of bonus for the soldiers and the modification of the Volstead Act is subject to much criticism. There can be no lawful modification of the Volstead Act in contravention of the United States Constitution, and so to modify the Volstead Act as to allow the sale of wine and beer would be to nullify the Eighteenth Amendment. This is true because medical science and the courts of our land, for fifty years part, have held that beer and wine are intoxicating liquors and the Eighteenth Amendment prohibits the manufacture and sale of "intoxicating liquors" for beverage purposes. Because of this fact, thousands of people who favor the strict enforcement of the Volstead Act and oppose any nullifying modifications are paying no attention to the ballots. But the wets are turning theirs in and therefore the Literary Digest results are erroneous. However, there are may people who will overlook the fact that the results of the political primaries, which are to be relied upon, are proving that the great majority of citizens are not only against the beer and wine amendment but are against congressmen, United States senators, and governors that declare themselves in favor of it. It would be fine, however, if all the drys who receive the Literary Digest ballots would mark them and send them in. We have just received information that two and one-half million ballots are now being distributed among the women.

THE TEARS OF A GREAT MAN.

There are few more dramatic and intensely human scenes in the long, long life-story of mankind which the Bible pages so vividly pass before us on the printed screen, than that of Joseph, the long-lost son of his father, Jacob. Enshrined in those ancient documents that have defied all the changes of a rapidly changing world during such an immense stretch of centuries, the graphic and absorbing record of a man who had moved up from a pit of abandonment and cruel, excruciating distress, to a throne of authority and power in the land of Egypt, is the life-like portrayal of Joseph and the part he played in the pressing needs of that far-off time. The chief characteristics of that man of Hebrew birth have been forever preserved, and something like a noble earthly immortality has crowned a life upon which there at one time fell the darkness of a seeming and certain doom. Here is a record of endurance under the greatest of trials, of triumph over wrong, of forgiveness worthy of the most saintly soul, and of advancement, the whole of which possesses a fascination that endures from age to age.

Is there anything in literature more thrilling to the emotions or more captivating to the imagination than the occasion when Joseph appeared before his brethren as they presented the story of the need that had brought them from Canaan to Egypt? In most touching and appealing form, these pilgrims from the home land recited their message of the famine-stricken conditions from which they had come down to the land of which great things had been told them since their childhood days. It was seventeen years since Joseph had last seen the faces of the ten men who now, in their privation, stood before the man who was practically the acting king of a far-extending and powerful kingdom. Tha last look at these men of the same household when in their revenge and brutality they sold their innocent brother to the company of Midianites, to what seemed a cruel and hopeless fate, must have been to the helpless youth an experience of piercing agony and burning pain. And now for the first time in all those seventeen years Joseph, the governor of a vast territory, was confronted by the very men who had in cold blood committed a dastardly deed and who had increased their guilt by deliberate falsehood.

When these travel-stained men, changed in some respects by the passage of the years, stood before the great Egyptian official with their touching, appealing message for help in the time of their country's distress and growing need, the governor, in his palace and arrayed in courtly attire, at once recognized his brethren and at once felt a great opportunity had come at last—not an opportunity for revenge and drastic punishment truly deserved, but an occasion when all that was best in his character and feelings had ample opportunity for expression in the most practical and kindly way. After some brief preliminaries on Joseph's part in which he mastered all his powers of restraint, he at last surrendered to the compelling power of a great emotion, and turning about from the ten strangers, the great man of the great heart and soul went into some retired place in the massive building and found relief in tears! When this first breakdown was thus relieved the illustrious Hebrew braced himself for another interview with the men of his own blood and home, and returned and communed with them.

The frequency of Joseph's tears is a compelling feature of a situation which for deep emotion, of touching tenderness, and unforgettable memories of the home of his birth and of those who might still remain, is at once a revelation of one of the finest, noblest characters that have found a place in the great picture gallery of the world. Again, when the brethren had returned from Canaan with the assurance that their father was yet alive and in good health, and when Joseph saw his young brother Benjamin, who had accompanied the rest on their return from the old home, he exclaimed, "Is this your younger brother, of whom ye spake unto me?" When they answered in the affirmative, once more the great unspoiled heart was profoundly moved, and Joseph made haste and "sought where to weep." After this rain of tears he washed his face and went out and by a special effort kept control of himself for a short time. When he could carry the effort of restraint no longer, the barriers gave way, and Joseph "wept aloud," so that the Egyptians heard.. We think we can hear the courtly attendants saying, as the sound of the weeping broke in upon them, "Behold, how he loved them!" And soon after the revelation of himself to his brethren in that supreme moment of their profound astonishment, if not utter bewilderment and deepening apprehensions, the record of the altogether thrilling narrative says that Joseph "fell upon his brother Benjamin's neck and wept; and Benjamin wept upon his neck."

In that affectionate embrace there stands before all time a spectacle of one richly attired and another in humble clothing in each other's arms. The social distinctions in the matter of personal appearance were overcome by that deep, mastering power of a natural affection which neither time nor place could finally restrain or destroy. At that memorable moment of Joseph's manifestation of his true identity, he came closer to them all in his ardent compassion and "kissed all his brethren, and wept upon them."

In the closing chapters of the Biblical record, it is written that when the aged father, Jacob, traveled all the way down to the land of the Pharaohs and appeared in the presence of his famous son, who had gone to meet him, Joseph fell on the neck of his patriarch father and "wept on his neck a good while." And when the end came to the aged pilgrim and Joseph saw that his father was dead, he came close up to him as he lay in silence of death, after a weary pilgrimage of over one hundred years, and "fell upon his father's face, and wept upon him, and kissed him," and then made every possible arrangement to carry out to the letter the request that his father had made just before his eyes closed in death, that he be buried in the land he loved so well.

Joseph's conduct throughout all these touching circumstances was the conduct of a true man, whose piety and filial affections, all the honors of position, of wealth, of social surroundings, and of political power could not and did not spoil. To have kept himself untarnished for so many years by all the powerful influences of a foreign country and in a position of such elevation, in one form or another, was a triumph of character that has not failed to win the unstinted admiration of all subsequent years. To have built up such a splendid personality with such comparatively meager environment and religious resources, in such a land and in such an age, is one of the finest achievements in the records of the human race. And to have retained such an affectionate regard for such an imperfect family as was Jacob's is another splendid victory over faulty conditions, and a conclusive proof that the common family ties which bind us together are among the deepest things in our nature and will often assert themselves in ways most arresting and most impressive. The tears of Joseph in the Egyptian mansion were not manifestations of weakness: they were the tears that indicated a great soul which refused to hide its passionate, affectionate tenderness for its own when the circumstances of life called aloud for such an expression, even to tears repeated again and again.—Dr. Wm. Harrison, in Zion's Herald.

BETTER TEACHING IN OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

By A. D. Closson.

(Note: This paper was read by Brother Closson, one of Brother Casto's "boys" at the Bethel Home, at the District Conference at Mt. Zion church the fifth Sunday in July. I commend it to the earnest attention of every Sunday school teacher. Brother Closson teaches a class at Clark's Chapel, and is just such a teacher as he tells about in this paper —C. W. B.)

We have been asked to read a paper on the subject of "Better Teaching." But we have enlarged the title to read, "Better Teaching in Our Sunday Schools," especially emphasizing that personal pronoun "our." "We are laborers together with God," the inspired apostle tells us, and in Sunday school work there should be a deep and constant sense of partnership with each other, and with God. "Our Sunday School." Does it not imply a personal interest, a part in its activities, a sharing in the responsibilities of increasing its growth and usefulness? And may we say just here that nowhere should the Sunday school be stronger than in the country districts? Everywhere—city, town, or village, the Sunday school should rank second only to the regular preaching service in strength and power and influence. Especially is this true on the country circuits where preaching services can be held but two or three times each month, making impossible weekly instruction by the pastor in the truths of God's Word. How urgent, then, the need of effective, wisely planned, and persistent efforts Sunday after Sunday, to instruct the people of the community in the eternal truths of scripture. The pastor of a charge where this is done may feel assured that in his absence seed is being sown with faithful regularity, and sincere efforts born of love for God and man.

What of the teacher's part in this splendid work of instructing others in God's Word? His responsibility before God is great, to say the least about it. First of all, he is a living epistle, for his pupils will read his life before they will read the Book he holds up to them. Consistency in the life, faithfulness in well doing, a missionary spirit in his desire for the salvation of souls, devotion to the things that advance God's Kingdom on earth —these are the qualities every teacher should possess.

But how shall we become better teachers, and thus make our teaching more effective in moulding and influencing the lives of those in our classes? Only thirty minutes of every week are granted the teacher to instruct the minds and impress the hearts of his pupils. Really but a moment of time when we consider the many remaining hours until the next session in which time Satan will seek repeatedly to enter the heart and destroy the good seed that may have been sown therein. Just twenty-six hours in a year, if a perfect attendance record were maintained. In other words, only one full day in 365 to learn in a public class of the Way of Eternal Life. Once upon a time in the history of Israel, God said, "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge." Is that not equally true today? Again and again do Christians stumble for lack of knowledge of their Father's will for them. How frequent is the light dim and clouded, yet if we would but take it, there is at our hand a Great Light—for the Psalmist declares, "Thy Word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path." Oh, how that light is needed in your life and in mine.

Then let us consider for a few moments several suggestions which teachers may find of practical use in their classes. Because our personal experience has been almost entirely with senior and adult classes, what we will say will relate chiefly to those grades.

First of all—and this applies to any department—more love for Christ our Savior will result in more effective teaching. If we have grown cold and indifferent toward our Lord and His claims on us, how is it possible to communicate to our pupils His longing to own their love and allegiance? If we are careless in attendance, how can we expect faithful attendance from others? If we make insufficient preparation on the lessons, can we hope to create interest and enthusiasm for Bible study? Can we hold our pupils' interest and attention week after week if we simply ask the questions in the lesson journal, and make no effort to provoke original thought or profitable discussion? If we do not read some denominational or other religious magazine how can we understand the tremendous needs of a world steeped in sorrow and misery and sin? Can we adequately show to our pupils that the Gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ is the only lasting remedy for the healing of the nations and the happiness and blessing of every human being? But a deeper love for Christ, a fuller consecration, a new vision of the highest need of human souls, will change all this. Enthusiasm will replace indifference, faithfulness will be substituted for carelessness, earnest and prayerful study of the Bible and the needs of the church and the world will take the place of possible neglect.

Let us remind ourselves again that in this magnificent work we are laborers together with God. And that when He commands the love and allegiance of our hearts, He also claims the use of all our mental powers. In other words, we are to use practical means in teaching.

Let us name, first, the use of the Bible in the class. The lesson journal frequently prints, for lack of space, but a portion of the lesson. Without the Bible, the introduction to the lesson and other important material are missing. Even an intelligent review by the teacher of that part of the lesson that is not printed cannot take the place of the Bible itself. We are firm believers in comparing Scripture with Scripture to confirm and interpret Scripture—and this use of the Bible is to us the most vital reason for its presence in the class-room. Every Sunday school lesson has its moral and personal application. The Bible is at once a progressive and complete revelation from God. Human nature has been the same since the fall of Adam, and whether our study is in the first book of the Old Testament or the last book of the New, God has something to say to each of us for our comfort or blessing or warning. The lessons we have been studying since January hold many personal applications, even though the events in them transpired twenty-five centuries ago. Impress those particular applications upon your pupils' minds each Sunday by asking this one or that one to find in his or her Bible a reference verse bearing on the point you wish to emphasize. These reference verses are written on small slips of paper which are passed among the students at the beginning of the study, allowing them plenty of time for finding them. Each reference should be chosen with care, so that the thought you wish to emphasize will be brought clearly and forcibly to the minds of the entire class. We believe there are several advantages in this method. Spiritual truths need very frequent repetition, for we are so prone to forget them. Shall we repeat that? Spiritual truths need very frequent repetition, for we are so prone to forget them. The great doctrines of salvation should be kept simple and clear in our religious thinking, for never in history has there been so much doubt, confusion and perversion of God's Holy Word as there is at the present time. And who can over-estimate the importance of storing the mind with scores and hundreds of Scripture verses as a weapon with which to defeat the assaults of Satan? The Bible is the Sword of the Spirit, and many can testify to its effectiveness in fighting the adversary of their souls. Jesus' temptation at the beginning of His ministry was threefold, and on each occasion He defeated Satan by quoting Scripture to him. In His boyhood and youth He filled His mind with Old Testament Scripture, so that when Satan approached Him, He was able to resist him with the Sword of the Spirit. Can we do better than to follow His plan?

A summary of the arguments we have advanced for this method, will, we believe, prove its undoubted advantages. First. Frequent repetition of spiritual truths. Second A clear, firm grasp on the fundamental doctrines of salvation. Third. The importance of storing the mind with Scripture for use against Satan in his subtle and unceasing attacks. Those in sorrow need comfort, those in temptation, deliverance, those in doubt, assurance, those in perplexity, enlightenment, those in weakness, strength, those in despair, hope. The ministry of the Holy Spirit and the comfort of the promises we find in God's Word can alone satisfy these manifold needs.

Happy is that teacher whose pupils take such a whole-hearted interest in the lesson studies that fruitful discussions take place at every session. First of all, it indicates serious and thorough home-study. There are many subjects on which we freely and unhesitatingly express our opinions, but so often when we enter the Sunday school class room, we suddenly become timid and silent. It cannot be because we hold no opinions on religion, for every man or woman, young man or young woman, has done one of two things—either accepted or rejected Christ as his or her personal Savior, and therefore he or she is not without opinion. May insufficient preparation of the lesson account for it, or lack of knowledge of the Bible as a whole? We are inclined to the latter belief, and here again is shown the importance of the extensive use of the Bible in class work. Let us who are teachers present the lessons in such a way as to draw out our pupils in profitable discussion.

What teacher would not enjoy having questions asked by the students? How delighted he would feel, if he knew that next Sunday fifty or even twenty-five per cent of his class would ask questions. Without entering into a discussion on this point, we can readily agree it indicates interest and attention on the part of the pupil. And needless to say, the teacher would need to be alert, informed, and in possession of a good general knowledge of the Bible.

For a moment let us talk of lesson helps. The teachers' Journal of our church is splendid. The historical material is especially good. We believe, however, the regular use of the questions below the printed text is detrimental to original thought and mutual discussion, for they seem intended wholly as a memory test for the individual student in his home preparation.

It is often desirable that material for study should be secured from more than one source. Many teachers use Peloubet's or Tarbell's Notes. They are excellent. Personally, we prefer "The Sunday School Times," believing it to be the best lesson help obtainable. It is a weekly journal published in Philadelphia, and a year's subscription costs no more than a volume of Peloubet's or Tarbell's Notes. In addition to splendid material written by a staff of expert Sunday school workers, for every grade from primary to adult, there frequently appear special articles on the current lesson, written by eminent and conservative Bible scholars. There is untold wealth of choice material in this weekly periodical which costs only four cents a copy. A good Bible dictionary is of course helpful for reference on the historical, geographical and biographical aspects of the lesson. Some teachers have a natural ability to tell stories and anecdotes well. These should be chosen with care, and with regard for their relation to some point in the lesson which you wish to emphasize. A good story, well told, is frequently the medium of illustrating a vital truth, in a way to impress a listener forcibly and permanently. Teachers make wise investments when they purchase books on methods and problems of teaching. There are many such volumes, designed to assist us in becoming more efficient teachers.

We have thus seen that teaching invites the very best and highest in every one who has been called to this labor of love for our Master. Then what is the sum total of our task? It is this: to plant the seed of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ with faithfulness and fidelity, never wavering, for He is faithful Who hath called us. So let us pray with the Psalmist, "Open Thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of Thy law." And may the Holy Spirit grant us more grace, more wisdom, more faithfulness, to press toward the mark for the prize of this high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

PRESIDENT'S LETTER.

PASTORS' REPORTS ANALYZED—

Rev. G. F. Millaway reports $217 paid on salary, $152 on G. C. B., $100 on A. C. B.; 65 visits, 26 professions, 20 accessions, eight subscriptions.

Rev. R. A. Hunter reports paid on salary to date $1315, G. C. B. $44, A. C. B. $56; 300 visits, professions five, accessions 14, net gain 11.

Rev. J. W. Hulin reports paid on salary to date $430 nothing for G. C. B., A. C. B. $38; professions six, two accessions.

Rev. J. F. Alexander reporting for Midland—paid pastor $217 to date, nothing for either budget; 128 visits, professions seven.

He reports for Allison Grove—paid pastor $76, nothing either budget; visits 64; professions five, accessions five, net gain three.

Rev. J. H. Bowman reports paid pastor $210, G. C. B. $20, A. C. B $12; visits 60, professions one, accessions one, expended on remodelling church $1200.

Rev. A. L. Hunter reports paid pastor $394 to date, G. C. B. $18; visits 300, professions 70, accessions 40, net gain 30, subscriptions one. Church dedicated.

Rev. C. E. Phillips reports paid pastor $800 to date, conference claims $95; visits about 200 for quarter, baptized 15, accessions 15, subscriptions one.

PAY-UP SUNDAY—

October 22. Do not forget. Let's bend every effort to make this a great day in our Zion. A day when more churches shall go on both honor rolls because they pay up all claims than ever before.. We can do it; and here is my offer to help in every way.

CHARGES VISITED—

I have visited during August the following charges: Spring Church, Denton, Pinnacle and dedicated Hebron church, Fallston charge.

I find our people hopeful in most of the churches visited and I am encouraged by their faith and works to expect greater things from them in the coming years.

LACK OF SYSTEM AND LACK OF ENTHUSIASM—

The two are very closely related. We sometimes lack system because we have no enthusiasm and then we often lack enthusiasm because we have no system. But one thing is certain, I do not know of a single church that has failed to meet the opportunities before it where it had system in its business affairs and enthusiasm in the hearts of its members for the cause of Christ.

Brother, if your church does not employ system in raising the money it is the duty of the membership to raise, introduce system into it. Get the burden of the causes to the hearts of the membership and get an individual response to these appeals. This will go farther in arousing an enthusiasm for the causes than almost anything you can do.

If all of our pastors would rest not until they have gotten their members to pay systematically, to work in a definite way, to read and pray daily, to seek every day to do some religious service; as they joined him in these things enthusiasm would come and come in like a flood. And all of our "sleeping giants" would be wide awake and responding to the many needs about them. But it is better to be a grasshopper with the willingness and ability to hop, than to be a giant so sound asleep that it never stirs except to growl or to kick.

R. M. Andrews.

Fairfield, Bess Chapel Charge.—Our special meeting began August 20 and closed August 24. Brother D. A. Braswell was Brother Cowan's pulpit help. He came to us on Sunday morning and preached two sermons each day. He preached good, helpful and spiritual sermons and I think I can say all who heard him enjoyed his sermons. We were glad to have Brother Braswell with us and hope he will come again. We had a good meeting; there were a few professions and several reclamations. And the church was greatly revived. The congregations were very good, especially at night. Some of the young converts have started prayer meeting at the church and in the homes; pray for us that much good may be accomplished through these meetings.

Sunday, September 3, was another good day with us. The president was with us and preached at 11 o'clock to a good-sized congregation. Our Sunday school is getting along very well, but does not seem to grow in number as it should. Our collection for Children's Home was $3.63; we are climbing a little on the offering. Hassie Prinn, Reporter.

WHAT ARE YOUR PLANS?

September is here! What are the plans in your church and Sunday school for reaching and holding the young people of your community? You have great opportunities in service for the Master in the fertile fields of the world about you. With your plans well formed and well worked success will crown your efforts; but with no plans you need not expect results. Rally your forces in the early fall, have a conference with your workers, and map out a splendid campaign of service for the King this season.

Let Us Help You.

Let us be of help to you by sending you free of cost the 1922 Rally Day supplies. Then hold the service, have some one bring a splendid message on Sunday school work, and take an offering to be applied on your General Conference budget.

Encouragement.

We are greatly encouraged with the outlook for the Young People's Work of the denomination. Not all is sunshine yet, but there is abundance of encouragement from the interest manifested in the great number of young people's meetings held this year. On August 20 we closed the last of a series of summer conferences. This one was held at Sabina, Ohio, and like all the rest was marked by an intense spirit of serious intention to learn how to do the Lord's work better in the home community. There were about 150 registered delegates in this conference.

The Lord has wonderfully blessed, the people have co-operated beautifully, and all in all it has been a season of spiritual uplift for many of our workers and young people.

Outlook Fine.

The outlook for Rally Day this fall is fine. Many schools have ordered the programs and are preparing for a great day. If you wish the supplies for your Sunday school please order at once. It is getting late, but we want your order, and you want a bit of time to get ready for the service.

We just thank everybody who is co-operating, and especially do we wish to think the editors of our church papers for the liberal space they are giving us.

All In Line.

With the work that is now being done for the young people of the Methodist Protestant Church, surely all our Sunday schools will fall in line and help out a bit financially. We wish you to have our programs if you want them; but if you feel that you cannot render the program as sent out by your Board then plan your own program and hold Rally Day for the sake of the people of your community, and take an offering.

If you cannot do anything else you can surely take an offering and your Sunday school will thus pay something on your General Conference Budget. COME ON. LET'S GO. Try all together in one steady pull for Rally Day.

Rally Day money should be sent direct to your own conference treasurer, and he will send to Mr. H. C. Staley. Thank you for your co-operation.

Yours in the Master's Service.

A. G. Dixon,
3919 Carlisle Ave., Baltimore, Md.

AFTER VACATION WHAT?

The thought in the minds of many pastors and Sunday school superintendents now that the vacation season is closing, is how can we reassemble the people of our churches and Sunday schools and interest them in the work planned for the fall and winter. It would seem natural that as people go back to their respective vocations in life after vacation time is over we might expect them to be found in their respective places in the church without any special effort on the part of church leaders to gather them together, but alas, with many such is not the case. What then? We must go after them.

Rally Day affords the opportunity of doing this effectively. It has become one of the special days of the church calendar with many, and is an excellent time for the outlining of the church program for the fall and winter. A time to bring the people of the church together and at the same time set before them a definite goal to be obtained.

The Board of Young People's Work has provided an excellent program, well adapted to the need of the occasion which will be furnished free upon application to Rev. A. G. Dixon, 3919 Carlisle Avenue, Baltimore, Md. The only thing we ask is that you take an offering to be given the board for the extension of its work. You need the service, and we will be glad to receive the offering. All amounts sent in as Rally Day offerings will be credited on the General Conference budget, and will be of great assistance to the Young People's Board in accomplishing the work it has planned.

E. A. Sexsmith, President.

RALLY DAY—WHY HAVE IT?

On the 26th of August I received a letter from Brother Dixon dated the 10th of August, asking that I write a letter in reference to the benefits of Rally Day and have it in the hands of the editor by the 25th, but saved the day by adding, not later than the 31st. It is the 27th and a drizzling afternoon does not lend much inspiration toward an article of this type but the subject is of such vast importance there is much that can be said.

The shadows of the day set memories to flight and take me back to my boyhood home where we instead of having Rally Day put the ground-hog Sunday school to sleep at the coming of autumn and spent our time in rallying the lambs in from the mountain and the hogs from the forests for feed and slaughter. The day that particularly comes to mind was late in October when I was a boy of twelve years of age. Grandfather had a flock of ewes and lambs on the mountain farm about two miles from home. Some dogs had gotten among them and scattered them away into the hills of Clover Lick Mountain. Early one morning, and that meant before daylight on the farm in those days. I was sent into the mountains to find the sheep and gather them together in a little meadow on the head of the creek that bears the same name. I started with a "salt poke" and two biscuits wrapped in a handkerchief, to climb the mountain. By the time it was daylight I was near the crest of the great mountain about and could see the sun rise over the distant hills to hide in the clouds that began to shed chilling rains. I tramped, and tramped, till, early afternoon, weary and tired, I sat down to rest and eat my cold lunch. The rain had saturated my clothing and I was cold. My matches were wet and I could not start a fire so I did not sit long, but started on my hunt for the lambs that were astray. Soon I heard some laughing and talking across on the other mountain. The thought seized me that these men knew some of the woods, and I would go over and meet them and learn what they have seen. Thrilled by the new thought my feet moved faster and soon I was warmed from running. The talk kept on and I drew nearer till at last I stood by the home of an old colored friend who was sawing wood and talking to himself. In my surprise I said, 'Uncle Wesley, what are you laughing at? Tell me so I can laugh.'' His answer was, 'Child, I is jist glad I'm livin','' and then laughed again. Then, after learning my mission he said, "Why, your sheep are all in my field. I heard the dogs and went and gathered them up and was going to take them down tomorrow.''

Vacation season is the dog that scatters the Sunday school flock and Rally Day is the Uncle Wesley that gets them back to their fold of safety and usefulness. Back to where they can climb the mountains of endeavor and look across the valleys of opportunity to fields of service. Rally Day is a day of opportunity in many ways. It is a get-together day. It is a harvest day for the church to gather in the fruits of labors put forth. It is a day that is necessary to instil the needed inspiration to get the school into right swing for good winter work. It is the day to bury the ground-hog of listlessness with an avalanche of pep and get and go. It is the day to bring together the flock with a ring and a swing that will make each feel that there is a place for every one and work for all.

A. D. Williams.

—Dr. Edwin C. Dinwiddia, who was recently elected national chief templar of the International Order of Good Templars, is optimistic about the future of prohibition in the face of the present agitation of the saloon forces against the Volstead act. Dr. Dinwiddie says:

"The man or woman who thinks a serious backward step is going to be taken by the American people on this question has failed to appraise correctly the forces responsible for the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead act. If the devotees of liquor want to squander their money in these hopeless endeavors there is no way, even if there were the disposition, to stop them, but they cannot succeed of the church and temperance forces are on guard. That these are actively watching and defending the situation is attested by the results in the primaries and by inevitable results in the coming election. One only has to know what has happened in Indiana, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and the other important states where primaries have been held, to be convinced of the ultimate futility of the fight of the liquor forces.''

—Rev. R. O. Stone, of Thomasville, a senior of Western Maryland College and a ministerial student, was expected to preach last Sunday at the Asheboro Methodist Protestant church both morning and evening.

CHRIST'S LAST MESSAGE TO THE MINISTRY, AND ITS MODERN APPLICATION.

The reappearance of Jesus Christ upon the earth and the timely words of warning, encouragement, and exhortation which he sent by the only remaining apostle, John, to "the angels of the seven churches of Asia" are especially significant in that they were intended for all pastors and for all time. The message possesses peculiar interest and value in that it reveals some departures from the earlier church, and manifests the supreme concern of our Lord for an efficient and faithful ministry. None of the pastors addressed were found to be immoral, heterodox, or hopeless Two of them were unblameworthy, and received naught but praise; two of them were altogether unfaithful, and received only rebuke and warning; while the characters of the remaining three were mixed, receiving accordingly both commendation and censure. Among the good traits so graciously commended may be mentioned faithfulness, diligence, patience, hostility to false doctrine, self-abasement, firmness, faith, and unflagging zeal. Since the manifest purpose of these seven short epistles was to correct and restore it might be well to consider at some length the faults and failures of those pastors in which they had departed from the practice of their apostolic predecessors.

One pastor, in particular, had lost the zeal for soul-saving. He was, it seems, devoting his entire energies to pastoral work, and was highly commended for faithfulness in that line. His ministry was defensive rather than aggressive. He was assiduously caring for the sheep within the fold, and ignoring the greater claims of those wandering in the wilderness.. He had abandoned the "first love" of every one called of God to preach—the love for lost souls—and had ceased to do the "first works," first in order and in importance, of evangelizing the unsaved. This failing is becoming an alarming one in modern times. The present tendency, we are inclined to believe, is to produce great pastors rather than great soul-savers. Is there not a startling approach in some quarters to a ministerial status in which the conversion of sinners will no longer be considered the prime, or even an essential element of a pastor's efficiency? Paul enjoined Timothy to "do the work of an evangelist." The threatened divorce of the evangelical and pastoral functions is unauthorized; while the largest measure of ministerial results is to be derived from the indissoluble union of the two.

Two of the Asiatic pastors were condemned for laxity of discipline, and for exercising too much leniency toward false teachers. The cause was to be found evidently in the strong intrenchment of the forces of evil, and a corresponding lack of courage on the part of the pastors to deal with it. But in our day the cause of the prevailing laxity of discipline is to be found rather in the sentimental spirit of the age. Unrestrained sentiment not unfrequently impairs the judgment, supplants conscience, and overrides responsibility. How difficult it is to exercise wholesome discipline in the church when there is none in the home! The lack of enforced authority in the family tends to the discountenancing the authority of both Church and State, the setting aside the binding force of all law, and the discounting of both capital and eternal punishment. Indeed the reaction from Puritanism has gone too far.

The pastor of the church at Sardis had gone to almost the last limit of inward backsliding. He was urged to strengthen the things that remained that were ready to die. Even worse, doubtless, than his own sad condition was the injurious effect that his spiritual declension had upon the church membership. "Thou hast a few names even in Sardis which have not defiled their garments;" It was surprising that there were even a few. A backslidden pastor will produce a backslidden church, for the spirituality of a church rises no higher, ordinarily, than its pastoral source. Spiritual decline is none the less real or hurtful because of the fact of its being unaccompanied by immorality. How deeply is the Master "wounded in the house of his friends" when a minister gets so unspiritual that his religious activities become scarcely anything more than the garb of hypocrisy.

The complaint against the Laodicean pastor was that of self-sufficiency, and the consequent compromise of character and of service. This fault, in the ministry especially, is always the effect of a miscalulation, a false reckoning. "Thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing: and knowest not that thou are wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked." A deep and abiding sense of dependence upon God is necessary to the attainment of power and success in the highest of all callings. Jonah's wonderful success at Nineveh was largely due to the whale episode. Increase of worldly possessions or honors may not unlikely detract from a pastor's power. Extreme care should be taken lest the gospel ministry might degenerate from a soul-winning calling into a bread-winning profession.

Self-complacency of equipment, natural or acquired, is a further manifestation of the self-sufficient spirit. The educational qualification is necessary but not essential. The great Teacher stressed the non-essentialness of large mental equipment not only by choosing the twelve apostles from the so-called ignorant class but especially, after three years' painstaking training, by charging them to "tarry in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." The experience or enduement of Holy Ghost power is the one indispensable qualification of men called of God to preach.

Still another expression of the self-sufficient spirit is pride of achievement. Many fail to exercise the grace of "forgetting the things that are behind." A church can easily work its own spiritual undoing by looking away from the source of power to its results. Many an ecclesiastical Samson has been shorn of his strentgh in this way. To ascribe or assume credit or praise to the instrument is to rob God of his rightful glory. A boasting of apostolic succession is a sure indication of a serious decline from apostolic possession. Better than extending the fame of John Wesley would be the perpetuation of that power that made his world-wide movement so marvelous in results. "Where is Elijah?" inquired the anxious sons of the prophets, but from the burdened heart of Elisha went up the agonizing cry, "Where is the Lord God of Elijah?" And Elisha solved the problem of the perpetuation of power.—The Word of Life.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 10.

God's Commands and Our Obedience.

Psalm 119: 33-40.

Daily Readings.

Mon. Practical commands. Exod. 20: 1-17.
Tues. Blessings of obedience. Matt. 19: 17, 27-30.
Wed. Command to love. Deut. 10: 1-22.
Thurs. Seeking God's will. Rom. 12: 1-2.
Fri. Obedience imperative Jer. 7: 21-28.
Sat. Joy of obedience. 1 John 3: 21-24.

In the 20th chapter of Exodus we find a code of laws God gave to regulate the religious and social life of an agricultural community living under comparatively simple conditions. These words were uttered in the hearing of an awe-struck people, and afterwards graven by the finger of God on two tablets of stone. The first four of these laws are religious, defining the duties man owes to God, ("Thou shalt love the Lord thy God"); the last six are moral, defining the duties men owe to each other, ("Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself").

Those same laws have been handed down through the ages and still regulate the religious and social life of a changed world. The national, state, county, and city laws that we have today are based on these Ten Commandments and are as strongly operative today as they were in those days. It is true that these laws have been broken, and are being broken still, but the commands that God gave ages ago are still commands for us. They have not changed and never will change. We can never outgrow the need of the Ten Commandments.

Why Does God Command Us? God commands us because we are ignorant and blind. Scales cover our spiritual vision that only God can take away. He does not give commands that are not good for us and that we cannot obey. He is good and all His commands are good. He cares more for man than anything else in the world and has only man's welfare in mind, but because of our ignorance and blindness we need divine direction. God is all-wise and all-loving. He knows what is best for each one of His children and He desires to give the very best to every one who will let Him. He has a loving and wise plan for the world and for each of our lives. Since we share God's life, we must share in His purpose and program.

Man is a stranger on earth and needs that which will take away his homelessness and unrest. All other creatures are adapted to their environment but he has a consciousness that he is an exile here. God's commandments can still this unrest.

How Can We Hear God's Commands? We can hear the commands of God by observing the Quiet Hour. The Quiet Hour trains the soul to listen. We must seek the will of God with ardent desire, and we must prove or test His will in every case. Just as muscles grow by exercise, so does the soul grow by spiritual exercise. But we must pray in the spirit that says, "Thy will and not mine be done." Only by purposing in advance to follow His will, wherever it may lead, is it possible to discover what His special plan is for our own lives.

We can hear the commands of God by studying the needs of the world. As we remember Jesus Christ, and recall the kind of tasks he has given his men to do, the kind of men and women he expects us to be, as we lift up our eyes and look into the up-turned faces of the thousand millions of people who know not God and remember that we are those who must capture the world for Christ, we are moved by a sense of our responsibility. Naturally, we are not interested in the things we know nothing about, so we must study all the phases of Christian work and find what appeals to us most, and in this way we open an important channel of knowledge through which God has a chance to speak.

How Can We Obey? Someone has said, "Obedience is the organ of spiritual life." By doing each day the revealed will of God for that day one becomes more and more sensitive to His will in all questions pertaining to conduct and life.

We can obey God by developing habits of Bible study, meditation and communion with God. This does not mean simply a prayer for ourselves in a few hurried sentences at night when we are too tired to remember what has been prayed for when the words are said, not a few fragments of time given to this most important occupation, but earnest prayer not confined to times and seasons but mingling with the whole of life.

We can obey God by obeying the command of Christ: "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that He send forth laborers into His harvest." One cannot really pray for this without being willing to follow God's will concerning his own life's ~~work~~.

We can obey God by securing the best possible preparation for the work of life. Many positions are open to college-trained men and women that are not open to others. The more fully we develop our own latent powers, the greater the responsibility we are able to carry.

Young People's Rally, Tenth District.

Our young people's rally was a great success. The day was an ideal one, and the large auditorium of Friendship Methodist Protestant church was crowded.

Two services were held, morning and afternoon, with dinner on the grounds. Five churches were represented.

Rev. G. L. Curry of Charlotte was present and added much to the services by his presence and jolly disposition. Mr. Curry made a splendid address on "Our Young People's Place in the Church" which was thoroughly enjoyed by all.

Our field secretary, Miss Juanita Hammer, was present and made two very interesting addresses on Christian Endeavor and Sunday school work. Other speakers that added to the services were Rev. T. A. Williams of Albemarle and Rev. J. D. Hardy of Rockingham and Messrs. D. A. McLaurin and J. M. Blackwelder of Concord.

We thank all who in any way helped to make the rally a success, and especially do we appreciate the efforts put forth by Pastor Ridge and his people in making it so successful, and for our royal entertainment.

Mrs. D. A. McLaurin.

WHY?

Why are these articles being written? Why does the editor of this denominational paper put this space at the disposal of the secretary of the Board of Home Missions week after week? Why does the publisher not use this space for paid advertising, and make it a profit to the publication? Why does the secretary take time to prepare these papers, with all the other demands that are being made upon his time? Why?

The answer is so simple, but it means so much. Why? That the people may know about the home missionary work of the denomination, and their personal responsibility for its proper development. No one is interested in a matter of which he knows nothing. If one does not know of his obligation it is too much to expect him to spend his time and his money for the work. Our first responsibility of course is to Almighty God. Our second responsibility is so closely identified with the first as to almost amount to the same thing. We are responsible to those with whom we associate—family, club, church, society, organization. That ye may know the truth. Frequently requests come to this office for information about the home missionary work of the Methodist Protestant Church. Every question concerning the location, development, character, and progress of the work under the direction of the board has been answered in these columns. If the files of the paper have been kept, a very complete current history of the work of the board can be compiled. "That ye may know."

Another answer. Why each week? And why repeated? "To stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance." Line upon line, line upon line, precept upon precept, precept upon precept." An impulse without action is like an arrow shot into the empty air. If we bring the people knowledge, we have hit the outer circle of the target. But if they forget, all our labor has been in vain. Remember! Our method? Constant repetition, with variations. That the Methodist Protestant people may know, and remember.

Yet another. "He that knoweth, and doeth not—." If the people remember we have reached the inner circle of the target. But if there is no adequate response—we have missed the "bulls-eye." To score, we must give knowledge—stir up the memory—lead to definite action. Less than this is failure. To confess with the lips is a service required, but lip service alone is less than the Master demands of us—action alone will prove our declaration of faith to be sincere.

Methodist Protestant people are associated together for the development of that part of the kingdom assigned to them, and to save the people dependent upon us for the gospel—for this very purpose. We are saved to save others. We can only save ourselves by saving others. If we do not expand the Methodist Protestant Church in America, WHO WILL? If not now, WHEN? If not with money, and influence, HOW? What do we owe unto the Lord? Jesus gave! what have we given? Our responsibilities cannot be discharged by others. Our opportunities will not wait. Steadfastness. "Be ye steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord." Oh for the "abounding" life! We must save America to save the world.

Charles H. Beck.

A BABY IN A POCKET.

The kangaroo baby is a very tiny creature when he is born. Indeed he is only about as big as your thumb, and would get lost if his mother didn't keep him in her pocket until he grew larger. He is born blind, naked, and so helpless that his mother holds him between her lips while she uses her paws to open the pouch so that she can put him inside. She then sticks her mouth into the pocket, being very careful not to let the baby slip, and places his mouth against a nipple. The queer baby clings to it tightly and does not let go for several weeks. Even then he would die of hunger if Mother Kangaroo did not force the milk down his throat.

By working certain muscles in her body, the mother pumps the milk into her baby. Then she closes up the pocket and the queer little mite takes care of himself by clinging to the nipple, his mother pumping milk into him as he needs it. This is all the care he gets for several weeks.

The tiny baby inside the nice fur-lined cradle is slowly growing to look like his father and mother. He can see, hear, and move. He has a soft fur coat on his body. Mother Kangaroo now opens her pocket and finds that the ugly mite has grown to be a very nice baby. He is, perhaps, the size of a big kitten. He looks at her with his beautiful soft eyes full of wonder. It is the first time he has seen his mother, but he isn't afraid of her. She is very proud of her baby and coaxes him to put his head ouside the cradle. The little fellow is too shy at first, but at last he grows bolder and peeps at the queer world where his mother lives. He looks very funny with his small head and big ears poked through the pocket.

For weeks he is content to remain in the cradle, poking his head out from time to time. If he attempts to push his way out, however, his mother's paw quickly pushes him back again. He is too small to be allowed outside. Mother Kangaroo, leaping and hopping from place to place, carries him with her, his little head sticking out of her big pocket.

Thus he lives and sees life from his cradle until he is the size of a big hare. Then he is allowed to come out, but if there is the slightest danger, he climbs into the pocket and hides himself.

When Little Kangaroo is seven or eight months old, he is too large to get in his old cradle, but he sticks his head inside to get his milk. He is now learning to care for himself. He hops and leaps and kicks with his feet, which are growing big and strong. He uses his claws, and feeds with his mother and others on grass, leaves and herbs. He is no longer a baby.—Evangeline Weir, in Our Dumb Animals.

WATCH THE LIVING ENDOWMENT.

But your name is not yet on it. We yet lack 377 people who will take a share in this endowment. It costs $20 a year, but it insures our college with the interest on $150,000 to help pay the running expenses until we get all the $300,000 we set out to raise as an endowment. Let us put you down next.

OCTOBER 1 IS PAY-UP DAY FOR THE COLLEGE.

You remember when you signed a pledge last year that the first payment was due on the first day of October, 1921. Some of you have not yet met that obligation. We must have the money you owe us. And now on the first of October this year the second instalment is due. These two instalments, if paid, would put about $35,000 into our treasury. And we need the money. In fact, unless our subscribers shall pay up at once we shall be compelled to stop work on the building. Our funds are running low and our weekly pay roll is large.

If you love the church, if you want to see the college succeed, then send in your payments at once. Send both of them, they are due, or will be within a few weeks and we need the money now.

Again we are saying that the Board just will not go in debt, therefore we may be compelled to report in the Herald before the first day of October that work has stopped on Roberts Hall because we did not have funds.

Do you want to be a party to this? Surely you do not want to be the cause of work stopping so soon on this building. But you will be unless you pay your obligation. Let us have your payment, please.

Send all payments to Rev. R. M. Andrews, Box 86, Greensboro. We have your pledge card and will give you credit.

THE INFLUENCE OF ONE COLLEGE.

William and Mary College of Williamsburg, Va., was founded by Rev. James Blair; it is one of the nine colleges in the United States which is older than the American Republic and it numbers among those who attended the following: the president of the first continental congress; four signers of the Declaration of Independence, Chief Justice Marshall and four associate justices; four Ambassadors to France, two to England; ten cabinet members, 29 U. S. Senators; 22 governors of states; three speakers of the House of Representatives; and yet its enrollment never runs over three or four hundred.

Julia Bertha Stockard.

Julia Bertha Stockard, wife of G. W. Stockard, was born March 29, 1856, died the first of September, 1922. She was the mother of five children; Mrs. J. B. Cheek, of Burlington, N. C., Mrs. Walter Jones of Tryon, N. C., Mrs. O. W. Hooker, of Raleigh, N. C., Miss Alma and Miss Eunice of Saxapahaw, N. C., and Mrs. J. B. Freeman, of Washington, D. C. These with a host of relatives and friends are left to mourn the loss of a loving mother. May our dear Heavenly Father bless and comfort them all, and help them to submit to His will, who doeth all things well.

Sister Stockard made a confession of faith in Christ in young girlhood, and she was a member of Concord Methodist Protestant church, Saxapahaw charge. And she lived a consistent Christian until death.

She was a good, kind, Christian-hearted wife, and affectionate mother, and she will be missed for years to come, by her husband and the children, as well as by the church and community in which she lived.

Her funeral service was conducted in the home, by her pastor, the writer of this obituary, assisted by Rev. S. W. Taylor, of Burlington, after which her body was laid to rest in the family grave-yard about a mile and a half from the home place. The funeral and burial services were attended by a host of relatives and friends. The floral tribute was great and beautiful, which speaks of the high esteem that her relatives and friends had for her.

Sleep on, mother, and we will meet you in the sweet by and by. Peace be to your ashes as they return to the mother dust from which they were taken. Sleep on, sweet mother, asleep in Jesus, from which none ever wakes to weep.

My dear brother, G. W. Stockard, you have my heart-felt sympathy in this dark hour of sorrow and great trial. I know how to sympathize with you from having had experience of the same. But I know that any word of mine will fail to comfort you in this sad and lonely time, so I commend you and the children to God's great love and mercy. May He ever be your companion. D. M. Loy.

THE TWO NANCY BELLES.

The little path Billy and Nan had been following stopped with surprising suddenness before a high board fence. ‘‘I wonder what’s on the other side,’’ said Billy, eagerly. He stepped back and made a quick running jump. His fingers caught in a crack and he pulled himself up. ‘‘Oh, there’s a house and a yard and a gray kitten, and oh, Nan, a boy just about as big as I am!’’

‘‘Let me see,’’ cried Nan, impatiently. Skipping farther along the fence, she came to a knot-hole in one of the gray boards. She could see the boy standing beside a large horse-trough. ‘‘Why, he’s sailing a boat,’’ she exclaimed. ‘‘I wonder what his name is.’’

The boy had heard her. ‘‘My name is Eric Sanderson,’’ he said with a smile.

‘‘And mine is Billy Laurence, and this is my sister Nan,’’ said Billy. ‘‘We came from the summer settlement.’’

‘‘I though so,’’ said Eric. ‘‘There aren’t any children very near here. Won’t you come in and see my boat?’’ he asked politely.

Billy and Nan accepted his invitation with alacrity. Proudly Eric lifted his boat from the water. ‘‘I made it myself,’’ he explained as he turned it lovingly about so Nan and Billy could see it better. It was the oddest-appearing boat the children had ever seen. It was stumpy and short, with a queer crooked slant to one side. Its mast rose stiff and straight, and its sail was of dull brown canvas. It was smeared all over with red paint that was thick in some places and thin in others, so that the board it had been whittled from showed through.

‘‘I named her the ‘Nancy Belle’,’’ said Eric.

‘‘Why, that’s the name of my boat, too,’’ remarked Billy. Nan gave him a quick little nudge, to remind him that it was impolite to criticize Eric’s boat, and that they must not boast about the gold-and-white beauty of Billy’s trim, dainty craft.

‘‘I’m sure I couldn’t make a boat,’’ she told Eric. ‘‘Are you going to enter the contest?’’

The toy-boat contest was one of the greatest events of the season. Every year people came for miles to see it. The boys and girls were allowed to guide their boats with a strong cord, but not to touch them. It took a great deal of care and skill to keep them from capsizing and sinking. The first prize was a five-dollar gold piece. Billy and Nan were so sure that their ‘‘Nancy Belle’’ would win, that they had already planned to spend the money for two soft white fluffy rabbits. Eric’s eyes shone as he answered Nan’s question.

‘‘Yes, indeed, I’m going to try to win,’’ he said. ‘‘Last year I didn’t have any boat. If only my ‘Nancy Belle’ didn’t leak, I’d be sure to win, but she does leak a little,’’ he added worriedly.

Billy and Nan exchanged glances.. Suddenly Billy put out a hand for Eric’s boat. ‘‘Let me look at it,’’ he told Eric. ‘‘Maybe I can help you stop the leak.’’

It was a lively summer morning when the tiny boats assembled for the great event. Eric was among the first to arrive with his stumpy boat. His cheeks crimsoned painfully as he looked at the other boats.

‘‘Never mind, Eric,’’ whispered Nan. ‘‘You built yours, and we didn’t.’’

Eric was holding tight to the cord with which he was going to guide his boat, when his foot slipped on a piece of seaweed, and he fell. Dripping and gasping, hescrambled to his feet again. His sharp cry of dismay startled those near him. The ‘‘Nancy Belle’’ had bumped her stumpy bow on a rock, as Eric plunged forward into the water.

‘‘She’s leaking,’’ he cried. It was true. The little red-paimed boat was settling fast. Nan’s eyes sought Billy’s. The question in them made Billy wriggle uncomfortably. Then he looked at Eric again and he felt even worse. Eric was trying vainly to keep his boat afloat. Billy reached forward and thrust something into Eric’s astonished hands. It was the cord with which to guide the beautiful toy boat that Billy and Nan loved so much.

‘‘Here, you sail her,’’ said Billy. ‘‘Quick! There goes the bugle.’’

Eric had no time to refuse. In an instant the fleet of tiny white-winged boats were skimming over the sparkling water. A puff of wind overturned two of them. Another struck a bit of driftwood and sank. Billy and Nan gasped as Eric guided the other ‘‘Nancy Belle’’ past a huge rock. Faster and faster the boats moved. Others capsized as the waves grew rougher. Eric’s eyes were fixed on his tiny craft. His hand grasped the cord firmly. Skilfully he kept Billy’s ‘‘Nancy Belle’’ afloat. Soon only four boats were left. The ‘‘Nancy Belle’’ crept up on them one by one. In a few moments she had passed them and was rounding the spar buoy. Billy and Nan trembled with eagerness.

As the wind filled her sails, the ‘‘Nancy Belle’’ seemed to skim over the waves. It was all Eric could do to hold her without sinking her. He heard nothing, saw nothing, but the little boat. He was astonished when the bugle sounded again, ‘‘The ‘Nancy Belle,’ sailed by Eric Sanderson, wins the contest,’’ rose the joyful cry. ‘‘Hurrah for the ‘Nancy Belle’ and Eric Sanderson!’’

It was a wonderful day for Eric. ‘‘But I’m going to divide the prize,’’ he told Billy and Nan. ‘‘I couldn’t have even entered the race, if you hadn’t let me take your boat. And—and, what do you think?’’ he added. ‘‘A man looked at my boat and asked me ever so many questions about it. He makes boats himself, splendid big boats that will go anywhere, and he hold me that if I would go to school and study hard, by and by he would like to have me help him design and make real boats.’’

‘‘Oh, Eric, how glad I am!’’ said Nan, happily. She looked from Billy’s ‘‘Nancy Belle,’’ trim and beautiful in her shining gold and white paint, to Eric’s queer, homely, red-painted ‘‘Nancy Belle’’ with her stumpy mast and brown sail.

‘‘The two ‘Nancy Belles’,’’ she laughed. ‘‘Which would you rather have, Billy?’’

Billy cradled his own boat a little closer in his arms. ‘‘My own, of course,’’ he confessed honestly, ‘‘but I’m glad Eric’s ‘Nancy Belle’ showed people what he could do, so he will have a chance to build big boats by and by. You ought to keep her always, Eric.’’

‘‘I will,’ said Eric, giving the little red boat a caressing pat.—Lillian E. Andrews, in The Christian Register.

WISE MOTHER OWL.

In a hollow tree on the Dale’s farm lived a comfortable family of owls. Mr. Dale knew of these owls, and would not let any one bother them, for they were useful friends and kept the barn free from mice. There were two Dale children—Bess, seven years old, and Nell, who was five.

One night after they had both been put to bed, Bess sat up and nudged her sister.

Nell sat up in bed.

‘‘It’s not late,’’ replied Bess. ‘‘Mamma and papa are still up, and the doors aren’t locked. We needn’t be afraid to go just around by the side of the house, and I want to bring the carriage in.’’ Bess slipped out of bed. Then Nell, who was the littlest and always did as she saw her sister do, slipped out of bed and followed her.

Down the stairs they stole, through the side door and on to the porch without their father or mother hearing them. Then, holding hands tigtly, they went down the steps.

‘‘Where is it?’’ whispered Nell. She was frightened and wanted to get back into the house, but she did not want Bess to know it.

‘‘It must be somewhere around here.’’ said Bess. ‘‘I’m sure I left it here,’’ and then both began to look around.

It was just at this minute that over in the old tree the mother owl had fixed the young owls nicely in their nest. Father Owl had gone to bring food for them, but maybe he was gone longer than usual, and Mother Owl thought it best to go and help him. Or maybe she looked out and saw Bess and Nell out of the house, and knowing that all children ought to be in bed—just as her own were—she took a notion to give them a good scare! Anyway, she came out of the tree and just as Bess and Nell were stooping down, looking for the carriage, she flew by them, screeching right into their ears.

My, if you had seen those children! They gave a scream as they went running up the steps, which brought both their mother and father to the door.

‘‘Why—Bess! Nell!’’ their mother cried in surprise. ‘‘What are you doing out here! Why aren’t you in bed?’’

‘‘We went out to get the doll-carriage,’’ answered Bess, as they ran into their mother’s arms, ‘‘but oh, mamma, we got so frightened!’’

Mrs. Dale took them upstairs and made them promise never to go out again after she had put them to bed, and when they had promised she stayed with them till they were sound asleep.

Afterward when Mother Owl was feeding the young owls, maybe she told Father Owl how she had seen the Dale children out and sent them back into the house.

If she did, Father Owl certainly told her that it was the wise thing to do.—Edith D. Nal-lrett, in Dew Drops.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

West Forsyth Circuit, Notice.

Brother H. A. Garrett, superintendent of the Methodist Protestant Children's Home of High Point, will be at Union Hill church on the second Sunday of September, the 10th, 11 A. M. and Tabernacle church 7:30 P. M.

We hope to have a large audience at each church. Come and bring your friends. Don't miss it. Brother Garrett has visited the other four churches on this charge if I am not mistaken. But this will be his first visit to the two churches just named.

On Saturday night before the second Sunday will baptize and receive five more new members at Union Hill church. This was the best meeting we have held in a long time.

On the fourth Sunday in September we will have all-day service at Harmony Grove church. Brother J. W. Johnson of High Point will have charge of the service.

The annual meeting at Pleasant Hill church will be held on the second Sunday in October. Rev. R. A. Hunter will do the preaching. May the Lord bless the work.

A. M. Hamilton, Pastor.

West Thomasville Church, West Thomasville Circuit.—Our third quarterly conference for West Thomasville circuit convened at Spring Hill August 19 at about 7:45 P. M. the hour being set for six P. M. and preaching at 7:45, but because of the approach of a considerable rainfall in the late afternoon, this meeting was delayed until the gathering for preaching, which resulted in a small official attendance, yet very interesting conference.

Conference was opened in regular order by Rev. M. L. Moose, pastor, presiding. After devotional exercises Ira E. Strickland was elected recording steward to fill the unexpired term of M. H. Hinkle, resigned; after which the regular routine of business was briefly but enthusiastically dispatched. Brother Elzvvan Hilton was declared elected delegate to represent this charge at the next Annual Conference.

Immediately after adjournment of conference, Brother Moose again delivered one of his usually interesting, instructive and impressive sermons with powerful enthusiasm to an attentive and appreciative congregation.

Sunday morning at 10 A. M. an interesting Sunday school, preaching at 11. Thence, from Spring Hill, to West Thomasville the pastor and secretary hastened to Sunday school at 2:30; again preaching at 3:30 P. M., followed by communion service, to another attentive congregation. From here Brother Moose went to Canaan Church, where his gospel tent is being used in union services by the concentrated efforts of the Methodist Protestants, Reformeds, and M. E.'s, South, beginning Sunday, August 20 at 11 A. M. and still in progress at this writing.

Our Sunday school is on the upward move, we are glad to say, and still hopes for continued increase in attendance.

Our Ladies' Aid society, although a young and consequently small number as yet, is composed of members who are on the alert for opportunities for the betterment of the church and its interest, and will meet with the secretary, Mrs. Moose, next Friday afternoon at three o'clock.

We hope to have something of interest to report for publication within a fortnight relative to the building of a church house for the West Thomasville people.

May the richest blessing of the Father rest upon all efforts by "whomsoever" for the betterment of His people and the advancement of His cause, is the desire of Mrs. Hattie Hiatt, Reporter.

Antioch, Mecklenburg Circuit.—On the second Sunday morning of August we began our special meeting at Antioch. Mr. Riddle and Mr. Whitaker were our pulpit help, and they did preach some wonderful sermons. The services were well attended, better than usual at our church. We also had the old-time love feast. We began our service at 10:30 every morning with testimony. There were numbers of testimonies and the Holy Spirit was truly present and we were really in the upper room. It was indeed the old-time religion which the Lord would have his people experience every day. We had 52 conversions and 10 new members. The people feel like the meeting has been more helpful than any at Antioch in several years. Hope the people will work more faithfully in church work than they ever have. The singing has been so much help to the people and now we have a nice little choir and we are so proud to have Mr. George Kellam to lead for us, as he does so well. We cannot express our thanks enough to him. All the boys and girls take a great interest in the singing. We did not get to run our singing school as long as we planned, because our teacher got sick; but will begin it again in October if nothing happens.

The Sunday school is just doing fine. We have a number of old people coming to Sunday school. Everybody is getting busy around Antioch and we hope to have better success than ever. We want the prayers of everybody, especially for our pastor; he does work so faithfully and wants the people to see where they are standing. Best wishes to the Herald readers.

Lizzie Allen.

Whitakers Charge.—This pastor has been engaged in revival work for the last month and has not been on the work except on Sundays; however, the interests have been kept going in good style. The attendance during the last few Sundays has not been quite as large as usual in church, Sunday school and Christian Endeavor.

Sunday the revival services began at Speight's Chapel and Brother Hethcox is expected today to take charge of the preaching. We are trusting and praying for a revival here. The services at three and 7:30 P. M. will continue throughout the week, running over Sunday.

Last Wednesday evening the senior Christian Endeavor held an out-door meeting. The writer had charge of the service and it proved beneficial to us all. We do not appreciate the out-of-doors as we should.

Recently the pastor was ordered to stop, and his Ford was filled with gas and oil and the name of the "hold-upper" was not learned. Brother C. L. Johnson has contributed gas and his sons, work to amount that the writer has a new car in appearance.

Miss Virginia Dare Braswell has entered upon her school duties at Albemarle as teacher. Others of our young people are expecting to enter school soon, either as students or teachers. Mr. William Sawyer goes today to A. and E., Raleigh, and we will miss him at Speight's . Mr. Marion Braswell recently passed the state bar examination and now we have a lawyer among our young folk. Miss Sarah Bradley, after securing work as nurse in hospital in Asheville, is now at home on vacation.

Mr. Geo. Neal sustained a serious accident last Wednesday evening in lumber plant, Rocky Mount. He was operated upon Friday evening and is in critical condition. It is believed he is resting better and slight improvement is evident.

H. Fred Surratt.

Burlington.—After a month's vacation for the pastor, the Burlington church resumed all the services last Sunday. At the morning church service the Lord's supper was administered. In the evening the pastor preached an excellent sermon. The attendance at the morning service was smaller than the average, due in part to the fact that the Baraca and Philathea classes of the Sunday school visited the Children's Home. There was a larger congregation at the evening service.

The Sunday school attendance was remarkably good during the month of August, the average being about 250. Last Sunday there were 192 in Sunday school, and 132 Baracas and Philatheas met in the capacity of a Sunday school class at the Children's Home, making the attendance for last Sunday 324. Now that the vacation period is over, we hope to have a full attendance every Sunday.

We are glad to have an addition to our church.. Mrs. William Bivins united with our church at the morning service last Sunday. We sincerely hope that she will be a blessing to the church and the church a blessing to her.

Brother Taylor went to Liberty last Monday to help Rev. J. D. Williams in a revival meeting at the Liberty church. Brother Taylor will do the preaching during that meeting, which will continue through next Sunday.

Our services will be held next Sunday as usual with the exception of the speakers. Pastor Taylor will be at Liberty and Professor T. C. Amick, of Elon College, will speak at the morning service and Rev. P. E. Lindley will preach at the evening service. We hope that there will be a large congregation at each of the services.

Miss Bessie McDearman, of Rocky Mount, has been visiting Mrs. S. W. Taylor at the parsonage for several days.

Our church and Sunday school deeply sympathize with Mrs. J. B. Cheek, one of the Sunday school teachers, in the loss of her mother, Mrs. G. W. Stockard, who was buried last Saturday.

A new Sunday school class has been started in our church. The class is made up of young men and is taught by R. F. Williams.

The writer attended three of the services at Bellmont Methodist Protestant church last week and heard his former pastor, Rev. J. D. Williams, do some real gospel preaching. We consider Brother Williams a true exponent of the gospel of Jesus Christ and the congregation that listens to his sermons cannot escape the great truth of the gospel as he presents it.

Burlington Baracas and Philatheas Visit the Children's Home.

Last Sunday morning about 130 or 140 members of the Baraca and Philathea classes of the Burlington Sunday school went to the Children's Home by automobile and visited the Home during the day.

Soon after arriving the Baracas and Philatheas assembled in the chapel of the Home and heard the Sunday school lesson, which was presented by C. B. Amick, teacher of the Baraca class. C. K. Stafford, president of the Baraca class, was there and on the job engineering the affair.

At the conclusion of the lesson, Superintendent Garrett was called on for a speech, and he delivered an interesting talk, telling of the history of the Children's Home since its beginning twelve years ago, and speaking of the achievements during the years that followed. Brother Garrett also told of the present worth and value of the institution and gave out some information concerning the contemplated improvements for the future.

An offering was taken for the Home, and about $50 was received. This offering was given over to Superintendent Garrett. The Burlington Baracas and Philatheas are always glad of the opportunity of helping the Home with their offerings, and their interest in the institution never ceases.

After the close of the lesson study period, the crowd assembled for dinner, which was spread upon long tables in the yard among the shade trees. After the blessing had been asked by the writer, all partook of the wholesome food with great delight to the appetite. The children of the Home and all people connected with the Home were invited to eat dinner, and about 200 people participated in the dinner. There was an abundance of food, and after all present had eaten to their satisfaction, there was still much food left over, which was given to the children for their supper Sunday night.

Several of the Baracas and Philatheas visited the college building and grounds during the afternoon. We were glad to see the Boys' Dormitory building going up at the Children's Home.

Many who visited the Home Sunday went for the first time, and they were very favorably impressed with the institution and the surroundings.

The Baraca class visited the Home in a body in June, 1921, and we understand that these visits to the Children's Home are to be annual affairs. The people who visit the Home are helped, and the children and those in charge of the Home are helped also.

Flat Rock, Flat Rock Circuit.—Sunday, September 3, 1922, was a great day in the history of old Flat Rock church. This was the home-coming of the members, former members and friends of the church. The morning service was devoted to the Children's Day exercises. The children acquitted themselves well in spite of the fact that most of their practice had been rained out. The collection amounted to $15.24. After a pleasant social hour, during which every one enjoyed a fine picnic dinner, the afternoon service was given over to the visitors. N. W. Ogburn had charge of the service. Speeches were made by Professor T. E. Whitaker, Messrs. Fletcher Williams, Will Oaks, N. W. Ogburn, C. W. Williams, Mrs. E. J Cummings and Mrs. Fannie Kirkpatrick. Mr. Fletcher Williams suggested that one day each year be set apart as Home-coming Day for Flat Rock, and this was given the title of Flat Rock Memorial Association. N. W. Ogburn was appointed executive chairman with Mrs. J. B. Ogburn secretary and ——— Holly treasurer.

The most important thing was suggested by Mr. Fletcher Williams. This was the building of a new church out of the granite of the old Flat Rock quarry. This is to be a memorial to the old pioneer members and an inspiration to the next generation. A committee of 12 members was appointed with N. W. Ogburn as chairman to solicit funds and to look after the plans, etc. This committee is composed of,—J. W. Pegram, J. W. Williams, John Wray, Willis Johnson, J. F. Friddle, George Friddle, J. B. Ogburn, Mrs. Lucy Harrison, Mrs. T. E. Whitaker, Mrs. E. J. Cummings, C W. Williams and T. B. Wilson. The building fund was started by Mrs. E. J. Cummings with a liberal donation and followed by others to the amount of $2211. C. W. Williams headed a subscription with $25 for the digging of a well on the church grounds. Nine years from now, 1931, will be the centennial of the building of old Flat Rock church. At that time we are to dedicate new Flat Rock church.

We were very sorry that our pastor could not be with us. He and his wife are visiting their son in Patterson, N. J., on their vacation. We were also disappointed that none of our former pastors nor the editor of our church Herald were present. We intended for the invitation through the papers to be general.

Mrs. J. B. Ogburn, Reporter.

[The editor regrets to have missed this meeting, the more now that he has read this report of it and sees what an important forward movement was started.—Ed.]

Revival Meeting at Mt. Hermon.

The revival meeting which began at Mt. Hermon M. P. church Sunday, August 20, came to a close last Friday afternoon.

Rev. J. L. Trollinger, of Pleasant Hill, assisted the pastor, Rev. A. O. Lindley, of Snow Camp. Rev. Mr. Trollinger did the preaching during the series of services, and his sermons were considered quite interesting and stirred up the people very much. Rev. H. L. Isley, of Burlington, attended the services during the week and assisted the two other preachers.

There were more than 25 conversions and reclamations during the series of services, and 19 additions to the church, these being received into full membership of the church on Friday afternoon.—The Alamance Observer.

Eden, Halifax Circuit.—Yesterday was a good day at Eden. All day services, two good sermons by the pastor, Mr. Bethea. After the morning services three young girls came forward and united with the church. After the afternoon services Sunday school was talked and it was decided to meet next Sunday at three o'clock to organize same. All interested come, and may this be the beginning of a much needed live Sunday school at this place.

Mr. J. W. Hardee, one of our most faithful members, was unable to attend services yesterday on account of sickness. May he soon be well.

Mr. Bethea is away this week helping Mr. Trollinger in a meeting at Pleasant Hill. The special meeting at Bethesda begins next Sunday, with Mr. Gerringer as help.

Winnie Burt.

September 4, 1922.

Bethel, Alamance Circuit.—We held our annual revival meeting at Bethel church the third Sunday in August. Brother Holmes was assisted by Brother Edward Suits. On Sunday Brother Holmes preached two of his good sermons, one of them taken from the life of Job, showing us how God expects us to strive to live blameless in His sight. Brother Suits did all of the preaching after Sunday. We will never forget his excellent sermons. They were soul-inspiring and we feel that the church has been strengthened and revived by them. Several professed faith in Christ and two united with the church. We will be pleased at any time to have Brother Suits visit Bethel.

Since our last report, Mrs. Elizabeth Bailey has been called home. She was a member of the Christian church at Pleasant Hill, but was a member of Bethel Sunday school. She was a good woman, striving to live always ready. So we rejoice to know that she is now basking in the glorified presence of God.

Mr. Lawrence McPherson's little daughter Grace is very sick now, but is improving some. for which all are so thankful.

Miss Jewel Stafford is still confined to her bed.

Mrs. A. L. Foust and Mrs. Gray McPherson are also right sick.

Cecil Bailey, son of Mr. T. B. Bailey, had the misfortune to be thrown from a horse, breaking his leg just above the knee, and has suffered quite a good deal.

Mrs. Lou McPherson, our beloved president of our W. F. M. S., is suffering from a nervous breakdown. We miss her very much in our meetings, but know that her prayers are always with us. Our sympathy and prayers go out to all these people. May God comfort and restore them to health.

Our missionary society met on Friday afternoon before the first Sunday in August with Mrs. J. A. Foust. Subject, "Trust." Good songs, talks and prayers on the subject completed the program, after which delicious ice cream was much enjoyed by all. We had the pleasure of having our society meet in our home last Sunday afternoon. Interesting papers were read and talks given on our subject, "Time," and of course how to use it. We had one song, "Take time to be holy." After the meeting we enjoyed a social hour and eating mater melons. Subject for our next meeting is to be "Doing Our Best."

Mt. Pleasant, Mt. Pleasant Circuit. — Our special meeting closed recently with 11 conversions and 10 accessions. As usual, Brother Millaway preached fine sermons and worked hard. His services were deeply appreciated.

Our Sunday school program was varied last Sunday by the Philathea class having charge of the opening, and the primary department the closing exercises.

The superintendent and one teacher are spending their vacation in California. We miss them but of course we can't blame them one bit.

The Greene Township Sunday School Association will convene at Smithwood church on Sunday, September 24. A cordial invitation is extended to everyone. Come!

Pageland Charge.—Our special meeting at Rose Hill began Sunday morning, May 7, and continued through the week. Rev. S. W. Taylor was our pulpit help and did some good gospel preaching. A number were converted and reclaimed, two additions to the church.

We began our revival meeting at Bethesda church the fourth Sunday in July and continued through the following week. Rev. J. T. Sisk did the preaching; his preaching was fine and enjoyed by all who heard him. Several conversions and reclamations, four additions.

Our special meeting began at New Hope the fourth Sunday in August. Rev. J. D. Hardy was with us until Friday night. His sermons were of the best and were enjoyed by all; the church was revived. The pastor continued the meeting through the first Sunday night. A number of conversions with 21 additions to the church.

Our third quarterly conference has been held. J. H. Baker of New Hops church, Monroe, N. C., R. F. D. 1, is our delegate. Finance very much behind, but we are expecting better things. Pray for us.

J. W. Quick, Pastor.

Graham.—Our pastor returned from his vacation better fitted and inspired for the remainder of the year's work. While he was away our attendance at Sunday school was not as good as usual. On Sunday, September 3, our attendance was 187 and offering for Children's Home $13.03. We were very fortunate in having the Henderson quartet with us Sunday. The following composed the quartet: Mr. Cooper Hight, first tenor; Mr. W. E. Homer, second tenor; Mr. C. M. Core, first bass; and Mr. C. E. Core, second bass. They sang several selections for Sunday school, which were enjoyed very much. Little Miss Olive Hight also was with us and sang a solo which was enjoyed very much. We are sure that our church and Sunday school were helped by their presence, for we know that variety in singing helps any service. The selections sung by the choir also deserve special mention.

Mr. Spencer had two encouraging messages for us Sunday; subject for morning was, ''The Influences of Jesus.'' More special music was sung, which added much to the interest of the service.

The mid-week prayer services were kept interesting while our pastor was away and the attendance was very good at each service. The Junior Christian Endeavor society had charge one night. They sang, told Bible stories and repeated Bible verses on the subject of ''Love.'' They all did their part well and it was very good to see the small children take part in a church service.

The Juniors had a picnic Saturday afternoon and enjoyed it very much.

The Ladies' Aid held a very interesting meeting Saturday afternoon with Mrs. P. S. Dixon.

We are sorry to report that Mrs. John McPherson, who is at the hospital, does not improve very much.

There is much time before Conference to do good and we feel that we can accomplish much before that time. Reporter.

Buncombe Charge.—Clarke's Chapel special meeting began Sunday, August 27. Rev. Paul S. Kennett was on hand for the first service and preached ten times in succession. His preaching is far above the average. He labored faithfully with us. It was a pleasure to be associated with him, and his good wife.

The meeting was not what we had hoped for. So many of the members were busy about the things of this world. It closed last night. No visible results except a few church folks somewhat revived.

We wish to thank the following brethren for one sermon each: Rev. J. S. Riddle and Rev. B. C. Reavis of the M. E. Church, South. Rev J. S. Williams came over from Asheville to preach at Clarke's chapel, but on account of a funeral the preaching was called in. Mr. and Mrs. Geo. B. Harris of Henderson attended some of the services. Glad to have them worship with us.

Walton Neill Carter, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Thad. Carter, died September 1, 1922, aged about 10 years. A short service was conducted in the home at Democrat by the writer after which the remains were carried to Clarke's Chapel cemetery for burial, the services at the church conducted by Rev. Homer Casto. May God comfort the bereaved parents and friends. B. M. Williams.

Foust Bible Class, West End Church.

The Foust Bible Class of West End M. P. church, Greensboro, met in its regular monthly business and social meeting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Holden, August 31, 1922.

There was a good attendance, with all the officers and the chairmen of all standing and special committees present. A social hour followed the business session, at which time games were played and ice cream and cake served.

This class had its beginning five years ago, September 23, with six members, one of those being the teacher. At this time its enrollment is 130, and is the largest class in the Sunday school. Its success is due to its faithful and earnest membership, and its endeavor to grow in Christian service. It has created a reserve teachers' unit for supply work in the Sunday school. Besides the special collection it is taking each Sunday for a gift to the orphanage, its special interest this month is in the starving Armenian children. The committee is making an every-member canvass, inviting an equal amount (to be in savings in pennies) to be given to this fund. There is probability of the class in this way being able to feed a child.

It takes only $5 a month to feed a child. And you, dear reader, can you not interest your class in this way to send a gift to the Armenian children who are by thousands without parents, without clothing, without food. ''Inasmuch as you have done it unto one of these my little ones you have done it unto me.''

''Christ has no hands but ours
To do His work today;
He has no feet but our feet,
To lead men His way;
He has no tongues but our tongues,
To tell men how He died;
He has no help but our help,
To bring them to His side.''

Gibscnville.—The meeting at Fairview will begin next Sunday morning and continue through the following week.

The meeting at Gibsonville will begin the third Sunday morning in this month and go through the week following. Rev. C. J. Edwards of Kernersville will do the preaching in both meetings.

The fourth Sunday we will have a rally day at Carolina Mills. There will be morning, afternoon and night sessions.

The revival was held at Carolina beginning Friday night before the fifth Sunday in July. Rev. H. L. Isley preached that night. Brother Edwards came Sunday and did the preaching. Brother J. B. Turner of Burlington directed and led the singing. We continued a week.

J. H. Abernethy, Pastor.

New Hope Christian Endeavor Society.

Our society held another very successful meeting on Sunday, August 27, three P. M. The president, Mrs. A. L. Holloway, was present and took charge of the meeting. The leaders were Misses Edna and Lucy Paschall. The topic used was ''Examples,'' and we had some very interesting and helpful talks on the subject. We were made to see more plainly the use of following good examples and the danger of following bad examples. I wish that all who have been following bad examples could have been present at this meeting and I believe after hearing this subject discussed, they would have been persuaded to try to follow good examples hereafter.

The surprise was a recitation given by Stella Paschall.

Two of our most active members, Misses Bertha Paschall and Alice White, met with us for the last time until they return next spring from their school work. They will be greatly missed in our society as they did much to move its work forward.

Mrs. Henry White gave a social Saturday night for our society, which was enjoyed by all present.

May God add His richest blessings to the Herald and all its readers.

Clapp.

Mrs. Nellie Gray Clapp, wife of H. L. Clapp, was born December the 11th, 1890, and departed this life July the 24th, 1922. She leaves an infant daughter (Edith Irene), a husband, father and mother, one brother and four sisters, besides a host of relatives and friends whose hearts are made sad and sore by her departure to the great beyond.

One infant daughter preceded her to the grave seven years ago.

Mrs. Clapp will be missed in both her home and community. She was a member of Shiloh Methodist Protestant church, and will be missed there also.

Her funeral was conducted by her pastor, Rev. W. F. Ashburn, and her remains were placed to rest in Shiloh cemetery. May the bereaved ones be comforted, and live the Christ-life and remember to do His Will. God is wise and makes no mistakes.

The infant is in care of Mr. and Mrs. Clark Deviney. Mrs. A. L. Kime.

Our gathering Saturday was rather small but we had a good time; two of our good pastors and friends came. We must make a special effort next year and name the day in August. You will hear from us later about it.

Sunday 120 of the Burlington Baracas and Philatheas came and conducted their Sunday school lesson here. It was done in a most interesting manner by Brother Charles Amick. All entered into the singing heartily. At the close of the lesson they served us a sumptuous dinner and left us a good supper and we are still having some of the good things today (Monday). This was the second visit and the class proposes to make a visit annually. If you will look at the financial part of this report you will see what they did besides giving us something good to eat.

We would say more but we think Brother Way will tell something of their trip.

We are glad to have Brother Millaway with us during the special meeting.

THE HOME-COMING DAY.

I have need to explain to apologize. I had more than three bushels of Bonum apples to carry over—but did not get to go. The friends from Pinnacle did not get to come—and I could not help it.

I had a card from Brother Reed late Friday evening, but I was not able to find any one to make the trip, since all were "too busy." I suppose that the interest at the home was made by those living near, and that we who failed to go were the losers. The evidences are that the Home-Coming enterprise is a good thing, and let us hope for such an annual event. I write this hastily, and will say that the desire was to go over to the Home and try to stir up an orchard enterprise.

MARRIED.

At the home of Mr. A. G. Myrick, at Worthville, August 23, 1922, Miss Lizzie Myrick, his daughter, became the bride of Mr. John L. Fields.

There were quite a number of friends, both of bride and groom, who came from the surrounding community to witness the nuptials.

After the marriage the guests were invited to a most delicious spread.

Mr. Fields and his bride were going to visit some of the places of interest in the state, then, perhaps, make their home in or near Troy, N. C. May God's blessings attend them.

At the parsonage, [illegible], August 18, 1922, Mr. W. L. Albertson and Miss Frances Irene Clapp. Mr. Albertson is the son of Mr. J. W. Albertson and Josie Albertson of near Trinity. Miss Clapp is the daughter of W. H. Clapp and Emma Clapp of High Point, N. C.

They are a promising young couple and we wish for them a long and happy life.

IDEALS OF PARENTHOOD.

To hold my children as a trust from God, to whom I must give account of how I have trained them for service in His kingdom.

To try to put away all thought of children as mine for profit, or pleasure, or even companionship, so that I shall be ready to send them away or keep them near me only as seems best for their future.

To study books and in every way try to educate myself to be an efficient parent.

Never to allow fear of exposure of my past mistakes to keep me from telling my experience to my children when it can help them.

To try to surround them with friends of high ideals and clean lives, that they may be led to choose their life partners from those of high character.

When they are of sufficient age, to train them to be ready for parenthood themselves.

To be ready always to help other parents with my experience and to conceal nothing that can help them.—Selected.

WHAT AN AVERAGE MAN DID WITH AN AVERAGE LIFE.

He was 14 years old and earning four dollars a week. He went to his pastor for advice.

And that week, out of his four dollars, he put aside 40 cents in a separate account and marked it for the Lord.

That was 50 years ago. He has lived just an average life; his income has never been great; no one knows him as a great philanthropist; yet he has expended on the Lord's account more than $60,000.

He has educated 25 men. Some of them are ministers; some physicians; one is a college president.

He has helped cripples to be self-supporting.

He has identified himself with a multitude of good works.

He might have said: "I am but an average man; I can do nothing."

Instead he did what he could—did it systematically, with vision and joy.

And the lives that he has influenced will go on influencing other lives; and those still other lives in turn so long as the world shall last.

Will you, too, begin today to invest in the sort of influence that is eternal?—Selected.

He who does justice and loves mercy and seeks the good of others no less than his own, will bring the right spirit to his public as well as his own private duties. If ever that spirit pervades a whole nation, it will be a Christian nation as none has ever yet been.—James Bryce.

—Monday night a number of Miss Paulette Rogers' friends of Burlington and Graham met at the home of Miss Carrie Collins about eight o'clock and then went from there over to Miss Rogers' home, where they took her completely by surprise. Miss Rogers is leaving Wednesday for Massey's Business School, at Richmond, Va.—The Alamance Observer.

COTTON CROP IS BETTER.

Estimates of the total, which began July 3 with a government forecast of slightly more than eleven million bales, have climbed to 11,449,000 in the official while unofficial forecasts by private agencies run as high as 12,229,000.

The acreage is considerably larger than that of last year, but the improvement of these last weeks is generally credited to the hot, dry weather, which is much better for cotton bolls than for boll weevils.

The best reports come from California, where cotton is a comparatively new crop, and from Missouri, Arizona, New Mexico and Tennessee. In order follow Arkansas, Virginia, North Carolina, Mississippi, Texas, Alabama, Louisiana, Florida, South Carolina and Georgia.

ROAD WORK GOES SLOWLY.

Government statistics indicate that traffic on American highways has increased by 450 per cent in the eight years since the great war began. This year about three-quarters of a billion dollars will be spent for road building and repair, and about as much more has been provided for work that will run into 1923 and perhaps the following year. The increase in available funds for this purpose is less than 150 per cent in eight years. Automobile owners who pay license and horsepower taxes sometimes feel that they are the ones who pay for road improvements but their share is only 19 per cent. State road bonds are meeting seven per cent of the cost; local road bonds 33 per cent; state taxes and appropriations 12 per cent; federal aid 14 per cent; county, township and district taxes and assessments 14 per cent; and miscellaneous one per cent.

Our national road bill is a big one, but the expenditure benefits every citizen and, in most sections, the only regret is that it cannot conveniently be greater.

THE STAY OF EXECUTION.

The Story of an Old Horse Who Earned His Right to a Pension.

So “Blackie” was condemned to die.

“Can't help it, wife,” responded the ranch owner. “You know that we haven't much hay valley on our land, and we have to feed every hoof on the place while the snow lasts. And it's been on the ground now for the last three months without a thaw,” he added ruefully.

“But he's been such a good, faithful old horse, Dan. They say up in town that he and his mate were the finest team in Nebraska, fifteen years ago. His coat is just like black velvet now.”

“Well, he has only got three good legs, and it takes as much hay to fill him up as it does one of the big mares. The old horse will eat every bit of two tons of hay this winter.”

“But he has been so good and honest, Dan. They say he—”

“‘Good and honest—good and faithful';” maybe he has, I don't deny that. But he hasn't earned his salt since I have had him. I thought that old team didn't amount to much when Miller threw them in when I bought his relinquishment to this place. People don't give away a twenty-four hundred pound team if they are any good. Old John lay down and died in three months, and old Blackie hasn't done a stroke of work since the day he pulled that last load of coal from town. That bad front leg of his gave out entirely.”

“Are you going to shoot him?”

“Yes.” Then, not liking the look on his wife's face, he added, “If it was old Freddie, now, that we've owned for fourteen years, I'd be willing to feed him. I don't doubt that this winter will be about all for him, anyway. Then he'll go on the pension list,” he laughed, anxious to placate his wife.

This conversation took place three years ago—and old Blackie is still eating his two tons of hay each winter. This is the story:

The very next day a dreadful blizzard came up. The morning came in bright and sunshiny. All the stock, including the colts, were turned out.

“Better let them have a chance to stretch their legs. They've been cooped up in the corral and the sheds long enough,” the ranchman's boy said, as he opened the gates.

In the afternoon the clouds came up. Flurries of snow filled the air. The cows came drifting in. Shortly after, the rest of the cattle followed. The ranchman and his son had gone to a neighbor's and barely got home before the white blanket covered everything.

“Has the stock come in, wife?” the ranchman inquired anxiously, as he stamped the snow from his shoes.

“All the cattle have,” she answered. “I sent Milly out after the colts, but she couldn't find them.”

Her husband started to his feet in alarm.

“Hasn't she got back yet?”

“Yes, she is in the other room warming her feet.”

“It is a mighty good thing she is in the house. The boy and I had all we could do to get home.”

They warmed themselves at the fire, then, tying ropes about them, started out to the stables to hay the cattle for the night. So dense was he blinding snow that the ropes were used for safety. They were fastened to the kitchen door. The ranchman's wife held the ends until two pulls, the signal, told her that they had reached the barn safely. It was impossible to see afoot ahead. They fastened the ropes to the barn. Thus they were enabled to reach the house again.

This particular ranchman owned fifteen of the finest colts in the vicinity. All during the time they were in the barn and cattle sheds he bewailed the fact that they were out in the storm.

“Everything is in but them, Jim,” he said to his son. “I should have thought they would have known enough to come to the sheds.”

“I expect they are over in some of the pockets in the hills. They are only yearlings, and they grew pretty tired of being shut up, I suppose,” the boy answered.

Just before they returned to the house they passed the stall where old Blackie stood, “eating his head off,” the ranchman said. The storm, and the fact that his fine bunch of colts were as good as gone, made the ranchman irritable. He seized a pitchfork.

The boy hesitated.

“Let him stay in, father,” he pleaded. “The poor old thing will die, sure, if you turn him out in the storm.”

“Well, let him die. It will save me the trouble of shooting him.”

So poor old faithful Blackie was turned out to die. The wind came up. Even before they started back to the house his back was covered with snow. Although it was only five o'clock it was dark, and the lamps were lighted. Just before bedtime the ranchman bundled up and went out to the stables to see if everything was all right for the night.

All evening they sat hugging the stove and talking about the fate of the colts. It is no small thing for a homesteader to lose fifteen head of fine, strong, handsome yearlings. Their two winters in Nebraska had taught them that no colt or calf ever weathered a blizzard.

To his surprise he found the corral gate was down. He went through the barn to the sheds. I don't think he was much of a praying man, but right there he uttered heartfelt thanks to the Lord. The colts—he counted them, yes, fifteen, they were all snugly packed away, head and tail, under the thick, two-foot wall sheds, safe.

He wondered greatly. When he returned to the house he told the good news.

“I can't understand how they found their way in,” he said over and over again. “I never heard of anything like it in my life.”

While they were discussing it the boy slipped out.

“Maybe that poor old black horse is out there suffering,” he said to himself. “If I see him, I'm going to let him in. Father is so glad about the colts, he won't care, I know.”

He went to the barn first to get a lantern. He steped into the fed room to light it. As he stepped back into the barn the rays shone full upon old Blackie, crunching away at the hay in his manger.

“Of course,” the boy thought as he returned to the house, “it was old Blackie that saveed the colts.”

It was three days before the blizzard was over. Hundreds of stock and colts perished. When they told the neighbors about the colts they said: ‘Why certainly old Blackie knows his way all over that place blindfolded. You couldn't lose him if you tried.”

Now you know as much about it as I do. The colts were out. They could not possibly find their way in. The old horse was pitchforked out. I think he found his way to the pocket where the colts were trying to keep warm. No doubt that they coaxed him to lead them to the warmth of the sheds. Anyway, that is how the ranchman figured it out—and old Blackie is still a pensioner on the ranch.—C. E. H., in Our Dumb Animals.

NOTES.

—Schools are opening and children are turning from play to work.

—The railroads seem to have lost hope of coming to an agreement with strikers and are filling their shops with others as fast as possible. Some trains have been discontinued.

—Grady Ferguson, who some months ago boldly robbed the Randleman bank, later voluntarily surrendered, and in his trial at Asheboro this week was sentenced to three years in the penitentiary. His wife, then in a High Point hospital, has since then died.

—The Japanese "ricksha" is giving place to the Jitsuyo, a diminutive automobile with a 72-inch wheel base and a tread of 38. Army tests credit it with an assured 30 miles to the gallon.

—Bulgaria's attar of roses industry has been hard hit by a new rose blight. The output of this most fragrant and precious of all perfume ingredients shrank 75 per cent last year and further material reductions are looked for in 1922.

—The German Government has made a 25 per cent levy on crops of wheat, oats and rye, and will sell the grain to the poorer classes in the cities at one-third the market price. It is the same plan that ruined Republican Rome.

—The labor union movement in China is less than two years old but already Canton has experienced strikes by carpenters, butchers, painters, street sweepers, school teachers and all city employees. Throughout the so-called republic the beggars and thieves have also formed unions but, as yet, there has been no walkout on their part.

—Germany has arranged to buy back from Italy all German property confiscated in Italy, and return it to its original owners.

—France, England, and Italy have arranged a conference with the Greeks and Turks to seek a settlement of the Near East question and prevent further hostilities.

—The German Reichstag has designated "Deutschland ueber Alles" as the national republican song on the ground that it is the only song that does not glorify German arms —On August 19 Herr Hentzen, a German student, remained two hours and ten seconds in the air in a glider, or motorless aeroplane. The best previous record was five minutes.

FORCING DIVINE SANCTIONS.

Peter declared that the unlearned and unstable wrest the Scriptures to their own destruction. This is part of a more general process of the mind of man in its dealing with God. The dishonest soul presumes to misinterpret the expression of the divine will in a way to give itself license to pursue some course conceived to be in its own interest, intending when called to account to justify itself by referring to the expression which it has wilfully misinterpreted and disobeyed.

Sometimes men pursue a similar dishonest course on the ground that the end justifies the means. "Would not God have us do good?" they say, not taking into account the vast moral harm they do by the use of unjustifiable means.

Judas had a fine opportunity to justify his betrayal of Jesus by this process. Had not Jesus said that he must be delivered to the chief priests and elders to be put to death? Had he not spoken of this as in accordance with the plan of God? Then to betray him into the hands of the chief priests and elders would be promoting the purpose of God. Then Jesus said to Judas as he started out in pursuance of his purpose, "What thou doest, do quickly!" Does this not seem to be a sanction of Judas' course, almost if not quite a command to pursue that course? On the morrow, after the thing was done, could not Judas justify himself by these apparent divine sanctions? He may have imagined so, but when the morrow came and the spirit of evil that had led him on left him to the clear and terrible light of his own conscience, he saw that he had sinned a terrible sin, from the remorse of which he sought to escape by self-destruction.

No, God cannot be mocked. We may deceive ourselves for a time, but we cannot deceive God for a moment. We cannot afford to try to be dishonest with God.

MISSIONARY MEETING AT GRACE CHURCH, GREENSBORO, SEPTEMBER 18, 1922.

There will be a meeting of all executive officers of both the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary societies, and a District Meeting at Grace church September 18. The program will be as follows:

12:00 Luncheon at church.

3:00 District Meeting for Grace, St. Paul and West End.

Dr. Harris Glascock and Mrs. M. H. Waynick, chairmen for Greensboro District, will have charge of the program. Miss Annie L. Forrest will be one of the speakers. There will be special music at all of these meetings. All members of the missionary societies and everybody interested in missionary work is cordially invited to attend all of these meetings.

Especially would we urge that you attend the District Meeting, if you are not already a member of a missionary society.

—Mrs. Daniel Coble (formerly Miss Donnie Kirkman) died in a High Point hospital last Saturday and was buried at Alamance Presbyterian church on Sunday afternoon. The funeral was largely attended. She was the mother of Rev. Chas. P. Coble, pastor of the High Point Presbyterian church.

—Over seventy-two per cent of the persons whose sketches appear in the twelfth volume of "Who's Who in America," just published, attended college. Fifty-nine per cent of them are college graduates.

—A Kansas farmer had just built a big barn. One day as he was setting off for town he told his two sons to cut a small hole in one of the sides so that the cat could get in or out at will.

The boys cut the hole just beside the big barn door, but when the farmer returned and saw it he was much displeased.

"Why can't I depend on you boys to do a single thing right?" he exclaimed angrily. "Dont you know that hole is in the wrong place?"

"Why?" asked the boys.

The farmer fairly snorted. Leaping from the buggy, he seized the barn door and swung it open, and of course it covered the aperture.

"Now, where is your cat hole?" he shouted. "How in the name of sense can the cat get into the barn when the door's open?"—The Continent.

BLANK DEEDS FOR THE CONVEYANCE OF CHURCH PROPERTY.

At the last Conference the secretary was instructed to prepare a blank deed for the conveyance of church property. (See Journal, 1922, page 28.) I should have called attention some time ago to the fact that these blanks are ready, and may be had by writing me for them. These blanks are a copy of a blank already in use, plus some suggestions as to phrasing from Brother T. T. Hicks, of Henderson, who has my hearty thanks for the same. So you need not hesitate to use them.

C. W. Bates, Secretary.

BROTHER MINNIS'S ADDRESS.

I note in the Herald of Septembeer 1 the address of Rev. J. F. Minnis as "Khandesh, Dhulia, India."

This is not correct. His address will be Dhulia, W. Khandesh, India.

He and his wife will attend Language School soon after arriving, but I am not certain of the address, although I think it will be Poona.

Any mail sent to him at Dhulia will, of course, be forwarded, and his address while at the Language School will be published later.

PAGEANT AT TABERNACLE.

The Home and Foreign Missionary societies of Tabernacle church will present the pageant, "The Coming of the Kingdom," on next Saturday evening, September 16, at 7:30 o'clock. The admission will be 15 and 25 cents. The public is invited.

—Rev. Mr. Maynarrd, "The flying parson," met his death in a flying trip at a fair in Rutland, Vt. He intended to give up flying with this trip, it is said. He was trying to raise money for a hospital at Saranac Lake, N. Y.

—War between Greece and Turkey has been in progress for some time. Recently the Turks have almost exterminated the Greek army.

—Brorther Gerringer is with Brother Bethea in a meeting at Bethesda this week.

—In speaking to a group of students recently of the considerations that led him to enter the ministry, Dr. Charles E. Jefferson of the Broadway Tabernacle, New York City, gave the following explanation of how the call came to him:

"There are five gifts a minister must possess—the gift of speaking, the gift of imparting knowledge, the gift of molding character, the gift of moral enthusiasm, and the gift of moral discernment. I found to my surprise that all these gifts were mine, and that in them God was calling me into the ministry. And the call was deepened and strengthened by a growing sense of the world's needs."

THE BUDGET.

By Rev. W. H. Neese.

I. What It Is.

We will consider it in the first place as an assessment. The Executive Committee of the General Conference has asked us to raise $50,000 per year during the present quadrennium. Our conference voted to assume this obligation, thus making it mandatory upon each individual member. This $50,000 which we agreed to raise constitutes the General Conference Budget.

By the authority of our own local conference, the finance committee has laid an assessment of $16,400 upon the Methodist Protestants in North Carolina. This is our Annual Conference Budget for the present year. The two Budgets are apportioned to the different fields by the Annual Conference, according to membership and financial ability.

Many churches in making out their financial program for the year, include in their budget not only the General and Annual Conference assessments, but pastor's salary, pulpit help, church Disciplines, fuel, light, and any other local expense. When this entire budget is divided and subdivided, and distributed among the individual members according to the ability and generosity of each, the problem of raising the church's finances is solved.

The Budget is the sum total of all assessments laid upon the church, by both the General and Annual Conferences.

In the second place, the Budget is the concrete expression of our faith in an enlarging church. If we Methodist Protestants believe in anything, and we most certainly do, we believe that ours should be, and is, a progressive and expanding church. To the pessimist a budget of $66,400 apportioned to 25,000 members looks as an unjustifiable financial imposition. The attitude of the Budget-kicker displays the weakness of his faith in a great church.

The massiveness of the Budget, if its bigness warrants emphasizing, is a revelation. It reveals in the first place that the banner of pessimism is not borne aloft by the leaders in the front ranks of the Methodist Protestant Church. It also is an expression of the leaders' great faith in a great and growing church. The Budget is a challenge to every individual of the Methodist Protestant Church to prove his increasing faith in an enlarging church and his unalloyed allegiance to it.

II. The Budget—What It Does.

When the Savior of the world said to His disciples "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, and make disciples of all nations." He meant in part to emphasize the fact that the individual and the individual church have pressing obligations outside their own narrow self-prescribed spheres.

The Budget is designed to do two things: The first is, to enable the church to meet its general obligations. The spirit of Methodist Protestantism that is characteristic of every devoted follower of Christ, desires not to spend itself in its entirety in the local church, or in its narrow local community. It recognizes an affectionate bond of brotherhood, binding the individual and the church to other people and to other churches. There are a number of churches in our conference yet in their infancy. The people who are the pillars of these rising churches have caught a vision of the ever enlarging Methodist Protestant Church, and desiring to share with us a portion of the goodly inheritance, have consecrated themselves to the supreme task of building for themselves, for us, and for generations yet to come—a Methodist Protestant Church.

The Methodist Protestant Church in our conference is undertaking oblagtions to strengthen the hands of those younger churches, which without our strengthening, would felt need. The Budget affects materially and suffer. The Budget realized supplies a deep-spiritually in proportion to its realization, the following important churches: Albemarle, Asheville, West End, Greensboro, Charlotte. Lexington and Liberty and Siler City circuit. A portion of the salary paid each pastor serving each of these churches is paid out of the Budget. The budget also provides the interest on indebtedness on the following church buildings: Whitakers, Stallings, Enfield, Albemarle, West End and Charlotte. Welsh Memorial has the promise of $1 for every $2 they raise, with the proviso that the board limit its appropriation to $300. English Street Church, High Point, is a worthy undertaking by a worthy people. This church is promised $1,000 toward the purchase of a church building. The disposition of the Budget with reference to the general needs as above cited, is in the hands of the Board of Church Extension.

The Budget is designed to help the superannuated ministers. Our church would be unworthy to name the name of Christ, and to claim Him as its head, if it ignored the vital material needs of the men who have worn themselves out, exhausting both physical and material resources, battling against the world, the flesh, and the evil one, and holding up Christ the living Head of the church and the Redeemer and Savior of men.

Every one will agree that the active minister is worthy every cent of the salary promised him—and he is. He must have it to support himself and family. Especially is this so if the active minister has no outside income, or a [illegible] surplus. If the active minister must cramp himself to live within the confines of a given salary, imagine, if you please, the predicament of the inactive minister, who is no longer wanted and no longer supported. If at any time in the life's history of any minister of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, when his soul should be happy and his mind void of uncertain forebodings, it should be in the evening of life's declining day. Our church, through the Budget is endeavoring to better the financial conditions of the men who have given all and labored long, that we might have a better church and a better world than they. The present allotment of the Budget is wholly inadequate to supply the needs of our superannuated men. I have heard quite a number of Methodist Protestants express themselves during my ministry as being unfavorable to the superannuate support. In my judgment the darkest blot on the map of Methodist Protestantism in North Carolina is the insignificant pittance granted our superannuated men. It is not the fault of our conference leaders that the part of the Budget set aside for superannuates is so small—they are dissatisfied with it. One reason why this particular portion of the Budget is so meager is the fact that the laymen do not see the need for it. Another reason is that since we ministers have not yet felt the need, it may be that we have not fully emphasized this part of the Budget. I might say in passing, that not all of our pulpits will ever be filled with the highest type of men, until the church sets a higher standard of value upon their life's work, and provides an adequate reward for same.

In addition to the above the Annual Conference Budget includes the salary of our Annual Conference president. This apportionment of the budget is more important than any of the other interests named. What would a conference accomplish without a leader to direct and lead the people unto certain definite goals? Without a president we would fail to reach our goals and ideals as much so as a bank, railroad or government would fail without an executive head.

The formulators of the Budget had an eye upon the interests and demands of our young people. In the young people lies the hope of the Methodist Protestant Church. Our ministers are passing one by one; leading laymen and laywomen are likewise falling from the ranks of service. Their places must be filled. Unless our young people are being properly trained they cannot take up, and carry on successfully, the work of mature men and mature women who have labored doing the Master's work.

The Budget provides for the young people a leader to direct the religious life of our youth, and to train them for active work in the Master's kingdom. Our money thus used is transmuted, or transformed into a higher character of Christian manhood and womanhood.

In addition to all the foregoing. there are several items of importance that are provided for. These are worthy objects and should by no means be overlooked. I shall mention each without any comment.

Debt on president's parsonage, and interest. Publication of Conference Journals. Salary of conference secretary and treasurer, conference reporter's salary, delegates' expenses to Pittsburgh. Expenses Young People's Summer Conference.

As before stated, the Annual Conference Budget provided to take care of the various needs noted in all the above is $16,400.

We now pass from the Annual Conferenre Budget to the consideration of the General Conference Budget. To quote from our conference Journal: "The General Conference Budget includes all the money that is to be used to carry on the work of the denomination, and includes Home Missions, Foreign Missions, Education, Young People's Work, Old People's Home, and whatever other interest may be decided on by the General Conference."

As our own local conference realizes the imperative need of assisting the needy churches within our borders, so the General Conference sees the need of assisting young and worthy churches to the extreme limits of the conference. Twenty-four per cent of our General Conference Budget or $12,000 helps to pay the salaries of worthy pastors in a half-dozen or more states in the union. A portion of the General Conference Budget which we help to raise comes back to our own state, and helps to support the pastors of the following churches: Charlotte, West End, and Asheville.

The budget also provides for foreign missionary activities. I should like to qualify "foreign missionary activities" by using the term "extensive." But "limited" is, perhaps, a more fitting word. The Budget allowance is the same as for home missions, namely, $12,000. Our share of the budget helps to support ten or more missionaries who are working in India, China and Japan. Churches and schools are being built and supported by it.

Twenty-four per cent, or $12,000 of the General Conference Budget, is expended in the interest of education. Never in our history was th demand for well rounded, educated leaders so great as now. Unless all our pulpits are manned by men of mature wisdom and knowledge, our church will suffer at least numerically, and perhaps spiritually. Church-going people expect to be lifted up when they hear a sermon. Will they be lifted up and fed, unless the minister knows how? The Budget provides that the deserving and aspiring youth may qualify himself from an educational standpoint to meet the imperative demands of those who seek knowledge and enlightenment from him. Last year assistance was given to 37 young men who are preparing themselves not only for the ministry, but for a larger ministry. The Budget also helps to pay the current expenses of our colleges. Over 80 young people attended our colleges last year. The budget helped to make this possible.

Four per cent of our General Conference Budget, or $2,000 is invested in the young people throughout the entire denomination. A worthier cause than this cannot be found. The board that directs this investment is directing the very life's blood of the denomination through channels that are destined to produce the very sinew and life of our church.

Ten per cent of the Budget enables the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society to do more extensive work among the women in the foreign field. Four and one-half per cent is allotted the Woman's Home Missionary Society for furthering their activities here in the home land. Our Children's Home at High Point and the Home for the Aged in Ohio each receive one per cent; the American Bible Society, ½ per cent; Superannuated Minister, four per cent. The total for the above needs is $50,000, our General Conference Budget.

In the second place, the Budget realized will enable the church to meet its financial obligations. The scope of the work undertaken by our denomination is large compared with the funds in hand for its prosecution. The fields are ready—both home and foreign. Not enough laborers to care for the harvest have yet entered upon the task, but many are ready at a moment's notice to volunteer their life's service, if the church will provide the means.

In fact, the entire church is cramped because of a lack of funds with which to carry out the full program of an enlarging church

If you will divde the amount of our total Budget, Annual Conference Budget and General Conference Budget, $66,400, by our membership in North Carolina, 25,000, you will find that the average is quite small, only $2.65. And yet there are men in our church who are stewards of superfluous wealth, who actually complain that they are taxed to death to support the Kingdom of God.

It may be that you represent a church in which are members whose eyes have never beheld the needs of other peoples in other lands. They may be blind to the needs in their home land. They may not even see their own local church's needs. But they can see very plainly their own so-called "needs" and with their ready cash they produce or purchase every conceivable thing that will add to their own selfish personal gratification. You would need to use a telescope of maximum magnifying power to enabble such a church member to see through himself into the needy realms of other people.

The program as mapped out by our leaders must not fail, it must materialize. It must be carried out. The Budget provides the means. What are you young people going to do about it? Will you focalize your interest and your vision upon your own self, or on your own local church to the exclusion of the greater interests of a great church, or will you enlarge your vision, and realize yourself a significant part of God's great church, to which you owe inseparable allegiance?

In view of the great results which our Budget is designed to effect, let us one and all enter upon the task with a determination to raise every cent of every claim.

JUST USE A CENT AND A MINUTE.

A cent and a minute used in the right way and at the right time can produce great and lasting good, and result in much satisfaction and happiness to the one who uses them.

All you have to do it to get a postal, address it to me, and write that you want information about the Board's Annuity Fund.

A good brother in Ohio recently read my article in the church papers on the subject, and he was so favorably impressed that he decided to give $500 each to the Board of Foreign Missions, the Board of Home Missions, and the Superannuated Society.

He is seventy-two years of age, too, and believes that the Annuity Plan affords him the best means of using his money in the work of the Kingdom.

1. He has made a personal investment which puts his money just where he wishes it to be used, and in the way he wishes it used.

2. He realizes it is a safe investment, because the Board and the Church are back of it to insure the carrying out the stipulated conditions of the bond he received.

3. He appreciates the fact that the promised interest on his money thus given is more than a Savings Bank would pay, and that it will be paid promptly.

4 He knows that by giving his money to the Board of Foreign Missions for work in heathendom he is in partnership with God in carrying out His will to give the Gospel to the whole world, and the outcome will be sure.

5. He recognizes the fact that the Annuity Plan is better than making a will, despite all the good features of that plan, because wills are often contested and broken, and the intended beneficiaries do not receive the designed bequests.

6. He knows that by the Annuity Plan there are no delays, no expenses, no taxes, etc.

7. He sees the additional safeguard in its most careful investment by the Board under the advice of one of the best banking institutions in Baltimore, and that only on his death will his money be used in the missionary work.

8. The plan is simple, it is in use by most of the denominations, it has proved eminently satisfactory to the donors, and to the boards, it has greatly helped the work of the Kingdom, and it gives a dependable, regular income to many who, in giving their money to the church, have helped to guarantee the further success of its foreign missionary enterprise.

Now is the time for you to get that postal, and address it to Rev. Fred C. Klein, 316 N. Charles St., Baltimore, Md., and just write: Send me information about your Board's Annuity Plan, and write your name and address plainly. Do it right now, please.

Fred C. Klein.

—William H. Anderson, state superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of New York, issued the following statement respecting the resignation of Justice Clark of the Supreme Court of the United States which was unanimously adopted by the Anti-Saloon League staff for the entire state in conference at the League headquarters today:

While elevation to the bench does not deprive any man of his right to personal opinions which are intelligently based and honestly held, the friends of law and order will be pleased at the retirement from the Supreme Court of the United States of the only justice who so far departed from the standards of propriety so scrupulously and generally observed by the members of that great and respected court as to make a public attack upon, thus rendering more difficult the enforcement of, a law which represents the progressive intelligence and awakening conscience of the American Nation, and which had already been and might again come before that court.

—James K. Vardaman, U. S. Senator from Mississippi from 1913 to 1919, was defeated for the nomination for Senator in a "run-off" primary held in Mississippi last week. Hubert D. Stephens won the election and so will be the Democratic candidate.

—Train accidents did not kill a single passenger on the Pennsylvania Railroad System in a year. This remarkable record was made public last week by Pennsylvania officials. The period was from June 1, 1921, to May 31, 1922. In that time 1,400,000 passenger trains carried more than 152 million passengers.

-President Harding appointed George Sutherland, formerly United States Senator from Utah, to succeed Mr. Clarke as Associate Justice. The Senate promptly confirmed the nomination. Mr. Sutherland has served two terms in the Senate, 1905 to 1917. He is a lawyer of distinction and was president of the American Bar Association in 1916-17.

FOR PASTORS ONLY.

This is to notify you that I am sending out the report blanks this week. I want to take this opportunity to say a word or two about them and about some other matters that concern us.

1. If you do not get your blanks by the time you read this, please write me, and I will send others. Some of the brethren wait until Conference, then come to me and say, "Brother Bates, I failed to get my blanks." I have made it a practice ever since I have been secretary to send out the blanks at least six weeks before Conference. It is very possible the address given in the Journal, and I must go by that, is not correct. If you don't get the blanks in time it may be your fault. But I want to help you get them in time.

2. Study the blanks between now and Conference, and get together the information they ask for. I have, as you will notice, made one little change in the blank for Benevolences that will simplify it somewhat. Don't put any figures in the space where the red lines are. Begin your figures on the line just below. If you will observe what the columns call for: 1st. The assessment; 2d. How the assessment for General Conference Budget was paid; 3d. The total for each Budget; and 4th. The line at the bottom of the blank for the total paid on Budgets and for local church benevolences, or interests, it seems to me you will have little trouble making out the blank correctly. And don't get discouraged about it A preacher in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, said to me the other day: "Brother Bates, do you folks have any trouble with your preachers making out their reports to Conference?" I assured him we did. And he said, "We come up to every Conference, in spite of the fact that we have been instructing our men for forty years or more, with reports that no one can make head or tail of." My idea about it is that it isn't a matter of ignorance, but of carelessness. Study the blanks, and get your facts together.

The Pastor's Personal Report Blanks have been changed a bit. The question: "Have you taken an offering at every regular service?" has been inserted. (See Journal, 1922, page 28.) Be sure to give the amount raised for the Children's Home. This will appear, as last year, on a separate page of the Journal. Last year some pastors wrote the amount in i their financial blank; others failed to put it in their personal report, and if anything was raised the charge failed to get credit for it. (See Journal, 1922, page 51.)

Two additions have been made to the Information Blank attached to the Personal Report Blank. I am asking for the names and addresses of Missionary Society Presidents. I am also asking for the names of the churches on your charge. If any changes are made in boundaries, these will be taken care of. Put down your churches as they are now.

The Discipline (Revision of 1920, page 45) provides that the last monthly meeting in each year, and I take it that may mean last appointment, all the officers of the church shall be elected. If you will observe that rule, the information asked for will be up to date. And please put the information in the blank. There are supposed to be 219 Sunday schools in the Conference. Only 196 Sunday school superintendents are reported.

And please tell me how many Journals your present charge will use. I have given the contract for 2100 Journals, with the privilege of reducing or increasing the number as needed. They cost too much—15 cents a copy—to throw away. Be conservative in your estimate. But put it down. The figures you give me are what the printer goes by. Some failed to put down the number they wanted last year, and I had to guess. An arrangement with the printer will make it pretty certain the Journals will not come apart, or at least the packages won't, this time.

3. Please send in your Delegate's Cards. Up to date I have received 53. That leaves twenty still to come. Some may not have held their third quarterly conference yet, but I venture to believe that some of them have overlooked, possibly forgotten, that I sent them cards to be returned. Please send them in.

All this is said "for the good of the order."

C. W. Bates, Secretary.

THE PROTESTANT CHURCH'S RESPONSIBILITY TO FOLLOW UP ITS NEWLY ARRIVED IMMIGRANTS.

Since eighty per cent of all immigration passes through Ellis Island, it is very logical to make an analysis of the opportunities for following up newly arrived immigrants through resources there. There are nineteen organizations which maintain workers in the "Social Service Department" at Ellis Island. Twelve of these organizations have Protestant affiliations. The Jewish and Roman Catholic societies have developed efficient and extensive follow-up systems. They are doing a very notable piece of work and obtaining splendid results because of national and local co-operation.

Protestant immigrants coming to America are practically neglected when it comes to an adequate method of following them up and relating them to the Protestant agencies of their community.

Before the present "Quota Law" went into effect, over 60 per cent of those passing through Ellis Island were Catholics; but the present law favors immigration from the northern countries of Europe. From July 1, 1921, when the law went into effect, until March 31 of this year, 21,000 English people came in, 10,000 Scotch and 11,000 Scandinavians, making a total of 42,000. The astonishing thing about it all is, according to Senator Colt of the Senate Immigration Committee, that the net increase in population for the United States of immigration over emigration from northern Europe during the same period was 36,000, while for southern Europe it was only 6,000. This shows that for the present, people from Protestant countries of Europe come and stay. Therefore the greater need for following them up.

NICOTINE FOR RATS AND MEN.

Will H. Brown.

In a well known city are two manufacturing plants. One makes a rat poison, sure to kill, on every package of which are these words: "This is Pure Nicotine." The other establishment manufactures cigars and cigarettes, also containing "pure nicotine," but not advertised as poison. One product kills rats and the other kills men and boys. One kills quickly, the other slowly.

A five-year old boy found a fragment of a cigar in a discarded coat, swallowed it, and died within a few minutes.

Tobacco is killing men and boys all over the world, by the slow process of nicotine poison, thus prolonging the suffering, instead of making short work of it, as in the case of rats. We should have a law requiring that every package of cigarettes be labeled as pure poison—likewise every cigar, and every plug or sack of tobacco.

If this were done the tobacco men would complain of depression in their business more than they are doing. In order to stimulate sales there has been such a slashing of prices on cigarettes as to arouse practically every organ of the trade to a serious discussion of the subject. The Tobacco Record says the situation has become so critical through price-cutting that it has "so thoroughly demoralized the trade in at least three states (mentioning Wisconsin and Minnesota) that there has been serious talk among the dealers of taking such ill-advised action as to join hands with the enemies of tobacco in seeking the passage of laws that would prohibit the sale of cigarettes in their respective states.

TO THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MISSIONARY SOCIETIES.

The Young People's Conference held in Burlington elected me superintendent of missions. Our president, Mr. Harrison, is very anxious for us to do some definite, worthwhile work in our departments this year, but I cannot hope to accomplish anything without your help; therefore I am asking that you have your secretaries write me the interesting things you are doing. On the other hand if you need assistance, please write me your trouble and I, with all the information I can obtain, will try to help you out.

There is so much to be done, both in the home and foreign fields, that we need societies organized in more, and if possible, all our churches. Come on! Let us see who will be the first to organize and report to me. I could not ask other churches to help me until we took some steps in my own church. I am happy to report that definite steps toward organizing the young people were taken in the Enfield church Sunday morning after Sunday school.

I trust that you will write me and I assure you that I shall be glad for you to suggest good plans you have tried that I may pass them on to the new societies that are going to be organized in other churches. Do not forget to write me. Yours for service,

Sallie C. Barnhill.

MARRIED.

In Haw River Methodist Protestant church Sunday, September 10, Mr. Garland Lee Martindale to Miss Lillian Cecil Holt. These are splendid young people, having a wide circle of friends. They are both leaders in Christian Endeavor and Epworth League circles. Miss Holt being leader for the Junior Christian Endeavor society at Haw River church. Rev. J. A. Ledbetter, the pastor, officiated.

—Mrs. Harding, wife of the President, has been critically ill, but is now better.

PASTORS' REPORTS—

Rev. J. D. Morris reports $225 paid pastor, nothing on either budget, 200 visits, professions 58, accessions 34, net gain in membership 25.

Rev. G. L. Curry reports paid pastor $303, G. C. B. $112, A. C. B. $37; visits for year 426, professions 14, accessions eight, net gain two, subscriptions nine.

Rev. J. A. Burgess reports paid pastor $615 for year, G. C. B. $75. nothing on A. C. B.; visits 112 for year, professions 11, accessions 10; net gain in membership, six.

Rev. H. S. B. Thompson reports paid pastor to date $482.80; visits 40, subscriptions two, canvass yet to be made for budget.

SUCCESS—

Somebody has well said that there is no such thing as absolute failure nor of absolute success; it all depends upon the view-point. In view of this fact, without considering others, one ought never to be discouraged at any failure nor unduly lifted up at any success. Others might have failed more than he and certain others might have succeeded better than he.

But there is one thing all men need to keep in their mind, that they can maintain the habit of expecting success. This will help the man with one talent greatly, it will help the man with five talents just as much. But he who gives over to discorragement may be sure he will never accomplish much with his life.

There are some church officials who would do well to learn the value of the above statements. There may be a few pastors who could profit by them. I have yet to find a discouraged lot of church members doing as much as they could and would do when encouraged. There is no benefit to be derived by discouraging your workers. Encourage, ENCOURAGE, ENCOURAGE and then success is nearer them than it would ever be by sounding the pessimistic note or by smearing all things over with indigo and yellow.

OUR OPPORTUNITY—

One who has traveled over the bounds of the North Carolina District within the past year has felt profoundly certain things. First, we have in our church membership as fine a lot of young people as any church, and I would not be disparaging others to say that we have a better lot than some others. Then too, I have found that there is plenty of room for us to expand. There is ample ground for us to lengthen our cords and enlarge our tents without proselyting from other communions. There are possible a dozen places where our denomination could go in at once and begin the establishment of a church with a nucleus large enough to guarantee a flourishing church within a few years. We lack one thing, funds with which to send the pastor to these places and by which we might assure our people there that they would get sufficient help in the establishment of their church to make it go.

In view of this, let US ALL make our contributions to the Annual Conference Budget just as large as possible. We ought to have ten thousand dollars in the treasury of our Board of Church Extension this fall. We will not have it unless YOU make YOUR contribution larger than last year.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 17.

Getting an Education. Proverbs 9: 1-11.

Daily Readings.

Mon. Our need of knowledge. Job 11: 7-12.
Tues. Studying God's Word. Ezra 7: 10.
Wed. An ancient school. 1 Samuel 19: 18-20
Thurs. Value of wisdom. Prov. 3: 13-20.
Fri. In God's school Acts 7: 20-33.
Sat. Practical application. Prov. 24: 30-34.

These are days of separation and reunion—separation from homes and parents, if we are going away to school, and reunion with school and college mates. Vacation time is over and once more we turn away from the happy carefree summer days to more serious thought and study. Some are taking up the study of text-books regretfully and are wishing that their whole lives might be one long vacation with nothing to do but have a good time. Others have been longing for the time to come when they could resume their studies and take another step toward the high goal they have set for themselves. Why all this commotion, anxiety, and sometimes sacrifice on the part of both parents and children to get an education, and what is an education?

Meaning. The word "education" has many denitions such as, "instruction and training," "acquired knowledge," "the impartation or acquisition of knowledge," "the sum of qualities acquired through individual instruction and training," etc., but the definition I like best is "the development of the best that is in a person."

Education is not a gift, it is not inherited; it is to be earned; won by hard labor. It represents days of hard toil and mental labor, sometimes hardships, hours of wrestling with difficult mathematical problems, scientific tests, and delving into reference books, but it represents also powers of self-analysis, observation, experience and judgment, and it represents lives that can meet and successfuly overcome temptations, obstacles and difficulties.

Aim. Our aim in getting an education should not be merely to gain knowledge, not to become skilled in any one thing, but our major aim should be to develop character. There are four purposes that we, as young people, should keep in mind in getting an education. First the controlling aim of our lives should be to do our utmost to extend the Kingdom of Christ throughout the world. Second, we should believe that God has a definite plan for our life-work, which is our purpose to find and follow, no matter where it may lead us. Third, we should study the needs of the world and also the plan and will of God as revealed in the Bible, both to fit us for larger present service, and as a means toward finding God's plan for our life's work. (Perhaps the greatest of all handicaps under which we have been working up to the present time is our lack of accurate knowledge as to what conditions really exist. We do not know what is being done in our church schools. We must know conditions before we can make them better.) Fourth, realizing the necessity of thorough training in all kinds of service, we should consider it our duty to get a college education, if possible. People everywhere realize that better work comes from better preparation and many and varied are the calls for the college trained man and woman.

The forming of these definite purposes is of great spiritual value to young men and women.

Opportunity. Never before in the history of the world has the youth of our country had such opportunities to acquire an education as are afforded them today. Schools and colleges are within the reach of every American boy and girl. Even though poor financially it is possible for them to get an education. Various methods of working one's way are plentiful. Some institutions offer scholarships to worthy boys and girls, boards of education make it possible to borrow money for that purpose. Even those who cannot give all their time to study may work during the day and attend night schools or take correspondence courses at home. But are we, my young friends, availing ourselves of these many opportunities? Startling facts were brought out at the beginning of the World War that proved that we are not. One-fourth of the young men of our nation, when examined for service in the United States Army, could not read a newspaper or write a letter home. One-third of this group were below normal physically. This is the condition that has arisen in a land of equal opportunity. We need to be awakened to a sense of our responsibilities and obligations as American citizens and as ambassadors of God.

The Kind of Education We Need. The three main agencies of education are the home, the school, and the church. The home does very little that is systematic, and the school and church have divided the field, one taking secular and the other religious instruction. Both are necessary for the development of the best that is in us, and for the cultivation of broadmindedness, but the tendency is to lay more stress on secular education than on religious. This should not be so. Along with the education that prepares us for positions in the business and professional world should go the education that prepares the soul for mastery over self, if we would be educated in its true sense. Until we have gained mastery over our passions and appetites, until we are able to look and think for ourselves, are we truly educated.

Stanly Charge.—Our special meeting at Porter began Sunday morning, August 27, continued until Thursday night. Rev. D. A. Braswell was our pulpit help and did good gospel preaching. Two additions to the church. Brother Braswell's work and preaching was highly acceptable and he made many friends while with us. We extend an invitation to Brother Braswell to come again.

WHO SHALL BE FAIREST?

Who shall be fairest?
Who shall be rarest?
Who shall be first in the songs that we sing?
She who is kindest
When fortune is blindest,
Bearing through winter the blooms of the spring.
Charm of our gladness,
Friend of our sadness,
Angel of life, when its pleasures take wing,
She shall be fairest,
She shall be rarest,
She shall be first in the songs that we sing!

Who shall be nearest,
Noblest and dearest,
Named but with honor and pride evermore?
He, the undaunted,
Whose banner is planted,
On Glory's high ramparts and battlements hoar;
Fearless of danger,
To falsehood a stranger,
Looking not back while there's Duty before!
He shall be nearest,
He shall be dearest,
He shall be first in our hearts evermore!

—Charles Mackay.

MARTIN LUTHER AND HIS CHILDREN.

Amid all the weighty affairs that burdened the mind of Luther, he found room and time for a most tender love of little children. Not only his own, but the children of his friends and associates were dearly beloved by him; and many of his letters dealing with serious and perplexing subjects close with a playful message to the little ones of his friend's household.

Perhaps Luther's remembrance of his own childhood and of its severe discipline gave an added touch of kindliness to his feeling for children. His parents were most faithful and devoted to what they believed the interest of their children, but as was the custom of those times the government of the family was very strict, and slight offenses were often the occasion of extreme punishment. The boy Martin by this treatment became timid and shrinking, and it was not until he grew older and could appreciate the conscientious training of his parents, that he realized how much of deep affection prompted the rigor that had seemed so extreme.

His own home had been a godly one, in which his parents had striven to bring up their children "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord:" and if at times they were severe, yet Luther himself felt in after years that at least they had erred in the right direction. "Through him," he writes, upon hearing of his father's death, "my Creator gave me whatsoever I am and have. . . . It is right and fit that I, a son, should mourn for such a father, by whose sweat I was supported and made whatsoever I am."

Martin Luther had five children, of whom one, Elizabeth, died before she was a year old. The great Reformer writes very tenderly of his dead baby. "I never thought the heart of a father was so tender toward his children."

His favorite child Magdalene, or Lene, as he used fondly to call here, was thirteen years old when she died, a child of rare loveliness of character and of a deeply spiritual nature. It was a sore wrench to the father's heart to part from the little maid, and shortly before her death he said, bending oved her, "Magdalene, my dear daughter, you would be glad to remain here with your father; are you willing to depart and go to that other Father?"

"Yes, father," answered the child, "just as God wills."

Tears came to Luther's eyes, and as he turned away to hide them from his little girl he said, "If the flesh is so strong, how will it be with the spirit! Well, whether we live or die, we are the Lord's." When the little form was placed in its coffin he said, "Ah, dear Lene, you will rise again, and shine as a star, yea, as the sun."

The remaining four children, Hans, or John the oldest, Martin, Paul, and Margaret, grew up together. The family circle was not again broken by death until the father himself was taken away. John Luther studied law. He married the daughter of Professor Cruciger and lived to the age of fifty. Martin, the fourth child, his father's namesake, was a delicate child, and was prevented by ill health from attaining distinction in public life. He married, but left no children. Paul was a rollicking little fellow, so robust and hardy that his father used to say, "Paul must fight against the Turks." Of all Luther's children, he seems to have inherited most of his father's ability. He studied medicine, was for a time professor in the university at Jena, and afterward court-physician. Most of the branches of the family still existing have descended through him. Little Margaret, the only little sister after the death of Elizabeth and Magdalene, married George von Kunheim, and was the mother of nine children.

Luther himself, though certainly exacting obedience from his household, was not a tyrannical or censorious parent. He loved to sit in is garden, with his wife busy beside him, and his children playing about, and often complained that necessity compelled him to be absent so much from his home and family. Every week he used to set apart an evening for music, when the family and invited friends joined in singing, and playing on different instruments.

Christmas-time was always a great festival in the Luther family, as in most German homes: and the busy writer, preacher, and reformer used to lay aside his troublesome cares and enter into the spirit of the season as heartily as any of his own little ones. The Christmas tree was always a prominent part of the celebration.

He wrote a number of hymns for children and the following carol has been known and loved by many children since he perhaps taught it to his own little flock:

"Away in a manger, no crib for his bed,
The little Lord Jesus laid down his sweet head,
The stars in the sky looking down where he lay,
"The cattle are lowing, the poor baby wakes:
But little Lord Jesus, no crying he makes.
I love thee, Lord Jesus; look down from the sky
And stay by my crib, watching my lullaby."

We have a charming letter written to his little four-year-old Johnny, while at Coburg, that shows how his thoughts were with his family in the midst of his many cares, and how thoroughly he entered into childish sports and pleasures.

Playing one day with little Martin, he said, "This boy preacheth God's word by his deeds and acts; for God saith, Have dominion over the fishes of the sea, and over the beasts of the field. See how the dog putteth up with everything from him!"—The Little Christian.

MAYSIE'S MISSIONARY CHECK.

"Now any one can write a check!"

With these words, Dr. Daniel Hedgpeth, the pastor of Greenwood church, closed his stirring appeal for missions, concluding with the statement that the ushers would pass the plates, on which blank checks would await the pleasure of any one to sign.

"Any one can write a check!" Little Maysie Bates clasped her small hands together, and the light of firm resolve settled on her face. Yes, surely, if she had a chance to help those poor little children, she ought to do it; and the minister, of course, meant just what he said. So, when the plate came to her, she carefully took the blank check and pencil, and gravely resting it on a hymn book, proceeded to make out a check. She knew how—hadn't she watched Daddy make a check only last week? So, patiently, laboriously, she wrote first "mister hedpeth," for did not he ask for the money? She would write a good big check, for, when the banks were so good as to let one send money to the heathen, she felt she ought to write a large one; so "one hundid dolers' came next, then "Maysie Bates."

She leaned back a little breathless over her supreme effort, and when the plate passed again, gravely dropped the check upon it, with a song of happiness in her heart that she had helped the little heathen.

She went home with Rosetta, her colored nurse, with such dancing feet, that Rosetta became impatient. "What ails ye? Can't ye walk like a decent child on Sunday?" But Maysie was unable to be staid and sober, and danced along singing softly, "A hundid dolers, a hundid dolers for child'en over the sea."

"How pleased Daddy will be!" she thought: but Daddy would not be there, as usual, to meet her, for he and Aunt Sara, who lived with them ever since her dear Mamma had gone to heaven, had gone to visit a sick relative; and Maysie and the cook and Rosetta were left alone the whole day. That was why Maysie went to church alone. Aunt Sara had said that Maysie could go to church with the minister's wife, forgetting that she had gone to visit her aged mother.

It was evening of the next day before Maysie had a chance to talk with her father. Aunt Sara had a headache, and had gone upstairs to lie down, and Daddy and Maysie sat before the fire having a good time before Maysie's bedtime.

"What did you do with yourself all day yesterday, Maysie? Tell me about it, won't you?" said Daddy, drawing the little girl closer to him, as they sat togethehr in a big chair, while the fire cast dancing shadows around them.

"I had such a good time, Daddy. I had a el'gant breakfast 'cause cook made little crowd was the boy [illegible] named. To this lad came a bright idea. Looking up, Charlie saw something that set him thinking. He saw that, fastened to the roof of the building just above the window where these men were, there was a rope of iron. He saw that this rope ran across the street to the top of a telegraph pole on the other side. And he knew that if this rope could be cut at the top of the pole, it would fall right across the window, so that the three men could reach it. This was the bright idea that came into Charlie's mind. No time was to be lost. In an instant he seized a fireman's wrench which lay on the stones near by, rushed across the street, and began to climb the tall, smooth telegraph pole. To do this was no easy task in the wind and snow, but by hard, fast, desperate climbing Charlie soon reached the cross-bars. And hard and fast he worked when he got there. In a moment he had twisted the wire rope off. Down it fell right across the window! A great shout of joy went up from the crowd as, one after another, the three men came down this strange fire escape safe to the ground.

To this brave lad the American Humane Society voted a medal. Even across the sea people heard of him and praised him. From England came a gold medal, sent by the Royal Humane Society, on which were stamped the words: "Presented to Charles Wright, for saving three lives, January 31, 1882." So you see that what all the firemen of New York, with their ladders and other expensive apparatus, failed to do, a little boy accomplished by his wits. And if you are ready, looking out for opportunities to do good, you may be used of God to save some souls which would not be reached by ministers or other older workers. We hope you may always be ready to help, and quick to see how help may be given. —Presbyterian Record.

FIVE CENTS.

Small things should never be lightly considered, and some of our young readers will be interested in knowing what five cents may really amount to when properly considered and managed.

It is told in good faith that Miss Rosa Wiss, a young girl of Meridian, Miss., was given five cents on her birthday for a joke, and which she made very practical. She bought a yard of calico and made a sun-bonnet, that she sold for forty cents; with this she bought more calico and made it up, sold the articles, and re-invested the capital until she had ten dollars. With this sum she bought potatoes, planted them, paid for the culture of the crop, for gathering and carting to town, and sold it for forty dollars clear profit.

Now while the five cents set the young lady's wits to working, calling forth her best judgment, it is very doubtful if a present of forty dollars would have been productive of so much good sense practically applied. It is pretty certain that most young ladies would have been tempted by the sight of the handsome things forty dollars would buy, and been speedily reduced to five cents, with no idea of turning it to other account than paying car fare or buying chewing-gum. If Miss Wiss uses the same good judgment in the investment of her forty dollars as she did with the five cents, she will at no distant day be a capitalist, with the management of a corporation on her hands.—Golden Gate.

ANCIENT ORIGIN OF SOME MODERN CUSTOMS.

Many virtues of the Pilgrims fathers were called to our minds in the recent hundredth anniversary of their pilgrimage. But we do not always realize how some simple every-day customs of ours can be traced back to them for their origin.

For instance, it is customary with us when a family enters a church for the husband to take his place at the end of the pew, next to the aisle. It is meaningless today, but it was for a purpose when the Pilgrims introduced it. They constantly worked and worshiped in fear of hostile Indians. When the call for worship came the husband would take his gun with him in order to be ready for an attack at any time. In the church he would take position at the end of the pew and lean the firearm against the seat. Then he was ready at any time to respond to the alarm.

The Pilgrims were also responsible for the establishment of the Monday wash-day. The group of people were two months and five days on the Mayflower. We can imagine that their clothes were sadly in need of cleansing. Anchor was dropped in a harbor off Cape Cod on Saturday, November 11, 1620. The next day, the Sabbath, was passed in rest and worship. The men may have been anxious for the following day to begin their explorations, but the women of the party were anxious for an opportunity to wash the dirty garments. Their petition to be put on shore to attend to this work was granted, and the Monday wash-day was established.

Going back much farther than the Pilgrims, we find the explanation of some simple habits of dress. Those dealing with the dress of men show that it is not the feminine alone who is bound by law of fashion.

The bow on a man's hat is usually on the left rather than the right? It is a long story. Many generations ago our ancestors wore long flowing hair, but they found it in the way when on the hunt. To accommodate the demands of hunting, it was drawn to the left side of the head and tied with a cord. The bow was usually drawn with the right hand. The custom persisted, and when hats were made the bow similarly was placed on the left side.

The explanation of the buttons on the back of a long-cut business coat or dress suit has a similar historic origin. The tails of the coats were constantly flapping in the wind in the hunt. They would catch on bushes and they obstructed the aim. To help matters out some tailors devised the scheme of having buttons on the back, to which the tails could be buttoned when one intended to mount a horse. The buttonholes have disappeared, but the buttons are still there to show how man is tied by convention to days which are past.—Exchange.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

Shady Grove, Tabernacle Circuit.—Children's Day service was held at Shady Grove Sunday morning, August 13, at 11 o'clock. The children all did their part well, and especially so for the short time of training they had. There was a large congregation of attentive listeners present.

We regretted very much our pastor could not be with us for the service. He was called to help in a special meeting at that time. But we were fortunate to have Mr. Launing with us, who made a very impressive and helpful talk. Offering, $10.

Vesta Lineberry, Reporter.

Mecklenburg Circuit—Our special meeting began at Antioch church the second sunday in August and closed on the third Sunday night. There were 51 conversions and 9 joined the church and more are expecting to join. They say that we had an "old-time" camp meeting. Prayers ascended to heaven and reached the dynamic forces that encircle God's throne, and the fire fell and saints rejoiced and sinners, lukewarm, and backslidden were wafted into the kingdom of God.

Thank God, poor devils cannot say it was a "child's revival," because father, mother, young men and young women were saved.

The pastor was expecting the meeting to go on for ten days, praying Almighty God for the salvation of 100 souls. But his pulpit help returned home on Saturday before the third Sunday.

Brother J. S. Riddle preached the Sunday morning sermon, in which he opened us on the devil in high gear. Brother J. S. Riddle is a man with pentecostal fire. This is what brings down the posts of the devil—not theology. We were sorry for him to leave us. Brother J. E. Whitaker, who lives near Asheville, was with us and we were more than glad to have him, for he is a man full oftheHoly Spirit—good revival timber.

We willl begin our meeting at Beulah church the fourth Sunday in August. Pray for us.

Brother J. V. Quick from Page'and preached in the afternoon of the second Sunday, turning loose God's air-planes, battleships and submarines, and when the invitation came many came and sealed a covenant with God and man to lead a better life.

W. L. Carson, Pastor.

Greensville Circuit.—Wesley's Chapel: Our special meeting began here July 30. Rev. J. D. Hardy did the preaching. There were 33 conversions and reclamations. 13 accessions. Collection for Brother Hardy was $41 13.

Hobbs Chapel: We began our meeting here August 6. Did not have any pulpit help until Thursday when Rev. J. L. Trolinger came and did the preaching Thursday and Friday. There were 12 conversions and reclamations. Collection for the pulpit help was $5 (this was for only two days).

Ebenezer: We started our meeting here August 13 with Rev. L. S. Helms as pulpit help. There were twelve converts and reclamations, three accessions. Collection for Brother Helms, $20.55.

Matthews Chapel: Our meeting here started August 20. Rev. D. A. Highfill did the preaching. There were seven or more converts and reclamations, eight accessions, collection for Brother Highfill, $40. Brother Highfill was pastor here eight years ago. He has many friends here who were glad to see and hear him preach again.

Philadelphia: Our meeting was to begin here September 10, with Brother Braswell of Concord, but has been put off owing to diphtheria. We hope the sickness will soon be over and that Brother Braswell still may come and be with us and that we may have a revival indeed.

Brother Washington Archie, a member of Matthews Chapel, departed this life August 14, after a long illness with lung trouble. Brother Helms conducted the funeral service, after which he was laid to rest in the old home burying ground to await the resurrection.

On the 18th of August the death angel visited the home of Mr. Miles Taylor and claimed little Dorothy, their baby girl, aged five. The funeral was conducted by the writer, and the little corpse was laid to rest in the burying ground at Matthews Chapel.

Mr. Luther Cleary and Miss Polly Daniels were married at the parsonage September 2. We hope for them a happy and useful life.

James H. Trolinger.

Triplet, Va., Sept. 6, 1922.

Mt. Hermon Church, Creswell Circuit.—We were especially glad to have our pastor, Rev. R. L. Hethcox, back with us on the first Sunday. He preached some very inspiring sermons, although we did not have as large congregations as usual on account of revival meetings at other churches.

Brother Hethcox left us Sunday night for Whitakers, where he is to hold a revival meeting. Our prayers go with him that he may be filled with the power and the presence of the Holy Spirit, and that many souls may be born into the kingdom of God through his influence.

With best wishes to the Herald and its many readers. Callie Barnes.

Anderson Circuit.—Liberty Hill: We met our regular appointment here last Sunday. The Wesleyan camp meeting being in progress at Greer, our congregation was not quite so large as usual. We had a good service, however, and received five subscriptions to our church paper. It was also decided to make a special effort to get as much as possible on conference claims. This charge has not been paying these claims very well but we believe they will do better this year. They are fully able to pay every cent of every claim, but there are so many who pay nothing that it does make it hard on the faithful few. When these faithful few wake up to the fact that it is their duty to discontinue the dead beats in their church, better times will be in sight.

Fairview has decided to have only one service a month.. They claim to be unable to pay for the two services. Our fourth quarterly conference will be held at this church on Saturday night before third Sunday in October. Geo. L. Reynolds.

Henderson.—Our revival services began on Sunday, August 27, and continued with two services each day, one at nine in the morning and the other at eight in the evening until September 6. Rev. L. W. Gerringer came on Monday, August 28, and stayed until the close of the meeting. Brother Gerringer did some splendid preaching and the people were pleased with his efforts. There were about fifteen professions and reclamations, the most of them professions. Nine were received on profession of faith yesterday and one came forward to request the pastor to get his church letter, to be received as soon as the letter is received. Others will join before the year is out. The ones received yesterday make twenty so far this year and fifty during the present pastorate.

We were especially pleased to have in Sunday school, both preaching services and Christian Endeavor yesterday, two new Methodist Protestant teachers for the city high school, Miss Mary Dosier, daughter of Rev. J. F. Dosier, and Mr. E. S. Johnson of Greensboro.

Quite a good many of the members and friends who are living in other cities have been home this summer and a good many of our young people are going away to college this week. Space and time forbid my mentioning the names of all. J. E. Pritchard.

September 11.

Pleasant Hill Church, Spring Church Circuit.—We are still alive and although we have not written in some time, we are still at work and feel like trying to do more and better work than in the past.

Our special meeting is over. Rev. N. G. Bethea came on Sunday night and did all the preaching until Thursday night, when the meeting closed. We think he did his best and you who have heard him know what it means. The attendance was the best we have ever had throughout the day and night services. There were seven or eight conversions and two to join the church. We hope there will be others to follow.

Our pastor has been busy and away a good deal helping in the special meetings. We have missed him but knew he was doing good wherever he might be.

Our Sunday school is still running and we hope to have better attendance now the most of the meetings are over. Best wishes to all our old friends. Mrs. W. L. Alston,

Reporter.

Harmony, Yarborough Charge.—The special meeting began here fourth Sunday in August and closed the following Friday. Rev. G. L. Reynolds of High Point did the preaching. I am sure the Christian part of the church and congregation appreciated the splendid gospel sermons preached during the week. The young people seem hard to reach; most of them are church members but make no profession of religion. There were several professions and one bright young girl joined the church. Mr. Reynolds administered the communion at one service, as we have not had it in almost two years. According to the Discipline only Christians were invited to partake, and it was alarming to see how few church members availed themselves of this opportunity, showing by their actions that they are not loyal to their church vows. However, we have a faithful few who will stand by the church as long as there is a church.

How we missed in this meeting Mrs. J. H. Balentine, who was taken away from us a few months ago. She was always at her post in the church, looking after the children and helping to take care of the preacher and contributing in every way possible to the special meeting. May her children ever be as loyal to Christ and the church as she was.

We have had many discouragements in the past few months, but since having Mr. Reynolds in our homes and hearing his words of sympathy and encouragement from the pulpit we feel like there is a brighter future for our church than we had hoped for.

Our pastor has been laid up with a broken limb for some time and was not here for the meeting. We trust he will soon be well again.

Dear Herald Readers: It was my great pleasure to attend a "religious institute" held in the Henderson Methodist Protestant church on the 16th and 17th of August. The institute was held for the benefit of the young people of Henderson Methodist Protestant church and the nine churches of Granville and Vance circuits.

The different addresses were given by Mrs. C. W. Bates, Rev. Messrs. Pritchard, Bates and Neese. The addresses were full of inspiration and information and I am sure that those of us who were present were made better Methodist Protestants.

I had always thought that ours was a great church, but at this institute I was made to realize that ours is a greater church than I had ever dreamed it was. The impressions I received those two days cause me to want to work harder than ever for missions. I believe one reason why our young people (and older ones too) do not do more for the church than they do is because they are not informed about their church and that is what these institutes are for.

We are to have another institute next year and I am hoping that more of our young people will attend. May we all be proud of our church. Mrs. Wm. H. Neese.

Bess Chapel.—Sunday, September 10, we had an unusually large congregation and our Sunday school was the best for the year, I think; also a large congregation at church. After preaching these good people here told us that as it was Mrs. Cowan's birthday they were all going to have dinner with us; that stunned us for a moment, but they came to the rescue by saying that they were going to furnish the dinner, which they did and all had dinner at the church. A nicer and finer dinner I never saw and there was plenty and to spare: it was not near all eaten up. Our only regret was that we could not eat more. Friends, we thank you one and all and we want to assure you it was appreciated more than we can tell you. Mrs. Cowan has not been well for some time and she leaves tomorrow for Charlotte for an examination and possibly treatment. The doctors here who have been treating her say that she has cancer of the liver and is in a very serious condition. They do not advise an operation as it is no use. Brethren, pray for us that she may recover.

On Saturday night we organized a Christian Endeavor Society at Bess Chapel; we had a splendid bunch of young people present and all seem very much interested. Conditions here look brighter than at all; that is, generally speaking. Best wishes to the Herald and all its readers. E. G. Cowan, Pastor.

Fairfield and Bess Chapel, Bess Chapel Charge.—On Sunday, September the 3rd, we had the pleasure of having our conference president, Rev. R. M. Andrews, with us and had a service at each church that day. In the morning at 11 o'clock he preached for us at Fairfield. Then in the afternoon at three o'clock he preached another splendid sermon at Bess Chapel. We had a fair congregation at both churches. It was a very trying day for Brother Andrews, for we drove from the parsonage at Chapel to Fairfield, 35 miles, for the morning service, then 35 miles back to Chapel for the afternoon service, and then he went to Cherryville and started back to Greensboro. We are sure that he would be very tired and worn out by the time he reached home. We were glad to have him with us and all enjoyed his splendid preaching, also the hints he gave in regard to the work in general. We hope that we may have the pleasure of entertaining him again.

E. G. Cowan, Pastor.

Weaverville Church, Buncombe Charge.—Yesterday was a good day with us; eight new members were received into the church. This makes a total of 29 added to the Weaverville church this year. This church is also doing something in a material way. We are spending over $100 on the church grounds for wall and concrete walk. Have ordered new song books and bulletin board. This church seems to be making progress. We were glad to have Mr. and Mrs. Geo. B. Harris of Henderson worship with us yesterday.

B. M. Williams.

Enfield.—As usual we had services on the second Sunday. We had an unusually good service Sunday morning—not saying we do not always have good services, for we do.

At the morning service we took into our church by letter Mr. and Mrs. Tom Pettitt of Enfield, but heretofore they had held their membership out at Eden, Halifax charge. We are very glad to have them with us and feel sure they will be lots of help to our church.

Our church is not the only thing growing: our Sunday school too is growing; it is larger now than it has even been before. We are all so glad to see our once little band growing into a big band. Reporter.

Union Hill, West Forsyth Circuit.—Yesterday was a god day at Union Hill. We had with us Mr. H. A. Garrett, superintendent of the Children's Home. He made a splendid talk of the Home, which made us think more seriously about our contributions. The attendance was very good and also the collection for the Home.

Saturday night we had a glorious service; six additions to the church. We are so glad and sincerely hope they will be a blessing to the church and the church a blessing to them.

We are nearing the end of another year's work and are behind some on claims, but are putting forth every effort to pay all before Conference.

Our pastor, Brother Hamilton, will be with us next second Sunday for the last time, and to deliver his farewell sermon to us. We have learned to love him so much and do not see how we can let him go. Our prayers are for him to be with us again next year.

We are hoping to have Mr. J. W. Johnson of High Point with us second Sunday also. Best wishes to the Herald and its readers.

ENGINEERS' CHIEF SENDS LABOR DAY MESSAGE TO AMERICAN WORKERS.

(In response to requests from labor bodies throughout the country, Grand Chief Warren S. Stone of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers today made public the following Labor Day message, which sets forth the ideals and purposes of organized labor with a clarity, force, and vision that should command the consideration of every intelligent reader. Mr. Stone's message is as follows:)

Christmas is the greatest holiday of the year for all sincere Christians. Independence Day commemorates for Americans the birth of their country. But Labor Day knows no bounds of sect or nation: it belongs to all humanity.

For every worker with an earnest purpose, Labor Day means infinitely more than a mere occasion for merriment or vacation. It is a day consecrated to the holiness of human toil, to the achievements of the producing classes, to the ideals of organized labor. It proclaims the essential brotherhood of all working men, whether their labor be manual or mental, whether on farm or railroad, in mine or office.

May I leave one thought with you for your serious consideration on this Labor Day? Forget for the moment the amount of your pay envelope, the difficulties of your task, the inequities from which you suffer, and fix your thoughts upon the cherished ideals for which labor is contending. Lift up your eyes toward our common goal, and align your own actions in accord with the great principles which underlie all of our endeavors.

Above the struggle for bread and butter above the humdrum of the daily task, arise the standards by which Labor seeks to guide humanity toward a just social order. The sacred purposes to which Labor Day is dedicated do not need great volumes or long phrases for their expression. In three brief words Labor enshrines the highest and holiest aspirations of mankind,—peace, liberty, and justice. This is the beacon which has summoned us to struggle against selfishness, greed, and lust for power. This is the goal that has inspired the hearts of the toiling masses through struggling centuries, through seas of sweat and blood, as the men who do the useful work of the world have freed themselves from the stigma of slavery and serfdom, and stand out fearless and free, the bulwark of democracy and a Christian civilization.

Let me ask you to consecrate yourselves anew to a realization of these eternal principles. Proclaim them in conversation with your neighbors and from the platform of the public meeting. Consider their vital significance to all that you hold high and noble for yourself, your family and your fellowmen. Peace we must have, else civilization perish War, the red plague of mankind, must be forever banished by the workers who, at the behest of diplomats and profiteers, have for ages shed their blood and borne the burden of war taxes. Liberty we must have, else life itself is futile. The man who is not free industrially and politically is crushed down to the base level of the brute. Justice we must have, else neither social peace nor liberty is possible.

In loyal devotion to Labor's supreme ideals, let us on this Labor Day dedicate anew all that we have and are to their realization, cost what it may in strife and sacrifice. For Labor must lead humanity out of the morass of conflict, greed, and misery into the fairer day of the Brotherhood of Man.—Warren S. Stone.

SHALL BIBLE READING BE REQUIRED IN EVERY AMERICAN SCHOOL?

An increasing number of citizens of the United States believe that there should not only be a flag over every American school house but also a Bible on every teacher's desk.

A recent questionnaire sent to the Superintendent of Public Instruction in every State by Dr. William S. Fleming, Chicago district manager of the National Reform Association, reveals that the laws of the various States permit or require the daily reading of the Bible in the schools of about 83 per cent of the American people.

The same investigation reveals that the Bible has been excluded from the states of the remaining 17 per cent; in the case of Illinois and Washington by Supreme Court decision; in Arizona, California and Missouri by action of the Attorney General; in Minnesota and Montana by the Superintendent of Public Instruction, and in Louisiana by the state courts: not to exceed 30 individuals in all.

On the other hand the Bible is required to be read every day in all of the public schools of Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia and Mississippi and in such city schools as those of New York, N. Y., Indianapolis, Ind., and Washington, D. C. Bills for mandatory Bible reading in the public schools based on the Pennsylvania law passed the House of the 1921 session of the legislatures of Ohio and Iowa but did not come to vote in the Senate before adjournment.

Bible reading has been compulsory in Massachusetts since 1855. The present law enacted in 1880 requires "the daily reading of some portion of the Bible without written note or oral comment in the public schools, but no scholar shall be required to read from any particular version or to take any personal part in the reading whose parent or guardian shall inform the teacher in writing that he has conscientious scruples against it."

The Pennsylvania law is regarded as the model law of the kind because of its simplicity and its uniform acceptance by Catholic, Jew, unbeliever and Protestant alike. The Pennsylvania law was enacted in 1913 and reads as follows:—

"At least ten verses from the Holy Bible shall be read or caused to be read without comment, at the opening of each and every school, upon each and every school day, by the teacher in charge: provided that where any teacher is under and subject to direction, then the teacher exercising the authority shall read the Holy Bible or cause it to be read as herein directed.

"If any teacher, whose duty it shall be to read the Holy Bible or to cause it to be read, as directed in this act, shall fail or omit so to do, said teacher shall, upon charges preferred for such failure or omission and proof of the same before the governing board of the school district, be discharged."

The only criticism we have heard of this law since its adoption is of the expression "without note or comment." The suggestion has been made that the words of the South Dakota law "without sectarian comment" are preferable.

Tennessee followed Pennsylvania in 1915, the act being similar to the Pennsylvania law with a provision added, "That pupils may be excused from Bible reading upon written request of the parents" and with the following interesting preamble:

"Whereas the rules and regulations governing the reading of the Holy Bible in the public schools of this commonwealth are not uniform, and whereas it is in the interest of good moral training, of a life of honorable thought and of good citizenship, that the public school children should have lessons of morality brought to their attention during their school days, therefore, be it enacted," etc.

The New Jersey law of 1916 requires the reading of at least five verses from the Old Testament without comment, the law reading:

"In each public school classroom in the State and in the presence of the scholars therein assembled, at least five verses from that portion of the Holy Bible known as the Old Testament shall be read, or caused to be read, without comment, at the opening of each school upon each and every school day by the teacher in charge thereof; Provided that wherever there is a general assembly of school classes at the opening of such school day, then, instead of such class reading, the principal or teacher in charge of such assembly shall read at least five verses from said portion of the Holy Bible, or cause same to be read, in the presence of the assembled scholars, as herein directed."

In Alabama the law of 1919 directs that there shall be daily Bible readings in all schools and that "teachers in making monthly reports shall show on the same that they have complied with this act and superintendents of city schools in drawing public funds shall certify" to this fact, and further that schools cannot draw public funds unless this act is complied with, and the "State Superintendent of Education is charged with the enforcement of the provisions hereof."

Georgia and Mississippi followed with somewhat similar laws in 1921.

New York City school teachers have read the Bible daily since 1898, the by-laws of the Board of Education reading, "All the schools under the jurisdiction of the Board shall be opened with reading a portion of the Holy Scriptures, without note or comment."

Inquiries regarding the use of the Bible were also sent by Dr. Fleming to the County Superintendents of schools in every county in Pennsylvania and in New Jersey, to the City Superintendents of schools in every large city in Massachusetts and to the School Board in New York City. These 98 letters brought 83 absolutely unanimous replies that the laws are well observed and that there is practically no objection to them.

Among the replies received a few may be quoted. One County Superintendent wrote: "I am exceedingly liberal, but I am absolutely convinced that the daily reading of the Bible in the public schools should be made compulsory." Among the strongest endorsements is one from a Roman Catholic, who writes: "We could not do without .it There is no other way to begin a school day. Catholic children want it."

These unanimous testimonials should quiet the fears of any who believe that mandatory Bible reading will make trouble.

On the other hand, we find endless petty conflicts where Bible reading is not required. Whether or not the Bible shall be read becomes a political issue and arouses sectarian animosities. It enables one or two aggressive opponents of the Bible to make endless trouble. It leads at times to the loss of efficient school officials and to the exclusion of the Bible from the schools, to the injury of the children and the hurt of the State. It may shut the Bible out of the schools where it is needed most.

Shall we listen to the voices of anarchists, agnostics and skeptics, or shall we heed the words of the venerated Presidents of the United States, almost all of whom were students of the Holy Scriptures and advocates of Bible reading for the young?

George Washington wrote: "It is impossible to govern the world without the Bible." John Adams declared: "The Bible is the best book in the world." Thomas Jefferson called the Bible "the corner stone of liberty." John Quincy Adams made it a practice to read the Bible through each year and asserted that "The Bible is the book of all others to be read at all ages and in all conditions of human life," Andrew Jackson called it "The rock on which our Republic rests" and Abraham Lincoln, who read it through three times before he was ten years of age, declared it to be "The best book which God has given to men."

And, skipping the Presidents between, we do well to remember the words of Woodrow Wilson: "A man has deprived himself of the best there is in the world who has deprived himself of a knowledge of the Bible. It is very difficult for a man or for a boy who knows the Scriptures ever to get away from it. It haunts him like an old song. It follows him like the memory of his mother. There are great problems before the American people. I would be afraid to go forward if I did not believe that there lay at the foundation of all our schooling and all our thought the incomparable and unimpeachable Word of God."

Mandatory Bible reading can be secured in other States as it has been in those where it is now the law, by the definite action of God-fearing citizens under the leadership of those who are adepts in the discussion of the subject. The National Reform Association has a number of such among its secretaries who will be glad to aid in such campaigns to the best of their ability.—Tract, by Larimore C. Denise, Assistant General Superintendent National Reform Association.

MOSQUE, EMPTY, WILL BE RAZED.

America's Only Moslem Temple to Go.

The Detroit News for August 9 states that Highland Park, Detroit, is to lose its moslem mosque, the only shrine of the Islamic faith in North America. Constructed a year ago at 204 Victor Avenue, by Muhahhad Karoub, a wealthy and devout Moslem real estate man, the mosque has stood as the only outward symbol of Islam in the Western World.

Dissension in the ranks of the followers of the Prophet here, and lack of interest on the part of them in the mosque services, are the reasons assigned for the failure to draw gatherings of the Faithful. Mr. Karoub proposes to raze the edifice and dispose of the real estate.

His decision is based on the fact that he spent approrimately $55,000 in its construction; and since its dedication it seldom has been used for religious worship. Highland Park has placed the property on its tax assessment roll, and Mr. Karoub is compelled to pay taxes on the mosque, because the city tax officials hold that it is "vacant property, and not used for religious worship."

Arrived Penniless.

Mr. Karoub came to Detroit several years ago, a penniless immigrant from Arabia, and by labor in an automobile factory, and judicious investments in real estate acquired sufficient property to render him independent.

His next ambition was to further the cause of Islam in North and South America. He had an architect draw plans for the mosque, which was completed and dedicated June 7, 1921, with elaborate ceremonies conducted by Mufti Muhammad Sadiq, Moslem missionary from India, and two Detroit Moslem sheiks, Khaleel Bizzy and Hassan Faroub, a brother of the builder of the mosque.

At his own expense Mr. Karoub brought to Detroit Mufti Sadiq, missionary of the Ahmadia movement, who came from India to win converts to what he professed to be an advanced and reformed movement in Islam. The doctrine the mufti advocated emphasized that Mohammed is the master prophet and the Koran the current law. The Prophet Ahmed of Quadian is the promised Messiah, Mahdi and Holy Reformer of this day, the mufti taught. He described his mission here as one to invite Christians, Jews and all into the fold of Ahmad."

Followers Disagree.

This doctrine was not that of the bulk of the followers of Mohammed here, who clung to the orthodox doctrine, and resented the introduction of a reformed Mohammedanism, it is said. The mufti took leave of his group of followers here, and left for Chicago to continue his missionary work.

With his departure, the attendance at the services fell off until none came to the mosque on holy days or to make their daily devotions, as prescribed by the laws of Islam for the devout.

Mr. Karoub discussed his plans for the tearing down of the mosque with reluctance.

"I am greatly disappointed that the mosque I built and gave to the people of my faith here is not appreciated; and since I have spent a large sum of money on it, and my purse is bearing the burden of its upkeep and taxes, and there are none to worship in it, I can see no other logical thing to do but tear the mosque down and sell the lots on which it is built," he said. "I would rather tear the building down than sell it to be used for unworthy purposes, for the building has been dedicated to the worship of the God the Moslems revere. I have no word of censure for my people. If they differ with me as to the interpretations of the doctrine of Mohammed, that is their affair and their right. I believe fully in the liberty ofconscience."

"A PLACE FOR ME."

"My Father has need of the birds and the flowers,
A place for each beautiful tree,
And so I am sure in this wonderful plan,
There's a place and a mission for me.

"He has a good purpose in all He has made,
And surely I know it must be
That when he pronounced His creation all good,
He meant something lovely for me.

"So, wherever I go and in all that I do,
I crave the dear vision to see,
My place in my Father's own wonderful plan,
My task and His blessings for me.

"I'd like to use all of my talents and time,
And ever so faithful to be;
That God should not miss any service of mine,
To perfect His service in me.

"Then I must look close through the days as they pass,
The sign of His guiding to see,
And be glad that my Father's own loving good plan
Included a mission for me."

SOMETHING MORE THAN DITTO.

What do you stand for? What about your personality, your influence and atmosphere? What are you yourself? Do not be a nobody and simply have "ditto" written against your name.

In a country town of boyhood days lived a farm-hand who was in love—all over, from the crown of his head to the soles of his feet. One morning he said to the farmer: "Mr. Smith, what does 'ditto' mean?"

They chanced to be hoeing cabbage at the time, so his employer took the most convenient illustration. "Well, John," said he, "that is a cabbage-head; that is 'ditto'."

A look of consternation came over John's good-natured face. "Why, Mr. Smith," said he, "last night I told Lucy that I loved her, and she said, 'Ditto.' I did not suppose that she was calling me a cabbage-head!"

This is one of the true humorous "ditto" stories, but there is nothing humorous about a life that is simply willing to follow others; no initiative, no reaching out for itself.

Do not be a human echo! An echo sticks to one place; it requires a sounding-board of some kind—building, or canyon, or crag; it only echoes back. Individuality says: "Go forward, grow, be not content with your yesterday or with your yesteryear attainments, virtues, usefulness." Not only go forward, but press on. Difficulties vanish before the young folk who press on, as the wrinkles vanish from a suit of clothes before the tailor and his iron. It takes a little heat for either.

Do not be a "ditto" learner! Solve a few problems for yourself! Do your own investigating. Consult your own Bible; consult your own dictionary. Do not be in haste to slip on every bit of second-hand-thought raiment offered you, even if it is colored as attractively as was Joseph's coat. Keep your

Does not mind-indigestion, from lack of exercise, kill many a nominal Christian? Great thoughts of God and of men company with great usefulness. A winsome, rich personality is worth more to you than thousands in the bank. Your personality differentiates you from any other person on God's green earth. No copies, no "ditto," for you!—Selected.

GOOD ADVICE.

The railroads of the country are waging a campaign to prevent grade crossing acidents. It is known as the National Careful Crossing Campaign. Some of the "safety first" rules are:

When approaching the railroad and before crossing the tracks—

(1) Slow down.

(2) Shift into lower gear to prevent stalling on tracks.

(3) Look in both directions.

(4) Listen.

(5) Do not try to beat a train over a crossing. Stop if the train is approaching.

(6) After a train has passed make sure that no others are approaching in either direction.

(7) Be doubly careful at night and on strange roads.

NOTES.

The strike of the United Textile Workers at Lawrence, Mass., has come to an end. The members started to work again last week. The strike was called March 27, when wages were cut 20 per cent. The mill owners have now agreed to pay the former wage rate.

—Both the bituminous, or soft coal, and the anthracite, or hard coal, strikes have come to an end. The soft coal miners have been returning to work since the middle of August.

—The victory of the Turks over the Greeks raises this important question: Will the Allied nations now permit the Turks to return to their old territory in Europe (as France desires), and thus make the situation at Constantinople and in the Balkans similar to what it was before the World War?

—The national observance of Fire Prevention Week has been set this year for October 2 to 9. In the past, large numbers of the clergy, of their own volition, have placed their great influence behind the movement by delivering sermons which bring home to the American people the enormity of the annual loss of life—15.000—and of property—$485,000,000—through fire, a loss as purposeless as it is appalling. In its essence, this movement is one to inculcate habits of carefulness, since 90 per cent of this fire waste is definitely attributable to negligence and lack of knowledge of the common hazards.—National Board of Underwriters.

—Hon. Charles E. Hughes, secretary of state, with Mrs. Hughes sailed recently on the "Pan America" for Rio de Janeiro. Secretary Hughes heads the delegation representing the United States at the Brazilian Centennial Celebration.

—Dr. S. Parkes Cadman of the Central Congregational Church, Brooklyn, will be offered the pastorate of Westminster Chapel, London, according to latest reports from England.

—More than ten million in the list of 13,878,671 persons who wrote expressions of opinion respecting the Conference on the Limitation of Armament held in Washington, asked, according to The Epworth Herald, that divine guidance be given to the important deliberations of that body.

—The recent discovery of a process whereby old newspapers can be "de-inked" is one of large importance in face of the fact that the pulp mills are at present using up nine hundred square miles of forest area annually and the amount of spruce now standing is not sufficient to supply the paper industry for the next twenty years. It is said that the new process is so inexpensive that through its use most of the yearly product of 2,200,000 tons of newsprint can be salvaged.

BRAZIL'S WORLD'S FAIR.

The Brazilian Centennial Exposition, or World's Fair, was opened in Rio de Janeiro last week. The exposition celebrates the one-hundredth anniversay of the independence of Brazil. This country sent an official American "mission," headed by Secretary of State Hughes, to be present at the opening. Thus the United States returned the visit of the Brazilian Emperor, Dom Pedro, to our Centennial Exposition, held at Philadelphia in 1876. Our Government has purchased a tract of land and erected buildings for American exhibits. The buildings will be used as the American Embassy after the exposition is over.

—The editor was called to service in the Christian church, Burlington, last Sunday. They have no pastor now, but have called Rev. Mr. Lankford and are expecting him in a few weeks. Dr. Amick is to preach to them next Sunday morning. They have built an imposing church recently, having outgrown the capacity of their former building just across the street. The new church including the ground cost $58.000 They are already taxing the capacity of the Sunday school rooms, but have provided in the basement for much more room. The congregation includes many of Burlington's substantial business men. They are to be congratulated on having such a splendid house of worship. May they so use it as to gain a place in that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. We much enjoyed our entertainment in the home of Rev C B Riddle and wife. Bro. Riddle is editor of the Christian Sun, and is somewhat prepared by his experience to appreciate the situation of the Herald's editor. To add to our enjoyment of the visit, Rev. S. W. Taylor was invited, and brought over by Bro. Riddle in his car to take dinner with us. A pleasant surprise at the dinner table was the finding of a check by our plate calling for $254.50 for European Famine Relief. This was contributed by our Burlington Sunday school and brought over by the treasurer, Mr. Herbert Wade. In the afternoon a short auto ride with Bro. R. F. Williams took us to Glen Raven to hear Bro. Andrews' sermon and address to the congregation at that place. The evening train returned us to Greensboro in time to hear Bro. Stubbins' sermon in Grace church.

—Deporting aliens is a ticklish business. Complaint has been made that the authorities have been too slow and cautious, but now the Federal Council of Churches complains that injustice has been done from lack of care and discrimination, and gives this instance:

"One of the strangest cases reported was that of Joseph Polulech, a young Russian, who was arrested without warrant at a raid on the People's House, on East 15th Street, New York City. No substantial evidence was offered by the authorities to prove that this alien was an objectionable person, and at his hearing before an immigrant inspector at Ellis Island, testimony showed that the only organization to which Joseph Polulech belonged in the United States was the Methodist Episcopal church on Second Avenue, New York City. It was learned that this young man was ambitious, orderly and well-behaved and had been an active worker in his church since 1913. His presence in the People's House was due to his desire to study, as he was there attending a night school. Before he could establish connections with friends, who would gladly have vouched for him to the authorities, Polulech was deported on December 21, 1919, after having been held 'incommunicado' for six weeks.'

—George Foster Peabody has addressed an appeal to members of Congress, suggesting that ten million dollars be appropriated for China famine relief and another million for every hundred thousand dollars given privately, the money to be put into the hands of the commission appointed by the President. Congressional relief, he thinks, is the only thing that that will save millions from threatened death by starvation. Congressmen will doubtless hesitate to act in this way without the people's express consent, but let the people give their express consent.

—Bro Brown reports a pounding of the wrong kind. As in other poundings, the spirit in which it was done is more striking than the value of the articles, though that must have been considerable. We would not have that man's disposition for a million times all he will ever gain by following it.

MEETING OF COLLEGE CAMPAIGN COMMITTEE.

President Andrews called this committee to meet in Greensboro last Thursday. All members were present, namely: Bros. J. E. Pritchard, R. F. Williams, L. W. Gerringer, A. M. Rankin, J. Norman Wills, and J. F. McCulloch.

The committee organized by electing Bro. Andrews chairman and Bro. Gerringer secretary, and then proceeded to business. It was voted that Bros. Andrews, Gerringer, and Pri[illegible]d constitute a sub-committee to devise and put in operation a plan to secure necessary means to build and endow a college. The committee was instructed to be ready to begin in April, and to work with a view to opening the college in the fall of 1922. The committee adjourned to meet Friday of this week with the committee on location of college.

In faith, J. D. Morris.

A Lady Writes:

"On the first page of last week's Herald was the college question, one that interests this writer just now, and was I blessed in this world's possessioons as some of our people, I'd help push to completion, not only for my own benefit and convenience, but for the sake of our Methodist Protestant boys and girls that must go away from home and into other schools to complete their education. My own example is—three children far away from home seeking knowledge, two in high school, one in college. Now wouldn't it be a pleasure to me and all other Methodist Protestants could we send our children to our own college, in our own State?"

—Dr. J. T. Reeves, one of Greensboro's most popular physicians, died yesterday of blood poisoning which started in a blister on his right thumb caused by a pinch with forceps. Tuesday morning his arm was amputated in the hope of saving his life. He was a member of Centenary Methodist Episcopal church. His wife was Miss Bettie Deviney, of Julian, and one of his daughters is the wife of Rev. W. C. Lassiter's son.

DAVID.

The following interesting incident will be read by all the readers of this paper with great interest. It is from our missionary in India, Miss Florence Williams:—

He came to us as Abdul Rehman—a Mohammedan fakir. I was very busy that day, when one of our evangelists called me out to speak with him, saying, "Auntie, he does not understand Marathi, and I cannot speak English well enough for him to understand me."

And this is what I found. Abdul Rehman was learning in the Alagar College, when all the students were commanded to take up some religious study. Naturally each boy selected his own religion, but he, not being satisfied with the Koran, took up Bible study as well.

In this way he soon found himself comparing religions. After some time a spirit of conviction which he terms unrest seized him, and he became so dissatisfied that he gave up the position of head-master in a government school, that he had accepted after his graduation, and he became a fakir.

His uncle, a childless, wealthy man, offered him all of his estate if he would become his heir. But his own litle wife and babe had died, and the unrest increased. So armed with a Koran and a small bundle of bedding, dressed in the fakir's garb, he started out on his ascetic wanderings. "For three years," he says, "I was trying to find God."

He wandered here and there consulting missionaries and Indian Christians to get the help he needed. One thing he could not accept, he could not believe Jesus Christ to be the Son of God, hence the Savior of the world.

This must have been God's time and place, for we had the privilege of explaining these deep things to him, and the blessed Holy Spirit convinced him of the Truth. He went back to the Dharama Shalla (rest house generally occupied by beggars and vermin) and gave his Koran to a fellow fakir, and returned to the evangelist's house. He asked for a change of raiment, so we sent him clothes, the kind our Christians wear.

The next evening, as we went into the prayer room, we glanced all about to find the new man, and it was some time before we could locate him, the change was so great.

The shaggy beard was gone, the long hair cut, and the rag wound about the head for a turban had disappeared, and instead we saw a clean, neatly dressed, interested man. How our hearts were filled with praise to the Savior of men!

What the future may reveal we do not know, but today he is all interest and humility, and says he is determined to go all the way. He begs for baptism, but we are keeping him on probation for a while. He says he wants to work at anything till he becomes familiar with the Word and this way, then he wishes to give his whole life to the preaching of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

Yours in His name, Florence Williams.

AN APPEAL TO THE PASTORS AND CHURCHES.

By Dr. P. A. Baker, General Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of America.

The inherently criminal character of the liquor traffic was never more in evidence than at this time. Every thoughtful reader of magazines and daily papers must be convinced of this fact. The whole scheme of prohibition, present and future, is on trial, and is in peril. The adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution, and the Volstead Law enacted to carry the amendment into effect, did not bring prohibition. They simply cleared the way for making prohibition possible. A traffic so criminal in its character and conduct as the drink traffic does not go out of existence at the behest of a constitutional amendment or an enforcement act. The abolition of what has been termed "the legal traffic" has made the illegal traffic fabulously profitable. A dollar a quart was a big price for the moonshine product when breweries and distilleries were allowed to operate; now it finds a ready sale at $10 per quart and $25 per gallon. Every corn field, wheat field, barley field, potato patch, orchard and kitchen furnishes material for the violation of the Eighteenth Amendment, and with the existing appetite and criminal greed for gain there is no lack of persons who are ready to take the chance of violation.

The propaganda for "wine and beer" is popular not only amongst the drinkers who have a fixed appetite, but amongst thousands of well-meaning people, including church members, who have not counted the cost of yielding to such a demand. To admit either, or both, means that the whole fight must be fought over again. If we are to have beer and wine we must have a place to sell it, which means the opening of the grog shop where regulation is as impossible as it would be to attempt to regulate the tides of the ocean.

The liquor people are working more wisely for their cause than at any time in the past. They are operating under the advice of counsel, and that advice is that it is not possible, at least not now, by a frontal attack to repeal the Eighteenth Amendment, but that it can be nullified by changing the alcoholic content in beverages that may legally be made and sold, and this can be done by a majority vote of the Congress. Why attempt repeal when nullification will answer every purpose? The Congress is not safe. This one is, and will appear much safer than it really is if a vote should be forced on the Volstead Law during the coming session. Many Congressmen will vote against a beer and wine amendment when they know it is impossible of passage who will vote for it if they are reasonably certain it will pass. This is a favorite method with some Congressmen for deceiving the public. Congressmen who honestly favor prohibition will vote their principles every time while those who do not will not. The majority of real prohibitionists in Congress is very small. The apportionment of Congress, following the present census, will admit above fifty additional Congressmen, nearly every one of whom will come from the large cities of the country and can reasonably be depended upon to stand for the liquor program. If the apportionment should not be increased the same difficulty faces us because in the country districts the number will be decreased and in the great centers of population increased, hence, the stiffest fight the prohibitionists of this country will ever have will be two years hence at the next congressional election. The liquor people are now systematically laying their plans for that contest. Meanwhile they are increasingly violating the law to create, if possible, the greater reaction against prohibition.

Most people overlook the fact that the organizations responsible for directing the efforts to secure the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead Law were builded out of the best material the country affords —the thoughtful, reading, conscientious, church-going population, which could be brought to bear quickly upon legislative bodies for immediate results. The great outlying millions in city and country who do not attend the churches or read the religious papers, and who have no knowledge of the propaganda that has been going on for many years except as they gather it from the numerous flings in much of the secular press, resent the fact of prohibition and believe that something was "put over" on them by unfair methods when they were not looking. These millions must be reached in their own language with speakers and literature, which may never convert many of them to the principle of prohibition, but which will neutralize their opposition until the principle is firmly established.

We must reckon with the fact that the war set prohibition ahead from five to ten years and it will require at least that much time, with all hands at it, to bring public sentiment up to the point of sustaining it. Many people write in to our offices saying, "Now prohibition is a fact and of course you no longer have need of funds," and cancel their subscriptions; others add, "It is the duty now of the government to enforce the law, and of course you have no further need of funds." These people are prohibitionists and have fought nobly to secure prohibition, but are quitting with the job half finished. Does anyone think for a moment that the government will go ahead and enforce the prohibitory law with a well organized, influential and well-financed minority opposing it, if there is not an organization thoroughly equipped to secure necessary appropriations from Congress for enforcement and to see to it that all the enforcement machinery is on its job? Does any one believe, under existing conditions, if the present organizations were to disband that two Congresses would pass before there would be a determined agitation not only for a modification of the Volstead Law, which would easily be accomplished, but for the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment itself? Already there are ministers and churches short-sightedly taking the ground that since prohibition has become a part of the fundamental law of the land, and a code for its enforcement has been enacted, that there is no need for further support at their hands. They forget the organizing period of the forties, and the prohibition victories of the fifties, when a large number of states enacted prohibitory laws, and the repealing period of the sixties and seventies, when the organizations that had put over prohibition in these states, one ofter another disbanded and the "last state became worse than the first." Are we to have a repetition of this fiasco because of the short-sightedness of leaders of the church today? The church has furnished the leadership and the sinews of war to bring us to the present strategic and hopeful position and it is unthinkable that when complete victory is in sight there should be a fatal reaction in the face of as determined an opposition as we have ever met. No pastor or church has any more right to desert or falter now than have the men who have poured their lives into this struggle, to step down and out into some more congenial employment. To scrap the great organizations that have been for a quarter or a half century building, in the face of the unfinished task, would be a crime against humanity. To even cripple their efficiency by a lack of support would be the acme of unwisdom.

We have too much confidence in the church and the ministry, as we have witnessed the quality of their splendid leadership for the overthrow of the drink traffic, to believe that they will give an hour's truce to an institution that can only live by the ruin of our people. We appeal to all right-thinking men who have "put their hand to the plow" that they will not look back until this age-old destroyer has been completely destroyed—until a new generation, fresh from the scientific instruction of the public schools, and the moral drill of the church and Sabbath school. have come upon the scene, who know not the Beast of Bacchus.

MEETING OF THE BOARD OF HOME MISSIONS.

The Board of Home Missions met in special session at Pittsburgh on Wednesday, December 29, 1920, for the transaction of all business which might be presented for consideration. The secretary had been given special duties in reference to investigation of certain fields and his reports were presented and proper action taken as will appear in the somewhat detailed report of the meeting which will follow. This is the first special meeting held by this Board for a number of years, the business usually being so well planned that special sessions have been unnecessary. The new policy adopted by the General Conference at Greensboro has made it necessary for this Board to change many of its plans.

We were fortunate in our attendance at this meeting held just in the midst of the holiday season. The roll-call showed the following members present: President, H. A. Sicker, J. O. Ledbetter, J. M. Sheridan, T. L. Garrison, J. P. Turkelson, C. W. Waychoff, T. H. Lewis, and Charles H. Beck. A telegram of regrets was received from J. M. Millikan, explaining his absence.

The report of the secretary was taken up and considered seriatim. It was noted that plans are under way at Stamford, Connecticut, looking toward the reduction or the elimination of the debt aganst the Maple Avenue property. We have a small but heroic congregation at this place. A membership of about 60 is paying a salary of $1500, and all the running expenses of the church. The Board took action looking toward the cancellation of its mortgage. This church hopes to meet its indebtedness in full by the early spring and celebrate its twentieth anniversary at this time. The pastor is Rev. G. E. Richter.

It was noted with pleasure that the Taylor Memorial church, Philadelphia, has added a very fine addition to its equipment at a cost of $9,000. This church is making fine progress under the leadership of Rev. H. O. Keen. The Board of Home Missions has made no appropriation here for a number of years.

The situation at Emanuel church, Philadelphia, required careful consideration. Some final decisions were referred to a committee, and will be made after further information is secured. One of the great questions here is the matter of building. The chapel in which services are being held is already too small, and a part of the permanent building should be erected in the early spring. Plans were adopted and bids advertised for in the late summer, but the contractors put the figures so high that all bids were rejected. It is probable that the plans will again be submitted for bids in the spring. We have a fine opportunity at this place and it is worth a larger investment than the church can make through the Board of Home Missions. If some Methodist Protestant should desire a memorial for himself or some one else, an investment of $25,000 here would establish such a memorial in a manner that would be a permanent blessing to the community, the denomination, and the kingdom. Rev. W. P. Roberts is proving himself a real leader in this important work.

In a consideration of our work in Indianapolis, it was noted with pleasure that there have been 31 accessions to the Victory Memorial church during the present conference year. Progress is being made at Mansur Park, but the pressure of the Negro population in this district makes necessary the adoption of a building plan for the new location at the earliest possible date. Rev. J. L. Buckley is still pushing the work at Victory Memorial church, and Rev. Nathanael Vice is the new pastor at Mansur Park. For the present year the Indiana Conference has taken over the work at Unity and your Board is not in as close touch with it as formerly. However, the Board of Home Missions is still interested, and will be a factor in the development of our work in that community. We have a great field as a denomination in Indianapolis, and in fact the Indiana Conference offers a very fine opportunity to the Methodist Protestant Church as a denomination at the present time. We could spend every dollar at the disposal of the Board in this conference, and put it where it would give promise of success for the church and the kingdom. New fields should be opened and additional equipment provided to insure the ultimate success of our church in that state.

Charles H. Beck.

"A TIP-TOP BOOK."

"There's a tip-top book, Ellis, you can take to read it if you want to. I've just read it, and it's a splendid story."

"Then I should like to read it. I don't very often get a chance at a new book. But I think books are best of anything, and when I am a man I mean to have stacks of them. Mother and I read together, and then we talk over what we have been reading about: so it's twice as good as if I had read it alone."

"Is that the way you do?"

"Of course it is. Why shouldn't I? Mother and I are all the family that is left, and we do everything we can together. I tell you my mother is the best company I ever had. She is just jolly, besides being good as she can be. She goes singing around the house, making a fellow feel rich, no matter what he has for dinner."

"Ain't she old?"

"No, and it wouldn't make any difference if she were; she'd be my mother all the same."

"To be sure she would. But if you take this book you must keep out of her sight and read it on the sly."

"Why must I?"

"Because she wouldn't like it. My mother would make a great fuss if she knew I read such a book."

"Then what do you read it for? What's the matter with the book? You said 'twas splendid."

"So it is, but your mother wouldn't think so."

"Then it ain't so, for I tell you my mother knows I won't read anything on the sly. I don't do business that way, and I advise you not to. My motheer knows best."

"If you think so, I don't suppose it's of any use to try to make you think differently."

"No, sir, it ain't; and I advise you to do as your mother wants you to. You've got a bad book, or you wouldn't talk about it as you do, and you'd better burn it up."

So one boy was loyal to his mother and to his own higher nature, but two others were found who could be easily influenced.

They read the book, thought and talked of the exciting scenes described in it, and were thus prepared for further reading of the same kind. Lessons were neglected, and occasionally there was a day's truancy from school. The evil did not stop there. Absolute falsehood followed fast upon deception; and when a petty theft was committed in the village, it was charged at once to three boys who were constantly together and who were known to be habitual readers of highly sensational books and papers. They were suspected of reading even worse books, all this told against them.

For their parents' sake they were spared the disgrace of a public trial. Upon acknowledgement of their guilt, and promises of amendment the prosecution against them was withdrawn, and every effort was made to reclaim them from their evil ways. But the die was cast. Vile books had done their work of pollution. These boys grew up to be reckless, dissipated men, with low tastes and gross manners, while the boy who trusted his mother was honorable and honored.

Don't do anything on the sly, for be sure your sin will find you out. Don't read a book or paper your mother would not approve. Don't look at a picture you would not be willing to show her.

The boys tried in our courts for the commission of crimes are those who have read bad books. The boys who are serving out sentences in houses of correction and state prisons are those who have read bad books. Don't read them. Don't trust yourself to read one.

"Evil communications corrupt good manners," and evil words upon a printed page corrupt both soul and body. Don't read them.—Day Spring.

PRESIDENT'S LETTER.

QUIT WORK TO BLOW THE WHISTLE—

Most of us remember the story of the Mississippi steamboat that had such a big whistle that every time it blew, the engines had to stop running to furnish steam enough to blow the whistle.

That is a parable of life. There are some people just like that steamboat. They have quit work in order to have time and energy enough to blow their whistle, and they do not fail to blow it. I have observed that the people who do most talking have least time for work. There are some of this class who hang around our churches. They seem to feel that they are called of natural fitness to tell how, wherein, wherefore, whereas, henceforth and why the workers fail to "deliver the goods." They croak, they croon, they criticize, they call names, they tell tales, but they rarely lend a hand when hard work is to be done. These are they who stand and wait when there is work to be done. "After you, dear Gaston," is their polite way of passing up the hard tasks sent of God for his workers to perform.

THE LITTLE CHURCH—

The little church is not necessarily a small church, nor is the small church necessarily a little church. There are some little, big people, and some big, little people. The little church is that church that has a small program, a short vision, a narrow range of service and a pessimistic bunch of leaders. It may have a thousand or a dozen members; they may be young or old, but one thing is sure, they never will get anywhere.

We have some of this class in our church—may have too many of them for our good; may have more than we can assimilate; if we do, unless we can disgorge them, we will never get anywhere. That church that is opposed to progress may have a Christian name, but it is not in a vital sense a Christian church. It is certainly a little church and will never get anywhere, except it be carried.

The little church is the church that is afraid to attempt a big thing. It is so self-conscious, so conscious of its own littleness, that you can not lift it up to a level where it really can go. It is hopelessly mired in the muck of its own making and is mighty apt to stay there No one despises a child because it is small, all know that if it lives well, it will grow to be large; it is the dwarf, the pigmy, the Tom Thumbs who are confirmed in their littleness that we lose hope of making men of.

If the Methodist Protestant Church is made up of those who are satisfied with doing little things instead of achievements, then the Methodist Protestant Church is to that extent a little church and well merits being called little. "According to your faith, be it unto you," my little brother, sister. Little faith secures little blessings, big faith big blessings, the little soul can be satisfied with little things. If yours is little, your cup easily overflows and loses all that the cup cannot hold. Beware, kind friend, lest your contentment narrow the good you so much need to get to the vanishing point.

THE PRAYER CYCLE—

Secretary Bates and I have been thinking and planning for a co-operative way for our people to unite their petitions for the many activities of our church. Beginning with February we hope to have standing at the head of the president's letter each week a statement of the interests we may unite to pray for during that month. It does not imply that we shall not pray for other objects, persons, or enterprises, but that we are praying for these. I am now making this announcement hoping to create an interest in it and that when the objects appear that we may have a host to join in united prayer for the causes indicated. Do you believe in prayer? Only those who do will join this circle, but this number should be large.

PASTOR'S REPORT BLANKS—

I shall mail out very soon cards upon which these reports may be made. I shall mail three in each envelope and will expect you to keep them until time to use them. The first of these should be mailed the last of February. I would much prefer that all pastors report at the end of the quarter instead of at the beginning of it. I suppose none of you can tell at the beginning what the end will be; what I want is what has been done during the quarter under consideration. I enjoy reading letters the pastors write, and welcome them, but I also want the facts indicated in these report blanks. You may give them in your letter if you wish, but please to let me have the facts

GRAHAM AND HAW RIVER CHARGE,

Rev. J. Clyde Auman, Pastor.

I visited the three churches on this charge, i. e., the three being served as a part of the work—Glen Raven now being served by the pastor of Graham-Haw River charge.

I found a few people at every church, but the attendance was considerably reduced. The weather condition was certainly not favorable to church-going, or to going anywhere, except to home. I was indeed sorry that we had no more favorable weather, but as this is beyond our power to regulate we do not worry over that part of it.

I found no news items on this trip for the readers of the Herald that are really new, except at Glen Raven. Here I found a most modern and conveniently arranged church building, almost complete. It was very well built, well arranged, with four class rooms, a good auditorium and choir recess. It was economically built. They were fortunate in buying the materials just before the rise and therefore have a structure erected for about half what it would have cost to build under the conditions under which others were building.

This is a live little organization. There are nearly one hundred members, between eighty and ninety, there is no other church in the immediate vicinity, and so far as I can see, Glen Raven church has a fine opportunity for growth.

PLAN OF VISITATION—

West End Church, Greensboro, 11 A. M., January 16.

Tabernacle Church, 3:00 P. M., January 16.

PERSONAL MENTION—

We want to assure that pastor who was so much concerned that some member of his charge pound the president—it has been done. We received a sack of fine Porto Rican sweet potatoes. Thank you.

We are indebted to Brother Robert Hornaday and daughters for safe and comfortable transfer from the end of car line, Burlington, to Glen Raven, and to Bro. Williams for the return trip. We are also indebted to Brother Crutchfield for the care he took of us while at Haw River. Fraternally,

R. M. Andrews.

BETHMANN HOLLWEG.

On the first day of the year the late Imperial Chancellor von Bethmann Hollweg breathed his last, leaving a world unmoved by his exit. What greatness there was in him six years ago he derived from his office and his master's favor, and when he lost them both the world lost all interest in his life. He had to die to arouse it for an instant to a vision of his faded glory and a passing tribute of pitying recollection.

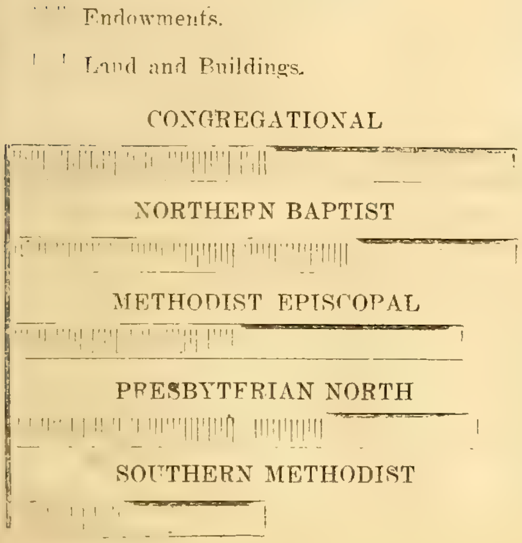
For an object of pity, rather than of scorn, should he be to posterity. The fourth successor of the iron Chancellor was a man of wax, moulded by the events which he was called to mould. It was his and Germany's ill fortune, which she, at any rate, proved fully to have deserved, that at the time of the Empire's greatest crisis so weak a man should have been destined to direct its hazardous course, but lacked that simple wisdom of recognizing his own incapacity for the task which his ambition had dared to assume. England's declaration of war might have opened his eyes to his own incompetence, as it meant the collapse of his entire policy, which, as von Jagow defined it, had been "to make friends with Great Britain and then, through Great Britain, to get closer to France." But in his blindness he saw in England's step only the act of a traitor, unprovoked by any move of his own policy. He compared it to striking a man from behind while he was fighting for his life against two assailants. How could Great Britain, just for a scrap of paper, make war upon a kindred nation which desired nothing better than to make friends with her!

It has been pleaded by his apologists that these words, uttered in a state of extreme nervous excitement, should not be used to damn his memory. The scrap of paper should be forgotten for the sake of that manly confession in the Reichstag that the invasion of Belgium was a wrong, to be made good again. And, to be sure, posterity would be inclined to forgive him the unguarded confession of his cynicism, if he had shown himself a man in standing by that nobler word. But he dared not. On December 2, 1914, he resorted to the mangled Brussels documents to disavow the sincerity of his better self, and tried to absolve Germany of the wrong "to be made good again" on the strength of an alleged, but absolutely fictitious, breach of neutrality by Belgium. Thus he was bandied to and fro between his good impulses and his dread of the military camarilla, and covered with his flimsy dialectics the wrongs which his better nature disapproved.

Devotion to his Kaiser, whom to serve he considered his duty as long as his service was acceptable, made him stick to his post under conditions so humiliating to his pride and his self-respect. But also, in his confidence that the German army was invincible, he saw a vision of a victorious Germany, at the head of a Central European Federation, dictating to Great Britain its conception of the freedom of the seas, and establishing a Pax Germanica which was to cure the world of its evils. What trace would be discernible, in the brilliance of that future glory, of the indignities which von Bethmann, then to be The Great, had endured for the attainment of that end? Upheld by that prospect and his "Kaisertreue," he bore the despotism of the military junta, the derision of his enemies, and the reproaches of his inner self.

History remembers many a statesman who died on the scaffold, a victim of his opponents' hate. Von Bethmann Hollweg was denied redemption by such martyrdom. He was laid on the rack of his own remorse, tortured by vain regrets and unpitied self-reproach. On the last of his visits to Berlin, was are told, he was seen walking in Unter den Linden, but few recognized in the stooping gait and careworn face the once stalwart figure of von Bethmann. The tortures had anticipated death's disfigurement. Who dare call it too severe a Nemesis?—The Weekly Review.

INVESTMENTS IN EDUCATION BY LEADING DENOMINATIONS.



IF.

(Without any apologies to Mr. Kipling.)

IF years ago you contracted T. B. (which is short for tuberculosis), and because of it were forced to give up the cherished ambition to be an active minister of Christ, and, because of it again, were forced to spend your days far from friends and loved ones, and

IF, through your own struggle to overcome the dread disease, there had entered into your heart a plan to help other needy young men who were engaged in the same hard fight; namely, to provide a home for tuberculars, where Christian young men could come at the minimum of expense to the maximum of pleasant and wholesome surroundings, to make that fight, and

IF in the paying for that home you should go beyond your strength, and within sight of the goal—the home free from debt—you should be forced to stop your efforts to collect money for it because you had no means of getting about. And

IF that home were situated on a hill so high and so far beyond the town that the exertion of getting down and up again proved too much for your strength and for the young men with you, so that, from month to month you were shut off from the world about you, and from any business, save what could be transacted by phone. And

IF that same isolation meant increased cost in the running of the home, and increased difficulty in getting help for the home

WHAT WOULD YOU DO?

Brother Casto says the solution of the difficulty is in that solver of many difficulties, a Ford car. He is allowing me to conduct a campaign to get one for him, so he may be free to raise the money to pay off the balance of the debt on the home. Now that Fords have come down, it will not cost much, and I trust there will be a hearty response to this appeal. I have known Brother Casto for years, I know something of the great work he is doing under so great handicaps. I know you can do no finer thing than to help him to carry on this work. If the editor will permit, and I am sure he will gladly let me have space in the Herald, I shall have more to say about the home and about the Ford.

Mrs. Bates starts the fund with $5. Who'll be the next? Make your contributions big or little as you can. But let us get it as soon as we can—for Bro. Casto's sake, for the sake of the young men in the home, for the sake of the Christ who also ministered to the sick. Send your contribution to me, or to Bro. Casto, marked "Ford Fund." C. W. Bates.

WHAT THE GENERAL CONFERENCE BUDGET IS FOR.

A church member in eastern North Carolina says people are continually asking what money for the General Conference Budget goes to, and asks that we state in the Herald.

About three-fourths of it goes to three of our church boards to carry on their work. These three boards look after foreign missions, home missions and education (in our colleges and theological seminary). One-tenth of it goes to the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society for their work in Japan and China. One twentieth of it goes to the Woman's Home Missionary Society for their work in this country. The remainder is divided up among the Young People's Board, the Old Folks' Home, the Children's Home, the superannuated preachers, and the American Bible Society.

CHRONOLOGY OF INVENTIONS.

A TEST OF CHARACTER.

A young man on a journey fell in with a merry party, including some young people of his own age. Through some incident and informality of travel the intercourse began and proved to be so pleasant that it was kept up in a natural way. The youth reached his journey's end first. He did not hear the comment of one of the party of travelers left behind in the car, but his heart might well have thrilled with grateful feelings if it had been so, for it was this: "He never would have talked about his father and mother as he did if he were not the right kind of a boy."

Here was a spontaneous tribute to the character of a young stranger, which might well be coveted by any boy or girl. It was the unconscious outcome of his real nature which made the impression and was an actual revelation of character. It would not have occurred to the unsophisticated young fellow to make an effort to bring in the mention of his parents, but because it was natural and instinctive it showed the stuff of which he was made.—Selected.

ONE THING VERY HARD.

"It's very hard to have nothing to eat but porridge when others have every sort of dainty," muttered Charlie, as he sat with his bowl before him.

"It's very hard to have to get up so early these bitter cold mornings and work hard all day when others can enjoy themselves without labor. It's very hard to have to trudge along through the snow, while others roll about in their coaches."

"It's a great blessing," said his grandmother, as she sat at her knitting, "to have food when so many are hungry; it's a great blessing to have a roof over our heads, when so many are homeless; it's a great blessing to have sight and hearing, and strength for daily labor, when so many are blind, deaf, or suffering."

"Why, grandmother, you seem to think that nothing is hard," said the boy, still in a grumbling tone.

"No, Charlie, there is one thing that I think is very hard."

"What's that?" cried Charlie, who thought that at last his grandmother had found some cause for complaint.

"Why, boy, I think that heart is very hard that is not thankful for so many blessings."—The Midland.

NOTICE, PASTORS AND CHURCH TREASURERS.

Owing to the unusually large assessment that we are carrying this year, President Andrews thinks it best for the conference treasurer to keep two accounts, one for the Annual, and one for the General Conference, instead of a general budget account as heretofore.

This plan need not interfere with any management of the budget adopted by the local charge. The only thing necessary is that when remittances are made to the conference treasurer you state whether the General or Annual Conference account is to be credited. It is important that you do this, for credits can not be given without this information.

Another thing: Do not send any money to the General Conference treasurer that you are to have credit for on your budget. Send it to the Annual Conference treasurer, and his records will then show credits for all payments you make to each account. By regarding these simple directions you will greatly assist the treasurer in keeping proper records of the conference money.

After talking with Bro. Andrews, I find that this is in thorough accord with his views, as he will no doubt state through the Herald.

S. W. Taylor, Treasurer.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

It would sound very strange indeed to say that the devil has undertaken such a work as to look after the Sunday school work, but nevertheless he is taking quite an active part in this part of the church work. We find him advising people how and what to do. He tells folks now they just must go to Sunday school—it's so popular; but if you go to Sunday school, then you can go where you please and do as you please the remainder of the day. We see so many that are obeying this voice of the wicked one, old as well as young. You can hardly keep a crowd long enough at Sunday school to read over the lesson; they get so restless and so tired and hungry. The truth of the matter is, they want to take some pleasure trip or do something to break the Sabbath day; but if anything happens to be said, they can soon tell you they are all right, they have been to Sunday school today.

The devil is doing a much greater work in the Sunday school than in any other part of the church work; he tells young people that if they go to Sunday school they do not need to even stay for church and go right out of Sunday school and leave the preaching hour and go to playing ball and some of the parents of such children go sleeping on and never see that the devil is devouring these precious boys and girls. How sad to see such going on.

Sunday school is a great thing; it should be the life of the church, a place to prepare the hearts for the preached word, a place of cultivation: it is nothing more or less than Bible-study or Bible school, but the devil has made a hobby of it and so many go to amuse themselves for the remainder of the day by not keeping the day holy. It means more than some think to keep the Sabbath day. Just because we stop work, that is not keeping the day and not by just going to Sunday school can we say when we come up before our judge that we are his jewels when we have spent the Sabbath in pleasure riding all the afternoon. We might have gone to Sunday school, but remember to keep the sabbath day holy is what the word teaches us, and we are to be saved by doing the things we are taught in the word. We shall be judged by the word. We have been asked if it was any harm to go off to places of amusement after attending Sunday school; surely not, they said. We said it was not right, for the Sabbath is the Lord's day. Should we not be very careful how and what we do on His day? We are speaking of Christians; the world goes on pleasure trips Sabbath, but we are not of the world, and cannot do as the world does; but we do so often ask, will it be any harm to do this? But what we want to know and ask, Will it be any good? It is good we are wanting to do as Christians and not to walk so close to the ways of the world as to have to question as to whether it will be harm. We can walk so close to the Lord as not to have to question about such things.

We certainly do not keep the Sabbath, not many of us, as we should. We in America today have many foreigners who came from lands where the Sabbath is not kept holy. We then have the opportunity to teach them the law of the true God. How the good Christian Queen Victoria used her authority to help her subjects keep the Sabbath is shown in this incident:

The band master at Windsor once ordered two hours of Sunday practice. Two members of the band, being strict Methodists, protested that Sunday work was against their conscience. Whereupon they were discharged. The story was told to the queen, who, when the band played that evening, sent for the master and asked for the two missing men. He replied that he had discharged them, and gave the reason. ''Reappoint them at once,'' said the queen. ''I will have no persecution for religion's sake at Windsor and I will have no more Sunday practicing, either.''

We are to spend the Sabbath hours in ways that testify; we think of it as God's day and use it to get better acquainted with him by attending church and doing such deeds of loving kindness as Jesus liked to do when on earth. He wrought many miracles of healing on the Sabbath. The Sabbath is a gift to man and a gift abused. In a certain school it was found that on Monday morning certain boys were more poorly prepared with their lessons and less able to understand the teacher's explanation than any other day in the week. It was soon found that the boys who failed on Monday were those who spent Sunday at baseball games. Sunday sickness is a disease well known by doctors. It is found among the people who sleep late Sunday morning, eat a very hearty noon-day meal and loaf or ride the balance of the day. Sabbath-breaking was one of the evils that brought Jerusalem's downfall. Nehemiah enforced the law of the Sabbath, Neh. 13: 15-22. Please read and see what was going on and see if we are trying to set up the standard of Sabbath keeping by our own lives. We are to practice what we preach and we are to preach, all of us, in a way, and show by our lives what we are and what we stand for. No nation can stand that breaks the sabbath day. So our fair land America is now tottering on account of this great sin and sooner or later she will crumble and fall because of not using this gift, but abusing it. Who shall help in this great time of need? Shall I? Shall you? Yes, thank God, we can all help by going to church and then to remember to keep the Sabbath day holy.

Martha Parsons.

THE SUPREMACY OF LOVE.

In the thirteenth chapter of 1 Corinthians, the apostle declares that love is the greatest thing in the world, that without love all other traits, possessions, and achievements sink into comparative insignificance, and that love imparts excellence, beauty, and power to every true endeavor.

Love is supreme as a principle of conduct. ''If ye love me, keep my commandments,'' spoke the Savior of souls. Love transforms an evident duty into a precious privilege. A loyal child of God keeps the commandments because he wants to, not because he has to. Obedience, therefore, becomes a delight, and not a hardship—and love is modest in claiming excellence or remuneration for any achievement, for the privilege and delight of loving is pay enough for any sacrifice necessary. A true mother never thinks of pay for toil and sacrifice in behalf of her child.

Love is also supreme as a motive to choice. Some choose the way of life from the motive of fear, in order to escape the dreadful consequences of sin. Others choose righteousness from the motive of gain, in order to get to heaven. But the largest number choose Christianity and the higher life because they love the Author of our holy religion. Or rather they are won from sin's destructive way to serve the true nad living God by the manifestation of the Father's infinite love in the gift of His son. Besides the Christian career chosen from any other motive than that of love is likely to be more or less selfish, sordid and unsatisfying.

And love is likewise supreme as a promoter of happiness. Love, like mercy is ''twice blest;'' it blesses him that gives and him that takes. But the larger satisfaction comes to the dispenser of love. Even unrequited love has its compensations. For ''it is better to have loved and lost than not to have loved at all.'' The very exercise of love of a self sacrificing kind leaves the heart tender, peaceful, and satisfied. The lover is the chief beneficiary of his own exercise of love.

And again love is supreme as a winner of souls. As vinegar never catches flies, so personal abuse for wrong-doing never won a soul for Christ. It is a law of the universe that like produces like. Therefore love begets love; Christian conduct reproduces the same sort of conduct in others. The world loves a lover. Every believer should be a transmitter of Christ's love for the lost, and thereby win them to a life of righteousness and usefulness.

The following lines by Bourdillon are a fine expression of the supremacy of love:

''The night has a thousand eyes
And the day but one,
But the light of a whole world dies
With the setting of the sun.
The mind has a thousand eyes
And the heart but one,
But the light of a whole life dies
When love is done.''

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR

JANUARY 23.

Missionary Results in Asia. Isaiah 52: 7-15.

(Foreign Missionary Meeting).

The writer was sitting in his study ready to write the Christian Endeavor notes on India. or rather, not exactly ready, for while he knew something in a general way about conditions in India, yet he had very little definite information; when the postman came bringing a book called, "Foreign Mission Year Book of North America." So most of the information presented here is gathered from the chapter on India in the above-mentioned book,

How little we know about India! It has been so backward that we never hear it spoken of as one of the great countries of the world. And judged by the usual standards of greatness it is not a great country. And yet when judged by the vastness of the territory and the multitudinous host of its population it has right to be classed as great. We think that the population of the United States is great. And in fact, one hundred and five millions of people is a great number; but when we remember that India has a population of about three times the population of our country, then we can begin to realize the vastness of the problem of preaching the gospel to India.

We are told that great changes have come to India during the past year. The world war figured largely in this. There were about a million men in service from India during the world war. Many more than this were under arms, but a milion were across the seas in actual service. These men came in contact with the soldiers from the more enlightened portions of the earth and their eyes were opened. They saw faintly at least some of the customs of the other nations and began to have longings for the new ways. When they returned home they could not be just the same men that they were before they went away. And while there is hope in their enlightenment there is also a restlessness that is hard to overcome. For their experience away from home has made them wonder why they are so different from other people.

Along with this unrest there is a great clamor for more political liberty. The larger part of India is under the control of Great Britain and the government has not always been satisfactory to the Indians. In fact, no government except that administered by a people themselves can be entirely satisfactory.

But one of the most hopeful signs in the life of India is its awakening along the line of education. The people have been ignorant and they are beginning to realize it. And while there are as yet no great signs of improvement, yet the very fact they are talking in terms of better schools and better educated citizenship is a hopeful sign. Dissatisfaction with their school system or rather lack of system has caused a large number of private schools to be built.

Religious Conditions.

We are told that there are already about four million Christians in India. This number is nearly equally divided between Protestants, Roman Catholics and other Eastern churches. But here is the most astonishing thing about it all: The number of baptisms is said to be about ten thousand a month and this only about one-tenth of the available material. Here in this country we have many churches in each town or city and sometimes these churches go for months and some for years without a baptism, while there the missionaries cannot baptise the people who want to be baptized. Surely God is working wonders in this world today.

Before closing this artcle it might be well to state that we have only one mission station and two workers there. This work was started by the Louisiana conference several years ago and was supported largely through the contributions of a Mr. Stewart, a wealthy layman of that conference. However, the work has been taken over in the past two years by our Mission Board and no doubt the work will be enlarged. Miss Williams is at the head of the work and seems to be doing well. Our mission board sent Drs. Klein and Broomfield down there last year to investigate the situation and they were highly pleased with the outlook. While our mission fields, China and Japan, are important, surely our church must also help to preach the gospel in India.

This topic will be difficult for our societies to handle because we do not have many missionaries there. However, more information can be secured from the senior Christian Endeavor World. It is imperative that each society take at least one copy for the leader, as our editor requires us to write these notes so early that we do not have access to the fuller information given in the Christian Endeavor World.

A few questions:

How can our church help the missionary work in India?

How many missionary societies do we have in our conference?

How much money did the Woman's Foreign Missionary societies of our conference raise last year? (See report of the statistical secretary of our conference, page 68 of Journal.)

Does any of the money paid into our church treasuries help India?

If you do not have a missionary society in your church don't you think you could organize one?

As the new financial budget will make possible missionary work on a much larger scale will you not help in raising every dollar of the amount assigned to your church?

J. E. Pritchard.

JUNIOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR JANUARY 16, 1921.

Better Work in Our Society. 2 Pet. 3: 18.

Have this meeting well advertised by means of posters made in the shape of the Junior shield. Have four large posters with the word Better printed in them, one for each side of the room. Have the Junior pledge and chart in a prominent place.

Arrange for four members from the senior society to visit this meeting. These four are to march solemnly in together as the meeting opens. They are to bow to the leader of the society, taking four chairs facing the society. No one but the superintendent will know they are coming. After the leader has opened the meeting, the superintendent will call on the four to speak. They will be the chairman of the prayer-meeting, lookout, missionary, and social committees, and each will talk about his own kind of work, why it is important and especially give hints regarding it that can be carried out in the Junior society. Limit each speaker to two-minute talks. When all four have spoken they will rise and solemnly march out, the superintendent calling, "Thank you!" after them.

The leader will remind them of the work they are trying to do in each committee of the society and call attention to the things they have not been doing, which they should do, and urge them to begin doing some of them and thus make their society better.

Each officer will be called upon to tell what he or she thinks could be done to make a better society, each talking about their own line of work. The president will talk about better business meetings, the secretary about better attendance, the treasurer about better collections. And so on. The leader will then call the committees. As each committee is called all the members of that committee will stand, the chairman will first suggest some things he would like to have done, and will be followed by each member of the committee, who will have a suggestion for improving the society. This participation will not be by chance, but each committee will have agreed upon the improvements they would like to see, and will have divided these among their members, each member to speak of one or to emphasize some point that has already been mentioned.

Questions:

What can we do to improve the attendance at our meeting?

How can we get more members for our society?

How can we improve the order and reverence in our meeting?

What can our society do to help the Sunday school?

What can our society do to help the church?

How can we improve our socials?

How can we improve our business meetings?

How can we increase our collections?

How can we get more enthusiasm in our society?

The superintendent will save her part of the meeting for the last. She may give a little talk which she calls a spelling lesson. She will teach the Juniors to spell "Better." They know the old way but not your new way.

For each letter in the word they are to suggest a word beginning with that letter which, if applied to the society will make a better society. To start them the superintendent herself will suggest the first word. Her word will be "Best." Things will become "better" only when we are trying to make them "best." We do not want to stop short of the best in our part of the society work. Let us aim at the best possible committee work and meetings, and we shall certainly get better committee work and meetings at once, and in time get the very best. Print "Best" on the blackboard.

So go on and spell the rest of the word, getting the Juniors to suggest the words for each letter, such as "Enthusiasm," "Trying," "Trusting God," "Energy," and "Readiness." Of course other words may be suggested and the superintendent may put others on the board in addition to these.

Close the meeting with sentence prayers. Ask each Junior to pray for some particular part of the work, asking God's blessings upon the work and the workers. At the close have all the members rise and repeat the memory verse for the year: "Let the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my redeemer."

Mrs C. R. Corkran, Cambridge, Md., has our thanks for a foot-ball, a basket-ball, a doll and some interesting games.

Our good friends in Randolph realize the need of a good barn here and after conferring with some of the leading members of Gray's Chapel and Bethel we believe they will furnish the framing and the Seagrove community will furnish the sheeting, siding and flooring. We will furnish the names later of those contributing.

We had a very impressive exercise just before Christmas when Miss Bowman gave 15 more children Bibles, making about 60 that she has given. The price has advanced so much that the last ones cost more than three times the amount of the first.

Rev. A. M. Hamilton was invited to make the presentation. He did it in an impressive manner and since doing it he is more interested than ever.

The children have a Junior Christian Endeavor society and in Intermediate society, all doing excellent work.

I want to say to our readers that the delay in my report is not from neglect of mine. If the report is not mailed Monday it is carried to the Herald office in person to be sure of getting in. It is in the postal service.

Seminary Notes.

Miss Hoskey of the Student Volunteer Movement spoke to the Seminary Band Sunday afternoon.

Miss Hoskey spent three years as an active missionary in India, and also traveled in China and Japan. She says it is the hope of all of the denominational boards together to send out twenty thousand college and Seminary trained men and women in the next five years. We have five of that number already in seminary.

Dr. Straughn, president of the Maryland Conference, filled Dr. Van Dyke's pulpit Sunday morning. He also spoke in Baker Chapel Sunday evening.

We welcome Mr. J. T. Mask, of the Alabama Conference, as one of our number. Also hope to have with us by the time this reaches you, Mr. Loy from the North Carolina Conference.

A minister of another denomination paid this tribute to our Seminary and student body a few days ago. He said, "You have one of the finest building of its kind in America. And in proportion to the size of your denomination you have more students attending your school than any church I know of." Reporter.

MARRIED.

On the evening of January 6, at the home of J. J. Hayes, the writer united in matrimony Mr. Winslow Wright and Miss Georgia Hayes. Both are members of Friendship Methodist Protestant church, Fallston, N. C. Mr. Wright is a prosperous farmer. Miss Georgia has been the principal organist at Friendship. May the sea of life henceforth be smooth and serene.

J. D. Morris.

Glenn-Hunter.

On January 8, at seven o'clock P. M., at the Methodist Protestant parsonage at Fallston, the writer was invited into the home of Rev. and Mrs. A. L. Hunter, to unite in matrimony Miss Ila Mae Hunter to Mr. W. M. Glenn. Miss Ila Mae is the charming daughter of our beloved pastor. Mr. Glenn is the efficient principal of Belwood Institute. After the wedding Mrs. Hunter served a delicious supper, after which we retired to our homes.

J. D. Morris.

Lebanon Charge.—I entered upon my duties as pastor of this charge immediately after the adjournment of annual conference. This is the fourth year I have served these good people. We have met all of the appointments to date. Congregations have been good.

We held our first quarterly conference at Lebanon on Saturday before the third Sunday in December. All of the churches were well represented. Business was transacted in a spirit of love, and all seemed to be hopeful for a good year.

Some may think this preacher and family have not been pounded because it hasn't been reported, but if they do they are mistaken. The good people on this charge have been pounding us every few days since conference. In fact, we have received so many nice and valuable things that we hardly know where to begin reporting. We will not attempt to mention all but just a few. First, some of the good people of Pleasant Grove assisted us in getting enough wood to last us during the winter. And several of the good people have pounded us with fresh meat, potatoes, and one brother brought us 75 or 80 pounds of flour. One good sister brought us a fine turkey for Christmas. Last but not least are the nice presents we received off the Christmas trees. At Pleasant Grove we received a $45 overcoat for the writer, pair of shoes for Mrs. Suits, pair of shoes for Viola, besides several other nice presents.

At Lebanon the writer received tie, coat hanger and kid gloves, silk hose and several other nice presents for family. At English Street, two cakes, apples, oranges and candy. We appreciate these tokens of kindness more than we can express in words.

We are glad to report that all the Sunday schools are making progress. Our English Street Sunday school has on roll now about 85.

Edw. Suits.

Notice.

Our first quarterly conference will meet at Spring church Saturday, January 22, 1921, two o'clock P. M. Especially the official members are requested to be there, and all other members who can attend. Matters of great interest to our church will come before this conference and you will be needed. Come.

J. B O'Briant.

Cedar Falls.—Yesterday was so rainy we had no service in our town. Two young men came to my house and told me I was wanted over in the village. So I went to Mr. R. W. Peel's. There I found one of Uncle Sam's boys who had come all the way from camp in Texas to take unto himself a wife of the daughters of Cedar Falls. There being no legal impediment known to me I united in matrimony Mr. Homer Palmer and Miss Addie Po[illegible]l. Now I do not know whether a young lion roared against him or not. If so, I hope he slew it and will find honey in the carcass on his way back, which will be this week. Wishing them a happy life, G. A. Laughlin.

Corinth, Littleton Circuit.—Having just read Woman's Foreign Missionary Society's receipts to January, 1921, I find there is a mistake. "Corinth, Littleton Circuit, $43 55." We have paid $57.55, and have in hand receipts from Miss Velna McCulloch showing this. I thought best to correct. Since our last contribution was sent in our treasurer, Miss Etta Gray Britt, has become Mrs. Leonard Smith, and has moved from our midst to Rosemary. Will serve us no longer as treasurer, but we will elect another our next meeting.

Bro. Loy has filled two appointments here since conference; gave us some hard blows, but we trust the results will be for good

Our first quarterly conference convened at Littleton church last Saturday. All churches were represented. Everything passed off nicely except there was much discussion over the budget plans, but finally accepted with understanding we would do what we were able But the poor farmers are so cut over low prices for their produce The way seems difficult. "But He who leads us take us by the hand. We are like children in the dark.

"We see not a step before us
As we tread on another year;
But the pass is still in God's keeping,
The future His mercy shall clear:
And what looks dark in the distancee
Shall Brighten as we draw near."

PAUL TEACHING ETIQUETTE.

I not long ago saw a peculiar seal-ring that a mother had had made as a birthday present for her son, who was away at school. It was a blood-stone carved with the device of two mailed hands, one reaching to the other a cup, around this an inscription which was Greek to me.

"What does it mean?" I asked, after a little study. "Is it the cup of water in the name of a disciple?"

The mother laughed.

"Not exactly," the mother said, "but it is a cup of water—the cup that Sir Philip Sidney gave to the dying soldier on the battlefield. You remember the legend: the motto you will find in Romans 12: 10: 'In honor preferring one another.' I had it engraved in original Greek, so that every one couldn't read it, for this is between my boy and me. Paul has always been my teacher of good manners, and I thought this ring would please Tom and at the same time remind him of some of the things that I cannot say to him now."

"Will you tell me what you mean about Paul and good manners?" I asked. She smiled a little and said,

"Why, I wanted above all things, as I suppose every mother does, that my boys should be well bred, courteous, polite—in a word, gentlemen; but I soon found out that the continual teaching to do or not to do each particular act was never going to make them what I wanted. It must be deepeer than that, and after awhile I came back and rested on the Bible, and especially on Paul. Did you ever read the twelfth chapter of Romans with reference to manners? No guide to etiquette or rules for deportment could do as much for one as that. My boys and I finally took the one broad rule: 'Be kindly affectioned one to another, with brotherly love; in honor preferring one another' That, in its broadest sense, includes everything. The talking to disagreeable people, the being cordial and hospitable, the trying to entertain others and give them pleasure with any talent we have, are all, I think, being kindly affectioned; and 'In honor preferring one another' may mean everything, from the offering of one's chair to the giving up of one's life.

"I think I learned this once when it was my lot to live for a time in a little Western village with what you may call very common people Uncultivated they certainly all were but I saw there what a perfect substitute true Christianity is for good manners, as society calls them. Quaint and amusing they might be in their ways and expressions but never rude never curious, nor prying and conceited. They were always considerate and thoughtful, always full of some kind-hearted plan for other people's pleasure. They were kindly affectioned and preferred one another.

"I remembered all this when I came to the training of my own boys, and so far Paul has been my authority on manners. I do not say that through him I can teach my boys how to use the right fork for oysters or to make a faultless bow, but I do say that I can teach them to be so manly, so gentle, so thoughtful of others and unassuming about themselves, that even if they blundered in very small social matters, they would soon undeniably be gentlemen. The small matters of etiquette are chiefly mechanical, they can easily be learned outside even if they are not in one's own home; but it is with the great underlying principle, 'In honor preferring one another,' that the true training must begin."—Bessie Chandler, in The Little Christian.

THE HAPPIEST LITTLE BOY.

"Guess who was the happiest child I saw today," asked papa, taking his own two little boys on his knees.

"Oh, who, papa?"

"But you must guess."

"Well," said Jim slowly, "I guess it was a very wich little boy, wif lots and lots of tandy and cakes"

"No," said papa; "he wasn't rich, he had no candy and no cakes. What do you guess Joe?"

"I guess he was a pretty big boy," said Joe, "who wasn't always wishing he was not such a little boy; and I guess he was riding a big, high bicycle."

"No," said papa; "he wasn't big, and of course he wasn't riding a bicycle. You have lost your guesses; so I'll have to tell you There was a flock of sheep crossing the city today; and they must have come a long way so dusty, and tired, and thirsty were they. The drover took them up, bleating and lolling out their tongues, to the great pump in Hamilton Court to water them; but one poor old ewe was too tired to get to the trough, and fell down on the hot, dusty stones. Then I saw my little man, ragged and dirty and tousled, spring out from the crowd of urchins who were watching the drove, fill his old, leaky hat, which must have belonged to his grandfather, and carry it one, two, three, oh, as many as six times, to the poor, suffering animal, until the creature was able to get up and go with the rest."

"Did the sheep say, 'T'ank you,' papa?" asked Jim, gravely.

"I didn't hear it," answered papa; "but the litttle boy's face was shining like the sun, and I'm sure he knows what a blessed thing it is to help what needs helping."—Christian Observer.

WHAT MADE A LITTLE GIRL GLAD.

A Prussian nobleman, who did not believe in God nor in the Bible, once overheard a little girl singing. It was a sweet strain, and a child's voice is always irresistible. As he drew near he saw tears upon her cheeks, as if she had been weeping.

"Why are you crying as you sing?" he kindly asked her.

"Oh, I am so happy!" said the little girl.

"But why do you weep if you are so happy?"

"I love Jesus so well that I was crying for joy," the little girl said.

"But where is Jesus?" asked the nobleman.

"In heaven."

"How can he do anything for you if he is in heaven? He cannot give you your clothes and playthings, as your parents and friends do."

"Oh, yes; he can do something for me. He comes to my heart and makes me happy."

"Nonsense!" said the nobleman, "that is nonsense."

"Oh, no; it is not nonsense!" answered the little evangelist. "I know it is the truth and it makes me glad."

The nobleman turned away, but an angel had touched his heart. He sought the little girl's Savior, and found peace and joy.—Selected.

THOU ART MINE.

The sun does not shine for a few trees and flowers, but for the wide world's joy. The lonely pine on the mountain-top waves its somber boughs and cries, "Thou art my sun!" And the little meadow violet lifts its cup of blue and whispers with its perfumed heart, "Thou art my sun!" And the grain in a thousand fields rustles in the wind, and makes answer, "Thou art my sun!"

So God sits effulgent in heaven, not for a favored few but for the universe of life; and there is no creature so poor or so low that he may not look up with childlike confidence and say, "My Father, thou art mine!"—Henry Ward Beecher.

"Praying in the Holy Ghost" (Jude 20). Not simply the Holy Ghost praying in you. You are immersed in the Holy Ghost. The atmosphere you breathe is what you give out. It is wrong to imagine that prayer is only speaking to God. Often the most precious part of it is God speaking to us. On Jacob's ladder angels descended as well as ascended. The closet is the place of revelation.—Arthur T. Pierson.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

Charlotte.—Charlotte church has observed the four annual programs given out by the general board, namely, Easter serivce, Children's Day, Educational Day. The latter service was rendered on Sunday evening, December 19, 7:30 P. M., by the children, an offering being taken for the Seminary.

On Thursday evening, December 23, both children and the older people enjoyed a pleasant evening in the Sunday school room of the church. The decorations were unique. The words, "Mery Christmas," and "Happy New Year" were artistically arranged between two very beautiful Christmas trees. The children rendered an impromptu program of song. The attendance was larger than on previous occasions. Everyone got a real joy out of it. The usual "treat" was given to young and old.

On Sunday evening, December 26. White Christmas was observed. Fifteen girls of the intermediate department rendered a beautiful pageant. The white gifts were sent to the Children's Home.

Usual services were held on last Sunday: communion service being observed at the morning hour.

Little Robert Nichols, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Nichols of our church, is quite sick.

L. Ezell, Reporter.

Pageland Circuit.—The first quarterly conference for the charge will be held at Rose Hill church on Friday before the third Sunday in January at 12 o'clock M. We trust that every church will be represented. Come out, brethren, and show that you are interested in the work. J. W. Quick, Pastor.

Rehoboth, Creswell Circuit.—Having been appointed reporter from Rehoboth church, it is high time I was "on the job." There is so much to say, I hardly know where to begin. I will say, however, by way of explanation, after our Edenton church was sold. I moved back to my old home, and have been actively connected with the work here one year.

To say it is pleasant, does not express it, really. I often, in mind, am a girl again, doing here and there, mingling with the friends of former days; but nearly 30 years have passed since I met with the congregations at Rehoboth; only ocacsionally, as a visitor. Many changes have taken place; only a few of the friends of my age remain, but instead, I have their children, and a host of new friends; but in my mind, I have the dear old ones, who have gone before, whose influence will never die, but be an inspiration forever.

We were very glad to have our pastor, Rev. R. L. Hethcox, return for another year. He gave us two most excellent sermons second Sunday in December, on his return to this work; and I feel with his leadership, and the co-operation of the church, we are going to do a great work for the Master this year.

One of the main things we are going to do, is to remodel Rehoboth church. We are going to begin now very soon, to raise funds for this cause. We have a fine set of young people, who are anxious to do their best to assist in this work. Some of them attended our Annual Conference and felt greatly benefited to do more work than before; they had a most delightful Hallowe'en social and raised considerable towards a Christmas tree. Later, they had an oyster supper and ice cream supper and completed the amount nesessary to have in connection with the Christmas exercises, two Christmas trees, one on each side of the altar, one filled with gifts, the other with candy and eatables, both decorated in the usual style, and lighted with candles. Mr. Herbert Swain in a most pleasing manner told the story of "White gifts for the King," after which all were invited to lay their gifts wrapped in white, in a pile, for the pastor. Bro. Hetheox was surprised, as he knew nothing of this feature of the program, and said he was reminded of his childhood days, and the many poundings he had gotten from his father, but he had never been pounded in that way before, and he was glad there was no "king" and he got the gifts. All of this was very enjoyable. Then came in old Santa Claus; the children were so delighted to see him, he told them as the times were hard and money scarce, he had had a hard time to get around; but he had something for them all.

The music was very good; Miss Alice White was organist. Misses Eva White and Ordie Blount deserve great credit for their splendid selections of presents for the Sunday school, they having had charge of that part of the work. The whole thing was under the supervision of Miss Callie Tarkington, who for many years has given her time and talents to the different phases of the church work.

Last Sunday, being the first Sunday of the new year, was largely attended, the crowd of happy young faces, boys and girls, was an inspiration. The songs were all so joyful, the day so fine and balmy, we did not need a fire to warm our bodies, all had new life, and entered upon the new year with a determination to make the best of its wonderful opportunities. Sallie Cherry Davenport.

Welch Memorial Sunday school.—We are glad to know that our people are holding up fine under the present financial condition.

Bro. F. W. Easter presented a fine scheme Sunday to raise our Building and Loan for the church, which took with every member present.

We had 196 present at Sunday school; collection $7.60.

At the 11 o'clock hour Bro. J. H. Moton delivered one of his wonderful sermons, which every one present seemed to be uplifted by. At 7:00 o'clock he also presented the truth so forcefully to a large congregation that we forgot ourselves and dreamed we were on Nebo's heights viewing the landscape scenery of the beyond. G. A. Kerr, Assistant Reporter.

Mt. Hermon, Creswell Circuit.—Things have changed a bit since our last quarterly conference. We now have preaching on first Saturday night, Sunday and Sunday night. We were very glad to see this change take place. All three services were well attended. Yesterday after the sermon the Lord's supper was administered, of which a very large number partook.

It was indeed a pleasure to have our pastor out to Sunday school with us. Attendance was very good, and our pastor gave a very interesting lecture on Sunday school.

One of our oldest members of our church, Mrs. Charlotte Davenport, is very ill; hope for her a speedy recovery if it be the Lord's will. She is a devoted Christian, and we miss her yery badly at church.

We hate to see so many of our young people marrying and leaving us. Miss Esther Woodley and Mr. Odell Barnes were married on the night of December 25 Hope for them a long and happy future together.

With best wishes to Herald and its readers,

Callie Barnes.

St. Johns, Rockingham Circuit.—We surely had a nice Christmas at this church. We had two trees and they were beautifully decorated, which added to the attraction of the nice entertainment by the children. And they surely are to be praised, they did so well.

The Sunday school gave each scholar a sack; also the teachers presented to each of their class a nice little present. Many of the scholars gave their teachers nice presents, appreciated by the teachers.

The work here is progressing right much. We had our first Christian Endeavor meeting Sunday at three P. M. and several new members were added to our list. As we learn more about this work we hope it will prove a great success for the young people and this church. Wishing all the work great success for the coming year, I close. Mamie Mills.

Hebron, Fallston Charge.—We are very glad to have Brother A. L. Hunter come back to us again, as he has only been with us one year. We have learned to love him and his family; and as yesterday was our regular preaching day, Brother Hunter gave us one of the best sermons I ever heard for the beginning of a new year. He encouraged us to begin the new year with a greater determination to make it one of the best in all our lives. And to make it one of the best, we must have God in the beginning; and if we would take God in the beginning of each day this year and not only this year, but all along through life that our lives would be a success. I hope and pray that our people on this charge will in the beginning of this new year say that we intend to help Brother Hunter to make this one of the best years in all our life and to do so we must be at church, first for preaching, first for Sunday school, first at prayer service, and if we will take God in all that we say or do in the beginning of each day, I am sure that we will come out victorious in the end. Reporter.

Friendship, North Davidson Circuit.—We are glad that the good Master has spared us to see the close of 1920 and the beginning of 1921 and we trust that each one will resolve to renew their covenant and reconsecrate their all to God, that great things may be done this year. Our pastor, Dr. Swain, filled his appointment the first Sunday; his sermon was deep and full of thought. Our church and Sunday school are largely composed of young people; that means so much to the comunity. $33.27 on budget; $1.06 for Children's Home. On Saturday at 11 o'clock our pastor also preached a splendid sermon and in the afternoon the quarterly conference was held. We were glad to have Mrs. Swain with us at both services.

On the fourth Sunday, in the afternoon, we had Sunday school, and a short program by the children, and addresses by two of our young men, Otis Phillips and Paul Byerly, after which we had a nice treat for the Sunday school and a Christmas tree for the children. The junior class gave their teacher, Otis Phillips, a nice present. Miss Bertha DeLap, teacher of card class number one, gave to each a present, and to little Misses Arline and Nellie Shoaf, scriptural mottoes for not having missed any during the year, and also a Bible story book for having the most tickets. We hope we can give one to each this coming year. Everybody present enjoyed the evening.

We are going to have an evergreen church this winter. Let us all come. The second Sunday at 10 o'clock we are going to have an old-time class meeting, and we hope before the close of the year we will have the old-time religion through the community. Best wishes to all for a happy new year. Reporter.

Graham.—We have not reported for a few weeks, but we are still at work. We consider ourselves fortunate in being able to have had with us on Sunday, December 19, our former pastor, Mr. Troxler, and our new pastor, Mr. Auman. We had a good attendance at all services that Sunday and Mr. Auman preached two very helpful sermons. At the night service he preached a very appropriate Christmas sermon and our male quartet rendered us two special songs. Both Christian Endeavor societies had a special Christmas program: and we are glad to note the interest taken in these meetings. The senior society made an offering of fruit to be sent to the Children's Home. On Thursday before Christmas we had our Christmas entertainment and tree. "A Christmas Trial" was given by the Junior Baraca and Junior Philathea classes. On January 2 at the morning service Mr. Auman preached about the New Road, and at the night service about the Six-Story Building. Both were very helpful sermons.

We are expecting Mr. Andrews to preach for us at the night service on the second Sunday in this month.

The first quarterly conference for this work was held at our church on Wednesday night before Christmas. Mr. Andrews presided over the conference.

To show our appreciation of the work Mr. Troxler has done for us in the past years while our pastor, we gave him a pounding before he left.

We were very glad to have Mr. Auman with us during the Christmas holidays, and wish that he could stay with us now and do the work that he has proved he wants to do. As he goes back to the Seminary, Mr. Paul S. Kennett from Elon College will preach for us at the regular times until May. Reporter.

Allison's Grove.—We have bid the old year goodby and have entered into a new year. We feel very grateful to God for the blessings he has poured out upon us in our work at this place, thanking Him for the good health of our community and for giving us a good comfortable church where we can gather together on the holy Sabbath day and worship Him; and for placing the gospel in reach of so many people that did not take part in the worship of God; also for the out-pouring of his Spirit on our work, that quite a number of people were born into the kingdom of our Lord.

We are beginning our work this year with bright prospects. We are looking forward to a good year's work. Our Sunday school is good, holding up better this winter than ever. Our congregation was good last Sunday. About every Sunday new people are coming in to worship with us.

We had a Christmas tree Christmas. There was a large crowd present and the exercises were good; and we had a treat for all the Sunday school, and all went away happy, felt it was good to have been there. The pastor received one of the most precious Christmas gifts that he ever received in all his life, a gift of $3 from the little children of the Sunday school; not so much the amount, but the source from which it came, from those that I love most. I am thankful to God for the joy and sunshine the little children put into my life as I go along through the world. If I could only get the older people to be as loyal to the church as the children I would have the greatest church in the world and be the happiest preacher in the world.

We still continue to have good prayer meetings every Saturday night. We wish you all a happy new year, and may this be the greatest year in the history of our church. Our quarterly meeting held at Mill Grove church Saturday, January 8, two P. M.

J. F. Alexander, Pastor.

Shiloh, Randolph Circuit.—The new year opened here with a large attendance the first Sunday, at Sunday school. Let us make it a year that will count for good, and bring everything from cradle to the oldest person out to church.

We are especially glad to have with us again our former pastor, Rev. W. F. Ashburn, of Liberty. He stood as solid as a rock by the church last year, and we expect his never-tiring help this year. And each member wishes him the best of success in his great work. And he is also welcomed in each and every home in the community.

There was a beautiful Christmas tree erected in the church December 25 and a good display of toys and gifts was distributed among all. The collection amounted to $6, which we were proud of. And to show that we thank you, who helped the little budget as best they could, we will say that we will stand by you and try to help you keep your new year's resolution, if you have made one, to come to Sunday school every Sunday this year.

The fourth Sunday in December, collection was taken for the Armenian sufferers. The total amount was $10 08.

Sunday school officers were elected January 2. They were elected as follows: Mr. M. Brown, superintendent; Walter K. Hemphill, secretary and treasurer; Percy F. Jordan, assistant secretary and treasurer; teacher of beginners' department, Mrs. Grady Hemphill; assistant, Miss Bessie Patterson; primary department, Mrs. A. L. Kime; assistant, Miss Mabel Phillips; Ever-Ready class or Junior, Mrs. W. P. Pickett; assistant, Mrs. James Pickett; intermediate department, Floyd Garrett; assistant, Miss Hester Patterson; senior department, Mr. W. P. Pickett; assistant, Mrs. J. D. Hinshaw.

Mr. and Mrs. James Brown visited his father, Mr. M. Brown, of Julian, Sunday.

Owing to the reporter of Shiloh church being away, no report has been seen from there in quite a while. We hope from now on to have full reports from Shiloh at least every quarter. F. E. J., Reporter.

Denton.—We are now holding services in our new church which we have striven so hard to complete for the past year; we now have a church home that we are delighted with and it is an honor to our little town.

Rev. J. B. Trogdon, our pastor, was with us again the first Sunday and administered the Lord's Supper, a goodly number taking part. Our pastor is preaching us some soul-stirring sermons.

We have just closed a deal for a parsonage for our work and we expect our pastor to move soon.

Our Sunday school is progressing nicely under the management of Bro. A. A. Hill, superintendent. Our offering for the Methodist Protestant orphanage for the first Sunday was $7.28; we also raised $16.25 the first Sunday for the Near East Relief. Our people are getting awakened to the fact that it pays to sacrifice our means and do things. Let's everybody put our shoulders to the wheel and go forward and not be sluggards in the church.

Yours for service, E. W. H., Reporter.

St. Paul's Charge.—The new year has started off very nicely. Our contractor finished his work last week and we paid him up, and yet have some money in treasury. The people of St. Paul's have done well. We have paid all of our bills as they came due. We have a nice church now and very well arranged for Sunday school work.

The first Sunday in the year we had the largest attendance in Sunday school, with the exception of one or two Sundays since I have been on the charge, a good new year start. I hope we can surpass that every Sunday in the year.

We have received many gifts during the holidays, for which we feel thankful. These people do not forget the preacher's needs, and may God richly bless them for their kindness to us. We have not wanted for any good thing since we have been here.

Another thing that makes us feel good: the company tells us they are going to build us a parsonage in the spring.

Yours in Christ's name, J. M. Morgan.

Henderson.—My last report failed to get printed, probably failed to reach the editor, so I will include in this report some things just a little old. Our Christmas services were all held and all were good services. The pastor preached his Christmas sermon on Sunday following Christmas Day, the sermon being one of the very best and the congregation large and attentive. On the first Sunday in January the monthly communion service was held, this being the first time the Lord's Supper was administered by our new pastor. This was a splendid service, and the manner in which same was conducted met with universal favor.

The Children's Christmas service was held Wednesday night following Christmas, the program consisting of plays and pageants, recitations, appropriate to the occasion, and concluding with Santa Claus delivering presents to all the children from a beautiful Christmas tree erected in the choir loft.

On January 1 at the night service a union service was held, all the churches of the city joining in a service at our church for the benefit of the suffering Chinese. Addresses were made by Rev. L. E. Thompson of the Methodist Episcopal church and Rev. S. L. Morgan of the Baptist church. These brethren told us about the conditions prevailing in the famine-stricken region of China, and appealed for funds to relieve this suffering. Cash and pledges were taken amounting to $650.

The services on last Sunday, January 9, were not so well attended as usual, although a splendid congregation, considering the very inclement weather. All the services were held, including the Christian Endeavor, led by Miss Mary Young, about all present taking part.

One announcement of interest made by the pastor last Sunday, was a call for all boys from 10 to 15 to meet the pastor at the church next Saturday for an organization. Every boy of proper age present at Sunday school indicated a desire to come and this promises to result in an organization very much needed by the boys.

The writer was not present at the night service last Sunday, but reports come to him that the sermon was grand, one sister stating that it was the best she ever heard, the subject being, Co-operation.

Perhaps the best thing to be said in this report is the reception of three new members. On January 1, Rev. and Mrs. J. E. Pritchard came to us on letter from the Burlington church, and on last Sunday Mrs. Leon Nelson Faulkner came to us on letter from the Methodist Episcopal church here. Mrs. Faulkner just recently married one of our young men, Mr. Maurice Faulkner, and comes to our church to be with her husband. We are indeed glad to have these good people become members of our church, and as Bro. Taylor stated in granting letters to Rev. Mr. and Mrs Pritchard, we are expecting them all to be a great help to the church and to the pastor.

D. A. Neese, Reporter.

Matthews Chapel, Greensville Circuit.—The Christmas holidays are over, and our work has started nicely for the new year. We have reorganized Sunday school. The officers are as follows: Superintendent, J. B. Edwards; assistant, Miss Modie Bowen; teachers—A. W. Moore, Modie Bowen, Odell Bowen, Blanche Edwards, Lottie Edwards; secretary, Dora Edwards; treasurer, Lottie Edwards; organist, Modie Bowen. We hope to make this year the best year yet.

On Monday, December 27, we had our Christmas tree; each Sunday school pupil, old and young, received a gift, and also our pastor was given a nice shaving set.

We were sorry the weather was so unfavorable that all the little ones could not be present to see "Santa," and receive their gifts.

Miss Emily Bowen of Emporia spent part of the holidays with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Bowen.

Misses Modie and Grace Bowen, Blanche Edwards and the writer spent the holidays with relatives in Rosemary, N. C.

Lottie Edwards, Reporter.

Denton. — The Ladies' Aid met at 2:30 o'clock Saturday afternoon in our new church. We elected officers: Mrs. A. A. Hill, president; Mrs. D. M. Sexton, vice president; and Mrs. C. C. Chandler, secretary and treasurer.

After election of officers we had a round-table talk about what we could now do to help our church, and others. It was decided that we would send a box of useful articles to our orphanage at High Point. All the members voted to do this. We thought since the Lord had blessed us so well and others had helped us so freely that it would really do us good to help others.

The Ladies' Aid is always thinking and planning something to do. We are never idle. I think every church ought to have a Ladies' Aid society.

When we met in the new church Saturday we could not express our thoughts. We felt so at home and free. I do not think that anyone who has paid any amount on the church regrets it. We feel sorry that we cannot pay more. The Ladies' Aid has paid over $1,000 on the church and we feel proud of it.

We want to thank everyone who has helped us in any way to build our church. We have a fine preacher and now we feel like doing great things.

Mrs. D. M. Sexton.

Bethesda, North Davidson Circuit.—On Friday evening our Sunday school held its Christmas entertainment, consisting of songs, readings, and recitations from the children. A large tree was loaded with gifts for each member of the school. The church was crowded with well-behaved folks and all seemed to have a good time. An offering was taken for the suffering in Europe amounting to $31.25. We are going to make our Sunday school an evergreen school. We averaged 99 last quarter. We are surrounded on all sides with other churches not far away, and so many of our members living away in other localities go somewhere else to Sunday school, or at least we hane so when they can not attend their own, leaving a small territory for our church to work. But we have plenty to do if we will be on the job. So let us be up and doing and make our school the best this year in its history.

Our pastor failed to fill his appointment January 9, on account of the downpour of rain. He has decided, I understand, to come next Sunday afternoon from Shiloh at 2:30 o'clock and fill the apointment for the 9th, Sunday school at one o'clock.

With best wishes to the Herald and its readers,

Mrs. C. M. Yokley, Reporter.

Cid, Uwharrie Circuit.—It is with pleasure that we welcome our new minister, Rev. Robert Short, and family. The people seem to be well pleased with him. He filled his appointment at Jerusalem Sunday, but owing to bad weather not many were out. Did not have any services at Cid, but if weather will permit will have services at Cid next Sunday at two P. M.

The many friends of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Neese were sorry to see them leave. But truly hope that they will do well and like their new work. Mrs. N W. Lanier, who has had LaGrippe, is improving.

Mrs. Arthur Wright has been sick with tonsilitis.

The first quarterly conference will convene at Mt. Pleasant next Saturday, the 15th inst,

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Short were pleasant visitors at N. W. Lanier's recently.

Yours for the Master's work, Reporter.

Bethesda Haliffax Circuit.—Today was one of our regular appointments here. Not much to report except weather. Lots of that; so much, in fact, that we had scarcely any congregation to hear Mr. Bethea's good sermon. Collection was for educational interests and would probably have been worthy of note, had there been a good-sized congregation. The rain and the people remind one of Uncle Remus's riddle about the crow and the corn: "If 'e come, 'e don't come."

Our Sunday school, which is pretty good during the summer months, has "dwindled down" since the winter set in. Some of our young people are away at school or teaching, and we miss them. We hope to organize a home department soon for some of those who feel that they can not attend the Sunday school.

M. H. S., Reporter.

Brinkleyville, N. C., Jan. 9, 1921.

Canaan, North Davidson Circuit.—Our Sunday school is moving along very nicely. We did not have very many present yesterday on account of the bad weather. We reorganized the first for the year 1921. There were six on roll in 1920 that did not miss a Sunday. We hope that we can make a better record this year.

We held our Christmas exercise on Friday evening, December 24. We were gladly surprised to have our new pastor, Rev. W. E. Swain, and Mr. Albert Evans with us that evening.

Our pastor filled his appointment the fourth Sunday evening and preached an interesting sermon. Best wishes to the Herald.

Reporter.

Guilford Circuit.—We are finding plenty of work to do. The more we do, the more we see that should be done. If we want to work for the Master He will show us our work and make it pleasant for us. We must do the little things as well as the larger, and be faithful in all things. Then the Lord will give us larger tasks.

I think the way in which we do our work will cause us to have more to do or less. It depends upon how well we do the work. Then let us not be satisfied until we have done our very best.

We hope this will be a year in which the Guilford Circuit will do great things and do them well.

We missed our appointments Sunday at Mitchell's Grove, 11 A. M. and three P. M. at Spring Hill because of so much rain. The Lord willing, we will hold all-day service at Spring Hill on the fifth Sunday. We will have Sunday school at 10 o'clock and at 11 A. M. Bro. H. A. Garrett and Miss Bowman and a class of the children from the Methodist Protestant Children's Home will give us a fine Bible exercise, which will be a sermon that will do us all good. Do not miss this chance to hear the children. Talk it up. Bring all your friends.

We will have dinner at the church also. After noon a large number of good singers will be on hand to sing for us.. Professors Swaim, Kennedy and Johnson will make it pleasant for all those who love good singing. We want all who can to come. May the Lord bless all and make it a great day for us all.

Since our last report we have been pounded with so many things that it would take too long to enumerate them. Bro. W. M. Jones pulled off his annual trick with a 30-pound shoulder of meat and bushel of potatoes. Bro. Jones says he has better hogs and then it also makes him feel good to give his pastor something. He did not stop at that. He also gave us a ten-dollar bill. May the guiding hand of God lead and protect Bro. Jones and all his dear ones.

Misses Martha and Mary Parsons gave us another fine turkey and many other things. Mrs. W. L. Cashatt, a nice lot of meat. Mrs. Billings, three jars fruit. Mrs. T. E. Euhaus loaded our car with many good things, finishing up by adding a toy flying machine, saying that if the road gets too muddy to drive car for me to come on airship. Mrs. C. M. Miles, three gallons beans. Mrs. D. C. Marsh, milk and butter. Charley Kersey, beans and cabbage. D. W. Haynes, load of wood. C. M. Miles, load of wood. M. C. Gilbreath, load of wood. J. W. Yow, load of wood. L. H. Tuttle, load of wood. Lewis Cashatt, load of wood. Earl Johnson, load of wood. W. C. Brown, cord of wood. Mr. Eugene Armfield, one hen and some beef. Mrs. R. L. Brown gave us a nice lot of meat. Now may the Lord bless you all and make you all rejoice for what you have done as much as you have made this poor preacher rejoice. Wishing you all a happy new year, yours in His name,

A. M. Hamilton, Pastor.

Charlotte Tidings.—Charlotte is still on the map. It seems that she will be just a little more so in a short time as men are now excavating, getting ready to begin developments, which are to mean more and better Sunday school facilities and what will be a comfortable and convenient home for the pastor. We are indeed thankful that the work has begun, for it is so much needed. We do not have money enough to complete the plan but we are going to begin, hoping that the necessary amount will somehow come. Any help will be appreciated.

At present we have some sickness in our congregation, which of course draws on our attendance. Mrs. Henry Muse, who has been sick for some time, is now improving. Bro. C. O. Garmon and children are at home nursing mumps. Mrs. James McCall is the victim of tonsilitis and Master Robert Nichols has been kept at home because of a severe case of bronchitis, while the pastor is having some very unpleasant experiences with his old-time enemy, rheumatism.

It is a little late to report Christmas events, but some things must not be overlooked. We would like to give detailed accounts of the three special services which we observed, but we will only mention these and leave details for our very efficient reporter. The educational program prepared by our Board of Education was rendered on Sunday evening, December 19. A Christmas tree service was conducted for the special benefit of our children (and we are all children on that ocacsion) on Thursday evening, December 23. On Sunday evening, December 26, a number of young ladies rendered a most beautiful pageant. This was our White Christmas. All these services were decided successes. Without question the Charlotte church observes the four special services requested by the general boards of the denomination.

But the one thing about Christmas which I especially want to mention is the fact that at the Christmas tree service there was more than the Christmas tree. There were two trees and they were beauties, to be sure. There was a treat for each member of the Sunday school but that was not all. At the close of the service Superintendent R. S. Garmon asked that the ushers roll out the barrel. The barrel was rolled out (it was a big one) and Bro. Garmon began to make a speech, saying that the preacher was being pounded. Sure enough it was a pounding, for many pounds of good things were in and around that great barrel. Instead of a pounding it was a barreling. Well, I would like to tell all about it, how much, what it was and who did it, but I can't. It is enough to say that Charlote church was well represented, the good things were there and the preacher and his family were made happy. Yes, we have been having good eats at our house since December 23. This is just one of the ways the good Charlotte people show their interest in the work we are doing. God bless each one. He knows each gift and the giver.

Brethren, when you pray, remember us at Charlotte. This is a great work and these are a great people, but we need your sympathies. Remember us.

In His name, Geo. L. Curry, Pastor.

Union Chapel, Mocksville Circuit. — Our preacher, Rev. C. H. Whitaker, asked me to report to the paper the first time he preached for us nearly a month ago. He will preach for us again next Sunday and I am just now writing.

Our Sunday school is what you call evergreen: when the weather is bad we do not have a very large attendance. Reorganized Sunday, January 2; elected M. B. Richardson superintendent, Tally Baker secretary, C. F. Allen treasurer. The assistant superintendent is to be elected next Sunday. Mr. Richardson is not a member of any church. I do not know why he was selected as superintendent. He may not serve, although he never objected. Our people are not a very loyal people. We do not, more than two members, take the church paper at a time.

I guess I would better quit. I may have already said too much. Hope to have a reporter from our church that will report once a month anyway. If we can get quite a number to take the paper maybe we can have a regular report. With best wishes to the paper and its readers,

Mrs. W. H. Gaither.

P. S.—We take the Sunday school collection once a month for Children's Home. Sometimes we do not get as much as a dollar. Then we wait and send two collections together.

Union Grove, Orange Circuit.—My last report failed to appear. I guess the waste-basket got it. [The Waste Basket denies the charge, It must have fallen by the wayside.—Editor.]

We were sorry to give up Rev. H. F. Surratt. We were glad to have our new pastor, Rev. H. L. Powell, with us first Sunday; not very many out, as some were not expecting him, as he had not arrived at the parsonage. We are hoping for the best year for the Lord's cause. We need to wake up to the truth and go to work.

On December 24, at three P. M., our Sunday school had a Christmas exercise. The scholars were given a treat which they seemed to enjoy. Our Sunday school decided to call off the first quarter, as it is generally bad weather and our Sunday school is mostly small children.

On December 21, 1920, at three P. M. at her home, Miss Mettie D. Blackwood and Mr. John McCauley from near University Station were married by Rev. S. W. Oldham. Mrs. McCauley is a member of our church and Mr. McCauley is an M. E.

December 26, our organist, Miss Louis Dodson and Mr. Arthur Minnis, member of Chestnut Ridge, were married at Hillsboro by Rev. S. W. Oldham, pastor of Baptist church.

December 31, at the Presbyterian manse, Hillsboro, Mr. W. A. Craig and Miss Mattie Long were married by their pastor, Rev. H. S. Bradshaw. They are members of New Hope but attend our church. We extend congratulations and wish for each of them a pleasant journey through life.

We hope this will be the best year for the Lord's cause in our conference.

N. B. Lloyd.

Tabernacle Circuit. — It has been several months since we have reported any gifts from the people to the pastor and family. From some months before the last conference to the present time—January 10, 1921—the followinig friends have kindly remembered us: D. H. Hunter, Miss Angie Causey, I. L., Mrs. Trogdon, Pearl and Worth; Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Lowe, P. A. and Mrs. Hardin, Mrs. Sibba Hardin, Miss Joanna Hardin, J. E. and Mrs. Hanner, J. W. Burrow, Mrs. W. D. Hardin, W. D. Hardin, James Hackett, Mrs. Frank Garrett, R. L. and Mrs. Jones, G. A. and Mrs. Garrett, Mrs. W. T. Hanner, Mrs. T. S. Coble, Mrs. John P. Coble and Miss Cora Coble, Mrs. Ethel Sharpe, Purvis Neese and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Charley Fields, Mr. and Mrs. A. P. Coble, Mrs. Mary Kirkman and family, Thomas Foust. Several of these have given more than once.

On the fourth day of January, 1921, Bros. R. L. Jones, J. E. Hanner, H. L. Lowe and P. A. Hardin brought us four loads of good wood and four good loads of wood. Our Bros. Highfill gave the wood. We are not afraid of cold weather now. We extend to all these brethren and sisters our sincere thanks and trust the dear Lord will bless them, and all others who at any time have helped us; and whether they have helped in this special way or not, may the Lord bless all the people.

G. F. and Mrs. iMllaway.

MARRIED.

At the residence of Reuben Brown, Brinkleyville, N. C., December 18, eight o'clock P. M., Lester Fountain and Susie Bradley. Mr. Fountain is from Nash county, while Miss Bradley is from the Eden community. They will live in Nash. We wish for this happy couple all the good that heaven can bestow.

At the residence of Mrs. Thomas Taylor, near Brinkleyville, on December 26, six o'clock P. M., a marriage of unusual interest took place when Mr. E. C. Harrell and Miss Willie Cheek were united in the bonds of holy wedlock. Mr. Harrell has only been in this community for a year, but his genial smile and kind word and deed for everybody has won for him a place in the hearts of the good people of the community; while Miss Cheek is one of our best ladies and one of no mean business qualities as well as a devoted member of Bethesda Methodist Protestant church. We predict for this couple a happy journey through life, for with the groom's straightforwardness and industry and the bride's ability to make the home life what it ought to be, there's a place for them to be a blessing to the community life. All good wishes for this deserving couple.

December 30, 1920, three o'clock P. M., in the home of C. C. Avent, of Brinkleyville, Miss Alene Connell was led to the matrimonial altar by Mr. Hunter of Rocky Mount. The groom is a prosperous young farmer of Nash county, and a Christian, a member of the Baptist church.

The bride, who has made her home at her uncle's, where the marriage took place, since the death of her parents, is one of our best and most industrious young ladies. While a member of the Baptist church, she was a member of Bethesda Sunday school and a regular attendant at the church services, and we had come to know no difference than if she had been a member of our church. Alene, as she was familiarly known, will be missed from the community, but with her disposition will make friends where she has gone, and will make, we are sure, the home of this deserving young man a place of happiness. Our prayers and best wishes go with them.

At the parsonage, Brinkleyville, N. C., January 1, 1921, 1:30, Walter Moone and Susie Locks were united in marriage. These popular young people are members of Eden Methodist Protestant church and are active in the work of the church here. The bride is one of the leading members of the Ladies' Aid society, being its vice president, and often leads in the devotianals, while the groom is one of the ushers in the church and both of them are always an hand at the church services. It is to be hoped that they will remain in te community, for we would greatly miss them from the services.

Immediately after the ceremony they left for Weldon, where they will take the train for Richmond for a few days' visit among friends.

Our prayers and best wishes go with them. The writer had the privilege of officiating in all the fore-named marriages.

N. G. Bethea.

Another Pounding! !

We always hope that the arrival of a new year will bring an increase in prosperity and good fortune, and we are often disappointed. But if fortune continues to bestow her smiles on this Methodist Protestant preacher as abundantly during the remainder of the year as at its beginning, 1921 will certainly be a record-breaking one, for on the last day of the old year two unusual strokes of luck befell me.

The first was the invitation of Mr. W. L. Spoon to a rabbit hunt on his thousand acre farm. Rev. W. F. Ashburn was kind enough to allow me to go with him in his Ford, and, on our arrival, we found about twenty other guests awaiting us, including another preacher, Rev. J. A. Burgess. We expected to enjoy roaming through the fields and woods but hardly hoped for much success in catching rabbits, but what was our surprise to see rabbits literally springing up on all sides, sometimes two and three at a time. We scrambled over ditches, through plowed fields and woods until forced to rest. On counting the rabbits, it was found that ninety-five had been killed, a record-breaking number for this district. We were certainly in a condition to enjoy the excellent dinner we found awaiting us at the home of Mr. Spoon, and we unanimously accepted his invitation to another rabbit hunt next winter.

Surely this was enough excitement for one day, but more awaited me in Liberty. As I was sitting at home, after supper, talking to Mr. Mann Reitzel, I heard the sound of automobiles in front of the house and the murmur of voices. This was followed by a quiet knock at the door. Still suspecting nothing, I opened the door, and before I could collect my scattered wits the hall was over-flowing with a bundle-laden throng hurrying toward the dining-room. My suspicions were aroused and I hastily followed, just in time to see the table and all available space filled with everything that goes to make up a first-rate pounding. I will not enumerate the gifts received, for I have no desire for this article to leave a trail of hungry readers, but suffice it to say that during all my years as a pastor I have never received a better pounding. We are indeed indebted to our church members and friends in Liberty for the continued expressions of hospitality and kindness extended to us since our arrival here, and wish to take this opportunity to thank them again most heartily for this splendid pounding. H. M. S., Asheboro, handkerchief for each child; Mrs. W. E. Martin, Winston-Salem, a present for each of the children; Mr. and Mrs. Basil Hedgecock, High Point, a present for each child; and Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Millis, High Point, a treat in candies and fruit and also a present for each one; Ever Ready Class, Como, N. J., one nice doll; Sunday school, Mt. Blanchard, Ohio, paper dolls and dresses for same; Missionary Society, Libertytown, Md., a book of samples for Christmas; Miss Ruth Peterson, Iowa, one box candy and a box caramels; Live Oak and Chapel classes, Texas, toys and clothing; Mrs. C. E. McGwigan, Enfield, two overcoats; and the Goose Grease Company, Greensboro, knowing the danger from overeating at Christmas times and suffering from colds, donated two dozen "Mother's Joy" salve to help save the children.

Space forbids our telling the nice things written and enumerating the different articles, but we want you to know we appreciated everything received and wish a happy, prosperous new year to all.

We have something good to tell you next week, something that all our readers will rejoice to know.

The children were very much hurt when Miss McCulloch told them she would not be their teacher after Christmas. She felt that her health would not permit her to continue through the spring and it was with reluctance we gave her up. We feel that we have been fortunate in securing the services of Miss Sallie Barnhill, Enfield, to take Miss McCulloch's place. She comes to us highly recommended by the people for whom she has been teaching and so we are expecting a good spring session.

Dr. J. Fred Tesh came with his 25-piece band last Friday night and gave us a concert of a very high order. We always appreciate his music.

Dr. J. W. Austin, High Point, has rendered valuable services in stamping out an epidemic of sore eyes among our children. We can always bank on him when we need his services. He is always as attentive as if he were receiving a salary for his services.

IN MEMORIAM.

Oscar L. Smith.

Brother Oscar Smith died at his home, East Pageland, Thursday night, December 23, about 8:30 o'clock. He had been sick for two days; heart trouble was the cause of his death. A wife and two little girls, father and mother, three brothers and two sisters, survive. Oscar joined Rose Hill church about twelve years ago. Since that time he had been a faithful, consecrated Christian worker.

We can not understand why one in the very prime of life (only 29 years of age) and so useful should be taken; to us it is a mystery. Was it because God needed him more than we?

He was of great value to our church, and especially the choir. And his place will be hard to fill. Only a short while before he died he called loved ones to his bedside and told them that he knew that he must die, and plead with them to promise to meet him in heaven. We cannot understand, but sometime the wisdom and goodness of God will be made known and our hearts that are now bereaved will be soothed and comforted.

Oscar has joined the choir invisible with the redeemed in heaven in singing the new song before the throne. With his loved ones we sympathize in their great loss, but to them all heaven is made more attractive.

We trust, we pray, that his mantle may fall upon others who will consecrate themselves to the carrying on of the work he was doing so well. The funeral services were held at Rose Hill church Friday at two P. M., conducted by the writer, and his body laid to rest in Rose Hill cemetery. He "fought a good fight, finished the course and kept the faith."

J. W. Quick, Pastor.

O. L. Smith.

In a compass of little more than twenty-eight years is to be found the brief records of a life rich in promises and hopes, growing brighter and brighter until the pre-shadowing gloom of yule-time cast its somber shades over the happy home. It soon became evident that the life of Oscar Lee Smith was rapidly passing. Everything that could be done to arrest the malady was done promptly, but alas! all unavailing.

Oscar, the third son of Brother Thomas B. and Sister Cora Smith, peacefully yielded up his once strong life in the very midst of manhood. He made a strong fight for life, but surrendered to the inevitable without complaining.

There is but one verdict, namely, Oscar Smith was an exemplary young man. A young man of noble impulse, high ideals and gentle, unassuming spirit. At an early age our brother professed faith in Christ and united with the Methodist Protestant church at Rose Hill and maintained his integrity as a Christian unto the end.

His devotion to the Sunday school was particularly strong. He served as secretary for a number of years, always found at his post of duty. Methinks I can see him now as he stands by the piano and hear that sweet tenor voice vibrating over the church. No, I see a brighter face, more radiant, and hear a voice more perfect by far; Oscar is singing around the throne with the angels awaiting the coming of loved ones and the resurrection morn.

When he realized that his time had come to go he talked to every one present and stated that he was ready to go, but desired to live to see his two baby brothers and get their promises to meet him in heaven; this I learn he did. Oscar always showed himself a man, whether in the church, in his home, or in the society hall.

During his last moments, while his devoted mother was by his side, he suggested she sing "Jesus, lover of my soul," which she did, and he told her that he had been to heaven and that he had met with loved ones that had gone on before, but in a few minutes his soul entered into that sleep "from which none ever wakes to weep." Let us hope that the joy which is silenced on earth is taken up in heaven! The temptations of life may not be forgotten by those of us walking in His way; and that on that day, while we are walking in mourning garments,—in the heavenly Zion there may be the "oil of joy" instead of our mourning, the "garment of praise" instead of our "spirit of heaviness;" that the angels may there be celebrating a loftier accession to a brighter crown, even the "crown of life which the Lord hath promised to them that love him."

Robert P. Turner.

Whitely.

Hiram Arlendo Whitely was born January 6, 1855, died December 4, 1920, age 65 years, 10 months and 28 days. He leaves three brothers, Joseph S. Whitely, William Thomas, and Alpheus Whitely. Two sisters survive, Mary J. Whitely and Sarah E. Cox.

He had been a member of Tabernacle church many years; was a consistent member, regular attendant. Was one of the trustees at the time of his departure. His death cast a gloom over the entire community. It seems so strange that he does not fill his accustomed place in the church and community. We greatly miss him, especially his loved ones. Though they are bereaved, yet we know that they will look to God in Christ for help; and the light of God will dispel the darkness, and all the shadows will flee away.

Bro. Hiram left no last words concerning the future, but he left his life before his church and community. Let his loved ones and all of us think of the mercy and love of God, of a glorious resurrection, and of the mansions above, and praise the Lord.

G. F. Millaway.

Edith May Free, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. B. Free, departed this life December 31, 1920, aged nine years and seven months. She leaves to mourn their loss a devoted father and mother, two brothers and one sister, and a host of relatives and friends. Just why Edith was taken from our midst so early in life we canot understand. But we bow in humble submission to him who doeth all things well. Her funeral was conducted by Rev. J B. Trogdon and J H. Stowe, after which her remains were tenderly laid to rest in Browers Chapel cemetery to await the resurrection morn.

Could we but see her shining face.
Delighted with that happy place,
We could not wish her back again,
But say, dear Edith, with Christ remain.

Weavil-Berrier.

On Christmas day Mr. Charlie Weavil and Miss Rosa Berrier were united in marriage by Rev. Mr. Andrews, the Reformed preacher, at the parsonage near Pilgrim church. Only Mr. Weavil's brother and sister and Mr. John Spoolman went with them to witness the ceremony. The bride wore a handsome blue coat suit with accessories to match. After the ceremony they returned to the bride's home, where a number of their relatives and friends awaited them to offer their congratulations and best wishes for a long and happy life after which a bountiful dinner was served, which all enjoyed. Mrs. Weavil is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. F. Berrier of near Union Grove Methodist Protestant church, of which she is a member and a regular Sunday attendant. Mr. Weavil is a prosperous young farmer of near Canaan Methodist Protestant church, of which he is a member.

They are both well known and much thought of by their many friends, who wish for the young couple a long and happy life together. May their path be strewn with flowers.

NOTES.

—Bro Bethea has been marrying some.

—Mrs J. A. R. Davis is spending the winter in DeLand, Florida, "a beautiful place," she writes.

—Mills are resuming work in Mecklenburg county—a sign that normal times are approaching.

—A partisan contest now seems probable during the Harding administration, the Democrats defending the present Federal Reserve banking system, which they put into operation, and the Republicans wishing to substitute for it a system with one centralized bank.

—Panama Canal receipts increased about 50 per cent. in 1920 and amounted to $10,295,000. Twenty-eight hundred vessels passed through, having a total net tonnage of 10,378,000, and they carried 11.236,000 tons of cargo.

—France's net loss of population during the war was 4,000,000, the Director of Public Assistance reports.

—Many of the conditions fixed by the Allies for the beaten German Empire have not been complied with. The German standing army has not been reduced to 100,000; forts have not been destroyed, and dozens of other agreements have not been kept All this makes the outlook for continued peace rather dark.

—The largest disappearing gun in the world has been made at the U. S. arsenal at Watertown, Mass. It can throw a shell weighing 2400 pounds a distance of 35 miles, and disappears after firing until ready to fire again

—Japan has just had its yearly contest of poets to produce the prize poem. Thirty thousand poets competed, and this is said to be the average number.

—The earth has suffered 141 quakes in the year just passed, according to records kept by the Gonzales Heights Observatory in British Columbia. Most of these have been only slight tremors; a few have had serious results.

—It is now Governor Morrison instead of Governor Bickett.

BRO. BROWN ROBBED.

Some unregenerate son of Belial broke into my garage the other night and stripped my "John Henry." I suppose they were after the car; but as it was locked with a Fox wheel lock they could not get it. However, they took the storage battery, the starter, the generator, and all the wiring; the radiator cap, all my tools, inner tube, spark plugs, and our airs. They even stole the horn. As I had no insurance I have to stand the loss.

BECAUSE YE ATE OF THE LOAVES.

As the words fell from the lips of Jesus, they conveyed reproof. There is nothing in all the teachings of Jesus to suggest that he saw anything wrong in the hearty enjoyment of a meal. He said of himself that the Son of Man came eating and drinking and he resented the imputation that he was a glutton and drunkard because he enjoyed his meals.

It was not because they ate the loaves that he reproved them, but because they did nothing else and wanted to do nothing more than repeat the repast.

They did not see the signs. They did not seek Jesus for the richer gifts he had to bestow. Their minds were on the loaves. They wanted more loaves.

Yet they were capable of seeing signs. they could seek the larger and better things of which they had need; just as children put away childish things to gain those that have larger and deeper meaning.

What Jesus did in making loaves was a sign and pledge of his power and willingness to satisfy the deeper hunger of the souls of men—the hunger for God, for righteousness, for a place in the brotherhood.

What Jesus did was an interpretation of what the Father is doing—the Father who worketh hitherto. He knows that we have need of all these things and wants us to enjoy them. But his love is disappointed and wronged when we want more loaves instead of the bread of heaven with which he yearns to feed us. It broke his heart that they did not appreciate the better things he could do for them, the richer bread he had to offer and of which they had urgent need.

It is the blindness of men in turning from the signs of God's power and willingness to do the best things for them which Jesus rebuked in the words: Because ye ate of the loaves and were filled—satisfied—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

John Franklin, little son of W. M. and Carrie Smith, was born October 22, 1917, died December 7. 1920. He was a bright, sweet child, the joy of the home. Hard to give up, but the parents and sister know that he is with Jesus, who loves little children. Sometime Jesus may say to him, Franklin, my angel child, go stand at the beautiful gate, your mother, or father, or sister is coming today. The bereaved family has the sympathy of a large circle of friends. May the Lord continually bless them in their great sorrow. G. F. Millaway.

THE QUERULOUS TONE.

The voice is an index of the feelings. And what a difference in voices! Some are full of exuberant joy, and we like to hear them. They spread good cheer to all around. Others are full of bitter complaining and are the dread of everybody. A person who is a chronic complainer acquires the querulous tone of voice and he cannot rise above it or descend below it or get away from it. It shows itself in all his utterances. When he sings, he sings plaintively, no matter what the sentiment of the song. When he speaks words of congratulation, they sound like words of bitter complaint.

What a misfortune to acquire the querulous tone! It is out of place in God's good and glad universe. There is of course a time to weep, a time to mourn. There is ground for weeping and mourning, but not in the doings of God. The things to mourn about are our own sins, our own mistakes, our own misdeeds. When we have mourned for those sufficiently, we should dry our tears and begin to rejoice in the goodness of God, in the greatness of our prospects in Jesus Christ, in the everlasting hope of the Gospel. We should take on the glad voice, acquire the tone of hope and joy.

Our world of feeling should correspond to God's glorious world of creation and His more glorious world of grace. Let us not feel as though God were dead and the universe were impoverished and we were in a state of eternal orphanage. As long as God is our Father we can hope, we can rejoice, we can speak words of gladness. "Be glad in the Lord!"

—Rev. G. I. Humphreys has a good collection of thought gems which seem to come to his mind at the fitting time. Here are two that we now recall: "Some one has said that Christianity is first an agony, then an anthem, then an immortality." "It has been said that God always answers prayer: He gives us either what we ask for or what we ought to have asked for."

WHO CAN DO THIS?

Arrange the numbers 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9 as follows: Put one number on each corner of a triangle and two numbers on each side between the corners in such a way that the sum of the four numbers on each side of the triangle is 20.

FOLLOW HIM.

Some one has said that: "If we look at ourselves we will be miserable; if we look at others we will be perplexed, but if we look to Christ we will be happy." That is a fact verified by experience and an admonition much needed amidst the manifest failure of many of Christ's disciples in these days. The worst wounds Christ has received have been inflicted by His avowed friends, through their weakness, failure, inconsistency or rebellion. It is well to remember, however, that we are called to follow Him, no matter how others fail, and that however faulty His people may be, there is no fault in Him or the Gospel of His grace.—Exchange.

WHAT FOLLOWS.

We must not underestimate the greatness of the task assigned to the followers of Christ—"Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations." "Ye shall be witnesses unto me . . . unto the uttermost part of the earth."

Nor must we overlook what has been achieveed, despite stupendous difficulties and obstacles which confronted Christians in every age.

Neither should apprehension arise as, in the midst of the world's greatest upheavals and disorders, we face the future.

God wrought mightily through his own power and human instrumentality in lifting a great part of mankind from lowest conditions to highest attainments in all departments of life, and surely his power is still available to meet present and any future demands.

It is evident, therefore, that it rests very largely with God's people as to whether the church will occupy its rightful position of influence and service, and remain the channel through which God will operate to carry forward his beneficient scheme for a lost world.

It will be helpful to recall some of the difficulties the early, and even later Christians encountered; the distances to be traveled by slow and limited methods; unknown peoples, and unexplored regions; many languages and dialects; climatic, pestilential conditions; lack of medicines and surgery; government prohibitions of new religions, and native hostility to foreigners; tenacious adherence to national worship and practices despite their degrading influences; widespread ignorance and superstition; lovers of pleasure, and given to cruelty; general contempt for the Jew, and aversion for anything originating with him, etc.

The early heralds were left largely to their own resources, they went where persecution's arm drove them, or the Spirit directed them, and wherever they journeyed they preached "the Lord Jesus", and out of their self-sacrificing labors came Christians and churches, and the agencies which advanced foremost nations to the best they have.

The perfect character, the lofty teachings and the atoning sacrifices of the Christ; the joys of salvation and the certainties of eternal life through Him; the unparalleled principles to govern one in all relations, and the high ideals and standards for social, governmental and all other conditions constituted an irresistible appeal to the best in men, and gained acceptance and compliance that swept the cause in triumph over the Roman Empire, and into outlying regions from which the best nations of today profited.

We are, in may respects, in a totally different world to that of the early church with discoveries and developments undreamed of years ago, for distant nations are near neighbors by cable and ship, and the brotherhood of man was evidenced in the many nations allied in a common purpose and effort to destroy tyranny and the grasping for world power, and, out of all that the war placed upon the nations, they seek plans, organizations, and agencies to meet the call of the hour to reconstruct and build for a greater future.

Surely it is time the church realized that the world needs it more than ever, that greater opportunities could not be found than are about it today, and that the spirit, devotion self-sacrificing labors of the early Christians should be exemplified to enable the church to accomplish its great mission to men.

With such a task assigned, and with such grave responsibilities resting upon pastors and members, it is natural to ask what are the best plans to adopt in our present circumstances so as to do that part of the task that our generation is expected to finish?

We are responsible for our share of the task being done so as to prepare the way for the next generation to do its part.

If we shirk our duty now it will add to the labors of the next generation. Many will be denied the light of life, and it will delay the success of the Kingdom.

Evasion of military duty in the war brought heavy penalty. What of Christians who fail to keep their church vows, obey not the Christ?

Some plans will be suggested later.

WITH THE ANNUAL CONFERENCES.

By Rev. Crates S. Johnson, Forward Movement Secrtary.

Laymen Rally to the Support of Superannuates.

In two annual conferences visited this fall by the Forward Movement secretary definite steps were taken on the initiative of lay representatives toward providing a better support for superannuated ministers. A committee of laymen in the Indiana conference had worked out during the year the constitution and by-laws of a new Prechers' Aid Society which shall be managed and promoted largely by the laymen themselves, supplementing the already existing Preacher's Aid Society whose management is largely in the hands of the ministers. The report of the committee was received with enthusiasm and the proposed constitution and by-laws were adopted unanimously, and the officers of the new organization, headed by the chief organizer, Mr. Charles Boxell, will proceed at once with an educational program seeking to acquaint the people with the case of the superannuate and to enlist them in building up a capital fund adequate for the needs of those who are likely to become claimants. The total receipts of the Preachers' Aid Society for the year ending 1929 were $3,629 24, which included two per cent. of the salaries of the ministers. Six ministers and three widows received during the year $2,229.92. The Society had in its permanent fund $11,459.85. The constitution of the new Preachers' Aid Society provides for the absorption of the original organization at any time conference may determine.

The example of the Indiana Conference was cited at the Michigan conference and immediately the suggestion "took" with the lay representatives. A committee, headed by J. E. Kinney of Saginaw, Michigan, was placed in charge of the activities of the year, which will include the visitation of all district meetings by a publicity committee, seeking to enlist the people in the cause of the superannuate. The Michigan conference has two societies for the relief of worn-out ministers: the Superannuate Board, whose permanent fund in 1920 amounted to $6,024.33, and the Preachers' Aid Society, whose permanent fund in the same year amounted to $3,953.36. The latter is almost independent of the annual conference and is made up of those who have given their note for at least $5, said notes bearing seven per cent interest, payable annually. Both societies distributed last year $755 to seventeen beneficiaries

The Ohio Conference reported a permanent fund of $63,179 40. During the year ending July 1, 1921, $3,191.34 had been distributed to 42 beneficiaries, 27 of whom were women. In some instances the amounts have been distressingly small and efforts will be made during the year to supplement these meager offerings to meet the exigencies of certain cases. The conference is looking toward a capital fund of $300,000. and as soon as conditions are propitious an effort will be made to secure a portion of this sum.

BENNY COON.

When the forester very softly opened the door of his little house in the big forest, he wasn't at all surprised to see the little boy waiting there by the fire. He knew exactly what he was waiting for, too—always the same thing—a story. And the boy would tease and tease until he got it. But this time the forester wasn't going to let him tease. No, indeed. He'd give the small boy the surprise of his young life.

So he didn't say, “Hello!” or “How do you do?” or anything like that. He just tipped quietly up behind the little boy and called out in a very loud voice: “Once upon a time.”

“O!” cried the little boy, jumping up. “How you scared me!”

“Well, I got ahead of you that time, anyway,” said the forester, chuckling. “Once upon a time there was a raccoon.”

“Is that the same as a coon?” asked the little boy.

“It certainly is. In fact, the raccoon's name was Benny Coon. And one day he was trying very hard to go to sleep in his own little bed, high up in a hollow branch of a tree; but he couldn't seem to manage it at all. At last he thought: I know what's the matter. I must be hungry! If I could only get some berries or nuts or fish or—or some grasshoppers'—Yes, grasshoppers! Yes, grasshoppers! That's what he wanted. His mouth began to water, and he stuck his head right out of his house. But the sun was shining—and he pulled it right back again.”

“Why did he do that?” asked the little boy.

“O, coons don't like the sunlight—not one little bit,” answered the forester. “They sleep all day and come out only at night. That's why Benny Coon just wished the sun would go under a cloud, so he could get those grasshoppers. And pretty soon the clouds did roll up and cover the sun; and then there sounded a big old rumbling noise.

“‘Thunder,’ Benny Coon cried joyfully. Then he looked out; and when he saw how lovely and dark it was getting—almost as dark as moonlight—he just scurried down that tree and, in no time at all caught three fine, juicy grasshoppers. ‘This surely is my lucky day,’ thought he, as he went over to the river to wash the grasshoppers.”

“To wash them!” exclaimed the little boy. “Why did he do that?”

“Oh,” said the man, “no raccoon would ever think of eating anything without washing it first—any more than your Aunt Caroline would. And you know how careful she is.”

“Well,” he continued, “Benny went over to the river and splashed the grasshoppers around in the water until they were quite clean. Then, because the water felt so nice and cool and Benny loved water, he gave them one big extra splash.

“But that was one splash too many. A saucy little fish slipped up, snatched those grasshoppers and was off like a silver streak in the water—with Benny Coon after him, of course. How angry Benny was, and how he did swim! Under water, too! Never mind, he'd get that fish—with the grasshoppers inside; just see if he wouldn't! He was close upon him, too, when they whirled swiftly around a big rock. Then what do you think happened? The little fish swam straight into the open jaws of a big fish! And Benny was going so fast he couldn't stop, and in he went, too! Not all of him went in, however—just the tip of his nose—and he pulled that out before those awful jaws could close.

“Then maybe he didn't swim! The water all around him splashed high in the air like very lively fountains. Splash, splash, splash! He reached the bank and scrambled up its side, pulling his tail in after him with a mighty jerk. He could almost feel those awful jaws starting to bite it off! Then, running far back from the water, he climbed a tall tree.

“Now at last he felt safe. Gracious goodness sakes alive! What an escape, what an escape! he kept thinking, as he lay there and panted and panted, and then panted some more.

“‘It must have been a shark come way down from the river,’ thought Benny, ‘and it's an awful wonder that I'm not being eaten up this very minute, 'long with that saucy little fish and those grasshoppers. I must be pretty smart to have got away! This surely is my lucky day, after all.’

“So thinking, Benny began to feel more cheerful; the scared look left his eyes, and his usual expression of mischief and cunning returned to his face. Shaking off the water, he looked around to see if he was all right. Yes, his grayish white fur seemed to be all there; every ring on his long, bushy tail was safe, too—he counted them carefully to make sure (you see, his tail had been very near the shark).

“‘No great harm done, after all,’ said Benny. ‘I'll just run along home now and have a good day's sleep and forget. But right here Benny's eyes flew wide open with a jerk, and he gave a surprised squeal.”

“Did he see the shark?” asked the little boy excitedly.

“No,' said the forester, “but he discovered something else; he saw that he had come up on the wrong side of the river. Think of that! His nice, comfortable bed was on the other side; and nothing in all the world could make him cross that awful water again.

“Well, poor Benny felt just like lying down and giving up altogether. But he didn't. He knew that he must find a safe place to sleep in. So tired as he was, he climbed tree after tree, in search of a nice, comfortable hole. And it was a very long time, too, before he found one that didn't already have some one in it. But finally—because it was his lucky day, I suppose—he found a nice hole in a dead branch of a tree. With a big sigh he settled down in it, all ready for a nice, long sleep.”

Here the boy gave a sigh of relief, too.

“O, ho,” said the forester. “You think Benny's troubles are over? Just you wait and see!”

“Why, what happened next?”

“What happened next! A man with an ax happened next; that's what. He came along looking hard at the very tree in which Benny was sleeping so peacefully. He lifted his ax and was just going to give it an awful whack—when he happened to notice the dead branch on it. ‘This can't be a very good tree,’ he said. So he chose the next tree to it. Bang, whack—bang whack! How the chips flew, and what a noise it all did make! But it didn't wake Benny—he was so very sound asleep.

“Finally the great tree came to the ground, and, alas, so did Benny! As the tree fell it hit the dry branch in which he was sleeping so comfortably; and down it came. And this really did waken Benny. It hurt his foot besides, and, well, he just naturally began to cry. He sounded very much like a real baby crying, and the man rushed over in great alarm; but when he saw it was only a coon, he said: ‘Never mind, little coon. Soon you'll be a nice stew and a soon skin cap—and then your foot won't hurt you any more.’

“Then he picked Benny up and carried him home. When his little daughter saw Benny, who had stopped crying and was curled up in a ball licking his sore foot, she said: ‘What you got there?’

“‘Why, this is a nice stew and a coonskin cap,’ said the man as he held up poor Benny.

“‘O, no, dad! We've got a lovely chicken stew for supper, and you won't need a cap till next winter, and I—I want a pet right now.’ So that settled it; and they all three had chicken stew for supper.

“After a while Benny's foot got well, and he stayed with the little girl for several months. But one day he ran away, bravely swam the river and went back to his old home again.”

“Didn't he like the little girl?” asked the small boy.

“O, yes, he liked the little girl all right!”

“Why did he go away, then?” said the little boy.

“Well, I don't know for sure,” said the forester, as he ended. “But I think maybe eBnny had been mischievous—stolen a chicken, perhaps, or some nice ripe corn. And, well, he thought it would be safer to get away. You see, winter was coming on, and the man decide to have that coonskin cap, after all.”—Robin Greentree, in the Continent.

TWO SEEDS.

I hid a selfish little thought,
  To think and think about,
I did not know it would be caught,
  Or ever be found out,
But it was like a little seed,
  And it began to sprout!
It grew into a little weed,
  And blossomed in a pout!

I hid another little thought,
  'Twas pleasant, sweet, and kind;
So, if this time it should be caught,
  I knew I shouldn't mind.
I thought about it, hour by hour,
  'Twas growing all the while,
It blossomed in a lovely flower,
  A happy little smile!

NOTES.

—More garages than dwellings were built during 1920 in the United States.

—July, 1921, was the dryest July experienced in England for more than 100 years.

—Welding cable on bridges three hundred feet above the ground is the work of a Jersey City woman. She is the mother of two children and earns $30 a day at her work.

—Jumping into a partly filled silo instead of using a ladder caused the death of a farmer living in Nebraska. He was overcome by gas and died before rescuers arrived.

—Red snow is an added attraction to the wonders of Rocky Mountain aPrk in Colorado. Countless billions of tiny organisms that reproduce in the cold environment are responsible, according to government experts. The coloration is more intensive a qarter of an inch below the surface and streaks often red as blood have a sweetish taste. Scientists believe that the spores may have been brought down from the Arctic by the Chinook winds.

—College courses on transportation are suggested by a prominent railroad operating official, who believes that the colleges might well turn their attention to the development of courses in railroading, treating it as a scientific study compared to medicine, engineering and law.

—Steam shovels will begin demolishing the Cahokia Mounds near East St. Louis soon unless the state or some historical society purchases them. These relics are the last evidence of prehistoric Indian culture of the United States. There are 64 in number, the largest covering 16 acres.

—Snapshots of Mars, as if the planet were but a mile and a half away, are promised in 1924 by an American scientist, collaborating with a prominent American astronomer. Professor Todd, astronomer, has found a mine shaft at Chanaral, Chile, the shaft of which will be used as the barrel of the telescope. Mars will be at its zenith over this shaft several times in 1924.

—The intelligence of a setter dog saved a French alpinist from certain death when he fell over a precipice, breaking his legs. Unable to move he wrote a message to his wife and fastened it to the dog's collar. The dog rushed home and six hours later help arrived, the dog leading the way.

—"Court convenes at 9:30." This sign, conspicuously posted on several streets leading into Quincy, Massachusetts, is the police chief's warning to motorists of the danger of fast driving.

—Living in a copper horse is one way three Germans of Coblenz solved their housing problem until the city authorities caught them at it. They gained entrance to the inside of the giant figure of a horse bearing the statue of William I, by discovering a loose copper plate on one side. They had installed a bed and laid in a supply of choice wines and provisions.

—Auto tubes dropped from an airplane saved the lives of three young women who were struggling in the surf at Hampton Beach, New Hampshire. Life guards were beaten back in their efforts to reach the bathers when the aviator and his mechanic flew over them and dropped the inflated tubes within reach. They clung to the tubes until the guards reached them.

—Hot water gushed from a well driven near Sebring, Florida, and is coming to the surface at the rate of 40 gallons a minute. The flow has maintained an even temperature of 130 degrees and shows no signs of abating. This is the second hot water well brought in in Florida, one having been drilled at Pensacola about 20 years ago. The first well ceased to flow when the drill broke through rock and diverted the water into a subterranean lake.

—The present Duke of York, second son of King George, is a student at Oxford University. This summer he invited 400 boys to spend a week as his guests at an outdoor camp in Kent. Half of them were schoolboys of well-to-do families. The other half were working boys from shops and factories. The week was spent in sports and games. Getting together, the Duke thought, would give each group of boys a chance to know and appreciate the other. A few invitations like this might lead to a friendlier feeling between rich and poor in England.

—Serbia is now a part of the new state of Jugo-Slavia. The people of the whole state, including the Serbs, Croats, Slovenes and others, are subject to King Alexander.

—All records for the exporting of wheat were broken in August. About fifty million bushels were shipped abroad, including eight million to Canada. October, 1920, had previously held the high record. Then about forty-three million bushels were exported. There is great demand for our wheat in Europe. Formerly Europe bought much of its wheat from Russia.

—Sea-snakes are found in the Indian Ocean and in the warmer regions of the Pacific. The most common variety is about a yard long, yellow and green in color. Sea-snakes have flattened tails, with which they swim. They are somewhat like the poisonous adders of the land. This indicates that they may may be a branch of the adder family.

—A new fuel much used in Germany is tetraline. It is extracted from coke, which is made from coal. This new fuel is expected to take the place of gasoline for automobiles. As Germany has immense coal fields, tetraline can be produced in large quantities.

—The famous explorer, Sir Ernest Shackleton, is off for another voyage to the far southern seas. This time he has a ship built by his own orders, and expected to withstand the roughest of weather and the thickest of ice. Supplies for two years are on board.

—A great chemical plant at Oppau, Germany, was wrecked by an explosion. More than 800 people were killed and 2500 others were injured. Every window pane in a town three miles away was broken. The shock was felt 50 miles away.

UNSAFE FLUES.

Why will people continue to use terra-cotta and brick-on-edge flues? They appear to think they will not start fires. Just the same, they will burn them out.

As the old saying goes, "You may put it in your pipe and smoke it." Sooner or later, the brick-on-edge and terra-cotta flue will produce the smoke—burn your house or business.

Statistics show that in past years in North Carolina unsafe chimney flues and stovepipes caused 26 per cent of the fire loss—annually over $700,000. Say you don't believe it? Just the same, it is true.

Are your flues safe? Have you any brick-on-edge or terra-cotta flues? If so, cut them out now. Don't wait! It is dangerous.—Insurance Department, Raleigh, N. C.

"I'm sorry, young man," said the druggist, as he eyed the small boy over the counter, "but I can only give you half as much castor oil for a dime as I used to."

The boy blithely handed him the coin. "I'm not kicking," he remarked. "The stuff's for me."—Watchman-Examiner.

WHEN TO THANK GOD.

Can we be as thankful for a promise as for the fulfilment of the promise? Yes, if we trust the one who promises. Suppose a wealthy friend, in whom we have entire confidence, tells us that because he knows we have a financial obligation to meet on a certain date he will, just before the obliagtion falls due, give us more than enough money to meet it. Do we thank him then, or do we wait until after he has paid over the money? God has promised us personally to supply all our need. Whenever a need comes into view, do we thank God in advance, or do we keep Him waiting until after he has "made good" and then thank Him? "'Lacked ye anything?' said the Lord to the seventy, who had been sent out without any worldly emoluments, and they answered, "No, Lord." Suppose we thank God now for His abundant meeting of that need that lies ahead.—Sunday School Times.

NOTES OF CONFERENCE.

The editor reached Concord Thursday night. He found the church darkened and an illustrated lecture going on. The house was crowded, some standing in aisles. The pictures showed scenes in Japan and China to inform concerning our missionary work. This was the ladies' evening and Mrs. Geo. R. Brown, Mrs. J. F. McCulloch, and Mrs. W. C. Hammer, aided by Rev. A. G Dixon and H. A. [illegible] The [illegible] missionary work at our Children's Home, in the Pine Ridge, Ky., school, and the Pittsburgh mission work among foreigners, was briefly described.

Business of Conference had progressed well. Rev. R. M. Andrews had been elected president, Rev. C. W. Bates secretary, and the president and Bro. L. L. Wrenn stationing committee. It had been decided as a rule of the Conference that the president should be a member of the stationing committee, also the retiring president when there is one. One layman elected for the purpose completes the committee. This is Bro. Wrenn's second term on the Stationing Committee.

We were sorry to be too late to meet and hear Dr. Wilbur and Dr. Miller, representing General Conference interests. Dr. Wilbur, fresh from travel, had a very interesting story to tell about the Armenians. He urged that we lend a hand to them in this their time of great need and peril.

Dr. Benson, Dr. C. S. Johnson, and Dr. Elderdice came later and spoke in behalf of the important interests they represent, while Dr. Dixon was a regular attendant, taking his usual part in the business of Conference. Dr. Harper, of Elon College, was present by invitation and made a pleasing address on Friday night.

Much time was taken up in the routine work of hearing pastor's reports of their work. There is difference of opinion as to the propriety of spending so much time in this way, but the majority thought it time well spent, even when time is limited.

The Interchurch World Movement was advocated by Dr. Ramsey, of Raleigh a state organizer, and by a Baptist minister, of Charlotte. Our Conference voted for co-operation in this movement and appointed representatives to attend a conference in Raleigh We expect to publish later further information regarding this conference, giving the names or offices of those appointed to represent our church.

Report of committees came in rapidly on Friday and Saturday and were acted on; in most cases adopted without change. The committee on Sabbath Observance called forth prolonged discussion and their report was recommitted. In its changed form it was unanimously adopted.

The report on Pastoral Wrok was so happily framed and struck the Conference so favorably as read by Dr. T. M. Johnson that it was ordered published in the Herald. See it elsewhere in this issue.

Among the new steps taken was the decision to establish a school of methods for church work, in conjunction with the Young People's Union. This is expected to materialize this year.

Letters were received from Revs. [illegible] Williams and W. F. McDowell. Rev C. H. Whitaker was kept from most of the session by an injury to his son in an automobile wreck. The young man is better and his recovery is looked for.

A resolution was introduced and we thought rather hastily passed instructing our representatives in the next General Conference to use their best endeavors to combine the secretaryships of Home Missions and Foreign Missions; also of the Board of Education and the Board of Young People's Work; and to abolish the secretaryship of the Forward Movement. These are very important matters and should be thoroughly discussed before final action is taken.

Bro. J. F. Barrett, of Asheville, editor of the Asheville Advocate, and a leader of organized labor, made a brief address, appealing to the church to exert its influence to harmonize the discordant elements in the economic world by bringing all to observe the golden rule. Only the Christian church, he thinks, can mediate between the two groups into which men have been divided by the natural process of invention of machinery, division of labor, and organization of industry How much better it is to turn to the Christian church for counsel and inspiration than to turn to atheistic socialists and anarchists. The spirit Bro. Barrett manifests we hope will be caught by other labor leaders. How foolish it is for men to allow their harmony in great matters to be disturbed by differences of opinion about small matters. "We be brethren," and no differences of occupation should be allowed to obscure this fact. We all have a common inheritance in the grace of God so great as to make of small importance the difference between the millionaire and the pauper. Let us take stock of our riches in Christ Jesus and we will just naturally cease to be grasping and contentious in regard to material things. We will be disposed to give more than is due. Bro. Johnson stated that Bro. Barrett had been employed by the federal government to adjust differences in industrial matters and had been so successful as to receive the special commendation of the nation's chief executive. He and his father are members of our Asheville church.

Another forward step was the appointment of a committee on Evangelism. The Increase Campaign calls for well-planned and concerted action. This committee may promote this work.

The president's report touched upon so many points of general interest that the Conference voted that 10,000 copies of it be printed for distribution.

This is the year for the election of delegates to the General Conference. The following were elected, the vote being by orders, each one chosen receiving a majority of the votes of ministers and laymen voting separately:

Ministers: R. M. Andrews, J. D. Williams, C. A. Cecil, T. M. Johnson, C. L. Whitaker, S. W. Taylor, G. W. Holmes, A. G. Dixon, C. W. Bates, C. E. Forlines, N. G. Bethea, J. F. McCulloch.

Laymen: J. Norman Wills, V. W. Idol, L. L. Wrenn, H. A. Garrett, A. M. Rankin, A. H. Evans, W. R. Goley, R. F. Williams, S. C Whitaker, A. J. Harris, Wiley Ward, J. M. Millikan.

Alternates were elected as follows:

Ministers: H. L. Powell, J. E. Pritchard, J. H. Moton.

Laymen: C. P. Younginer, A. B. Schlichter, J. M. Cutchin.

The Conference accepted the General Conference apportionment and adopted a rule for apportioning it to our various charges. Among our own Conference enterprises, Church Extension calls for $8,000, and this is included in the Conference Budget. According to the new rule, 40 per cent. of pastor's salary in stations, 35 per cent. on circuits, and 20 per cent. on missions will, it is calculated, completely cover the budget.

Four preachers were ordained as elders: Bros. J. W. Hulin, J. B. Trogdon, J. M. Morgan, and N. M. Harrison. Rev. J. D. Williams preached the ordination sermon on Sunday at 11 o'clock He spoke of the Model Sermon, presenting in a striking way the essential elements, including the character of the preacher and the mood of the congregation, and made a fine impression upon the congregation as well as upon the men ordained.

We did not hear the Conference Sermon by Rev. J. E. Pritchard, but heard good report of it.

Sunday afternoon a meeting was held under the auspices of the Young People's Union, addressed by Rev. A. G. Dixon, Secretary of Young People's Work, and others.

The Concord church choir helped much by their singing. The organist is Mr. Benson, who is also teacher of the Baraca class. His help to the church is highly appreciated.

The entertainment of Conference was ample. The editor had one of the best homes—that of Bro. J. M. Blackwelder, formerly of Asheville. He and his wife and four children all contributed to our entertainment and will be pleasantly remembered by us. The oldest daughter, Miss Cordelle, is teaching nine miles away, but came home for the week-end. Miss Ethel and Masters Marvin and James, Jr, are the other children, all bright and interesting. Bro. Holmes and Bro. Fogleman were our fellow-guests, and we thoroughly enjoyed our association with them in this good home. Bro. Roy Schreyer, of Asheville, a fellow guest in Liberty years ago, and our kind host at the Asheville Conference, was thrown with us again in the home of Bro. Blackwelder.

PASTORAL WORK.

It is only the field that has a preacher who visits that really has a pastor. The field whose preacher visits less than he should does not have a whole pastor. If there is a field whose preacher does not visit at all, that field has no pastor at all. If the preacher is to lead his people into better living and in church work he must go where they are. He cannot become all things to all men at a distance. It is personal contact that starts the people going in the direction the preacher is going.

Then, too, it is through personal contact that the preacher's personality has its best chance to be felt. Even if it were not so, the sermon seems better to the people who have felt the power of the personality of the pracher through personal contact. But as a matter of fact, the sermon is really better when the life of the preacher has touched the life of the people and both have been quickened. The people like the sermon because they like the man who preached it and they like the man because he visited them.

The pastor should visit with a purpose. He may simply gad about from house to house and call it pastoral visiting. He may visit so idly that the police would be justified in taking him up for vagrancy, not that he doesn't keep moving but he moves to no purpose. He should go after something and fetch it. He should go to take something and deliver the goods. One Christian business man meets his pastor's calls at his store or by phone by saying: "What can I do for you?" If that pastor is shrewd he names in response both an article of merchandise and an act of church work and gets both. No better opportunity than when making pastoral calls to talk over with members of the church and members of official boards the plans and work of the church, or the matter of subscribing to the church papers, or the revival, or the prayer meeting. He should also look carefully after the aged, or any that are afflicted, or any that are in trouble. And the people should always report to the pastor all such. If the members do not report to the pastor in case of sickness among the people, it is the failure of the people rather than of the pastor who did not know and had no way of knowing of the sickness. As soon expect the doctor to find out and come without being informed as to expect the preacher to find out and come without being informed.

TRAVELING BY STEAM AND ELECTRICITY.

On the splendid Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad we have come from Chicago to Harlowton, Montana, a distance of 1335 miles by steam power, and now for a distance of 440 miles the road is electrically operated, and 217 more miles are now under construction.

That indicates that the motive power once the marvel of the world, and by many deemed to be the permanent reliance of mankind, will ere long be displaced in many spheres where it reigned supreme. Just so is it clear that the hoary systems of faith of Far Eastern peoples will yield to the glorious Gospel of the Son of God, and thereby men of all conditions be vastly endowed and empowered to live and achieve in a world blessed with truth, love and righteousness.

No greater privilege can come to any of us than to share in leading the nations out of the darkness that has impeded progress, the errors that have bound them to evil and cruel customs, the superstition that has hid God from them and the traditions that have closed to them the forces of righteousness that make for spiritual and temporal salvation.

The signal honor conferred upon Brother Broomfield and me in being authorized by the Board of Foreign Missions to visit its three missions abroad is duly appreciated, but the privilege afforded in helping to thoroughly comprehend all their diversified interests, and to help plan for their proper equipment and enlargement constitutes a grave responsibility which grows upon us as we get nearer to the scenes of our labor, and again we plead for the prayers of the whole church for Divine wisdom and guidance in all our deliberations and decisions.

The gradual awakening of our church to its missionary obligation as shown by increased income, and the added help of the Million Dollar Campaign gives assurance that adequate support will be given for the development of our enterprise following the adoption of our plans necessitated by the need and opportunity for greater service among the needy peoples of the Far East.

The regular sources of the Board's income must be maintained, because the demand for land and buildings, equipment and new missionaries, etc., and what must be placed in the Permanent Fund, will largely absorb the Board's share of the Campaign receipts. In anticipation of the growth of the work and consequent demand for larger receipts, and also to meet increasing current expenses, the Board added the Christmas appeal as a part of its financial plans, and received the General Conference's approval thereof, and it has proved quite a factor in its work.

There is still urgent need for this apepal, and it goes forth to all our Sunday schools and our people generally again this year with full authority for making it and in full hope of a generous response thereto.

We need to emphasize the true idea of Christmas in a practical way, and enlist the young in our foreign misionary work in the spirit of Christ, and at his command.

Fred C. Klein, Corresponding Secretary.

WHY A WORLD PROHIBITION MOVEMENT NOW?

Some of our most intelligent people do not seem to grasp the idea of a World Movement for Prohibition and Law Enforcement campaign at this particular time.

This is the time of all times for such a campaign. The great Baptist church is raising seventy-five millions for church extension. The great Methodist church is raising its great Centenary fund, the Presbyterian, the Reformed, the Lutheran, Episcopal and all of the leading denominations are raising great sums of money for larger things in the life of the church.

The World Prohibition Movement means that these large sums of money raised by the various churches shall accomplish greater results than it would be possible to obtain without this movement.

The breweries and liquor forces have been outlawed in the United States and they are seeking other fields to carry on their nefarious business.

Recently we heard of a brewery corporation going to a foreign field to invest two million dollars to carry on the business that they carried on here until driven out by the laws of this land.

In these lands we are spending our money to send misionaries to preach the gospel to those people—and the breweries are sending their millions to hinder the work of the church.

The World Movement for Prohibition means that these missionaries shall have an organization working side by side with them to create public sentiment for temperance and start movements in these countries for legislation that will promote temperance and sobriety there as we have done in the United States.

The law enforcement branch of this work needs no special explanation in many places in North Carolina, as we have illustration of the need of arousing public sentiment.

Of the one hundred sheriffs in North Carolina, many of them are indifferent as to the enforcement of the temperance laws—some of them are in actual sympathy with the violators of the liquor laws.

Public sentiment in North Carolina must be made so strong that every sheriff, and every deputy sheriff will be compelled to do their duty. The same thing must be made to apply to the federal officers as well as the county officers.

Campaigns of a local nature are being waged in some counties at this very time—especially one vigorous one in Catawba county. Sunday schools, churches, clubs and the various organizations are passing resolutions and taking action to break up the liquor traffic.

The state campaign now being organized ought to appeal to all of our people for the two chief reasons as given above—that is, to make the money that is spent by the churches accomplish the most possible, and to make our own state a place where law and order reigns supreme—two objects worthy of the efforts and of the money of every true North Carolinian.

REVIVALS.

The campaign for a twenty-five per cent. increase in church membership would make this subject apropos even if present-day conditions and methods did not justify it. I have been very much struck with the difference between a conversion of twenty years ago and one of these days. Then a man who had been soaked in sin for years would sometimes pray a week before he was converted. Frequently they could hardly be persuaded to quit long enough to eat luncheon. When they were converted one could see the difference in the countenance. It would show in their faces sometimes a whole week. Nowadays a fellow will slip down to the preacher and give him his hand, without bringing both feet up to a standing position, and begin to pull away from the preacher before anybody could notice who he is. There is no difference of countenance and frequently no difference of life. Whether it is advantageous to the church or to the individual, to increase the membership in this way, is a serious question. I am sure that some are led to better living; but I am also sure that many are just as mean as they were before, and some get worse every day. There is some serious defect in the preaching or method when this state of things is so general. Church membership adds nothing to one's reputation for truth or honesty or kindly feeling. Some of the meanest, most selfish, most obstinate, most quarrelsome people I know are in the church; and everybody knows they are going just as straight to perdition as the "broad road" will lead them.

I do not think it is necessary to pray a week, or a day, or an hour even or to go forward at all as to that; but I do feel sure that no one is saved, who is not willing to be seen and recognized in his effort for salvation. Nobody would join the masons that way; and the church is better than masonry.

Men ought to be told that they must not only be determined to forsake their sins but must also be determined to live a righteous life. Whatever is necessary to bring that determination is absolutely essential to conversion. A twenty-five per cent. increase in membership without this much of a conversion is worse than nothing. S. R. Harris.

PRESIDENT'S LETTER.

GREETINGS—

Dear Fellow Workers: This week we begin the work of a new year. We worked well together in the year just closed. More money was raised for all purposes than ever before. There was a substantial increase in church membership, a very large number of our churches paid every cent of every claim, forty pastoral charges promised an increase for pastoral support for the coming year. A keen sense of hopefulness pervaded our annual sessions and your leaders who were there rejoice in what appears to be the dawning of a day of glorious achievement for our beloved Zion.

In behalf of your new pastor and your old pastor, your president sends greetings to you all. It may be two or three weeks before you will see him, but remember that you are not forgotten by your shepherd. He prays for you even in the toils and arduous labor of moving, and if he is detained and prevented from being with you on the appointed day, be sure that his prayers go up to the throne of grace in your behalf.

Therefore, my beloved brethren and sisters receive your pastor as one sent to you as by the Lord One who has been consecrated to his services, who gladly lays aside all things for the cause of Christ. He may not be the man you expected to receive from this conference, but that does not imply that he is not the very man who can help you most. Pray for him; if you know his frailties, pray that these shall be forgot by you and all who, like you, know them, that you may only remember we are here to work, to pray, to lift heavy burdens and carry the battle line just a little further into the enemy country before the bugle calls.

WHO STATIONS THE PREACHERS?

There seems to be some misapprehension as to this matter. The Discipline says the annual conference shall station the preachers. This has been only partially accepted; accepted only when a pastoral charge desires a change of pastors and wishes the assistance of the Annual Conference. When such a charge sends a delegate to the conference, the stationing committee is entreated to aid said delegate to secure the right man. But when the pastoral charge is well satisfied with the pastor who has served it—that is an entirely different matter; that charge not only tells all that the pastor in question has just accomplished, but also informs the committee that it is quite ephemeral; a sort of mushroom growth, a veritable Jonah's gourd affair, for if that pastor is moved it will collapse at once. God had nothing to do with that work, it was all man's work. It has the finger prints of a particular hand upon it, a differently shaped hand with less tapering fingers, a hand in which the mound of the moon is less pronounced, one in which the line of luck is slightly broken—such a hand would mar the work so well begun and destroy all future prospect of doing work for God in that part of the moral vineyard.

Beloved, is it true? Your president recognizes the fact that some men are better suited for certain fields of labor than for certain other fields of labor, that the kind of work which needs to be done in certain places at certain periods require the direction and leadership of men of certain peculiar characteristics.

But any man a wise stationing committee would send to your field of labor would do a good year's work, if only you will permit him to do it. Your president beseeches you in the name of our Christ, before whom we shall all stand and give an account in the last day, do not hinder your pastor. Guard your every word, let no hint of depreciation fall from your lips. If he appear not to be the best man or the man best suited for your work, co-operate with him, pray for him earnestly, daily, assist him in every way until next November and then when his work is reviewed, if he has failed, the failure will not be yours.

A SUGGESTION—

That hereafter we regard the appointments made by the Annual Conference as being made for only one year. They may be renewed for an indefinite number of years. But if the conditions of any other charge requires the services of your pastor to work out,—be generous, be a real Methodist Protestant, be thankful that you have had the services of such a man for a time, and be willing to allow those who need him, to have his assistance in solving their difficult situations. Therefore when your pastor leaves you, starting for conference, if he has done a good work, tell him, if you would to have him return tell him so, but also tell him you desire to see the entire church prosper, so if he is needed worse somewhere else than on your work, you will love him, pray for him just the same, but you will also learn to love his successor and pray for him as you prayed for his predecessor.

A CHANGE IN THE BASIS OF CONFERENCE ASSESSMENTS—

Instead of accepting the old assessments for general claims use the following:

All interests are put into a budget. This budget or the amount of this budget for your charge is fixed by the following rule. If you are a circuit or group of churches, raise 35 per cent. of the pastor's salary for all claims, conference journal, superannuates, president's salary, missions, etc.; if your church or charge is a mission point, raise 20 per cent.. of the amount you pay your pastor; if your church is a station, then raise 40 per cent. of your pastor's salary for these claims. This simplifies the matter, and puts the charges of like character into the same class to avoid what might in a manner appear to be a discrimination.

EIGHT THOUSAND THIS YEAR FOR CHURCH EXTENSION—

We have set out this year to raise this amount for church extension. We could wisely spend this amount for this important part of the work of our church. Remember that that part of your contribution for conference claims goes to this splendid local work in our conference. Also we are this year endeavoring to raise every cent of the assessment for missions and education asked of us by our National Executive Committee. We never undertook to do this before. Let's do it this year.

GOALS FOR 1920—

I want to set before you the goals of last year. We did not reach them, but we came nearer. Many churches did reach the goal for finances. Let us increase the number of family altars in our conference, not quite one hundred new ones were reported for the year just closed. We ought to report one thousand for 1920. A revival in every church a church paper in every home, a Sunday school in every church; every school supporting the Children's Home; every cent of every assessment by the tenth day of November, 1920. We have the right of way, no red flags in the way. Let's keep out of the sidings, get up enough power to pull the steep up-grades before us, and surely we shall enter the grand central station on time.

Praying that the health of all our people may be preserved, that no epidemics may sweep the land, that material prosperity may visit all those who welcome it, and that there shall be a gracious outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon all His people, I am, sincerely yours, R. M. Andrews.

A FAITH THAT CANNOT KNOW DEFEAT.

(An Interpretation of the Undaunted Faith of the American Nation in the Triumph of Law and Love and in the Coming of Peace among Nations and Brotherhood among Men.)

By Wilbur Fisk Tillett.

I. The War of Love 'gainst Love of War.

Because God called, and clear his voice,
And duty left no other choice;
Because 'twas love that led us in,
Men's wrongs to right, men's rights to win,
And sent our flag to fields afar
In war of love 'gainst love of war;
Because no selfish end we've sought;
Because for weak 'gainst strong we've wrought;
Because for world-wide peace we've fought,
Nor ever counted price or cost
In sacrifice or treasures lost,
But, with full might, for all that's right,
Against all wrong, we still shall fight,—

We dare believe that glad new day
Will come, for which we fight and pray,
And Angels long Amen to say,
When for their crimes men make amends,
When hates all cease, and all war ends,
And those long foes shall all be friends.

For faith can never know defeat
That has in war of love its seat!

II. The War of Love for Love of Law.

Because all law we hold in awe,
In war of love 'gainst breach of law
Our nation its stern duty saw—
For wars of love 'gainst wars of hate
In law's defense are just and great;
Because no man to man is true—
And this is law for nations, too—
Who dares the reign of law decry,
And laws of God and man defy;
Because Jehovah hath decreed
That earth's oppressed ones shall be freed,
And nations who obey his will
Have sworn his word quick to fulfill,—
We dare believe the day has come
When law-defying kings are dumb,
And anarchy, where'er it reigns,
Law-loving men shall bind in chains;
When men shall righteous laws obey, needn't come down to dinner unless you want to, dear. You were up ever so early. You can go to bed if you like, and I'll bring up a tray."

But Betty shook her head. "Mom," she said, "I want to do the dishes to-night."

"Anyway, I had a vacation," laughed Bob, when he heard of the change. "But you bet I don't like dishwashing, sis! I'd rather do errands."

"It's not the work, but the spirit in which you do it," explained mom. "Everything's hard if you meet it with a grumble. As far as I can see we wouldn't any of us choose to do disagreeable things, but we all have our small share of tasks that help to make this home."—Patten Beard, in The Continent.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

Friendship, Haw River Circuit.—Rather than disappoint our pastor and church I had better get busy on my new job and send in my little report.

We people over here at Friendship are quite alive yet and haven't gone into winter quarters; no, and we do not aim to, either. We have a very good Sunday school. I am so thankful to see so many fathers and mothers who come and bring their whole families. This is a great encouragement to superintendent and teachers, and it is just what it takes to make our Sunday school what it should be.

Bro. Swain gave us a splendid sermon Sunday morning—though we never expect anything else. It was his last sermon of this conference year; but, to be sure, our people do not want it to be his last one here, for we are sure expecting him back next year.

We are very sorry that Mrs. Swain is sick. Hope she will soon recover.

Miss Jennie Gordon, one of our members and also a teacher, has been confined to her home for several weeks on account of rheumatism. We miss her very much, and our prayer is that she and Mrs. Swain both may soon be well.

We are planning for a Christmas exercise. Hope we shall be successful.

Roseneath, Roanoke Charge.—We again met at Roseneath this afternoon, November 16, at the usual hour to hear our much beloved pastor, Rev. R. C. Stubbins. He as usual gave us a mighty interesting sermon and I think I might safely say one of the best that ever fell from any minister's lips. It was so helpful and impressive. His subject was, "Awake, thou that sleepest." Our congrefation was fairly good; and what seemed to impress me especially and I suppose did all others was, it was our pastor's last appointment for this conference year. But we are sincerely hoping and praying that we may be blessed with having our same pastor with us another year. We are very glad to be able to report that we have paid up all our conference claims.

Joseph Gray.

Philadelphia, Greensville Circuit.—Sunday night was our last service before conference. Brother Morgan preached a fine sermon. I certainly do wish more could have heard him. We had a right good congregation. I am mighty afraid we are not going to get our good pastor back again, he having now been with us four years. He feels mighty close to us and we have learned to love him, and all that do not, I am sure the fault is in them, not the pastor; for he has certainly done his duty and if he does not come back, may God bless him and his famimly wherever he may go.

We have paid all our claims and made Brother Morgan a present of a little better than $15. May the Lord help us all to make the coming year a better one, and that we may do more for his cause. Many good wishes to the Herald and its readers.

Mrs. L. R. Pearson.

North Davidson Circuit.—As ordered by the fourth quarterly conference that we have an early conference, I announce it will be held on Saturday before the second Sunday in December, beginning at 11 o'clock at Bethesda. Let all the officials be on hand. Superintendents of Sunday schools will please announce the time and place in their Sunday schools, and get word to all the officials in their respective churches.

I will fill appointments in December as announced on my last round.

C. A. Cecil.

Henderson.—This is the first report from our new reporter. We have closed up the year's work nicely, paying all claims in full, and everybody happy. The last quarterly conference was held on November 12. The conference voted unanimously to ask for Rev. S. W. Taylor to be returned to us for the fifth year, and we were all made glad to have announcement made at our Sunday school last Sunday, that our delegate, Mr. A. J. Harris, together with our superintendent, Mr. T. J. Garrett, had succeeded in bringing him back for another year.

On November 16, the last Sunday in the old conference year, new officers were elected for the church and Sunday school. All old officers were re-elected with some additions to the board of stewards. A canvass was made of the church membership on the afternoon of November 16, to secure pledges for church budget for the new year. These pledges have not been tabulated, but we are hoping that the budget will be subscribed in full. We have raised the pastor's salary from $1800 to $2,000.

We are happy to report the organization of a Christian Endeavor Society. This new organization promises to be of great help and interest. About twenty members have enrolled so far, and we are counting on a number of others to join soon. Officers were elected to serve until January 1, at which time the regular semi-annual election of officers will take place. Miss Ruth Fowler was elected president.

We are also glad to report the organization of a new class in our Sunday school. This class is composed of the young men and young ladies from 16 to 25 years of age. This new class has organized along the line of working classes, with regular officers and committees. Mis Agnes Faulkner is president, and your humble reporter was elected by the class as teacher. We have named the class "Willing Workers" and are expecting to be heard from again.

Saxapahaw Circuit.—Last Sunday was our last service for this conference year, and I feel that a lot of good has been done.

We have elected officers at all churches for next year. Pastor was overpaid for this year, and salary raised for next year to $1,000.

These people are a people that any pastor should be proud of. We have built a barn, dug a well, screened the parsonage, this year, and are now building a smokehouse. The good ladies of Orange Chapel made their pastor a present of $10 last Sunday, which was appreciated very much. On last second Sunday I went to Salem and filled my last apopintment for this year. A good crowd out. After service on going to my buggy, I found it was filled with nice things from these good people. I won't try to name the things received; there was hardly room for Bro. W. A. Lindley and myself to ride home. Many thanks to you one and all for your kindness.

May God's richest blessings rest on each one of the members on Saxapahaw Circuit is the prayer of your pastor.

T. A. Williams.

Charlotte.—Sunday, November 23, was a red letter day for our church. Bro. Stubbins, our former pastor, was with us and preached at the 11 o'clock service. His splendid sermon was enjoyed by a large congregation. We were very glad to have Bro. Stubbins with us. Bro. W. F. Ashburn of Liberty and Mr. Tom Ritchards were also with us. We were also glad to have them with us. Bro. Ashburn preached for us at the evening service. and delivered a good sermon.

At three o'clock Dr. Ernest Vernon Claypool of Pravidence, R. I., one of the National World Prohibition workers, gave us a splendid message from the subject, Greatness Gained by World Work.

Our church lost a good friend in the death of Mr. Hoke McCall, which occurred Saturday, November 16. He was not a member of our church, but of Fairview Methodist Protestant church. His relatives are members of our church. He was buried in Sugar Creek cemetery. Our pastor assisted in conducting the funeral service.

We finished up the year with good work. We were able to pay up all our debts, the amount of which was $3,605.33.

Among those attending the Annual Conference at Concord were: Mr. and Mrs. R. S. Garmon, Mrs. Charles Daughtry, Mrs. Geo. L. Curry and Misses Nora and Inez Hinshaw.

Next Sunday is to be Cradle Roll Day in our church. Every mother is requested to be present with her baby. Certificates will be given to the babies who have joined the Cradle Roll. The Cradle Rall was organized September 30 and we now have on roll 30 members. Miss Inez Hinshaw is Cradle Roll superintendent. At the close of the service an opportunity will be given those who wish to have their children baptized.

THE FLAVOR OF EBEN NASH'S MINCE PIE.

The old man came hurrying up from the barns. He could not get to the house fast enough.

"Mebbe this time!" he muttered breathlessly, but it was his soul rather than his stout old body that was out of breath. This time—all along, even in his most despairing moments, he had always comforted himself with the surety that sometime—mebbe this time was sometime!

"Well?" he demanded of his old wife, Rebekah. She stood waiting for him in the outer doorway, her thin shoulders huddled in white knitted folds against the November sharpness.

"I saw 'em come, an' I saw 'em go away. They didn't stay long, Beck," anxiously.

"I showed 'em all round, dear, every last place."

"Why didn't you blow the horn for me? Did you speak o' the walls bein' terrible thick and warm, [illegible]?"

"They could feel there weren't any, but I told 'em. I told 'em, Eben. I told 'em how lately we'd shingled, too."

Eben Nash stirred uneasily. Why could he not shake off this suspicion that Mother was not sorry that these people too had come and gone unavailingly? Search as he would her sweet, dear face he could not find disappointment. He found—was it relief he found? Always found?

"I did the best I could, Father." She seemed to be pleading with him for his good will. "You can't make folks buy your place."

"Weren't they a mite interested, a mite?" Rebekah Nash slowly shook her head. But she did not sigh; he was sure he did not hear her sigh.

"No, they wanted a bath room and a sleepin' piazza and higher ceilin's. The only thing either of 'em liked was my Martha Washington geranium. I told 'em I'd let that go with the house!" Mother was smiling now determinedly. She pulled Father within doors and divested him of muffler and cap. She drew up his old rocker before the stove. "I'm goin' to make you a cup o' tea," she purred. Mother always made cups of tea after people had come and gone without any prospect of purchasing. Presently, hot tea in Father's best china cup. Poor Father!

Oh, it was a good place, Mother thought! Sudden tears rushed to her eyes and tenderness to her heart. A dear good place where little sons had come to her, a little daughter who had stayed a year, where she and Father had toiled happily and rested together at the end of the day. The low ceilings had hovered them and the thick walls kept them warm. The little sons had battered the woodwork and careered joyously over the fields.

"A good place, Father," echoed Mother quietly.

"Somebody'd ought to want it. How long we been tryin' to sell it, Mother?"

"'Most a year," and this time he was sure she sighed. Poor Mother! They understood each other, these two, with the understanding of forty-eight united years.

"It's most Thanksgivin' again, Mother, an' we're still on the old place," though he had expected not to be, had even been so sure!

"Yes," cried Mother eagerly. "I guess we'll eat another Thanksgivin' dinner on it, Eben. I mean on our place that still belongs to us: I'm beginnin' to get dinner ready!" laughing tremulously. "I started the mince meat today."

"Mother!" he was not laughing. As nearly as it could be, his voice was sharp. The best china cup clinked perilously as he thumped it down on the table. "After all our expectin's and' disappointin's—those folks that almost did an' all the folks that said, 'We'll think it over'—you expect us to sit down to a Thanksgivin' dinner an' be thankful? You crazy, Becky? Well, I'm not."

"But, Fath—" she began again. "But Eben—" They both instinctively reserved the tenderer names for tenderer times. "But, Eben, if we're here Thanksgivin' I suppose we'll eat a dinner at noon, won't we?"

He faced about.

"You mean you've written the boys to come? That what you mean, Becky?"

"No. I mean I haven't mailed the letters. I just thought I'd have 'em ready to mail, if —nothing happened." And nothing had happened. Nothing at all. They had not sold the place.

"Well, you can mail 'em just's soon as we've sold an' we'll have a Thanksgivin' dinner to celebrate!" laughed Eben Nash, unevenly. "That'll be mince pie enough for me! You seen my ear-laps? It's gettin' pretty nippy out o' doors."

Alone, Rebekah Nash sank into Father's big rocker and rocked steadily and evenly for a long time. It was her way of calming down. She must calm down. Poor Eben, poor Father, was so nervous an' upset over it all he wasn't himself. You couldn't expect him to be Father every minute. He had to have his just-Eben times, especially right after somebody'd come an' gone.

For a little instant the rocker jerked, but steadied again as suddenly. Even the thought of those unmailed letters to the boys could not keep it jerky, Father came first, before the boys.

"I guess I better unmake the little grandbeds, though," thought Mother soberly. "It kind of works me up to see 'em up there all tucked in nice, waitin' Specially little Eben's bed—" Little Eben was the newest one; his grandmother had never seen him.

Just one more, this one more Thanksgiving together in the old home, was that so much to long for? To lie awake nights, longing for?

"Way back when we knew we'd got to sell I began to hope for just one more," sighed the gentle old thoughts. "I wanted little Eben to have his Thanksgivin'. But now—" But now even if they did not sell (and they would not sell) Father would not be willing to keep the day this year. Even if there were the chance to keep it (and there would be the chance) Thanksgiving to Father—poor Father—meant selling, being thankful for that. Keeping the day for that.

"I'll unmake 'em," sighed Mother. "Anyway, tomorrow I will. I'll keep 'em made up one more day," which meant that she would steal upstairs and lay her soft old cheek on little Eben's pillow by and by. But first she would make tea-cakes for Father with an extra sprinkling of cinnamon and sugar outside. He loved tea-cakes. Her whole heart yearned over Father.

The day of their wedding they had come here to the old place which had been almost a new place then. They had meant to die here when their time to die came. Year by year the love for the old place, cemented by little new loves, had grown richer and stronger. Oh a dear good place to live and love and die in, but a heart-breaking place to sell! Suddenly the old rocker rocked very hard.

Yet Mother knew it was inevitable. She knew how the slender sum at the bank a few miles away was dwindling. They had not told the boys about that, for in the proud old souls of them both was rooted deep-down a horror of dependency. Not that—not that! They would sell the old place and, unmortgaged and in good repair as it was, the money would "keep" them cosily in some modest village rooms. They had already decided upon the place to go. "Cosily" was Mother's splendid little word to camouflage the dread and sorrow in her soul.

If they let the boys believe they were moving into the village for the "company" and cheerful bustle of it—well? There was nothing wrong in that. They had never in any way fostered or instigated that belief.

The day they knew about their trouble was very fresh in Mother's memory. She could see Father's pale face now and feel the tremble of her own legs as she ran to the door to meet him.

"Father! What is it? Not the boys?" her thought flying first to them, though even in her dread she recognized at another glance that it was not that trouble in Father's face. Not quite as bad as that trouble.

"We're poor, Moher, church mice!" he broke out, laughing harshly. "Nothin' worse'n that. The Pembroke Branch's passed their dividends. Worse than that, I guess,—I got a letter tellin' me. Looks as if the road would die right in its tracks—tracks, why don't you laugh? That's a joke!" but it was only Father that laughed. Mother could hear the sob in his throat, underneath the laugh. She did not know much about that last investment of theirs, except the hopes they invested as generously as their money. "Passed dividends" were just words to Mother. But she knew what "die in its tracks" meant, and heard the sob under that grating laugh. It was as though she held those buoyant hopes, crumbled things, in her old hands and gazed down sadly at their ruin. In Father's poor hands, too,—and their hands were old hands now with the grip gone out of them.

But they had pretended to each other, two gallant pretenders.

And love for law o'er earth have sway.

For faith can never know defeat
That has in love of law its seat!

III. The War of Love for Law of Love.

Because with faith we dare to hold
That golden rule, not rule of gold,
Shall be for men, and nations, too,
The rule of life the whole world through,
And rich and poor alike must see
From golden rule no man is free;
Because we seek with all our heart
To serve all men and do our part,
Nor greed of gold nor jealous hate
Shall make our love of right abate,
For love that shares in generous deed,
And joys to meet another's need,
Must triumph over selfish greed,—

We dare believe the day's at hand
When all true souls in every land
In League of Love for Right shall stand;
When all one golden rule shall own,
And love on earth shall claim the throne,
And God in heaven as Love be known.

For faith can never know defeat
That has in law of love its seat!

IV. The War of Love for Brotherhood.

Because we fight for brotherhood,
For all men's rights and all men's good;
Because pure love inspires our fight
With might of love 'gainst love of might,
With might of love for love of right;
Because in earth, or heaven above,
No power can cure earth's ills but love,
But altruism wins its way
Wherever love 'mongst men has sway;
Because, thrice armed with cause full just,
In love's omnipotence we trust,
And cause so just can never fail
Where God makes truth and right prevail,—

We dare believe the day draws nigh,
When men shall build a throne so high
For truth and right that all shall see
That men to men must brothers be,
That love alone can make earth free,
And bind the world in unity.

For faith can never know defeat
That has in might of love its seat!

AN EVERY-DAY PRAYER.

Help us, dear Lord, to follow where Thou dost lead,
If it be to a foreign field or to do a neighborly deed.
Though shadows around us sometimes fall,
Help us to look up to Thee, who lovest all,
And say with a heart filled with hope and love,
We will do the sweet will of our Father above
Help us, dear Lord, to be more like Thee day by day,
And hold out a hand to those in the downward way;
And may we ever be gentle and kind
With the poor, the distressed, to the lame and the blind!
Help us, dear Lord, by faith and love
To win them to Thee and a home above.
Help us, dear Lord, to serve as thy law doth command.
Before another dawn we may pass to the better land,
And a golden opportunity may have been lost.
Help us, dear Lord, at whatever cost.
And when Thou hast wrought thy will through us here
May we dwell with Thee in the home over there.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY THE SOUTHERN METHODIST CONFERENCE AT GREENVILLE, N. C., OCTOBER 28, 1919.

There is a bill pending before our national Congress which, if enacted into law, will require of the youth of this country universal military training. This, we believe, would foster unduly in our young men, unacquainted with actual war, a spirit of militarism from which in the past we as a nation have been happily free, and against which we should guard with a constant jealousy, because we desire nothing that smacks of German militarism, even though it bear the name of American militarism.

Furthermore, there is no need of universal military training in the interim of war in order to have good soldiers in time of war, as our whole past history proves most convincingly by the fact that our armies have been uniformly victorious. The fighting record of our boys in France, to say nothing of the government's proud boast that the recent war was fought in order to prevent future wars, prove most conclusively that universal military training should not be desired and is not needed for national security, or for American victory if war should be thrust upon us.

We, therefore, as a patriotic Christian organization, set for the triumph of the gospel of Jesus Christ, respectfully urge our senators and members of the house to use their high offices and personal influence to prevent the enactment of a law requiring universal military training, or any other law that will unduly foster militarism.

VICKERY METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH, GUILFORD CIRCUIT.
Rev. A. M. Hamilton, Pastor.

—Rev. N. G. Bethea was called home from Conference on Saturday night to conduct the funeral of a young woman in whose marriage he officiated a year or more ago—Miss Annie Louise Wills.

—Bro. Daniel L. Surratt, father of Rev. W. B and Prof. D. T. Surratt, died November 18, aged over 70 years. The funeral was conducted by Rev. D. A. Braswell at Pleasant Grove Church.

—Rev. D. A. Braswell gave a special dinner to a number of his friends attending Conference last Saturday. It was an enjoyable occasion. The table was served by some of his grand-daughters. His after-dinner talk awoke in the minds of his guests a sense of his consecration to God. He and his are the Lord's. He dedicated his house to the Lord as solemnly as many churches are dedicated.

—Our Conference was pleased to receive into its ministry Bro. Spencer, of the Alabama Conference. He is a son of our good brother J. H. Spencer, of Seagrove.

—Bro. T. D. Harris, of Albemarle, and a younger brother motored over to Concord to be at Conference last Sunday.

Better to limp upon the right way than to ride upon the wrong.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR DECEMBER 7.

Truths That Jesus Taught. Matt. 5: 3-12; John 21: 25.

Daily Readings.

M. Truths about God. John 5: 16-27.
T. Truths about man. John 8: 31-47.
W. Truths about salvation. John 10: 22-42.
T. Truths about Himself. John 5: 33-47.
F. Truths about humility. Matt. 8: 1-10.
S. Truths about service. John 21: 15-25.

Do not forget that this consecration meeting. You will do well to call attention to the fact that at the roll call every active member is expected to respond with a verse of Scripture or a prayer or word of testimony. Make an effort to get an expression renewed loyalty to Christ from every one present.

The truths taught by Christ are different from the truths taught by other great religious teachers. He spake as never man spake before. He spake as one having authority. It would make these comments much too long if I were to take up each of the beatitudes and discuss them. What I am going to do is to suggest that each of the beatitudes be assigned to some member of your society to be discussed briefly. Suppose that when the roll is called some members respond each with one of the beatitudes.

What Truths did Jesus teach about God? He taught that God is His Father. He also taught that we are His brethren: therefore, God is our Father too. As Paul puts in Rom. 8: 16-17 "The Spirit himself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are children of God: and if children then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ."

Truths about man. The truth about man taught here in the eighth chapter of John is that man, in his natural state, before he is born of the Spirit, is a child of the devil. I do not like to think about that, do you? And yet it is true. Jesus taught it. "Ye are of your father the devil." In connection with this awful truth I like to think of that other truth which is the opposite of this. We may become the children of God. We may by repentance and faith be adopted into the family of God.

Truths about salvation. One of the most wonderful things about salvation is the fact that it is free. It is in reach of the poor as well as the wealthy. Another thing about salvation that we should always remember that we may help others is that it is a matter of faith. Jesus gives eternal life or salvation only to those who believe. A caution: I have said that salvation is free: and so it is. However, we as Christian Endeavorers do not want to confuse terms. Some people say the gospel is free. The Bible does not teach that the gospel is free, but salvation.

Truths about Himself. Jesus taught that He was sent of God. That the truth that He taught was not merely His own, but the Father's Who had sent Him. Of course He taught that He is the Savior of all who will come unto God by Him. It would be profitable for Endeavorers to read the New Testament with this one object in view, What did Jesus have to say about Himself?

Truths about humility. Jesus taught that humility is a virtue. That it is necessary to insure us an entrance into the kingdom of heaven. Humility is the road to exaltation, for "he that humbleth himself shall be exalted."

Truth about service. Doubtless the biggest word in the language of man today is service. This word has grown upon us during the world war. There is danger, however, that we now forget the word and what it stands for Jesus taught that service equals greatness. "But he that is greatest among you shall be your servant." Matt. 23: 11.

(Be sure to subscribe for the Christian Endeavor World for your president and chairman of prayer meeting committee at least. A few copies coming to individuals will help wonderfully to keep the society alive and moving forward. I am pleased with the result of your campaign for new societies. Will have more to say about it later. Meanwhile keep your society on the move. Write me if you think I can help any.)

TRAINING FOR SERVICE.

(Christmas Service.)

The above caption indicates that Educational Day is once more claiming its own. It has long been deserving the same recognition as that given foreign missions in June, home missions at Easter, and the young people's work in the October rally. It is to be hoped that this December Day for Educational work may become a permanent anniversary. If so, the first great victory for our colleges and seminary may be recorded.

The next step is easy to take: Let every church and Sunday school use the Christmas program so intelligently and artistically prepared by Secretary George H. Miller, of the Board of Education. The purpose of its use must not be missed. That purpose is threefold:

1. To sound the slogan of Educational Day: "Christmas Means a Better Tomorrow. Christian Education Helps to Realize That Better Day."

2. To turn the attention of our young people to the need of a college training in our own denominational schools, and to lay upon the godly young men of our pews the claims of the Gospel ministry.

3. To insure a free-will offering so large that there may be an immediate establishment of a new professorship in the Westminster Theological Seminary, to the end that this School of the Prophets may be better equipped to prepare young ministers to go forth as sane and sound and sanctified leaders in the church's great work of "Training for Service."

A BOLD SURRENDER.

I am always ready and willing to lend a helping hand for the upbuilding of God's kingdom. I met a strange lady not long since near Stantonsburg. She has a family and she was in a careless and unconcerned state. I asked her if she realized the responsibility that was resting on her and her husband. She said not, and I began talking and reading to her; I plead with her all that afternoon and she was so interested that I went and plead with her and husband that night until bed time; and she was so pleased with my conversation she said that she had told him how I had brought her to the light of the gospel, and he too was interested. I told them that I was so rejoiced to see them wise, as God says in His Word, A wise son loves his father's instructions, but a fool hates his father's instructions. She said to me that her mother was a Primitive Baptist: I said to her to remember that there are but two ways, the right way, and the wrong way; if you are not right, you are wrong, and there is no respect of persons with God. Col. 3: 25. But he that doeth wrong shall receive for the wrong which he hath done. So she said she wanted to go to the Baptist meeting for her mother's sake; I told her to go if she wished to, for her mother's sake, for no church without Christ can save her, but if we follow Jesus we can be saved; but if we follow the devil we will be lost in spite of all the churches. We are told in Joshua 24: 15, Choose ye this day whom ye will serve. So it is our choice. God will force no man to heaven. Luke 12:47 tells us, And that servant which knew his lord's will and prepared not himself, neither did according to his will shall be beaten with many stripes. And I told her, in Isaiah 45: 22 we are told that he says, Look unto me and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth; for I am God and there is none else. And then I sang,

"Must Jesus bear the cross alone,
And all the world go free?
No, there's a cross for every one,
And there's a cross for me."

She clapped her hands and said, "That shows that there is something for all of us to do." I read the 14th and 13th chapters of John and 7th of Revelation and several more and sang several songs. Then I had to come home.

She went to two meetings but could not be satisfied. She come back home; she was miserable. She told a lady that I was right before her and that she wanted to see me worse than anybody that she knew, but she could not come to me, I was so far. So on the next Sunday she and family went to the Methodist church. After the preacher closed she arose and went up to the stand and asked him to receive her. She was not ashamed nor afraid of the whole world's seeing her. Her husband broke out crying and went to her and took her by the hand and said, "God bless you, and may he ever guide guide you in the right way to the end." She said that was the happiest afternoon that she ever saw in all of her life. Her little children all say now that is their church; they go there to Sunday school now.

But all that read these lines remember, after we do all that we can, we should not boast, for we are unprofitable servants: we have only done just what is our duty to do. I still remain a living witness for my Master. I am the oldest member at Harris Chapel, the Methodist Protestant Church.

I have many such cases, but this was the boldest, for she went without any invitation. He just did not give any invitation because it was just a regular monthly meeting. Some one please give me instruction on personal work, as the whole world is going wild over worldly pleasures. Virginia Barfield.

OUR WOMEN AT CONFERENCE.

On Thursday evening, November 20, the work of the Woman's Foreign and Home Missionary Societies was presented to the members of the North Carolina Annual Conference, and the people of Concord

The presidents of the two societies told of the work done during the past and of some of the plans and aims for the present year. Mrs. W. C. Hammer spoke of the splendid work done by the Children's Home, of the great field ready for the harvest at Pine Ridge, Kentucky, where Dr. Woodford and wife have recently gone to labor, of the much needed help and sympathy extended the children of poverty through the Pittsburgh Mission, and of the call that has just come to the Home Mission Board to help the negroes establish a school at Lockhart, Texas. Mr. Garrett related some touching incidents of the children at the Home, and of their longing for a "little bit of love." Dr. Dixon emphasized the importance of our doing more for the real Americans who may be reached through the Pine Ridge school, of their aptitude to learn not only the contents of their school books, but also the wisdom that may be gained from the Book of books, and from the godly lives and examples of their teachers. He told us of a new work that is awaiting us in Louisiana. A rescue home for white girls was established some years ago, and has been kept up by a consecrated man of our church who is becoming too feeble to continue the work He has asked that the Woman's Board of Home Missions take over the work and keep it up. No greater work for humanity could be done, unless it is to train young girls so that they will not have to be rescued from lives of vice and crime.

Mrs. Brown made a plea for more of our women to join the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society and give their time, their talents, their gifts and their prayers to help send the gospel to the uttermost parts of the earth and relieve the sufferings of the women and children of heathen lands, and teach them the new word "love," and what it may mean to them She spoke of the new missionary to Japan, and of the three who sail for China next month. One of the three is a trained nurse, and her work will mean very much to the suffering women of that great country. It was Li Hung Chang who said, "Send us more missionaries, especially doctors." Mrs. Brown told of a woman physician who is anxious to go to China under the auspices of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of our church just as soon as her support can be assured. Why can not North Carolina send her, and thus have a representative in the great "Battalion of Life," whose leader is the Great Physician, and in whose foot-steps they will gladly follow? The woman's society in North Carolina is now supporting two missionaries—Miss Steele in Japan, and Miss Sheppard, the nurse, who is on her way to China. If three hundred and twenty-five women can do this, why can not the other women in the conference support another?

Mrs. J. F. McCulloch, in a very interesting and instructive manner, decribed the pictures of our work as they were thrown on the screen. These pictures show some of our leaders in the foreign work, some of our missionaries and schools and pupils in Japan and China. The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society has also promised to take over the work for women and children in India just as soon as possible.

We want to thank the members of the Conference for their hearty support, and for their courteous treatment on this occasion. Our thanks are due the Friends meeting of Greensboro for the use of their lantern, to Rev. C. W. Bates for securing and operating the lantern, and to all who in any way assisted us. We hope to be able to keep the slides long enough to use them in several of our churches. Reporter.

A WINTER IN FOREST CAVES.

How one European woman, with the aid of American missionaries, was able to save the lives of several hundred Armenians for many months, has been reported by a Near East Relief worker who is now caring for the suffering people in Turkey.

For an entire winter, several hundred Armenians hid in the forests near Trebizond. They made their homes in the caves and the ever watchful Turks in the town nearby did not permit them to come out of their hiding places even to get food and water. The Turks knew there were Armenians hiding somewhere in the vicinity and as this was the winter before the war ended, the American missionaries who remained at their posts did not dare to make any noticeable move to help the suffering refugees.

Often during the winter a woman would sneak through the Turkish guards and get to the American mission at Trebizond. When granted an interview with one of the missionaries, she would pull out from some part of her ragged clothing a crumpled scrap of paper. On it would be written, "We are persons concealed in the woods. For the love of God send us money by this woman to save us from starvation."

When the town was bombarded by the Russians, many of the people from Trebizond fled to the surrounding villages. Among them was a European woman, Madame Josephine, who had married in the East She learned of the condition of these hidden Armenians and resolved to give them aid.

It is said that when Madame Josephine was first told of the horrible conditions under which these people were living, she fainted. She recovered, howver, and worked out a plan by which she could prevent death of these refugees from starvation. It was she who made regular visits to the American Mission for aid.

Any large movement of food into the forest would have at once alarmed the Turkish watchers and not only would Madame Josephine have lost her life but probably all of the little group would have been put to death. An estimate was made of the amount of corn meal necessary to keep these people alive and money for this was supplied to the European woman. She arranged with peasants to bake the corn meal and send the bread into the forest. At no time was more food sent than might be taken for a supply of one family.

Many times during the winter Madame Josephine made trips to the American Mission on foot or on horseback to obtain funds for carrying forward her relief work. Dressed as a peasant she excited no suspicion among the Turkish soldiers and thus was able to obtain the funds which kept this band of Armenians alive.

In addition to food, she carried bundles of clothing to the forest caves and on one trip the bundle contained clothes for a new-born baby, who got her first glimpse of this world amid all of the suffering of this cave life in mid-winter.

The little company was kept from death by hunger and exposure until April when the allied armies captured Trebizond and the people were permitted to come out of their hiding places.

The American missionaries who remained at their posts during the war were the first to give relief to the suffering Armenians, but there were few of them and the suffering was so great that thy were absolutely unable to cope with the situation. They are now co-operating with the Near East Relief in its work of mercy among these Christian people.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE AND THE WORLD WAR.

I want to tell you a story which has grown out of my trip to France with the A. E. F.

When I left Montreal, Canada, with some three hundred Y. M. C. A. Secretaries, like most men going over, I was somewhat concerned about German submarines as several transports had been torpedoed and many lives lost among officers and soldiers going to the front from this side. As I journeyed from Montreal my fear of submarines did not diminish but I became cognizant of other dangers which were more subtle.

On the first night out I met with a serious accident, falling over a hatchway I sprained my ankle. I sprained it so severely that on taking off my shoe later my sock stuck to the swollen part and tore the flesh so that my foot became very much inflamed and blood poisoning set in which possibly came from shoe latchets. I called a man among the Y men, he rubbed my foot twice but refused to apply any medicine whatsoever. I found upon talking with him that he had been a Scientist and was still somewhat tainted with Christian Science, since he told me that much of my trouble was in my mind. I knew better than anybody else that my trouble was in my foot.

My foot grew gradually worse until on the sixth day my pulse went up to 110 and a swelling appeared in my groin, then something took place within my breast. I determined that I would doctor myself, so I procured peroxide and iodine and went to work. I stayed the blood poison and managed to get around during the balance of the journey to Liverpool, it taking sixteen days in all to complete the trip.

When I arrived at my hotel, upon consultation with a physician, he informed me that it would take me weeks to recover since the blood poison had worked all through my system. Being determined to reach my destination, however, I went on to Paris, where in course of time I recovered, but my experience had opened my eyes to something, and that something is what I want to bring home to the readers of this tract.

I Had Uncovered a Subtle and Pernicious Teaching.

I had given my services to my country to help the boys over there. My heart was as much in the service to win the war as the heart of the man who on the battle front was shouldering a gun. I had gone over to cheer the depressed, to help the suffering and, if called upon to do so, to care for the dying to the extent of giving my life. I met Red Cross nurses and Salvation Army workers as well as Y. M. C. A. men and women who were bent on a like mission. Everywhere help was needed. I answered this call to help in Paris. I went on to Nevare and Tours, where I saw the casualties by thousands coming from the front. Cars were crowded with the wounded and the dying Everywhere, yes, everywhere help was needed. I was helping, yet out of my experiences I was studying a certain situation of which I had never dreamed. Something new was uncovered.

And that something uncovered was this,—that while many people were making unheard of sacrifices and were willing to serve and suffer without limit, there were some men and women over there who seemed without heart, without sympathy,—they had no word of cheer for the depressed and no consolation for the injured; they were unconcerned about the happenings of every day; they were for the most part Christian Scientists.

In some way these erroneous believers had found their way into the Y. M. C. A. ranks and in some instances into the ranks of the troops and were spreading their propaganda a propaganda which was as heartless in meeting the ravages of war as the Germans were heartless in inflicting suffering upon the innocent.

Something else was uncovered,—that the Christian Scientists were using the Y. M. C. A. reading rooms for the distribution of their literature without consent, however, from the Y. M. C. A. authorities. They apparently were systematically supplying these reading rooms and in frequent instances "The Monitor," their daily organ, was nailed to the reading table. Their services were announced, which were held in many of the leading cities of France in the vicinities where English and American troops were stationed. Invitations were also handed out to many to attend their services.

An Awakening.

Noting all these things like every lover of the truth is it is in Christ Jesus, I was aroused and I became aroused to the point of determination to do all I could to combat the baneful influences of this most insidious cult. This cult which to my mind was not only undermining the faith of many but, undermining the feeling of sympathy and kindly feeling of regard that men owe to each other; undermining also the teachings of our American form of Government.

Upon returning to the United States and taking up my pastorate at Redondo Beach, I found upon inquiry that when that awful epidemic of "flu" had been at its worst some of the Scientists in an adjacent town had ignored the call of the State and the city authorities and help their special meetings. I found also, when later the Evangelical churches of the city desired to hold special meetings, to be led by Dr. R. A. Torrey and Charles Alexander, in seeking the use of the school auditorium of our city for such services that the political influence of the Christian Scientists was such that they almost debarred us from its use and even when we did attain its use, because of their opposition, we were called upon to pay an unheard of and unprecedented rental. This could have been forgiven but when in connection with said Evangelistic meetings I found Christian Scientists of the city working upon our converts to try and influence them against our metings, I felt that the time had come for some person or persons or society to set on foot a movement that would enlighten the people as to the real facts of their propaganda.

A little later, upon taking the subject up for discussion with a certain educator, I heard from him that Christian Scientists of Los Angeles County had become that strong that some of the rulings of the Government regarding the examination and weighing of school children had not been observed. Of course, doing anything of the kind would be an error of mortal mind.

The writer also found upon further investigation as to the strength of the cult's literature distributed through the public libraries. In several libraries visited Christian Science literature was found not only in the form of magazines and papers furnished said libraries, but in stories set forth in books which bore every pretense of being Scriptural and orthodox but containing within themselves perverted teachings of God's word. Magazine and papers were found also of other cults such as Russelism and Spiritualism, etc., in fact the preponderance of this material over against magazine and papers as furnished by the Evangelical denominations was marked in the extreme, so much so that the writer became convinced that pastors and churches had to a large extent overlooked the seriousness of the propaganda of these cults as distributed through the public libraries of the country.

Good Hearted People Misguided by False Promises.

It may seem strange to those who may read this tract to have the writer say that there are many good hearted and well meaning people among Christian Scientists, nevertheless the same is true but they have been misguided. He has many friends among the Scientists, many whom he believes to be sincere in their belief. He has had heart to heart talks with several of them and he has found in frequent instances that the only reason they have gone into Christian Science is because of the comfort and healing they thought Christian Science would bring them. In some instances, however, he has found that they did not know the real teachings of the Christian Science cult,—that they did not know that the atonement and sacrifice of Christ for our sins had been set at naught in the teachings of Mrs. Eddy. The saddest thing he found was that they did not know Christ as their Savior, as their Lord, as their King.

It was hard for the writer to take a stand in opposition to their views but there remained no other course,—hence the step.

The Organization.

Following all these observations and experiences I made an appeal for organizing an international society, for the purpose of meeting the pernicious influence of Christian Science, to a number of ministerial friends, first to brother ministers of Redondo Beach, Rev. H. H. Hocker and Rev. Owen Umstead, then to such men as Rev. W. E. Biederwolf, D.D., Rev. French E. Oliver, D.D., Rev. Thos. C. Horton, D.D., Rev. F. W. Farr, D.D., Rev. Mr Bunce. D.D., Rev. Chas. Edward Locke, D.D., and Rev. Mr. Edmunds, D.D. My appeal met with a ready response from those who heard it. A meeting was called of earnest men representing many Evangelical denominations. A simple organization was perfected, designed to reach every part of the country.

The Work

As entered upon by the society will be far-reaching in its results. Intensive evangelistic campaigns will be arranged in cities throughout the United States. Lecturers also will be engaged from among the strongest men of our evangelical denominations.

A Loyalty Personal Workers League will be urged in every city calling for workers to carry comfort and hope through prayer to the sick and the afflicted and to render service without money and without price. A Loyalty Personal Workers Correspondence course will also be offered, instructing said workers how they may lead erroneous believers to Christ. The society will place in every city where meetings are held or upon request by local church representatives, literature racks for the distribution of free evangelical literature—said literature to be supplied by this society. In each rack there will be placed a Bible—free for public use—a key will not be needed to reveal its teachings.

Reading and Rest Rooms.—Where the churches of a community request the society will co-operate in establishing Reading and Rest Rooms.

Where churches of a city desire to unite in meetings for the purpose of furnishing the people information regarding erroneous religious beliefs the representatives of the society should be addressed and the churches so uniting should state whether an intensive evangelistic campaign or lectures are desired.

The evangelist party will consist of Mr.

Dexter, a business secretary, song leader and pianist.

With addresses by Mr. Dexter as follows:

1. An Anchored Life—Christian fundamentals in faith and practice.
2. Drifting—A message for erroneous believers.
3. Searching the Scriptures—For the uninformed and misinformed.
4. Sailing Under False Colors—A message of warning against a perverted Gospel.
5. The Physician Scripturally Endorsed—The Great Physician and the physician as companions in service.
6. Back to Bethel—An appeal for reconsecration.

Meetings held from one week to ten days in each city visited. Party open for engagements.

The Society Needs Personal Workers.

Address Rev. Stephen Byron Dexter, Superintendent, International Christian Truth Investigation Society, 536 So. Hope St., Los Angeles, Cal.

Membership Fees.

Yearly membership fees may be subscribed from $1.00 to $24.00 and said subscriptions may be applied according to the number of years indicated. Life Membership, $25; Honorary Life Membership, $100 or more. The first thousand members will be listed as charter members.

TWO KINDS OF FOOLS.

As a man may be rich and not know it, so also a man may be a fool and not realize it. There are two kinds of fools. There is the intellectual fool, often known as the lunatic or imbecile, or the man who is half witted. We look at him in pity and say: ''He is not all there.'' This is an intellectual fool. But there are moral fools, men who are intellectually bright, sometimes even brilliant, and who nevertheless are fools. They are fools because they do foolish things. They throw away their most valuable possessions. Was not Robert Burns a fool? His intellect was fine. His intelligence was large. His brain structure was remarkable. His genius was great, and yet he was a fool When he became famous as a poet he spent his evenings at banquets and guzzled wine. ''What,'' asks Carlyle, ''had he to do at such banquets, blending the thick smoke of intoxication with the fire that had been lent him from heaven?'' A man who is dowered with the finest gifts and who burns himself up in alcohol and lust is most assuredly a fool.—Charles E. Jefferson.

A GOOD CONSCIENCE.

Some say that conscience is the voice of God in the soul. Others prefer to call it our better nature, or the moral sense or faculty. It makes little difference what we call it; we all know about what it is. We have felt its power. We have heard it command us to do right and to abstain from what is wrong. We know that it approves us when we do the right and condemns us when we do the wrong. It is a kind of bar of judgment before which we must appear each day and give an account for what we have done. There are few things more to be desired than a good conscience. To feel when the sun goes down that we have done the best we could makes a little heaven in the breast. To be compelled to listen to the voice of a condemning conscience is to have kindled in the soul the inextinguishable fires of torment. If there were no other reward for doing good than the serenity of spirit it gives us, that were sufficient. If we lose our conscience there is nothing left worth keeping. Take care that you do not put it out to sale. If you can do wrong and not suffer inwardly for it, be afraid, for you have slain conscience. Listen to its voice. Respect its commands. Seek to have its approval.—Selected.

THE BEST.

A stranger visiting in a country town attended a session of the public school one day. Talking in an undertone with the teacher, he remarked, as his eyes rested on a boy whose head was lowered over the desk:

''I have watched that boy almost from the time I entered the room, and not once have I seen him raise his head to gaze curiously around. Is he one of your best pupils?''

''The best,'' came back the answer quickly and emphatically. ''He is a boy who is thoroughly honest and conscientious in the use of his time. In school hours he works diligently and earnestly, in the playground he plays with all his heart. Whatever he does, he does well and in its own time, without any dilly-dallying. He is laying the foundation of a splendid character.''

''Thoroughly honest and conscientions in the use of his time.'' Of how many boys can this be truthfully said? And youth is the period when one should learn, along with other things, the importance of using time honestly, working in work hours, playing in play hours. This is assuredly the only way to get the best and the most out of each day as it unfolds.—Selected.

ENOCH WALKED WITH GOD.

Enoch was a man with like passions to us. He was a family man, a man who lived in an age of extraordinary wickedness, but he walked with God. Egypt had its Joseph, and Babylon its Daniel. To walk with God is to be in harmony with God. There can be no harmony of life while there is contrariety of nature. ''Ye must be born again.'' To walk with God is to love the things that God loves and to hate the things that God hates. Enoch was not enamored of the things that God hates. To the people of his day he probably seemed straight-laced and narrow-minded, but we speak of him as ''the man who walked with God.'' To walk with God means to keep step with Him. We cannot walk with God if we lag behind in timid or surly disobedience. We cannot walk with God if, through lack of faith, we run ahead to reconnoiter. To walk with God is to be conscious, however rough and rugged the way, that heaven lies at the end of the journey. ''Enoch'' means dedicated, initiated, disciplined. We can never come to the fulness of God's ideal for us except through the process of discipline, for ''discipline'' is but another word for discipling.—Exchange.

CHILDREN'S CORNER

WHEN BETTY WAS BOBBY.

Betty kicked the rug under the dining room table as the family rose from dinner. The rug was inoffensive, but Betty was cross. She gave her chair a jerk as she replaced it.

"I wish I were a boy," she growled. "If I were Bobby I'd never have to do the dinner dishes—and now, I've got to, and we've had fish for dinner, too! Fish dishes are horrid to wash. I don't think it's fair. I always have to help in the kitchen!"

"Stuff!" returned Bobby, "don't I have my work to do? Guess I don't grumble about what I have to do for my family!"

"Betty, did you ever hear mother grumble about cooking dinner?" Betty's father smiled down at her. "I don't wash dishes," he laughed, "but how would you like to go to business every day and do my work?"

"I'm not grumbling," returned Betty. "I just wish I were Bobby! Why can't he try washing the dishes and doing the things that are supposed to be a girl's work? I'd much rather have his things to do!"

"I shouldn't mind dishes," Bobby declared. "All you do is stand still and wash 'em, and then put 'em away. Dusting's nothing either. Housework's a cinch!"

"You just try it!" sniffed Betty. And she gave the plates she was carrying a vicious little journey upon the kitchen table.

Right here mother interfered. "Bobby," said she, "you don't mind dishwashing and Betty does. Suppose you give her a taste of being a boy and you do her work for a while."

Betty and Bob looked at mother to see if she were really in earnest. She certainly was. She undid the button at the top of Betty's apron and took the apron off. She soberly put the apron upon Bob and buttoned it.

You might have thought that Bob was a little tousled-haired, short-cropped girl. He thought it was a huge joke. He surveyed himself in the little kitchen mirror.

"Now I'm Mary Ann," he giggled. "Say, don't I make a better hired girl than Betty, mom?" He went to work with vim.

"If you do it," warned Betty, "you've got to do it right! Silver and glasses come first!" But mother gently pushed Betty out of the kitchen.

"You're Bob now," she said. "You're to do Bob's work."

Well, Betty hadn't exactly meant that! She began to wonder just what Bob's work was. Drawing water at the well, keeping the wood bin filled, mowing the lawn, weeding the garden, shoveling snow in winter—was there anything else? Maybe doing errands, picking fruit, blacking the family's boots on Saturday.

"Do you mean I've got to do all the things Bob usually does, mom?" she asked as mother entered the living room. "How long is it going to last?"

"I can't tell," her mother answered. "I'll be judge. Your work isn't hard. Bob's willing to change off, and we don't want any grumbling in our home, Betty. We're all doing our part here. You're to do everything that generally falls to Bob, remember."

Betty nodded dubiously. "There isn't anything now, is there?"

"Oh, yes," returned her mother. "It's Thursday. The trash pails have to be put out every Thursday night. They are in the area. Bob never has help with them, and I dare say you'll find it easy to roll them along as he does."

Betty had been thinking she could sit down and read—no dishes to wash. But up she got for she was game. It was rather worse than fish dishes to handle those big pails. They were heavy! But there was no way out of it. She pushed and tugged, and tugged and pushed. After a long, hard struggle, the pails were out on the sidewalk and Betty was panting and tired. Then she remembered she hadn't had any apron on. Her serge dress showed the mark of a dusty ash tin! She closed the area gate and went upstairs to brush it.

She had hardly reached there when she heard mother calling, "Betty-Bob, we're out of kindling. Please fill up the wood box right away!"

"Oh, hump!" she murmured under her breath. "I'm tired. Now why can't I rest a bit?" But she thought of Bob washing dishes in the kitchen, and she welcomed the opportunity to go down there.

"Get the ash tins out, sis?" asked Mary Ann, grinning.

Betty ignored the question, her nose in the air. She saw Bob was almost through with the dishes—a few more to put away, and then he'd be free the whole evening. She had that whole big wood box to fill. But she slipped Bob's work apron on, and from 8:30 till a quarter past nine, she labored with kindling although the hand-ax was not easy to handle.

Half-past nine was bed time. There was exactly ten minutes to read that book when Betty-Bob had finished. But she was almost too tired to read anyway, and she soon went up to her room. As for Bob, he seemed pleased with the change.

She was blissfully snoozing, half awake, next morning when a knock came at her door. "Betty-Bob, good-morning," greeted mother. "I'm sorry, but the woman is coming to do Friday cleaning, and I forgot to order soap. The store opens at seven, and if you hurry you can get back by breakfast time."

Betty-Bob rubbed her eyes and yawned. She put on her stockings. "Just a bit of a nap more," she thought, and curled down for a minute. Oh, my! It was more than that! Betty galloped into the other things and whisked downstairs and out of the door as the clock struck seven. Bob was still in peaceful slumber. Doing errands wasn't much fun. She reached home, however, on time.

Was there going to be any more? At least, there would be no beds to make.

After breakfast again came mother. "Betty-Bob, Mrs. Denham has just telephoned for those magazines we've been saving for her hospital work. They are in the hall closet. You can take Bob's express cart and fill it and run over with them before school."

No beds to make—but that! Betty rather hated to think of appearing in public with her brother's express cart, but—didn't women drive ambulances, and wasn't that a man's job? The thought was comforting as she tugged over the unwieldy packages and loaded them on the cart. Bob, upstairs making her bed, looked out of the window and offered suggestions. Mother stopped that.

"Bob-Betty," she said, "let Betty handle her own job." So Betty did. But she had to make three trips to accomplish it, and she had to run to school.

It was plain sailing at school, for there, at least, Betty was free. Only when she came home again did the new dispensation of labor start. "Betty-Bob, don't forget the lawn—and there is the garden to see to. Bring in some lettuce. Please fill the coal hods for me, there's a good boy!"

Instead of having a free afternoon—except, maybe, for clearing up her own room a bit—Betty-Bob ran a lawn mower up and down the lawn, and then Betty-Bob grubbed in the garden.

Betty had never before realizeed Bob had had work to do—perhaps because Bob never grumbled. She wished she were free. It was a lovely day. It would have been fun to go over to Annabel's and lie in the hammock and talk. Betty wondered how many more weeds there were. After weeding, there were coal hods to fill, and just as Betty thought of running up to her room, there came mom again!

"Betty-Bob, the grocer's boy left the wrong things and there is no other delivery. Carry this basket back and get the right order, dear. Hurry!"

Betty-Bob heaved a sigh and jammed on her sailor. She was tired, and it was a two-mile walk to the grocery. It wasn't any joke to be a boy, after all. Maybe it was just as well to be a girl and wash dishes, and dust, and mend stockings. Betty-Bob plodded the two miles.

On return, she would be free till supper she hoped. But no! As soon as the basket was placed on the kitchen table there was mom again! Was she just doing it? Was it all on purpose to show Betty that boys had things quite as disagreeable to do for home as dishwashing? This time it was: "Betty-Bob, you didn't brush the cellar stairs after filling the wood box. Better do it now."

Wouldn't you have thought that was the end of a day's work? Alas, Betty had made a mistake. She had filled the wood box up with small logs instead of kindling, and mother had not discovered it till just now, after the stairs were swept. The logs had to be carried back down cellar and the bin had to be filled right. It was almost 5:30 when Betty-Bob stopped. She stopped with the last load of kindling in her arms, and she sat down on the top step and buried her head in her hands and wept. She was just plain tired out. She didn't envy Bob any more. She wanted to be a girl again.

Mom, who was getting dinner, heard the muffled noise of Betty's sob. She came to the top of the stairs and patted Betty's head.

"Betty-Girl," she said, "it's been a rough day, hasn't it? Suppose you don't stay a boy any longer. Bob won't mind. You run upstairs and clean up—you're very tired. You

"Never mind, Father! See us never mind!"

"We'll come out ahead o' the game yet, Mother!"

The tea-cakes, besprinkled with cinnamon and sugar, came out of the oven beautifully crinkled and browned. Mother was carefully prying them out of the gem-pans as Father came hurrying back into the house. He was much excited, but he had something to say before he broke his news. His face was repentantly tender.

"I guess mebbe I was kind of cross, Mother,—back there. You goin' to forgive me? Quick, before they get here! There's some folks comin' up the lane to look at the place. Seems as if—honest, Mother, they look promisin'! They're in an automobile, an' they stopped an' looked at the view. Shall I show 'em round, or will you show 'em? If you feel kind of tired—"

Mother felt kind of tired. She knew Father felt more confidence in his "showing" abilities, and she herself shrank from the sorry task.

"Begin with the front of the house," she directed, "and go kind of slow, while I pick up my cookin' things. I'm glad I made the babies' beds, they look so darlin'!" Who could resist, anyway, the baby bed of little Eben?

The kitchen swiftly set to rights, she wrapped up in a thick coat of Father's and scurried out to the cattle barn to get herself out of the way. It hurt her to stay and be in the way, to watch and hear and have to smile politely.

At Cream Pot's stall she came to a halt breathlessly. Cream Pot's mild eyes regarded her without emotion. The sweet, milk-laden breath was like incense to her.

"They're in there buyin' the house, Cream Pot!" she cried. "Father's sellin' to them! It breaks my heart in two! The boys' rooms under the eaves—our room, where the boys were born—the little closet we punisheed 'em in! They're walkin 'round on—on holy ground —buyin' it!"

But her fears once more were groundless, wholly groundless. For by and by Father came out to her and shook his head patiently. Not this time, not these people. Mother's old heart leaped in her breast. Then in pitying compunction she hurried into the house to make tea. Hot and fragrant comforting tea.

"Never mind, Father! See us never mind!"

"We'll come out all right, Mother."

Love is so dear and upholding, love and tea.

"They liked the bedrooms," Eben reported over his china cup. "The woman one liked that little bed you've fixed up for little Eben. I saw her standin', lookin' down. Looked as if she kind of smoothed the pillow."

"Father, she's lost a little baby! It reminded her," Mother softly cried. Mother, who understood. She had a vision of the woman one standing and looking down. She wondered if she went upstairs now and put her cheek on little Eben's pillow if she would find it a very little wet perhaps? With the sorrow of the Woman One.

Quietly, without bothering Father, Mother went on with her Thanksgiving preparations. She did not mail the letters to the boys, but neither did she unmake all the little beds upstairs. Her heart was heavy under the crisp folds of her blue gingham dress, but she "carried on." Mother always had been thankful at Thanksgiving time, and she had no mind to except this year. She alwaye had filled her "buttery" shelves with beautiful fat pies and puddings, and she filled them now.

No more people came to look at the old place. They all had Thanksgivings of their own to take up their attention, thought Mother. After Thanksgiving they'd begin again.

"I'll begin again, but I'm goin' to stop worryin' right now! These few days." For it was already Monday of Thanksgiving week. Father had harnessed up and gone for the mail. There would be letters from the boys, mailed Sunday night, and Mother would detect—she knew she would detect!—a little undertone of hurt in those dear letters. When before had she failed to coax them home this celebration week?

She could see Father coming, way down the road. How quickly he got up the road! Father was driving fast. She heard in an incredibly brief time the clatter of wheels in the yard. She heard Father's voice.

"Mother! You there, Mother?"

"Here I am, in the buttery, dear."

"Well, come out quick! This ain't buttery news; I've got front parlor news for you, Mother!" his voice ringing like a deep, sweet old bell. Mother came running out.

"The boys! They're comin';"

Father was holding out both his arms in their clumsy old greatcoat sleeves. Without waiting for the parlor news Mother went in.

"A miracle, Mother! We aren't poor after all—the Pembroke Branch's pickin' up! The big road ever east has decided to build a connection-line with ours an' make a through line of it—bigger'n we ever dreampt! It's all in the paper, signed an' sealed!"

Just one thought came to Mother in the nest in Father's arms.

"The place, Father!"

"We won't have to sell it!' rang the deep bell. "It's our place, Mother—get those letters to the boys quick, an' I'll go back an' mail 'em! I'll put on special deliv'ries; you can telephone, too, long distance. We can telepraph! We've got somethin' now to keep Thanksgivin' for."

Mother's face, a little mischievous, emerged from the nest a moment and looked upward.

"But I thought, Father,—"

"Don't tell me you thought I wanted to sell the place! Mebbe I did say we'd keep Thanksgivin' if we sold, but what's sayin' things? It's doin' 'em! We're goin' to keep Thanksgivin' because we haven't sold!"

"Oh, yes—oh yes!" sobbed Mother, "that was what I was goin' to do anyway! I was goin' to be thankful for just a few days more. But now—"

"But now we hope it's for always, dear, it looks like always. Mother, you're getting the starch all out of my boson!"

"I can starch it again," she laughed, "stiff as a board! Father, while you're mailin' the boys' letters, do you know what I'm goin' to do?"

He looked down from his big height. The tenderness in Father's eyes!

"Something Motherly," he said.

"I'm goin' upstairs an' kiss little Eben's pillow."—Annie Hamilton Donnell in Sunday School Times.

THE FINISH COUNTS.

To start a thing and stop is merely to be a failure, Nearly all the great inventions were in the minds of others besides the ones who took out the patent. The airplane and the automobile and many another great invention were started many times before the genius took hold who was able to carry his idea through to an accomplishment.

Some young people seem to pride themselves on the fact that they came very near doing something worth while. They will tell about the start they made and their manner implies that they expect to be congratulated. But to start and then give up before success is reached is nothing which deserves congratulation.

In a race, the horse that leads at the start is seldom the one who comes first under the wire. He exhausts himself in the first spurt and does not count at all in the finish. Many young folks show the same lack of judgment and then to make matters worse, expect to be praised for starting out with such abandon. But brilliant starts and brave starts and energetic starts and enthusiastic starts, none of them amount to much, if the start does not go to a finish.—Selected.

OUR TRUST IN GOD.

What a vast portion of our lives is spent in anxious and useless forebodings concerning the future, either our own or that of our dear ones. Present blessings slip by, and we miss half their sweet savor, and all for want of faith in Him who provides for the tiniest insect in the sunbeam. When shall we learn the sweet trust in God that our little children teach us every day by their confiding faith in us? We, who are so faulty, so irritable, so unjust; and He, who is so watchful, so pitiful, so loving, so forgiving! Why can not we, slipping our hand in His each day, walk trustingly over that day's appointed path, thorny or flowery, crooked or straight, knowing that evening will bring us sleep, peace and home? —Phillips Brooks.

WHAT IS WRITTEN IN THE LAW?

The lawyer should know the law. Hence Christ's question to him in reply to his query concerning eternal life. But not all who know the letter of the law know its spirit. It takes Jesus to spell the letter of the law into words which are all verbs—that is, actions. It is vital that we have knowledge of what the law contains; but it is even more essential that we know what the words of the law involve for daily living. We are carefully taught the commandments; but let us apprehend them with the heart as well as the mind. Knowledge of the right without love for right doing and living is of no avail. Sinai points to Calvary; duty must be performed in love.—Selected.

Since my house must be burned I will warm myself at it.—Proverb.

IN MEMORIAM.

Bessie Mae King.

Bessie Mae King departed this life November 5, 1919, age 13 years and seven months. She had been in declining health for about six weeks with Bright's disease, but bore her afflictions with Christian fortitude, never complaining, often saying that if she did not get well she would go to live with Jesus. She gave her heart to Jesus July, 1918, and joined the Methodist Protestant Church at Zoar, N. C., under the spiritual and soul-stirring sermons of Rev. D. A. Braswell and the beloved pastor, Rev. A. Ridge. She was a bright, sweet child, a loving sister and loved by all who knew her.

For about two weeks of her illness she was at home with parents, after which her physician thought it best to take her to the hospital, which we did, and here she remained four weeks and one day. God saw fit to call her home, and sent his loving angels for her. She won many friends at the hospital and all regret to give her up; but all was done that loving hands and skilled physicians could do for her recovery, but to no avail. She was conscious until the last, and knew that she was dying. Papa was by her bedside until the last. Some of her last words were, "Tell mamma to not grieve after me." "I am going to live with Jesus." "Tell mamma to meet me in heaven; I'll be waiting for her and papa." "Papa, I know that you will meet me there." "I must hurry and go, the angels have come for me. Good bye." She died with a sweet smile on her face, which will never be forgotten.

Her funeral was conducted by her pastor, Rev. A. Ridge, and grandfather, Rev. H. B. King, in Pleasant Plain Baptist church in the presence of a number of relatives and friends; after which her body was laid to rest in the cemetery at the same church. Her grave was covered with beautiful flowers, placed there by those who loved her. She leaves a father, mother, three sisters and four brothers and many relatives and friends to mourn their loss. But we feel our loss is heaven's gain.

On earth she was ready and willing to do anything to help mamma. Yes, and, thank God, she was ready and willing to try the realities of the unknown world first of all the family. And I feel like, if it were possible for her to speak from heaven to earth this morning, she would be telling us of the beauties of heaven and the glory of God.

'Tis sad from her to part, but while we know that she cannot come to us, there is sweet consolation in the promise that we can go to her. She was too sweet a child to stay here. I prayed that the Lord's will might be done, and I feel sure that if it had not been his will for her to die she would have lived; but I put my trust in Him who knoweth and doeth all things well.

Sleep on, little Mae, and take thy rest;
Loved ones loved thee here, but angels loved thee best.

Her mother, Mrs. T. T. King.

—Concord people said they would be glad to have our Conference meet with them next year. Very kind!

We have just closed the most successful year in our history and now we hope all who are interested in orphanage work will give at least one day's income to the orphanage of their choice and surely our people will give theirs to our Home. From all information gathered we are looking forward to the greatest we have ever had. You can see from my report that the good work has started. If you cannot take an offering that day take one as near as you can. We are going to use the Thanksgiving money toward our boys' building.

At our Annual Meeting of the Board of Trustees last week Mr. J. Norman Wills was elected to fill the vacancy of Mr. T. A. Hunter and Mr. Vernon W. Idol, the vacancy of Mrs. J. J. Welch. Mr. Wills needs no introduction to Methodist Protestants. Mr. Idol is a prominent business man in High Point and takes an active interest in the affairs of his church and has already proven himself a friend of our Home. The selections were wise.

We are sorry to note that Mrs. Garrett is suffering from an attack of rheumatism.

"NOT TO-NIGHT."

A True Story.

I suppose I was about five years old when I was taken by my mother and father to evangelistic services conducted in the little Baptist chapel at my old home. I was too young to carry away any distinct impression of the character of the services, but one little incident was impressed on my memory and has remained with me ever since.

One night I looked up in the middle of prayer (naughty little girrl that I was) just in time to see the fair head of the evangelist bent over my father's in earnest conversation and to catch the latter's low-toned answer: "Not tonight." I did not hear the question, but, child though I was, I understood that my father had put off the great decision, and in my childish way I regretted it.

Eight years passed away; another evangelist visited our little Bethel and again to my father came the appeal: "Won't you decide for Christ?" and again from his lips came the answer, "Not tonight."

The years passed swiftly on, and one never-to-be-forgotten night my father was summoned to my mother's dying bed to receive from her lips one more appeal. Oh, how she pleaded with my father: "Promise that you will meet me in heaven, John," she said with a last effort, and father, whose love for my mother was great, promised. But, alas, even then the tempter was near, and again he whispered "Not tonight."

Three years more, and my father lay on his dying bed, but, alas, unconscious. Slowly but surely he slipped away from us. It seemed as if another voice than his was saying, "Not tonight." I shall never forget that awful time. As we stood watching with bitter tears the last struggle, a friend standing by whispered: "What joy for dear mother." Then the awful hopelessness of it all dawned on me as never before, and I sobbed out, "But is it joy?" What hope was there of a happy meeting? In that moment I felt I would have gladly given up my hope of eternal life if I could have saved my father.

The memory of it all has shadowed my whole life because of this. I want to say to anyone who may be putting off the day of decision: "Oh, decide now; the night of death may bring you no opportunity for decision.".

"To die without hope—have you counted the cost?
To die out of Christ and your soul be lost?

Renounce every idol, though dear it may be,
And come to the Savior, now pleading with thee.''

—Faithful Words.

NEW AUXILIARIES.

Carrying out the visitation plans of the Executive Committee of the Woman's Foreign Misionoary Society, Mrs. J. F. McCulloch of Greensboro and Miss Esther Ross of Asheboro visited the Randleman and Worthville churches on Sunday, November 9. A number of interested women and men in both churches signified their desire to have a missionary society, and thus have a share in the great work of carrying the gospel to those who have never heard. Their names were enrolled and the fourth Sunday in November selected as the date for the regular meeting to be held. Officers to be elected at this time.

Randleman has an enrollment of twenty members and the following officers were elected: President, Mrs. M. F. Hinshaw; vice president, Mrs. Morgan; secretary, Miss Mamie Lineberry. Other officers to be elected at the next meeting.

Worthville's officers are as follows: President, Mrs. C. E. Durham; vice president, Miss Lizzie Myrick; recording secretary, Miss Mary Ward; treasurer, Miss Queen Shaw; corresponding secretary, Miss Faye Giles. Ten active and five honorary members have been enrolled and $2.20 dues paid into the treasury at the first meeting.

The outlook for both of these organizations is most promising. E. R.

HOW AMERICA CARES FOR NEAR EAST ORPHANS.

Camps, organized on a quasi-military basis, are being used most effectively by the Near East Relief in caring for the orphan children in Armenia and Turkey. Such an organization of children is Camp Wilson at Derindje, near Constantinople. This camp may be taken as typical of hundreds of others which the Near East Relief has organizeed throughout the country.

Camp Wilson has a population of 400 boys and they are divided into three groups. These groups consist of Armenian boys who speak only Armenian, Armenian boys who speak only Turkish and Greek boys who speak only Greek. Several native workers who have been educated in American colleges, act as interpreters for the groups.

Divided into squads, each in charge of a corporal, a regular schedule of school exercise and recreation is carried out. The boys rise at 7:30 in the morning and are given their ration of bread. After breakfast they have their morning swim and then take their morning exercise. Following this, they are divided into eight groups for school which lasts until 10:30. With the exception of the lunch hour, they are free from that time until 15:30 (3:30 p. m. American time). Then comes the afternoon swim.

Dinner is served at 18:30 (6:30 p. m.) followed by physical exercise. Then comes a short meeting of some kind featured by singing and short talks by members of the staff of instruction. Taps sound at 21:30 (9:30 p. m.)

Camp Wilson is located on a hill in a building which was once a palace of the Turkish Sultans. The grounds stretch from the hill down to the shore of the Gulf of Ismid, where the boys swim. The school is held in the great courtyard of the palace, under large trees and does not look unlike a real ''university of Plato.'' The pupils are enthusiastic about their work and learn quickly. Instruction is in charge of Americans and is carried on by native teachers who receiveed their education in American missionary schools in Turkey.

Physical instruction includes military setting up exercises and mass games, interspersed with athletic programs to vary the monotony. At first is was practically impossible to teach exercises to these boys but by beginning with the simplest kind of play, the pupils were instructed sufficiently so they are becoming greatly interested in the various forms of games.

Mass games were also out of the question at first. The boys had never learned to play and any kind of a regulation game was too much for them. The simplest kind of diversion proved intensely interesting to them. Later, however, it was possible for the American instructors to introduce more complicated set of games. Now athletic programs, including tugs-of-war, wrestling and exhibitions, are successfully given by the boys. Even baseball has been introduced and the groups show great interest in the contests.

American physical instructors in the camps find that the boys pick up English readily and after a few days they understand commands for various exercises as given in English and the services of an interpreter can be eliminated.

WHEN DREAMS COME TRUE.

Pierre's greatest ambition was to be a farmer! Not just an ordinary farmer, but one who had been schooled in the most modern ideas of agriculture.

Pierre's father had gone away to fight, leaving the little cottage and its few acres of farm land in the care of Pierre, together with baby Yvonne.

And brave little Pierre would not disappoint the father who trusted in him. Since that day, four years had passed, and Pierre, with little Yvonne, his sister, was wandering back, along the lonely, shell-pitted roads to the place where the little cottage home had stood. But it was not there. Only a heap of stones and mortar marked the spot.

Wearily the staunch little figures trudged along. Later, that evening, a tiny light appeared in the window of a cottage far up the road. Yvonne was crying. She just couldn't be brave any longer. Pierre felt a hard lump rise in his throat. That would never do! They must keep on until they reached that light. Perhaps there would be friends within the cottage.

The tall, weather-stained farmer who opened the door at the timid knock of the youthful travelers, proved more than a friend. He was a father, home and food all in one! And his smiling, warm-hearted wife was a mother to the tired, baby Yvonne—the mother that the little girl had never known.

He too had once had a son; a son who had dreamed of great farm fields that he would some day cultivate. But the war bugles had sounded, and the youth had left his books and dreams of the future to drive back the threatening foe. He had never come back. So now, the little Pierre and his baby sister had come to fill the empty place in the big hearts of the farmer and his wife.

Pierre's dream came true, for he was sent to a school in a nearby city, where, with many other boys, all eager to learn the art of farming, he lived and learned.

The Junior Red Cross of America makes it possible for these homeless boys of France to follow this occupation which will mean the future food of France. The Juniors are sending money that will help to support these schools, and the French Ministry of Agriculture will see that these schools are properly managed.

Many a little Pierre is approaching that happy time ''when dreams come true.'' And the Juniors have a big share in those dreams.

TRUSTWORTHY.

It is a good thing to have a publication in the house that you can trust. You never have to think whether you can safely leave The Youth's Companion on the table. When you begin a Companion story you know you are not bound on a slumming expedition. You are being led up into the sunshine of the everlasting hills. The folks in The Companion stories are everyday folks. They are like your own townspeople; stumbling, falling, picking themselves up, trying with some defeats and some difficulties to attain to their high ideals.

1920 will be a year of great stories for Youth's Companion readers. There are more than 250 of them in the year. Subscribe before Christmas and get the opening chapters of Charles B. Hawes' 10-chapter story, The Son of a ''Gentleman Born,'' and all the extras of the following offer:

New subscribers for 1920 will receive:

1. The Youth's Companion—52 issues in 1920.

THE YOUTH'S COMPANION HOME CALENDAR FOR 1920.

The Publishers of The Youth's Companion will, as always at this season, present to every subscriber whose subscription ($2.50) is paid for 1920 a Calendar for the new year. The tablets are printed in red and dark blue, and besides giving the days of the current month in bold legible type, give the calendar of the preceding and succeeding month in smaller type in the margin. It is a rich and practical piece of work.

SOMETHING IN RETURN.

"Mother, here is the saddest story of a very brave king, and it doesn't even tell what his name was!" exclaimed Elsie Graham, looking up from her book.

"What did he do," mother asked, "that he should get into that wonderful book of yours?"

"He made a law that any person who committed a certain sin should have both eyes put out; and, mother, think of it! the first person who broke the law was his own son, whom he loved very much. The king knew if he didn't punish his own son, nobody would keep the law, and what do you think he did? To save his own son from being altogether blind, he had only one of his son's eyes put out, and one of his own, and the law was always kept after that. And the king's son loved his father so much and was so sorry for his sin, that he tried never to do wrong again. Wasn't it wonderful, mother, that his father loved him enough to suffer so terribly, especially when he had been so wicked?"

"Yes, it was wonderful, Elsie, but there is the story of another King, whose love was so wonderful, that he died that others might be saved from punishment and suffering."

"You mean Jesus, mother, don't you?" Elsie asked.

"Yes, Elsie, Jesus in His wonderful love for us offered to die on the cross that we might not be punished for our sins. And there is only one way in which we can show our loving gratitude to Him for His wonderful gift."

"Isn't it just what the king's son gave, mother?"

"Yes, we must show our love for Him by wanting to give up our sins. You remember He said Himself, 'If ye love Me, keep My commandments.'".

"I'm so glad, mother,' said Elsie, shutting her book, "that there is something we can do in return."—Selected.

NO HERALD NEXT WEEK.

Next week is Christmas week, the one good week in all the year that brings us a vacation. We wish all our readers a joyful Christmas. We say good-bye now and hope to greet you early in 1920.

—Bro. [illegible] has been at his post in [illegible] for [illegible] and has made a fine impression [illegible] people and [illegible] address. His two [illegible] on Sunday were of such a character as to cause the habitual church [illegible], if we have such a character, to sit up and take notice. We are hoping for a [illegible] and progress.

[illegible] sending us a [illegible] "The [illegible] Behind the Door." We hope to print this early in 1920.

WHAT THE WORLD PROHIBITION MOVEMENT MEANS BY LAW ENFORCEMENT.

There is such a misconception on the part of the general public in regard to the meaning of the law enforcement slogan, as used by the World Prohibition Movement, that a word of explanation is necessary.

As Dr. Baker, the originator of the worldwide prohibition idea, so clearly stated at the conference in Greensboro on December 9, the money subscribed for continuing the fight against the abuse of alcohol will not be used for employing detectives or other such work for the apprehension of those engaged in the illegal traffic or manufacture of whiskey, that being left to the officers of the law, state and federal, whose duty is it to run down criminals and see that they are given fair and impartial trials by a jury of their peers. The World Prohibition Movement proposes merely to carry on a continuous campaign of education for the highest standards of American citizenship, a fundamental principle of which will be respect for all duly constituted authority; obedience to and upholding of all laws enacted by representatives elected by the people, of which the prohibition law is one in which the citizens of the entire United States are just now especially interested; to so mould public sentiment in favor of law and order that the public official who fails to live up to the obligations of his oath will not be allowed to remain in office very long. To stand back of these officers by moral support of the best people of every community is the kind of law enforcement that will be undertaken by the World Prohibition Movement, rather than any attempt of individuals to assume the duties of public officers or to seemingly question the ability of the state or national government to enforce their own laws.

The work in foreign lands is to be purely missionary, the same as sending them the Christian religion or the result of our experience in any other field of science or invention. It is not an attempt to FORCE OUR VIEWS on other countries, as is claimed by some of the uninformed, but in response to a call for help to fight this common enemy of mankind, the same as they called upon America to help them fight the Germans and feed the starving. The most oppressive of all kings is yet to be conquered. Shall old King Alcohol be dethroned?

GLEANINGS FROM THE METHODIST RECORDER.

—President J. C. Williams D.D., of Westminster College, Tehuacana, Texas, has been elected president also of the Texas Conference, and is performing both of these official duties with equal fidelity and efficiency. The conference work makes him so much "the prophet of the long road" that he finds it necessary to discontinue his articles on the Sunday-school lessons in the columnns of the Recorder. We share with our readers the profoundest regret that he feels compelled to withhold these splendid contributions for the time being, but we recognize the greater claim of the work in the great Southwest. As a sure result of the progressive work being planned and initiated by the presidents of the Southwestern conferences, in conjunction with the many progressive pastors in that region, we hope for good news from every quarter of that vast and promising field. God bless and prosper the heroic champions of liberal Methodism in the great Southwest!

—We regret to learn of the serious illness of Rev. A. G. Dixon, secretary of our Young People's Board, who was stricken while on his way to the Mississsippi Conference, and is now under treatment in the Grady Hospital at Atlanta, Ga. He is repored somewhat better, and it is hoped that he will be able to return to his home in Baltimore this week.

—Rev. O. W. Bolton, pastor of our church at Dunbar, Pa., held a father-and-son banquet last Thursday evening, December 4, with an address by Rev. E. S. Hawkins, of Uniontown

Editorial Commeht.

—A mere declaration of peace by the United States Congress, without impoosing any conditions upon Germany, and without demanding from the defeated Central powers any acknowledgment of their defeat, and without requiring any safeguards for the emancipated millions of Europe, and even without proposing to do our own share in the reconstruction of a broken world—such a conclusion of peace would be absurd and disloyal.

—Every citizen knows, even without appeal to the statistics on the subject, that intemperance, through the pauperism and the crime for which it is always responsible, costs communities and nations vastly more in the form of taxes than any revenues ever assessed upon it by any government.

—The whole diabolical business of dealing in strong drink is behind the times, as well as being in itself a crime against humanity; and those who seek to resuscitate this fallen enemy of the human family might just as well undertake to revive the mummies of Egypt.

—If we surrender the advanced schools of civilization to secular influences, and to the schools of doubt and unbelief which are now abroad everywhere throughout the world, then Christian civilization will surely lose its hold upon the nations and the ethics of the gospel will pass away. How important, therefore, becomes the Christian college. If Christianity departs from the school room and from the college halls of the earth, it will soon depart from the homes and the hearts of men. The higheer education determines the literature of the world, and the literature of the world determines the life of the world. The Christian college is the very citadel of our civilization. The Methodist Protestant Church has many great responsibilities to meet at this crisis of the world's history, but none of these is greater than that of sustaining and developing her splendid schools Our colleges are thoroughly Christian in their environment and in every class room influence.

GLEANINGS FROM THE METHODIST PROTESTANT.

Ten persons were received into the membership of the First Methodist Protestant church of Newark, N. J., on Sunday last, at their monthly communion service, making 33 in all toward the quota assigned them by the Forward Movement Commission.

—The executive committee of the denomination decided to make Christmas Sunday Educational Day throughout the Methodist Protestant Church.

Seminary Notes

Among the many interesting things of our seminary, there is one no doubt will be of special interest to the people of the North Carolina Conference, inasmuch as two North Carolinians are involved;—namely, E. A. Bingham and J. H. Hardy.

Dr. Van Dyke, a member of our faculty, who spent twenty-seven years as our missionary in Japan, has just closed a series of lectures on mission work and personal experience in the Orient The lectures being of such vital interest and value to the student body, a prize of $10 was offered by the institution to the student producing the best outline of the entire course of lectures. You will be delighted to know that the above-named men were the winners. The committee deciding that they had tied for honor, the prize was divided equally between them.

Dr. Van Dyke gave us a new insight into the missionary work of our church. We thoroughly appreciate him and the work he has done for our church. Only wish that all the people of our denomination could hear his lectures. Surely foreign missions would find a warmer place in the hearts of our people.

Jos. S. Endicott,
Student from Indiana Conference.

Pastors will please advise us when they wish their addresses changed and give us all the particulars of their new address. We want right now the present address of Rev. J. M. Morgan, although we know he is living near St. Paul's church.

—One hundred million people of Europe are threatened with starvation during the winter, declared Sir George Paish in London.

—More than eight hundred desertions have occurred from the American Army every month since March, 1919.

—A Hunter's remedy for warts is given as follows: Heat castor oil, or similar thick oil, and apply to the wart with a stick or brush. Three treatments, he says, usually finish the wart.

—"Pre-War Quality" is one of the new advertising slogans that have appeared—in Europe.

—Miss Belle Totten, of Yadkin College, was a visitor at Grace church last Sunday. She reminded Bro. J. W. Causey that she was one of his pupils.

—The supper given last Saturday night by Bro. J. M Stone's Baraca Class to the entire church, with the Wills Philathea class as guests of honor, made a very enjoyable occasion, and was attended by a "packed house."

—Rev. J. A Ledbetter writes: Albemarle is a big field for work. I think I will like the job.

—Bro. F. W. H. Stone, of Grace church, has been elected to an important office—that of president of the State Farmers' Union. This will require the bulk of his time and the assistance of two stenographers. His office will be in Greensboro. We wish him success.

THE BEST KIND.

“I wish,” said Sarah Dean, resolutely winking a tear from her eye, “I had five cents, even! Seems awful not to be able to give a thing to anybody, at Christmas time.” She poked a small white finger disconsolately about the stem of the sturdy red geranium that was blossoming so brightly all by itself in the window.

Her Cousin Peggy came flying up the walk, eyes like stars, and cheeks all aglow: “Hurry, Sa! Hurry!” she cried breathlessly “Come on down to Lee's and help me buy my Christmas things. I've got a dollar—a whole dollar! Ma just gave it to me!”

Catching her red cap from the stand Sarah pulled it down over her bushy locks. Then she paused: “I don't believe,” she said irresolutely, “I quite ought to go. Ma's got an awful headache. I ought to do these dishes.” With a little backward gesture, she indicated the yet uncleareed table.

“Bother the dishes!” Peg's voice was impatient. “You have the most awful conscience, Sarah Dean! If you wasn't my cousin, I'd—I'd”— Peg hesitated, then, next moment, she caught the wistful gleam in her cousin's eyes, and being a good-natured Peggy she changed her mind about what she had been intending to say, and left the sentence unfinished. “Tell you what,” she proposed instead, “just stack 'em back out of sight, some place, and do 'em when you get back.”

“I suppose I might,” hesitated Sarah

“How much you got?” asked Peg.

“Not a cent,” Sarah's face grew hot, but she held her head a little more straightly erect. “Pa's been having hard times, he says,” she explained, “and I just can't ask him, or Ma, for a single cent. And any-how, the most I want is to get something for them. I guess they need the money lots more'n anything I'd get.”

“I never had a whole dollar before,” said Peg, “but I aways have something. It must be horrid not to have anything.”

“Well,” replied Sarah sturdily, “I guess I can stand it.” But her eyes were moist, and she swallowed hard. Then, suddenly, she put down the pile of dishes she was carrying. “An' I just can't go, Peg,” she declared resolutely. “I told Ma if she'd lie down, I'd do the dishes. She did, and now if I don't do 'em I'll have told a lie.”

Said Peg, “I wouldn't have your conscience for a farm!” and she banged the door a little as she went out.

For a short time Sarah's face was downcast, but after a bit she gave her dark, bushy curls an emphatic shake. “Sarah Ellie Dean,” she scolded, “you deserve to be shook! What you moping about? If you can't have anything, you can't; that's all there is about it. Now—sing!” Next moment her voice rang softly out in the words of an old Christmas song.

A second later the song was hushed, however, as something sweet and almost timid came slowly into her eyes. Her lips curved slowly. “The Bible says ‘Ask, and ye shall receive,’ ” she said thoughtfully, “and I'm just starting out to live by the Bible. Maybe I don't know yet how to ask right, but Mother says the way to learn how to do things is to try. And, anyhow—”

Her sentence unfinished, she dried her hands and slipped to her knees; “Oh, God,” she said, “I want so much—so much—to give Mother and Daddy a Christmas gift. Please fix it, God, so I may.” A moment she remained kneeling, looking gravely and reverently upward, into the clear sky. Then, rising, she continued her dishes. But all the shadow had left her heart.

Mrs. Dean's headache did not let up. She tried to get up toward dinner time, but Sarah coaxed her to return to her room. She even found time while the potatoes were boiling to bathe the hot temples and leave cool, wet cloths on them Peg ran in for a moment after dinner to show her gifts, but Sarah was too busy to give them more than a passing thought. “You see,” she confided “Mother always plans an extra nice supper for Christmas eve, and even if she is sick I don't want Pa to miss it too much, so I'm making his favorite cake and custards. Pa does love custards. I'm making his in a bowl.”

“Mother's been trying to get me to learn to cook,” returned Peg, “but I don't seem to get at it.” She opened the door, and a rush of crisp Christmas air rushed in. “Well,” she said, stepping outside, “I wish you a merry Christmas, Sa. But seems to me it won't be very merry, without any presents to give, and all the work to do.”

With a little laugh Sarah broke a couple of eggs into a mixing bowl: “Why,” she said, “I don't find much, now, Peg. Somehow, I feel pretty Christmassy, after all. It's Christ's birthday, you know, whether we give presents, or get them, or anything else.”

“Uh-ha,” agreed Peg, and closed the door.

But when the table was at last ready, and she heard her father's step on the walk, Sarah was pretty tired. The very last thing was done, and it seemed good to sit down in the big chair by the window as he came briskly into the roof.

Pausing abruptly he glanced about the room. “Mother still in bed?” he asked. Then, not waiting for an answer: “ 'Tisn't every girl could do that!” His eyes were on the table, with its snowy cloth; the delicately browned potatoes and thin, even slices of meat; the flaky biscuits; the cake, light as a feather, and the custards and fresh, new apple sauce In the center was a flaming red geranium.

Sarah's face filled with a joyous glow. Her eyes were very bright. “Is it good enough for Christmas eve?” she asked shyly.

“Good enorgh. It's good enough for ten Christmas presents, such as one generally gets, all rolled into one!” His tone was emphatic. “And by the way,” he continued, “Jones came in today and left this,” drawing a crisp dollar bill from his pocket. “He said it had just popped into his head that he didn't pay you for looking after his youngsters last week the day his wife was sick.”

“But—why—I didn't expect pay. I just could. and did.”

“That's what Jones said, and he said he didn't think of it, either, until all at once what a comfort it was to his wife. He said this afternoon when it popped into his head you might call it pay, or a Christmas present, or anything you liked.”

Sarah caught her breath. A look of almost solemn joy was in her eyes. “I guess, Daddy,” she said softly, “I'll call it just —an answered—prayer.” Then, with another little breath—“And, oh, Daddy, can I go down to the store after supper?”

“Sure,” said her father, heartily. “I'm going down myself.” He placed a shining half dollar on the crisp new bill. “I guess I can afford that, too,” he said. “A girl who can work and sing, and pray all in one is worth it. She's the best sort of a present any father, or mother either, could ask.” Bending, he left an unaccustomed kiss on her full, red lips.—Lucy D. Stearns, in Congregationalist.

A LITTLE BOY'S PRAYER.

A missionary in India passing one day through the school-room, observed a little boy engaged in prayer, and overheard him say, “Oh, Lord Jesus, I thank thee for sending big ship into my country and wicked men to steal me and bring me here, that I might hear about thee and love thee. And now, Lord Jesus, I have one great favor to ask thee. Please to send wicked men with another big ship, and let them catch my father and mother, and bring them to this country, that they may hear the missionaries preach, and love thee.”

The missionary in a few days after saw him standing on the sea-shore, looking very intently as the ships came in.

“What are you looking at, Tom?

“I am looking to see if Jesus Christ answers prayer.”

For two years he was to be seen day after day watching the arrival of every ship. One day, as the missionary was viewing him, he observed him capering about and exhibiting the liveliest joy.

“Well, Tom, what gives you so much joy?”

“Oh, Jesus Christ answers prayer. Father and mother come in that ship,” which was actually the case.—Selected.

“IT'S ME, JESUS.”

At a religious meeting in the south of London a timid little girl desired the prayers of Christians for her that she might be saved; so she said to the gentleman conducting the meeting:

“Will you pray for me in the meeting, please? But do not mention my name.”

In the meeting that followed, when every head was bowed silent in prayer, this gentleman prayed for a little girl who wanted to come to Jesus, and he said:

“O Lord, there is a little girl who does not want her name known, but thou dost know her; save her precious soul, Lord.”

There was perfect silence for an instant, then away in the back of the meeting a little voice said:

“Please, it's me, Jesus—it's me!”

She did not want any doubt or uncertainty. She wanted to se saved, and she was not ashamed to rise in that meeting, little girl as she was, and say:

“It's me, Jesus. it's me.”

PRESIDENT'S LETTER.

GETTING A GOOD START—

Many a race is won because the runner was prompt in starting—could make a good start, without which the race surely would have been lost. Many a pastor has succeeded in doing what was thought an impossible amount of work during the year because he began at the proper time to begin a year's work. There are but few of us talented enough to do a whole year's work in less than 365 days, but about all of us who think we all could avoid this failure by beginning to plan our work soon as conference adjourn and then get on the work immediately thereafter and begin to carry out these plans. I seriously doubt that those charges which have the habit of not paying all their obligations would be in that class if they would begin in December to plan and organize for the work set for them by the annual conference. And I seriously question whether many of those charges which have the habit of paying all claims could do it, were they to wait until January or February to make their plans for the year. DO NOT FORGET—it takes 365 days to make a year, and it requires about all the time on the job to do a really good job of work allotted for that number of days.

"HE WAS VERY ANGRY AND WOULD NOT GO IN"—

This little sentence is pregnant with meaning—it is an illuminator of human nature. That elder brother who stood on the outside of the house and would not go in to the feast prepared for his prodigal brother shows that the spirit is not dead yet. And it is often shown not only towards the prodigal who returned but towards the [illegible] [illegible] sulks in his [illegible] just like this Achilles [illegible] he quits; he calls [illegible] he hears the better [illegible] nurses his insult. He was a [illegible] nothing was [illegible] but now he faints beneath the [illegible] a supposed neglect, slight or [illegible] insinuation of some one who could talk a half a day after he or she had quit thinking.

Some of you pastors may find this Achilles nursing a grievance: he did not greet you on your first appointment, he rather delighted his soul in the hope that not many would be present to hear your first message. He wanted things to [illegible] up and to fail, now that he is not there; he wants it to be known that the work cannot go forward without him, and he is angry: be that well advertised. Publish this in Gath, send the tidings over into Samaria, declare it in Mount Zion. Now, little Achilles, now spoilt elder brother, come along and be a real man. Stop this baby business, these are the stunts of a child, they do not belong to a grown-up; get over it, let it scale off. You ought to do better than this, and if you will forget these things you will be happier than you have ever been.

MEBANE STATION, Rev. C. L. Whitaker, D. D., Pastor.

It was my privilege to hold the first quarterly conference of this church last Wednesday evening. It is a new station, just made by the last conference. They are undertaking to do about three times as much as has been done in a year previously. It was wonderful to see these people assuming their conference obligatione and pastor's salary for the new year which total $1600 with a calm resolution worthy a church that had had years of practice at such financial obligations. They had already paid the pastor one month's salary and nearly the amount due for general interests and had pounded him severely before I reached him; so about all I could do was to extend congratulations to pastor and people and return home.

I am expecting this church to do a splendid work this year. The pastor has been kindly received, good congregation had greeted him and the people have a mind to do things.

RANDOLPH CHARGE, Rev. W. F. Ashburn, Pastor.

I held the first quarterly conference and preached at Shiloh church on Saturday. Weather conditions were rather threatening and many of those who could discern the signs of the sky were absent. But it was a good conference, a most sumptuous dinner was spread, and while enjoying it, I could not help thinking of those who were so thoughtless as to miss it. The pastor's salary had been raised from $800 to $1,000 and this was apportioned together with the slight increase in general interest, which amounted to only $15 for the charge—the circuit is now [illegible] 35 per cent. of pastor's salary. And on Sunday Shiloh and Gray's Chapel both elected [illegible] stewards who are to see [illegible] and pay during the year.

The Sunday congregations were doubtless [illegible] by the weather. By the [illegible] and we did not [illegible] at Gray's [illegible] services at both [illegible] to be on the [illegible] Two churches [illegible] will all [illegible] pastor's salary in full [illegible] than to get on the [illegible] this year, for they are able to do [illegible] and do it with great ease.

Gray's Chapel is a strong country church. [illegible] the Lord would [illegible] some of the boys and [illegible] of this community into the Christian ministry and into mission work across the sea, old Gray's would put on her [illegible] and show what she is really able to do. We want to see this happen and somehow feel that it will happen at no distant day.

Brother Ashburn is popular with the people at all churches; there was a unanimous request for his return, and the salary was increased with that in view. In many respects Randolph is a desirable charge to serve. Four churches composed of good people, with many young people attending them, giving both pastor and people a great opportunity to do a great work.

Fraternally, R. M. Andrews.

NORTH CAROLINA PROSPEROUS.

The year just closed in North Carolina was [illegible] the best in the history of the conference. President Andrews has been tireless in his efforts to marshal and lead his forces, and the response has been gratifying, especially along material lines. The spiritual resources are not overlooked or minimized as the outcome of the Increase Campaign will show, if we mistake not, for the men of that body are zealous for spiritual values. For the first time conference accepted the General Conference budget in full, amounting to $14,150. Forty-one charges increased their pastor's salary, the increase aggregating nearly $10,000. There are now but seven charges with salary less than $1,000, and this does not include the rental value of the parsonage. A special assessment of $8,000 for church extension was undertaken. Twelve ministerial and twelve lay delegates were elected to General Conference. This is an increase of two over 1916. The Million Dollar Campaign showed a deficiency of $25,000 to $27,000, but steps are being taken to raise that amount, conference having strongly endorsed the follow-up and appointed the Forward Movement Commission to direct the undertaking. The Increase Campaign and the campaign for the assessments in full will be worked during the year. Rev. J. E. Pritchard, chairman of the Forward Movement Commission, has started the year with a good [illegible] in his own church at Burlington, three new members the first Sunday following conference, and two the second.

Crates S. Johnson,
Executive Secretary F. M. C.

—London medical students who mobbed "[illegible]" Johnson have explained to the [illegible] that they formed their plans on the impression that he was a man about 30 years old. Johnson is 57.

—The first German ship to arrive at a Canadian port since the war, came in on December [illegible] with torn sails and battered hulk. Though almost foundering at sea, she could see no passing ships to assist her after her flag was known.

APPORTIONMENT OF THE 25 PER CENT. INCREASE GOALS TO THE ANNUAL CONFERENCES.

General Conference proposed a 25 per cent. increase in membership as a reasonable aim for the quadrennium. The last year and a half the Million Dollar Campaign has engrossed our attention, but the other hemisphere of our forward movement program has not been overlooked. Now that we are in the Increase Campaign, when the whole church is beginning to stir with the evangelistic appeal, it is well to remind ourselves of the high objectives the general conference has set for us. When the 25 per cent. increase was proposed, it was with the intention that it should be brought down in plain figures to each conference and church as a practical objective.

There is something incongruous in the suggestion of figures as applied to results which can be measured fully only in terms of the spiritual. We all confess that numerical increase is not a gauge of the fruits of a revival, nor is the strength of a church measured by the number of members it enrolls. But other things being equal, size is a worthy objective, and there is no virtue in being small, per se. Mere increase in membership is not the highest objective. Better win people to Christ first The Increase Campaign program has as its first objective the winning of men, women and children to Christ Their joining the Methodist Protestant Church is secondary. Nothing more is claimed for the 25 per cent. goal. This goal if it is reached, must be reached by indirection. It is reasonable to suppose that as a by-product of an intense and perennial evangelistic appeal there may be this numerical increase. And the strength of that appeal may be measured in part by its results in numerical increase. Using the figures of the conference immediately preceding the General Conference of 1916 as a basis, the 25 per cent. increase has been worked out for each conference and the goals are submitted in the following table, which shows the membership reported in 1915, including ministerial membership, and the enrollment which should obtain in April, 1920, if the 25 per cent. goal is reached It will be for the Annual Conference Forward Movement Commissions themselves to determine whether they will assume their pro rata. We hope each will accept the full quota and apportion the numbér to their charges. One or two conferences have already reacheed the mark, but additional goals will be proposed. The membership in 1915 (except for Maryland, whose report for 1916 is given) is here given, with the goals for 1920.

A FEW QUESTIONS.

The Word of God has always taught us old people that our Creator made man to do one kind of work and woman to do another kind. He gave the woman the next place to Himself and gave her the most important work that any human being could accomplish.

When Paul gave us our instruction as to what we should do, and what we should not do, he meant no reflection on our executive ability or religion, but wanted us to understand that best results could not come to the human family by our doing a man's work, and neglecting our own.

We have our instruction all through God's Word that man must attend to his business, and woman to hers.

In this great age of wisdom and knowledge (?) we have a new version of God's will to usward, in which we are taught by that party that wears the cloven foot that to run the church successfully laymen must be relieved of every ecclesiastical duty, and women must take their place. They must not be expected to do anything except a little wind work now and then. It is an established fact that every child of God is stronger today than he was a month ago or he is weaker. How does a Christian get strength? The Word of God says, "They that wait on the Lord shall renew their strength."

To gain strength we must labor in the vineyard of the Lord. The new version says that to gain strength we must loaf around on the outside, and make someone else labor. Common reason teaches us that when we fail to labor for God our spiritual strength is shrinking away every day.

Now will Brother Dosier and any other minister or layman answer this question—Is it conducive to strength of Christian character in the male members of the church to force the ecclesiastical work of the church on the already overburdened shoulders of the female members?

Also, Can a church member keep the golden rule and nominate or vote for another member to hold an office that they positively refuse to hold themselves? Last year we had two female stewards apopinted, and the next day I met a neighbor at a store, and he asked me if we did not have any men that could hold that office. A bystander remarked—"I can tell you how that is: The men in the churches are of no manner of acocunt in this world. If the work is not done by the women it will not be done at all" And yet they will laugh you to scorn if you say such remarks as that are a reflection on the church.

Now from my training I see a man gaining physical strength from a woman eating for him as easily as he can gain spiritual strength from a woman working for him.

If we have no man with executive ability, and religion enough to hold the office of steward the fifteen-year-old boys might be trained to hold the office. His mother could instruct him in the duties of the office at night while he is repairing the family linen. It would surely strengthen his Christian character through life, and do away with the awful calamity that bids fair to wreck the church eternally, when men are being trained to believe that they can save their souls with less of the love of God in their hearts than it would take to do the work of the church.

I know women are going to be mighty lonesome in heaven unless there is a mighty change in the near future.

We are told that we must have women stewards for people will pay a woman when they would not pay a man. If a church member has religion he will pay anybody. If he has not we have no right to expect him to pay, but when it becomes "fashionable" again to preach Jesus Christ and him crucified we will have no more trouble collecting dues.

Just think of the absurdity of a woman that has every moment of her waking existence crowded to the limit, with labor that cannot be shirked, having to lay down everything, and go six or eight miles to report to a quarterly conference when a dozen efficient male members are loafing around some public place or flying over the country in an automobile. It is a shame to any church. Now come forward with your Bible proof that I am wrong.

HELP APPRECIATED.

I have received the following letter from the widow of one of our most faithful ministers. I believe that our people in North Carolina, and especially those who had a part in the Thank Offering at Conference will read this letter with a great deal of pleasure.

"Have just received the nice gift from Conference Thank you very, very much for your kind remembrance of one who is so humble and appreciative for the favor conferred on me. It is such a help to me, that my loving gratitude goes out to you all. And may God's richest blessing rest upon you and yours. And there is so much of the Christ spirit manifest in the special check, that I want to thank you again. I trust that you will thank you again. I trust that you will will realize Divine guidance and protection through life Hope you had a harmonious Conference."

I have withheld the name, thinking that the good woman who wrote the letter would prefer that I do so.

J. Norman Wills.

"Make the world better just where you are,
  Life is too short for repining;
Leave the hard things for others to say,
  And just keep your own light shining.
"Speak the words some are waiting to hear
  And leave out the note of sorrow;
If clouds hang heavy and dark today,
  Just talk of the glad tomorrow."

Never bear more than one kind of trouble at one time Some people bear three—all they have now, all they ever had, and all they expect to have.

Consecration is not wrapping one' self in a holy web in the sanctuary: it is going into the world and using every power for God's glory.—Henry Ward Beecher.

In Kind.

Most timely gifts are a pair shoes for a little girl, from Mrs. D. A Cornelison, Seagrove, and 67 yards gingham from the Salisbury Cotton Mills. Every mill that has sent cloth has sent just the thing we have been needing. Mr. Nat M. Pickett, Madison, never forgets the table. It is a barrel Quaker oatmeal this time, just the thing we have been longing for. The donations in kind have all been appropriate. Had we made suggestions we could not have improved

I am keeping in touch with the Baptists and the Christians and I am sorry to note that our churches are so far behind in making Thanksgiving offerings to our Children's Home. The Christian church is no stronger financially than ours and we are falling far behind it in our Thanksgiving. Now if you have not made a Thanksgiving offering or did not give as much as you like let us have a good offering during the Christmas holidays and apply it to our boys' building fund.

Everything points to a merry Christmas for us and we wish for every reader of this report a merry Christmas and a happy prosperous new year. H. A. Garrett.

CHRIST WAS BORN ON CHRISTMAS DAY.

Speed the message on its way,
Christ was born on Christmas Day,
Left His throne and came to earth,
Angels heralded His birth,
As they sang o'er Judah's hill—
"Peace on earth—to men good-will!"
Swell the chorus of the sky—
"Glory be to God Most High;"
Speed the message on its way,
Christ was born on Christmas Day.
He whom men and angels praise,
Lord of lords, Ancient of Days,
Came to rescue and to save
Men from darkness and the grave,
Came to set the captive free,
And awake earth's jubilee;
Hail Him King—our lives to bless,
Jesus Christ our righteousness;—
Speed the message on its way,
Christ was born on Christmas Day.
Tell the story o'er and o'er,
Spread the news from shore to shore,—
"For the weary there is rest,"
And in Christ mankind is blest:
"Tidings of great joy," 'tis true,
Love Incarnate, man may view—
"He is Savior, Christ the Lord,"
Owned on earth, in heaven adored;—
Speed the message on its way,
Christ was born on Christmas Day.

IF I KNEW.

If I knew the box where the smiles were kept,
No matter how large the key
Or strong the bolt, I would try so hard,
'Twould open, I know, for me;
Then over the land and sea broadcast
I'd scatter the smiles to play,
That the children's faces might hold them fast
For many and many a day.
If I knew a box that was large enough
To hold all the frowns I meet,
I would like to gather them, every one,
From nursery, school, and street;
Then, folding and holding, I'd pack them in,
And, turning the monster key,
I'd hire a giant to drop the box
To the depths of the deepest sea.

RAGGED TOM, THE SURETY.

On Sunday afternoon a big boy stood at the door of the Sunday school. He was so bad that he had been turned out of school the Sunday before. His father and mother brought him, and begged he might be received in again. The superintendent said: "We should be glad to do him good, but we are afraid he will ruin all the other children. It is very bad for a school when a big boy sets a wicked example."

"We know he is a bad boy at school," said his parents, "but he is ten times worse at home, and he will be lost if you do not take him back."

"We could take him back if we could secure his good behavior. I will see," thought the superintendent.

So he stepped back into the school, and rang the bell for silence. All listened while he said, "That boy wants to come into the school again, but we cannot take him back without making sure of his good behavior. Will any one be surety for him?"

A pause followed. The other boys shook their heads. They said they knew him too well. The others did not care for him. But one little boy pitied the big bad boy, and was very sorry no one would be surety. The little boy went by the name of "Ragged Tom." It was not his fault that he was ragged, for his mother was very poor. The superintendent still heard the little voice, "If you please, sir, I will, sir."

"You, Tom? a little boy like you? Do you know what is meant by being a surety, Tom?"

"Yes, sir, if you please: it means that when he is a bad boy I am to be punished for it"

"And are you willing to be punished for that big boy?"

"Yes, sir, if he's bad again."

"Then come in," said the superintendent, looking to the door; and the big boy, with a downcast face, walked across the floor. He was thinking as he walked, "I know I'm a bad boy, but I'm not so bad as that! I'll never let that little fellow be punished for me—no, never." God had graciously put that thought into the big boy's mind. He was helping Tom as a surety.

As the children were leaving school, the superintendent saw the big boy and little Tom walking together. He said to himself, "I am afraid that boy will do Tom harm. I must go and look after them."

When he reached the cottage when Tom lived, he said to his mother, "Where is your son Tom?"

"Oh, he's just gone upstairs with a great boy he brought with him. I don't know what they are doing"

"May I go up?"

"Oh, yes, sir."

The superintendent went softly and quickly up the stairs, and as he reached the top, he could see through the door that Tom and the boy were kneeling together. He soon heard Tom's voice saying, "O Lord, make this boy that has been the worst boy in the school, O Lord, make him the best."

The superintendent knelt by Tom's side, and they all prayed together.

God heard them, and he made the big boy one of the best boys in the school, and raised up friends for "Ragged Tom," who put him to school, and after that sent him to college, so that at length he went as a missionary to the heathen.—Unknown.

HER CHOICE.

"Oh, mother, Mrs. Grant has asked me to sing at her musicale next Tuesday evening. Can you realize what an opportunity it is? All the worth-while people will be there. Several real celebrities have been invited—Dr. Darnelle, the scientist, and Mr. Oldsman, whose books have been creating such a stir in all the northern cities and—oh, lots of real people." Jean Ware's face was glowing with happiness. Her eyes shone and her cheeks burned with excitement.

"I'm proud of you, Jean," answered Mrs. Ware, "and it makes me happy when people ask you to sing. But why are you so elated over singing at Mrs. Grant's musicale?"

"Because, mother, almost always when I sing in public it is in church. Of course I'm glad to help with the church music, but I do want to be recognized by the public. Dearest mother, you just can't know how it thrills you to hear people applauding you. I thrill to hear them clapping their hands for an encore. These people are interested in other things besides the church, and if I sing well at Mrs. Grant's, someone is sure to ask me to sing somewhere else. Each time I sing before these people of the world I'm just so much nearer being famous. Motherby, do you think I'll be able to go North this fall to study? Oh, I can hardly wait to begin to study. I will sing in grand opera. Then, motherby, you can have anything money can buy. And won't you be proud of me when you are sitting in a box in the Metropolitan Theater listening to your Jean sing?"

The little mother's eyes were glowing, too, now, for she was proud of her daughter's voice. She was thinking of the words of Jean's instructor, the little Frenchman. He had said, "Madam Ware, Mlle. Jean, she haf ze wonderful voice. Some day she will—ah —what you call make ze world sit up and take ze notice."

Jean stood at her mother's side and gently smoothed Mrs. Ware's shining hair Both were silent for the moment—each dreaming her own dream.

"When is the musicale to be, Jean?"

"Tuesday evening, mother. I know I have an engagement to sing at the Ladies' Aid social, but they can get someone to take my place, for I just can't let this opportunity slip by."

"But, Jean, who gave you your voice? The Master, you say. And what are you doing for him? The Ladies' Aid is working for him and they need your help. Are you furthering the Master's kingdom when you wilfully break your previous engagement and sing before this audience of worldly people?"

"Oh, mother, don't put it that way. Surely you don't realize what an opportunity the musicale is. Mr. Oldsman's opinion is worth so much If he is pleased with my voice he is sure to give me a big newspaper notice. When I've won my place in the world I intend to do much for the Master. Only think how much money I could give if I were a grand opera singer. We could support a foreign missionary—each of us."

"Jean," said Mrs. Ware thoughtfully, "this is for you to decide. But think it over at least till morning."

"All right, mother, and now I believe I'll lie down for a little while. My head aches."

Sometime later Mrs Ware went to Jean's room and found her really ill. Her cheeks were burning with fever, so the doctor was called. Dr. Moore asked many questions and finally said that she had a malignant case of measles.

"Of course," he said, "she isn't dangerously ill, but her throat seems to be troubling her and she needs careful attention, so I'm going to send a trained nurse."

That night Jean's fever went so high that she became delirious. Most of her ravings were unintelligible, but the nurse said she frequently heard her say, "Who gave you your voice? What are you doing for him?" All through the long days of burning fever the doctor paid closest attention to her throat. Then finally there came a change. The patient became quiet. The wild ravings ceased and she slept soundly for many hours

"Where—where's mother?" were her first words when she awoke. "Why—I can't talk—what's the matter with my voice?" Jean was speaking in a whisper! "I—I can't talk. Call mother."

* * * *

When Dr. Moore came he decided to call another doctor for consultation. The doctors talked together for half an hour. At the close of the conference Dr. Moore's face was grave and his eyes were full of pity. "Miss Jean," he began, "I'm sorry——"

"Oh, no, doctor! Don't tell me my voice is gone I can't bear it. If that's all you have to say, please go and leave me alone. Just leave me alone for a while. I want to think."

Sometime later she held out her hand to her mother. "Mother," she whispered, "the Master gave me my voice and he has taken it away from me because I was doing nothing for him. Oh, he loved me enough to die for me and I haven't loved him enough to use his gift for him—to help others to know of his love. Mother, if he'd only give it back to me I'd use it for him. Oh, Master,

"'Take my voice and let me sing
Always, only, for my King.'"

Mrs. Ware's face was wet with tears and her voice was shaking, but together they prayed to the King to give back Jean's voice so that she might use it for him.

Two years later at a meeting of the missionary society a missionary from the foreign field—home on furlough—was making a talk. "I want to tell you about your own missionary, Miss Jean Ware. She is doing a wonderful work. The natives almost worship her. The last time I saw her she was sitting on the grass in front of her little cottage crooning a lullaby to a little Japanese boy who had stumped his toe. She sings beautifully and her voice is often the means of softening the hearts of many heathen"—Selected.

AN ETERNAL CHRISTMAS.

Would'st thou, this joyous Christmas tide,
Commemorate the birth
Of Him who came and lived and died
For those who dwell on earth?

Give thou thyself, nor count the cost,
'Tis for our Lord and King.
Lift thou the fallen, seek the lost,
And to the Saviour bring.

Work thus begun continue thou
Till life's brief race is run,
Thus keeping love's most sacred vow
Till He shall say, "Well done."

Then all of life will Christmas be—
New-birth to setting sun,
Yea, on to vast eternity
Where He and we are one.

FATHERS, MAKE COMPANIONS OF YOUR BOYS.

One of the best men I ever knew gave to this country three splendid sons, loyal, capable and conscientious. I once asked him how he managed to do it. He said: "I have always made my boys my companions." In the intimate comradeship of father and son there arose the occasion to teach the boys what it is to be a really fine American and a Christian gentleman. The father's wise procedure made three eminent citizens of his sons.

The strength of a nation lies in its spiritual forces, not in its material gains, and the great agencies that conserve spiritual ideals are the home, the church and the school. Unfortunately the home, where most of this should be done, really does the least. All parents holding love for children and country will endeavor to perform their most important duty of maintaining and imparting high ideals, for in the coming days as never before we must give intelligent guidance to our children.

My own father, after church, on Sunday afternoon, often accompanied his three boys to the mountain or forests. There in the cool and silence he gave us many suggestions that have ripened into inestimable good in the years that have come and gone that he can no longer walk with us. We do not see him, but we do feel his presence and gratefully follow his fine teachings.

I urge all fathers to have personal and intimate converse with their sons, and this can be done from the time they are tiny fellows. Impress lofty ideals of duty to God and country. Teach the values of the great cardinal virtues of courtesy, reliability and humility, without which life is a mockery.—Bureau of Education.

What the eye is to the body, faith is to the soul. You don't dig your eyes out to see if you have the right kind, but you are doing that to your faith.—D. L. Moody.

The Christmas Message

M. A message of cheer. Isa. 40:1-11.
T. Spirit of friendliness. 2 Tim. 1:1-16.
W. A message of peace. Hos. 14:1-9.
T. Spirit of joy. Isa. 54:11-17.
F. A message of redemption. Rev. 5:1-14.
S. The King of men. Isa. 32:1-8.
Sun. The Christmas message and the Christmas spirit. Luke 2:8-14; Matt. 2:9-11.

What Is the Christmas Message?

The Christmas message as taught and lived by Christ is among other things a message of unselfishness. What could be more unselfish than to lay down your life for others. And that is just what Jesus came for. The birth of the Savior brought hope and peace and redemption to the human heart, but these could be realized only after the Master had known the experiences of Gethsemane and Calvary.

If we want to know the real spirit of Christmas we must know the spirit of Christ. Somehow I fear that our custom of giving gifts is not always conducive to the real Christmas spirit. We teach our children to expect a gift. Do we teach them to make a gift? Jesus gave. His spirit was one of giving out and not of receiving. He came, as he said, not to be ministered unto but to minister, and to give his life.

Suppose you young people who read these words, just stop for a few minutes and make a list of those to whom you are going to give Christmas presents. Are the poor and unfortunate among the number on your list? To how many are you planning to give gifts from whom you expect no gift in return? Is it not true that we give our gifts to those from whom we expect gifts in return? Is that the real spirit of Christmas? Is that the spirit of the Christ?

The Christmas season is one of the gladdest of all the year. It should be so. Christmas brings a message of good cheer and of joy. A thrill of joy and gladness surged through the heart of the world on November the eleventh, 1918, when it was announced that the armistice had been signed and that fighting had ceased. But that was small cause for joy compared to the announcement of the angels on that first Christmas eve. "Be not afraid; for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all the people." Doubtless the signing of the armistice did not bring joy to the German people. But there was an announcement that was to bring joy to all the people.

And the Christmas message is a message of joy because it is a message of peace. The angels sang, "on earth peace, and good will toward men." We rejoiced over the signing of the armistice because we thought it meant peace. And so it did mean peace of a kind. It meant a cessation of hostilities on the battlefield. But the peace that the Christmas message brings is not like that. The peace that the Christmas message brings is that peace that Paul spoke of in the fourth chapter of Philippians. "And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall guard your hearts and your thoughts in Christ Jesus." We do not understand this peace therefore it is difficult to explain. It is not a matter of explanation so much as of experience. Every Christian knows something about this peace that the Christmas message brings. It is the kind of peace that we can have even [illegible] fierce- [illegible] conflict.

The Christmas message is a message of peace because it is a message of redemption. "In whom we have redemption through his blood." And in Hebrews we are told that He obtained "eternal redemption" for us. That is why we are glad at Christmas time. That is why we have peace. Jesus came to redeem us from the curse of sin, therefore we have a right to rejoice and be glad.

As individuals and as Christian Endeavor societies, what are you planning for Christmas? How about making some less fortunate family glad with a basket filled with the necessities of life? Try it, and if you are not glad you did it, tell me about it. I shall never forget how glad [illegible] poor little colored children were one Christmas time to get some of my Christmas candy (some that I did not need). But do not stop as I did with giving only what you do not need.

May this be a happy Christmas to all Christian Endeavorers who read these comments.

L. W. Gerringer.

How to Make Next Year Better Than This.

Ps 90:1-17.

(New Year's Meeting.)

M. Better in church work. 1 Cor. 15:58.
T. In Christian duties. Tit. 2:1-15.
W. In [illegible] with God. Psa. 23:1-6.
T. In [illegible]. Esther 4:1-17.
F. In Christian Endeavor service. Hag. 2:1-9.
S. In personal growth. 2 Pet. 1:1-9.

This is the time of the year when we make new resolutions. I believe in making new resolutions all along through the year and yet I think that it is a profitable thing for us to make "New Year resolutions." Some say they do not make New Year resolutions, because they are afraid they can not keep them. It is better to make a resolution and later break it than not to have made it at all. Of course it is far better to make and keep the resolution.

It is good for any one or any organization to stop at the close of the old year and before stepping upon the threshold of the new year to ask how the new year can be made better than the one past. We must make the coming year better than the passing year or else we have not made it quite so good. Our past successes and our failures ought to help us in making a better success next year.

Some Suggested Resolutions.

First, resolve to make your society better than last year. It will take more than resolution to do it. It will take time and work, but it will be time well spent and work that will pay well. Make an honest effort to get out of the old ruts and introduce some new features in your regular weekly prayer meetings. Be careful that they are not weakly prayer meetings. If you really want a better society, get a number of your members to subscribe for the Christian Endeavor World, Boston, Mass. Two dollars single subscription, three subscriptions $4. Or the the Dixie Endeavorer, 5 Ferger Building, Chattanooga, Tenn. Thirty-five cents, single subscriptions, thirty cents in clubs of five or more. Ten subscriptions to one address to be distributed, twenty-five cents each. Also try the Endeavorer's Daily Companion. This gives you two pages of comments on each topic. I like it better than the topic cards. It will cost you ten or twelve cents and may be secured from the Dixie Endeavorer at Chattanooga. I believe these helps will help you to make your society a better society. And do not fail to secure a copy each of "Expert Endeavorer" and "Better Prayer Meetings."

Another thing that will help you make your society better is to undertake some definite thing. Have some object in view. Have a goal to work toward. And I mean do something apart from carrying out the monthly service program as outlined by the United Society of Christian Endeavor. For example, decide to clothe or support a child at the Children's Home, or pay the salary of a Bible teacher in some of our mission fields. Something like this will mean renewed life for your society with the coming of the new year. Undertake some worthy work and then you will have to live to do that work.

Not only resolve to make your society better, but resolve that you will be a better individual Endeavorer. There must be some better individual Endeavorers before there can be a better society. Resolve to keep the pledge better. That will help you to be a better Endeavorer. That will doubtless mean that you will pray more than you have been praying; that you will read your Bible more; that you will attend the meetings of your society more regularly; that you will be more loyal to your church; that you will try to render better service to the kingdom than ever before. All this can but make you a better Endeavorer and a better Christian.

As your appointed leader and servant I am anxious that this shall be our best year in Christian Endeavor work in the North Carolina Conference. There was an encouraging increase in the work last conference year. Let us resolve to make this the best year yet.

A prosperous new year to all our Endeavorers!

L. W. Gerringer.

NOYEMI.
The Girl Who Never Smiles.

By S. T. Bartlett.

As I walked past, Noyemi was standing in the doorway of her tent which was in the center of the Near East Relief refugee camp. She was beautiful as she stood there with the sun shining on her glossy hair and lighting up her finely chiseled features. About her played many groups of happy Armenian children. Everything seemed to smile that day except Noyemi She stood there gazing into the darkness with nothing but sorrow and melancholy gleaming out of her brilliant dark eyes.

"Why don't you smile with the rest of the world on this bright day," I asked her.

"I can never smile any more," she replied.

"But it is all over now. You have been here for six months, have grown strong and well and should be forgetting those things of the past," I said to her.

A shudder went through Noyemi as she bitterly exclaimed, "Forget those horrible four years,—never!"

"Four years ago," she continued, "I lived in Bitlis, Turkey, a happy little girl of fourteen years. I had a kind father and mother and all of the things that money could buy.

"Then came the rumors of war. The older people began to shake their heads and whisper among themselves so that the children would not hear. They were Armenians, and remembered the cruelty of the Turks in former days I was too young to know what fear meant.

"One day I became ill, my head ached and I was sick all over. They said I had that terrible fever called typhus. On the very next day the cry went around, 'The Turks are coming! They will drive us from our homes and kill us all.'

"This was the beginning of my sorrow for the Turkish Army did come. They told my father that we were to be deported and that we must leave our beautiful home at once. They carried one of my brothers away and made him serve in the Army. They murdered Zanadi, my youngest brother and playmate by the very side of the bed in which I was lying ill. Weak as I was, mother made me get up, and with my four other sisters we were marched away with thousands of other women.

"The fever had made me so weak that I could not keep up the journey and soon fell by the wayside," Noyemi went on, her dark eyes filling with tears at the remembrance "Mother was not even allowed to stop and kiss me goodby," she said with a sob.

"Several of the Turkish soldiers in charge of the deportation stopped long enough to kick me, and say, 'What, not dead yet?' For a long time I lay there, too weak to move. At last, as I was somewhat in the way of the marchers a Turkish officer picked me up and threw me over a wall into a garden. The force of the fall broke my arm and I fainted with the pain of it."

Noyemi held out her left arm, which she had hidden behind her back up to this time. It was bent and crooked and would never be straight again for it had not been set at the time of breaking.

"For forty hours," said Noyemi, "I lay there without food or water and in terrible pain. At last I managed to crawl into the open, hoping that some of the passers-by would at least give me a drink of water. Instead of helping, however, a company of soldiers seiztd me, threw me down a steep embankment and were about to stab me with their bayonets.

"Just then a band of Arabs came along and one of them ran up to the soldier. 'She is beautiful, why do you kill her?' he asked.

" 'We have our orders,' replied the soldiers,

" 'Give her to us,' said the Arabs, 'we will take care of her.'

" 'No, we must kill her,' replied the soldiers.

"The Arabs then took out some money, the Turks forgot their orders and my life was saved. They bargained for some time but finally I was sold to the Arabs for about $35 in your American money. A very high price for an Armenian girl," she added.

"Oh how I wish they had killed me," sobbed Noyemi. "They took me away and held me captive at Bagdad without a chance to escape. I was not the slave of only one man but of many. Look at the scars on my arms and neck. They will show you how I was tortured.

"It was months before I had a chance to escape. They believed that my spirit had been broken but I seized the first opportunity and got away. Finally I found a hiding place from the Arabs in a Turkish home but this was as bad as being with the Arabs. My life here was made a constant horror by all kinds of abuse and degradation.

"For a year and a half they kept me captive in this home. Then came the wonderful allied soldiers and I was set free with hundreds of other girls who had gone through experiences like mine and we were brought here to safety. "How can I smile after I have gone through all of this and lost every one that is dear to me?" appealed the poor girl.

Here Noyemi's self-control gave way and she broke down completely and disappeared into her tent. I thought, as I walked away, how little we of America know of the sufferings of the peoples of the Near East.

MAMMA'S CHRISTMAS GIFT.

"Mamma,' said Billy, "what do you want for Christmas?"

"Dear me," said Billy's mamma, "I don't know of a single thing that I want."

"But you must say you want things," said Billy. "You must—it's sort of a game. It doesn't matter whether you really want the things or not."

"Oh, I didn't understand," said mamma, entering the game. "Well, then, let me see. I should like a diamond pin"

"And what else?" said Billy. "You must want more."

"I want a long sealskin ulster."

"Say something else; say lots of things."

"I want a new carriage and a lace collar and some curtains for baby's room."

"Mamma," said Billy, coming close to her side and speaking earnestly, "don't you want a card like that one I painted this morning?"

"Oh, dear, yes," said mamma, quickly, "I should love to have a beautiful card like those you paint."

Billy went to the window and looked out at the snow and the sparrows hopping on the walk that ran down the street.

After a minute or two he came to mamma's side again. "Mamma," he said, very solemnly, "I won't say which, 'cause I don't want to spoil your surprise, but one of those things you told me you want you're surely going to get for Christmas."

Mamma leaned over and kissed his bright face, and said softly, "I do wonder which it will be."—St. Nicholas.

STELLA'S VICTORY.

Stella Vinton had been down town all alone for the first time in her life, to make some purchases for her mother. She had walked down and was riding home. Mrs. Vinton had told her that she might have five cents for herself if there was any change left; but she had been obliged to spend every cent.

She sat in the car with her fare in her hand, waiting for the conductor to come for it. He came along presently, and she held it out toward him, but he did not see it, and went on to the front of the car.

"He has forgotten me. He is not coming for my fare. I shall have to give it to him when I get out," she thought.

"No, I wouldn't; it is his place to come for it," the tempter suggested.

"That would be cheating. You have had your ride and ought to pay for it," whispered conscience.

"Of course; but it is not my place to make the conductor take it."

"It is everybody's business to be honest."

"Ma promised me five cents, too."

"But she would not like you to get in this way."

"She need not know. I would not tell her."

"But you would know, and Jesus would know; and you profess to be a Christian."

"So I do; and I will be. I won't cheat."

Just then the conductor called out Baker street, and Stella arose to leave the car. As she did so she put the five cents in the conductor's hand.

"Thank you," he said, smiling.

Stella went home and told her mother of her temptation. Mrs. Vinton opened her purse, and taking out a twenty-five-cent piece put it in Stella's hand.

"This is for my honest little girl," she said, kissing her. So Stella had double reason to be glad that she had gained the victory. --Our Young Folks.

It is hypocrisy to pray, "Thy kingdom come," and then not do anything, or give anything, or sacrifice anything, for the sake of promoting that kingdom.—The Bishop of Carlisle.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

Clark's Chapel, Buncombe Circuit.—Since our last report I'm glad so say that our church work has been moving on. Our Sunday school is doing a splendid work. We are now preparing for special music Christmas, and also for a Christmas tree.

Our Christian Endeavor society meets every Sunday at three o'clock.

The meeting was conducted yesterday by Miss Mamie Watts. We are indeed pleased to see the young people so deeply interested and active. M. L. Cheek, Reporter.

Friendship, Haw River Circuit.—Last Sunday our pastor filled his regular appointment for the beginning of the coming year. I was not there, though I am sure his sermon was very beneficial and enjoyed. For he always gives us some great truths. I can certainly say for Friendship, we are very thankful conference saw fit to send Bro. Swain back to be with us another year. The way seems open for our greatest year's work. We feel sure he will be just the instrument toward helping us to carry it out.

The news came to us last Tuesday morning, December 9, of Bro. Maxwell's death Of course death always brings us sorrow, yet when we come to think of what there is gained when one like "Uncle Billy", as he was better known to us, passes from earth into eternity; what a blessed hope there is, and the great consolation it gives us all. His death was not a surprise to us, for he had been very feeble for a number of months. We missed him greatly when his health first became so that he could not come to church and Sunday school. For seldom was his place ever vacant, so long as he had health and strength to come. He was our oldest church member. I think he has been a member for over fifty years. His age was 75 years, three months and one day. He leaves two children, W. H and C. M. Maxwell, besides a host of friends and relatives to mourn his loss. We extend our sympathy to the loved ones, who have lost so great a father.

Today our Sunday school was rather small on account of inclement weather. Yet we were thankful to see the few faithful ones out.

Plans will soon be completed for our Christmas exercise, which we mean to give on Christmas eve. We trust we shall be successful with it, and invite one and all to come.

With happy Christmas wishes to everybody. Kathleen Small, Reporter.

We Have Moved.

A friend of mine used to say, "If there were no sad partings there would be no happy meetings." That is true and yet we never enjoy leaving our good friends. We regretted very much to leave our many good friends at Reidsville. But the "powers that be" said move and we moved. I am not saying that the people of Reidsville are better than other people, or that they treated their pasor better than others do, but I will say they are a splendid people. And I want in this public way to thank all those who stood loyally by the pastor during the past three years. Whatever of success attended our efforts there was due to the fact that the people co-operated. I shall be praying for and expecting that the good work will continue as you contine to stand by your new pastor.

A word of appreciation to the Reidsville Christian Endeavor society: Mrs. Gerringer and I are still enjoying the surprise you gave us before we left there. On Friday night, December 5, the regular monthly business meeting of the society was held at Mrs. A. P. Sands' home. The retiring pastor and wife were urged to attend this meeting. Of course we were glad to be with those young people (and some not so young) in one more meeting before leaving. The regular business of the meeting had been transacted and Brother J W. Dixon, the president of the society, was making some remarks. We thought his remarks were rather extended for some reason. He just kept on talking. But soon we saw why he had not yet adjourned the meeting. Some members of the society had slipped out of the room and were returning with—well, what shall I say now? I was cautioned by some members of the society not to tell all I know about it. But suffice it to say that Mrs. Gerringer is now enjoying a very valuable and much appreciated gift. The preacher is also enjoying a gift, though of less value than the other yet appreciated all the same. We were so surprised at the time that I am sure we did not fully express our appreciation, nor can we now tell you how much we appreciate your thoughtful consideration. We do thank you. And best of all do we appreciate the remarks of your president in presenting the gifts. In part he said, "We offer these an an expression of our appreciation of what you have done for our Christian Endeavor society." If we have done some little something to help the young people we are glad.

We want also to thank Mrs. Mary Hopkins for Christmas gift in money. The Lord give us more Mrs Hopkinses. Not to give preachers money especially, but to serve the Lord with all the heart as Mrs. Hopkins does. Good friends at Reidsville, we do appreciate all you did to make our stay pleasant among you. Our prayers and good wishes are still with you. God bless you and your church richly.

I started out to say we had moved. After a breakdown of our Ford on the way, we finally arrived at the Asheboro parsonage at five o'clock Thursday evening. The good women folks and some men too had been putting the house in order. Our house-hold goods had preceded us by a few hours, and some of it was in place when we arrived, so that we really did not feel homesick. A good dinner that had waited some time for us was enjoyed. We found that the parsonage had been furnished with all necessary heavy furniture, the pantry was supplied with a number of good things to eat, and coal and wood were also ready for our use. I could think of nothing lacking to make us feel at home. We thank you good Asheboro people for the warm welcome you have given. May the Lord bless our united efforts to his glory and to the advancement of his kingdom.

The services seem to have started off well on last Sunday the 7th. The first quarterly conference was held Wednesday evening at eleven o'clock. The regular business of the conference was transacted without friction. The people seem hopeful. They have accepted the increased assessment laid upon them by the Annual Conference without murmuring. And although the budget for this year is several hundred dollars more than last year still the church treasurer said, "I think we can raise it," and no one expressed any doubt as to the possibility of it. Pray for us that we may not only raise our budget but that we may reach the unsaved.

With a wish that no preacher may have to move again within the next ten years, I close. L. W. Gerringer, Pastor.

Asheboro, N. C.

Flat Rock.—We had our first sermon today for the new conference year. I think everybody is glad to have Brother Hutton back again. The congregation was not large owing to the rain and muddy roads. It takes mighty little sometimes to keep a man from going to church; if he does not want to go: but it just takes lots and lots of rain and mud to keep this same man from going to market with his tobacco—along the same road—and in the same mud.

Our protracted meeting was rained out in October. We hope to have it yet, if we can decide we have time.

Our first quarterly conference meets Saturday before the fourth Sunday in this month. On Sunday following, after preaching we will have the Christmas treat for the Sunday school. We hope to keep our Sunday school alive during the winter.

Mrs. Kate Brittain, Flat Rock's oldest member, has been real sick; but she has recovered her usual health, and is remarkably bright and jolly for her age. She is in her eighty-ninth year.

Miss Norvia Moore was recently married to a Mr. Hampton of Leaksville, and they will make that their home.

Mr. Arthur Parish, one of our returned soldier boys, married in Virginia, and has come back to make his home here in his old neighborhood.

Mrs. George Friddle has been sick for a few days, but is better. Mrs. Friddle lay afflicted for twelve years, but the Lord permitted her to recover her health partially, so that she can attend to her household duties and she attends church when the weather is such that she can. One has only to be in her presence to feel the effect of her bright, patient, and gentle nature.

Flat Rock surpassed herself this year by paying all assessments except the assessment for the Million Dollar Drive; and we hope to pay that by the time it is due.

Reporter.

Greensville Circuit.—On acocunt of the rain we did not get to Ebenezer this morning, this being our first appointment on the Greensville circuit. The old church building has been torn away and a new one started in its place. We hope to have the new one ready to hold services in in the near future. So, brethren, let's get busy and finish the church. I preached to a small congregation at Hobbs chapel this afternoon. The weather was so bad the people did not expect services.

Our people gave us a very delightful surprise Friday evening. After finishing our work for the day and sitting in our room resting we heard a Ford drive up in the yard and the people began to come in until the room was filled. You older preachers might have guessed what was taking place, but this being my first experience I did not take the hint. But after a while we were invited into the dining room; there we found a table filled with good things. Then we looked round and saw sitting on the floor sacks of potatoes, flour and meal. We can not find words to express our heartfelt thanks to this kind people for this kindness. May God bless you all and may we have a good year this year. L. S. Helms, Pastor.

Triplet, Va., December 14, 1919.

Shiloh, North Davidson Circuit.—Owing to the threatening weather and several cases of sickness in the neighborhood, Shiloh was not as largely represented in the first quarterly conference at Bethesda last Saturday as she usually is. Shiloh people are noted for punctuality in attending quarterly conferences under normal conditions, but unfortunately both the last quarterly conference in last year and the first one this year have been held under very unfavorable weather conditions. We truly hope that missing two in succession will not create the habit of non-attendance.

The following were present, however, and represented the church the best they could: H. A. Leonard, Sunday school superintendent; A. H. Evans, class leader; V. M. Walser and G. F. Byerly, stewards; J. L. Evans, W. E Waitman and C. W. Lanning, trustees; Mrs. G. F. Byerly, Mrs. V. M Walser and Mrs. A. H. Evans together with parts of their families, accompanied their husbands.

All were highly pleased with the hospitality of the Bethesda people. Mr. C. M. Yokely was re-elected secretary and A. H. Evans, circuit financier for another year. Rev. C. A. Cecil read a very optimistic report. Canaan was selected for the next quarterly conference. For fear of intruding on the good reporter from Bethesda we will refrain from saying more about the conference.

Tom Berrier, one of the best boys in our church and Sunday school, was carried to Winston-Salem last week for an operation for appendicitis He is the 14-year-old son of our good brother and sister, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Berrier. He stood the operation well, considering the serious nature of the case and we are praying for his speedy restoration to health.

We are anxiously looking forward to Sunday when our "new" pastor, Rev. C. A. Cecil, will preach his first sermon for the new conference year. Let everybody turn out next Sunday to greet the "new" pastor and help give the work a good start.

The writer witnessed a very touching scene last Sunday evening when he visited his uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Leonard, in their home and found both confined to their room in the same bed. These two good people have walked hand-in-hand together for sixty years or longer and now that they are both nearing the end of the journey, they prefer to be close to each other. It is hard to tell which is the feebler of the two, or which the good Lord will call first. They are both perfectly resigned and are only patiently awaiting His summons.

They are receiving every attention possible from all their children, especially from their son, Mr B. H. Leonard, and his good wife, with whom they have lived for several years or rather, the son and wife have remained at the old homestead.

Their oldest son, C. E. Leonard, and wife, of Lexington have also volunteered to come and assist them.

The prayers of the church are that they may be spared to us a while longer, if it is the good Lord's pleosure, but if not that he will sustain them in their last days.

A merry Christmas and a happy and prosperous new year to the editor, his family, and all the readers (and those who ought to be readers, viz.: All Methodist Protestants in North Carolina) is the sincere wish of,

Yours very truly, A. H. Evans.

St. Paul's.—The conference year 1919 is gone and our former pastor is gone. He leaves with the best wishes of the writer. His sermons have been helpful. Our new pastor is here; some say he looks like a preacher, others say he talks like a preacher, and after hearing him we are all convinced that he is a preacher. His sermons yesterday on how we should imitate Christ in our lives was very interesting.

The Ladies' Aid has been quite busy since conference trying to make the pastor and family comfortable. Bro. Morgan will tell you later what they have done.

We are hoping for the best year yet for St. Paul's.

Our Sunday school has re-elected Bro. G. H. May for superintendent next year. We are preparing to give the children a treat for Christmas. W. A. Lamb.

December 15, 1919.

Hollister, Halifax Circuit.—We are indeed glad to have Bro Bethea return as our pastor for another year. He has done a wonderful work here the past year and has already begun making greater plans for the coming year.

Bro. Bethea preached an excellent sermon last night on the subject of prayer, pointing out that in order to get the real joy of prayer, we should not always go to Him with petitions. As an illustration: A neighbor who comes only when in need of something; we soon get so we don't get much joy from his calls.

Our Sunday school is very much alive. In spite of the inclement weather yesterday there were 70 present. Sunday school officers for the ensuing year have been elected as follows: Superintendent, A. B. Schlichter; assistant superintendent, W. T. Liles; secretary, O. M. Schlichter; treasurer, W. A. Delbridge.

We are glad to report that a Christian Endeavor society has been organized in our church. It is inspiring to see how readily the young people respond in Bible reading, sentence prayers or anything they are called on to do. This will mean much to the young people of this community.

Bro. Bethea left this morning for Raleigh as delegate to the Inter-church World Movement.

Mebane.—We are moving along nicely. We were very glad indeed that conference saw fit to send us Dr. C. L. Whitaker for this conference year. He and his wife are being made welcome not only to our homes and our own church but to the town.

The Presbyterian and Baptist ministers arranged for a Welcome Service to welcome Dr. Whitaker and Rev. N. C. Yearby of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to the town. It was held in the Presbyterian church Sunday night. W. S. Crawford, the mayor, gave a welcome in behalf of the town. Rev. A. W. Shaw, Presbyterian pastor, gave a welcome in behalf of his congregation; while Rev. J. C. Canipe gave a welcome in behalf of the Baptists of the town. Both Dr. Whitaker and Rev. Mr. Yearby responded with very fitting talks.

Our church will have a Christmas tree on Wednesday night, December 24.

The Sunday school is doing well and our church is already putting on new life.

We have already paid our pastor his first month's salary and hope to be able to keep up at least if not ahead all the year.

Wishing a merry Christmas to the Herald and all its readers, Mrs. H. C. Nicholson.

Mebane, N. C., Dec. 15, 1919.

Stallings, Mecklenburg Circuit.—We were more than glad to have Bro. Ridge back with us, though we have not seen him very much as he is taking his vacation. We are expecting him back this week. Also glad to say we have our church almost framed. Would have, but the rough weather stopped them from work. We had a lively Sunday school today. Our band regrets losing Miss Pattie Noles, as she married Thanksgiving to Mr. Will Kidd. Mr. Lee Stalling and Miss Lelia McCleod were married recently; wish them all a happy life.

Best wishes to the Herald.

Mrs. C. B. Furr.

Spring Church, Spring Church Circuit.—We have been silent for some time, but we are still awake and feel the Lord has been good to us in many ways, especially in sending our pastor back to us for another year.

Bro. O'Briant has proved to be a real pastor the two years he has been with us and is all the while looking after his people, and we hope we all may do our whole duty by him and that we may unite our efforts this another year with a greater determination than ever and that much good may be accomplished. We have closed up this year's work very nicely, paying all claims in full except the Million Dollar Campaign.

Bro. O'Briant was back in time to preach for us the fifth Sunday in November. Yesterday was the regular appointment but was rained out. The pastor was the only one present. Our Sunday school seems to be doing very nicely We have our same superintendent, Mr. G. W. Massey, for another year.

We are glad to have the teachers of Pleasant Hill school, Misses Ida Lee Hall and Elizabeth Bush, to join our Sunday school, they assist in both music and teaching.

We are planning to have a Christmas exercise and tree if not hindered.

Wishing all the Herald readers a merry Christmas and a happy New Year.

Nannie Massey.

December 15, 1919.

West End, Greensboro.—We feel that we have much to be thankful for this year, as our beloved pastor was sent back to us and our Sunday school is doing fine. We are delighted with last year's work in the Sunday school, but are making an effort to do even better this year. Mr. C. F. Johnson, who is one of our best workers in the Sunday school and church, was elected superintendent, and we are looking forward with pleasure to working under his supervision. He succeeds Mr F. S Stockard, who had been superintendent since the Sunday school was first organized in October, 1917, and who deserves much praise for the successful way in which he has carried on the work.

Class No. 2, being composed of the senior boys and girls of the Sunday school, has just completed a spirited contest for new members, and on Friday evening, December 12, the defeated side entertained the winning side. The pastor and family, the superintendent and assistant superintendent and their families, and all the teachers in the Sunday school were invited, and, despite the unfavorable weather, there was a good attendance and it was a very enjoyable occasion A short program of songs and talks by the pastor, superintendent, and class teacher, Mr L. M Forst, was rendered, after which refreshments were served and a guessing contest closed the program.

Mrs J. R. Holden, superintendent of the primary department, and her assistants are preparing for a Christmas tree and entertainment by the primary grades. The little folks, and the older ones too, are looking forward eagerly to that time.

A merry Christmas and happy New Year to all.

Lena E. Martin,
Sunday School Reporter.

Harmony, Yarborough Circuit.—We were more than glad to welcome Rev N M Harrison back as pastor for this year. He came with renewed enthusiasm and we are expecting this to be the best year of his pastorate. Mr. Harrison filled his regular appointment Sunday night, and delivered us an exceptionally fine sermon as he always does. Our Sunday school is progressing nicely.

Our Christian Endeavor met Sunday afternoon at five o'clock. There was a very good attendance but not as large an attendance as we once had. Some of our members take Sunday out as their visiting day and stay away. Our evening topic was "How to Use the Bible." Miss Sudie Medlock was leader Mrs. S. S. Beeks made a good talk on "How the Bible should be taught in school." Miss Ina Wood also made a talk, told us "How we should be tempted by the Bible." Nine of our members attended the Christian Endeavor Institute which was held in Greenville the second. I am sure every one enjoyed the good talks on Christian Endeavor societies. And I am glad that we attended it and I know it will help us greatly.

Wishing the Herald and its readers a very merry Christmas,

Ware Shoals, S. C.

Pleasant Union, Mt. Pleasant Circuit.—We extend a cordial welcome to our new pastor, Rev. J. A. Burgess. May we give to him whole-hearted loyalty at all times and a willingness to co-operate with him in his work.

He preached a helpful sermon today, his text being: "Then shall I not be ashamed, when I have respect unto all thy commandments." Ps. 119:6.

The first quarterly conference will be held at Pleasant Union on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in this month

Mr. Shelton's last sermon to us at Pleasant Union was on the text: "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life." Rev. 2:10. We can't forget Mr. Shelton's earnest work the two years he was with us, and may the Lord abundantly bless him in his new field of labor.

Lebanon Charge.—We are now beginning our third year as pastor of this charge. Since conference we have met all appointments, and the congregations have been good. The work is starting off nicely and we are planning for a good year.

Our first quarterly conference will meet at Spring Hill on Saturday before the second Sunday in January at two o'clock. We desire a good representation from each church. Let all the officials take notice and be present if possible. Since our last report we have been remembered in a substantial way by the following: Mr. and Mrs J. W. Thacker, preserves; Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Clark, fresh meat; Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Long, fresh meat and a nice large ham; Mr and Mrs. J. W. Montgomery, fresh meat; Mr. and Mrs. B. E. Payne, fresh meat; Mr. D. E. Hilton, a nice piece of beef; Mr B. E. Kennady, straw for our cow; Mr. S. W. Cecil, potatoes and fresh meat; Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Swain, potatoes, fresh meat, and a nice chicken; Mr. and Mrs. Carl Swain, sausage; Mr Joe Payne, pumpkin and potatoes; Mr. and Mrs Weldon Burton, molasses. We appreciate all these tokens of kindness. We wish to thank Mr. Jeff and Mr. Oscar Hilton for hauling a load of straw for us; and Mr. A. D Sink, Mr. Jeff Hilton, and Mr. Hubert Payne for butchering our hogs for us. May the Lord bless all who have been so kind to us.

Edw. Suits.

Uwharrie.—According to recent developments, this scribe is charged with inaugurating a movement with principles underlying it contrary to the rulng of the North Carolina Methodist Protestant Conference. As I am very familiar with the original facts in the case, I respectfully deny the charge. I never gave my consent to the building of a church on a privately owned site. Three leading members and I opposed that system, and everything stopped. These are the facts in a nutshell. I am not seeking anybody's crown or honor, but simply stating facts as unquestionable and undeniable facts should be stated.

The above facts are not in anywise connected with, or related to, the heading of this letter, but I have arranged it thus in order to have but one article.

Since my return to this field we have been remembered by a number of friends around Piney Grove.

At the close of last conference year, Miss Lalah Delk was given a $5 teacher's Bible in token of appreciation of her service as superintendent during the past year. Mr. Joe Delk, the new superintendent, is doing good work for a new man. Piney Grove is planning to have a tree and exercise Christmas.

The first quarterly conference will be held at Mt. Pleasant at noon, Saturday, December the 27th. Lunch, 11:30. All worthy officials will make an effort to be on hand. At this conference the finances will be apportioned to the several churches. Come on and represent your church. Don't be a kicker nor a slacker; be a booster and a puller. Boost your church. If boosting won't move her, get in the harness and pull her out of the ruts.

One good layman with a vim and a vision, grace and grit, is worth more than forty below normal church-members. That ancient saying so frequently oratorically quoted in quarterly conferences that "Our leading spirits have gone to their fathers, and now we are so weak," is evidently a delusion of the bad man, purporting to use you to defeat the Cause. Don't let the devil deceive you into thinking that number is the essential element in any church. As to numbers, you may be very weak, and yet be a mighty power for God. A church's strength is determined by the God-approved determined will and purpose of each individual unit.

Don't forget the quarterly conference.

Wm. H. Neese.

Jackson's Creek, N. C., Dec. 15.

Burlington.—The first quarterly conference was held on Tuesday night of last week. Most of the time was taken up in discussing ten recommendations of the pastor looking to the work of the new year. A few of these were as follows:

1. That all committees to get up special services such as Easter service and children's day be appointed at the beginning of the year and their names be printed on the church calendar. This was carried.

2. That we accept the assessments of the annual conference. This was carried.

3 That the supply of year books bought last year be given away judiciously. This was carried.

4. That the conference journals this year be given away. This carried.

5. That we enter heartily into the increase campaign as outlined by the general secretary of the forward movement commission. This was carried.

6. That we agree on a definite policy, either to brick veneer our present church building or build a new church as soon as seems advisable. This took up more time than anything else. While no motion either way was passed it seemed to be the opinion that a new church was preferable to repairing the old one.

7. That the parsonage be painted. This was referred to the parsonage trustees.

8. That disciplines be provided for all new members. This was carried.

We have already received five new members during this conference year and hope to receive many more.

Next Sunday morning the pastor will preach a Christmas sermon and give an opportunity for people to unite with the church. At the evening hour the Sunday school will give its annual entertainment and the offering will be given to the Board of Education. J. E. Pritchard.

Henderson.—Our Sunday school last Sunday was small, owing to the extremely bad weather. The attendance at the preaching service Sunday morning was not up to normal either, although a fairly good congregation assembled to hear the sermon on "Gideon and His Immortal Three Hundred." The pastor preached unusually well on this subject, emphasising just three points First, that the work undertaken by this band was a great work because of its importance; second, that there was a place for every man. The preacher applied this point to our own membership, and showed us very clearly that we each have a place to fill, in the local church, and in the kingdom. The third point was, that every man filled his place. He pointed out what might have happened if there had been any slackers in the band, and showed us where the work of the kingdom suffers if we fail to stand in our place, as did the Immortal Three Hundred. The sermon was pronounced good by all who heard it.

At the 7:00 o'clock hour the Christian Endeavor society met, for the discussion of the subject, "How to Use the Bible." The leader was Mr. Willard Harris, one of our promising young men, who proved to all present that he is a good leader. The leader announced for next Sunday is Mr. E W. Dixon, another promising young man. Mr. Dixon is a Methodist Protestant of another church, but actively associated with us in the work here, and a member of our "Willing Workers" Bible class.

At the night preaching service, the sermon was delivered by Rev. C. W. Bates, the new pastor of the Granville circuit. We were all delighted to have Bro. Bates with us for this service, and bring us the splendid message which he did on the Love of God. All agreed that the sermon was exceedingly good.

The Sunday school will observe Educational Day next Sunday, following in part the program sent out by the general church.

On Monday the Sunshine Circle and the Mission Band gave a pencil and towel shower for the Children's Home. A fuller report of this will be made later, as well as the Christmas program being arranged by the Sunday school and the Sunshine Circle.

North Davidson Circuit.—Our first quarterly conference was held last Saturday at Bethesda; all churches were represented; but not a full conference by any means. Nothing out of the ordinary was done. It was ordered that we continue up to April first to raise money on our quota of the Million Dollar Drive. I trust our efforts will be successful. We are starting out to raise our collections monthly and with the intention of paying all interests in full. I have filled two appointments; Friendship paid $33.25, Bethesda paid $30 and other stewards reported money in hand to be paid as appointments were filled. The outlook is good, and those of my people whom I have seen seem to be satisfied with my return, and as an evidence of it, several of the Bethesda people presented me with fresh meats, potatoes, apples, and a pumpkin, for which I am thankful.

The times for our special meetings are all fixed except one. The local reporters are expected to report from their church as often as they think best; do not depend upon me to do your reporting.

I am invited to one Christmas tree on the evening of the 24th.

A merry Christmas and a happy New Year to all. C. A. Cecil.

December 16, 1919.

Roberta Station.—We reached here December 3 and when we entered the parsonage we found the table set in order and plenty of good things to eat thereupon, and the consumers did not hesitate to partake of the contents We want to thank each of you good people who were so thoughtful of us, and pray God's blessings upon you, that He may restore unto you fourfold in this life and life eternal in the world to come.

We began the work the first Sunday with good congregations at both morning and evening services. We received three new members at our evening service, namely, Bro. W. C. Alexander and Sisters Misses Utha and Naomi Linker. We have been very busy the past week helping the good wife get our few belongings to place, and making the necessary visits. Some of our members have been very sick; namely, Mrs. Carrie McCall, Mrs. R. B. Cochran, Mrs. W. T. Blackwelder, Miss Annie J. Cochran, and Mrs. J. K. Foster. But we are glad to say that all seem to be improving at present.

Second Sunday, despite the inclement weather we had good congregations at both services. At the morning service the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Sunday school superintendent, Bro. L. J. Foster; assistant, Bro. S. I. McCall; trustees, Bros. J. B. Hill, W. C. Alexander and J. W. Kiser; stewards, Bros. W. L. Holland, L. J. Foster, W C. Alexander, W. T. Blackwelder, J. W. Kiser, Walter Plummer, D. V. Furr, J. B. Hill, J. A. Linker, J. K. Foster, and E. J. Linker; class leaders, Bros. S. T. McCall and J. W. Kiser; social committee, Bros. J. B. Hill and G. F. Coble, Sisters Miss Bessie Alexander and Mrs. S. T. McCall.; welfare committee, Bros. W. A. Rogers, Roy Smith, C. E. Helms and J. C. P. Cochran, Sisters, Mrs. W. A. Rogers, Mrs. Clara Carter, Mrs. W C Alexander, Mrs D. V. Furr.

At the evening service the officers were installed into their offices. It was a very interesting service. After the installation we preached, and at the close gave an opportunity for penitents to come forward for prayer, to which three responded and all three professed saving faith in Christ, and shouts were heard again. Praise the Lord, we need not wait until the special meeting to gather in the grain, for the harvest truly is ripe already.

Thanks to Mrs. Z. D. Cochran and Mrs. M. E. Blackwelder for milk, butter and sausage.

We desire the prayers of every one who reads this report. Brethren and sisters, pray for us. We need your prayers. With best wishes to the Herald and all its readers, we close. J. T. Sisk, Pastor.

Concord, N. C., R. 6, Dec. 15.

Moriah, Tabernacle Circuit.—The second Sunday in December last appointment at Moriah, when the service had closed, we went out to start home and found our vehicle nearly full—especially first story, of helpful things, flour, meat, chicken, coffee, sugar, butter, canned goods, potatoes, apples and so forth. We would be glad to give names but part of the packages had no names on them, so we will not give names, but all or about all of the members took part in this kindness, especially the regular attendants.

Mrs. Miliaway and myself wish to express to these people our heartfelt thanks for this kind and helpful remembrance and pray that the Lord will bless them.

Tabernacle Church.—Since we last reported we have received material help from D. H. Hunter, Mrs. A. A. Garrett, Mrs. J. E. Hanner, Mrs. H. L. Lowe, Mrs. John Reynolds, Mrs. Trogdon, Purvis Neese.

Julian.—Mrs. J. E. Deviny, Mrs. Sam Deviny, Mrs. W. T. Hanner. We also appreciate this kindness. G. F. Miliaway.

Union Grove Church, Mocksville Circuit.—We had a very glad surprise on last Sunday, December 7, when we had gathered at our church to have Sunday school, when our new pastor, Bro. Edwards, and Bro. Cartner of Bess Chapel, walked in.

It being the first appointment for our church after conference, an unlikely day, and a long distance up here, we hardly expected our new pastor to get here. Nevertheless he was on time, with a cheerful look, not seeming to have minded the long distance he had come, and brought us a good sermon. We appreciate very much the willingness he expressed to serve us on all occasions. We hope to be faithful to fulfill our whole duty by him, and that by our co-operation all working together for the upbuilding of God's Kingdom that we may make this one of the best conference years we have ever had.

We are always glad to have Bro. Cartner visit us. We feel that he is our real brother in Jesus Christ, and that he has got something good to tell us.

We are very sorry to part with our former pastor, Bro. McCulloch and his wife. We have learned to love them very much, and they seem very near to us. We still ask an interest in their prayers.

While Bro. McCulloch was so far away from us that he could not be with us much during the time of the loss of our church, which was destroyed by lightning more than a year ago, and the erecting of a new one which we completed about three months ago, we will always remember him and his earnest prayers in our behalf for a new church. Believing this has had much to do with the nice church which we now enjoy, a much better one than the one we lost.

We feel that it is our reasonable duty to try to render unto our Master better service than we ever have before. Pray for us.

Mrs. Huie Templeton, Reporter.

Fairfield Church, Guilford Circuit.—We are glad to report all our sick people improving. Last Tuesday some of Bro. Gray's Sunday school class together with the superintendent met at Bro. Gray's home and cut and hauled ten loads of wood. It was so nice of them to do this. I want to give the names of these fine Christian men: J. T. Suits, M. C. Gilbreth, D. C. Marsh, J. W. Yow, F. G. Robbins, L. H. Tuttle. Marvin Kearns, T. L. Modlin and Mr. Hill. T. L. Modlin and son sawed the wood for the fireplace. Now that speaks well of these noble men. We all love Bro. Gray and we are praying that he will soon be able to be with his class again.

Fairfield church paid $50 over their assessment on pastor's salary last year besides the many poundings they gave us. They are starting off well for the new year. Bro. Gilbreth and Bro. Marsh have hauled two loads of wood to parsonage. Others will soon bring a load for us.

Fairfield church and Mitchell's Grove and Hickory have been pounding us heavily.

May the Lord richly reward them for the help and encouragement that they have given to us.

By the grace of God we are going to do our best year's work. Yours in His name.

A. M. Hamilton.

West Forsyth Charge.—As I have just finished my year's work and have returned from conference to serve this good people another year, I thought I would write a few words to the Herald. We have done some mighty good work on this charge the past year but hope to do still better this year and I ask the prayers of all Christian people that this may be the best year yet for this charge. We are planning to build a brick church at Harmony Grove this year and I pray that we may have it completed before conference meets again. This good people made me feel mighty good before conference by giving me a nice suit of clothes, overcoat and a pair of shoes. I want to say here that it was highly appreciated and I thank you all.

The pastor and wife enjoyed an extra good dinner on Thanksgiving day with Bro. Tom Briggs. All that don't believe there are good people on West Forsyth charge, just come and see. With best wishes to all for a merry Christmas and a happy New Year.

J. M. Ridenhour.

Zoar, Mecklenburg Circuit.—On this Thanksgiving we have a great many things to be thankful for. We can be thankful that that monster, the "flu," did not take the country this fall, as it did last year. Again we can or at least ought to be very thankful that so many of the boys are with us now who were in France last year. The people of Zoar can say that every member got back unhurt.

But amid all of this great rejoicing there are times when our hearts are filled with longings and sad thoughts. We often sigh and sometimes shed tears for the fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters, wives, children and sweethearts whose loved ones now lie buried in "Flanders Fields." Yes, and the ones who have been bereaved in other ways.

The home of Mr. Tollie King was made sad a short while ago when little Mae was called to give an account of the deeds done in the body. The writer's mother visited her while she was sick at home and she always seemed very gentle and patient. Later, when she was carried to the hospital, an old lady was to undergo an operation. She said that she was not ready to die and she knew that death would be the result. The doctor asked her to pray. "I have never prayed," she said. "Why don't you try?" Mae asked. The lady then asked Mae if she knew how to pray. And when she told her she did, the lady asked Mae to pray for her. And then Mae sent a short, sweet, earnest, little message to the skies for the aged lady who had never learned to pray. Once, when the doctor was talking with Mae, she pointed upward and said, "I'm not afraid, I'm going home to live with Jesus."

We extend our sympathies to the bereaved and stricken ones.

We understand that Bro. Ridge will be our pastor again. Welcome, new preacher, we're glad to have you. Bro. Ridge has done good work at Zoar this year and we have all learned to love him.

A Former Reporter.

Beulah, Mecklenburg Circuit.—Our Sunday school is doing fine at present; several new scholars since our last report. We have $10.75 in treasury now; we want to get enough to get a new stove for the church. We are working now for a new organ; we have in treasury now $38.50. The ones put in for collectors for the organ are Misses Grace Phifer, Annie Lee Elmore, Flossie Deese, Ruby Lee Craig. So if any one reads this and wishes to send any amount of money to help get the organ, please send it to those mentioned above, and it will be highly appreciated. Mr. W. L. Craig is treasurer and purchaser. We want to have it by the fourth Sunday, for that is preaching day again.

We are glad to know that we have our good pastor back again, Bro Ridge.

Our prayer meeting is getting along fine The young people are taking great interest.

Pray for us that we may still press forward and do a great work at Beulah. We want to get a bell for the church after we purchase our organ; hope that we will succeed in getting it, as we need one so much.

Hope that we can start to remodeling our church next year, if not this year.

Reporter, F. D.

Yarborough Christian Endeavor.—My last report was the meeting of November 2; since this meeting the following ones have led: Miss Clorese Lamb was to have taken charge of the meeting for November 9, but she being absent the reporter took charge of this meeting. The topic for this meeting was, "How to Avaid Failure." I am sorry we did not have any one to give us a talk on this subject. On November 16 the reporter conducted the meeting; subject, "Co-operation in Christian Service." At this meeting we were so glad to have Dr. W. B. Patton give us a talk on the subject. The meeting of November 23 was to have been conducted by Miss Josie Mae Watson, but she also being absent Miss Clorese Lamb took charge. The subject was, "How May We Practice Thanksgiving." We should have had some one to give us a talk on this subject that we might have understood it better, but we did not. Miss Lillie Yarborough conducted the meeting of November 30; subject, "Christianity and the Health of America." The meeting of December 7 was conducted by Mrs. Hiram Yarborough; subject, "Truths That Jesus Taught."

If you can possibly carry out any part that is assigned to you in your society do not neglect it. We are so glad to have Rev. N. M. Harrison back with us again; he helps us so much with our Christian Endeavor work. We have 34 members in the Junior society. Some of the Junior members are beginning to lead their meetings. I think this is fine for Juniors. We have 43 members in our young people's society.

With best wishes to all Christian Endeavor workers,

Hattie Lou Bishop, Reporter.

Friendship, North Davidson Circuit.—We have begun another conference year and we hope to make it a better year in every way. We are glad our pastor, Rev. C. A. Cecil, has been returned to us; let us all pray and work in every way for the advancement of Christ's kingdom. He preached a very interesting sermon Sunday on watching. Two of the most important points in it were our conduct and company. $33.25 on budget. A thankoffering was taken for the Children's Home for the boys' building, $10.85. We are having a right good Sunday school. We enjoyed having Mr. A. H. Evans with us and we enjoyed his talk ever so much. The new officers for this year are: trustees, Wesley Byerly, Isaiah Miller, Webster Snider, Roy Phillips, Elvery Walser; class leaders, Mrs. W. M. Byerly, Mack Hanes; stewards, Miss Bertha DeLap, Wesley Walser, Harper Shoaf, Luther Phillips; Sunday school superintendent, W. M. Byerly; assistant, Otis Phillips; secretary, Clarence Shoaf, Cletus Phillips; organist, Miss Ethel Walser. Reporter.

Corinth, Littleton Circuit.—This people were glad to have Bro. Loy return as pastor. He did much good last year, visited, read, prayed and sympathized with his people, won the hearts of many who had no chance to go to church.

A large congregation out last Sunday to hear him, and he did some of his characteristic preaching, delivered the best sermon we have heard him preach yet, good.

Our Sunday school has been doing well since the revival meeting and most of the children are anxious for a Christmas tree.

Our Sunday school sends many happy returns to superintendent of Children's Home, H. A. Garrett, for greetings sent by our delegate from conference.

We aim to reorganize our Ladies' Aid society in the near future.

Misses Lena and Helen Morris worked up a box-party last week to help purchase a new organ for church.

Miss Lena Morris has accepted a position in Littleton post office.

Dec. 9, 1919.

Liberty Hill, Anderson Charge.—We want first to report that we are well pleased with our new pastor, Rev. Charles C. Lindley; he preached for us first time Sunday, December 14; his subject was Life. We saw while he preached that a life that was a sacrifice here was a blessing much more than that of hoarding up riches or worldly things could ever be, not counting losing heaven and Jesus. In the evening the subject was, The Leaven of Sin. We saw some new points about sin, but none good, for all sin is bad. May we with a faithful leader and God's help learn more about sin, that we sin less and make this the best year of our lives and the best year of the church.

The first quarterly conference has met, business transacted as usual. Church officials have been elected. We are well started for a new year's work.

The Sunday school is moving along though not so well as most of us would like. The people come but some of us fail to be interested in the lesson as we should be. We are preparing to treat the children December 21. May some little ones find then an interest they will never lose. Yours for a new year's work,

Reporter.

EMPTY STOCKINGS.

Oh, mothers, in homes that are happy,
Where Christmas comes laden with cheer,
Where the children are dreaming already
Of the merriest day in the year.

As you gather your darlings around ye,
And tell them the "story of old,"
Remember the homes that are dreary!
Remember the hearts that are cold!

And thanking the love that has dowered you
With all that is dearest and best,
Give freely, that from your abundance
Some bare little life may be blessed!

Oh, go where the stockings hang empty,
Where Christmas is naught but a name,
And give—for the love of the Christ-child;
'Twas to seek such as these that He came

—Ellen Manly.

IN MEMORIAM.

William Zachariah Routh was born February 5, 1852, and died December 11, 1919, aged 67 years, 10 months and six days. He professed faith in Christ when 15 years old and joined Gray's Chapel Methodist Protestant church. Since that time to the time of his death he was a faithful member. He bore his sickness patiently and said that he knew he would never get well but was ready to go to his home above. The funeral was conducted by Rev. L. W. Gerringtr at Gray's Chapel and interment made in the local cemetery.

Death of a Lovely Child.

Julia Grace Euliss was born October 31, 1910. She died December 12, 1919, age nine years, one month and 11 days. She was obedient, sympathetic, and though a mere child she was considerate of the welfare of others. She loved the gospel as it comes through song. Her favorite hymns were: "Shall we gather at the river?" "O think of the home over there"; "I'm going home to die no more;" "God be with you till we meet again."

It seems strange that a child of such promise should be taken away. But who knows but that God needs them as much in heaven as on earth? One thing seems clear, they are not less useful there than here. She was carried into the church and from the church to the grave by her girl friends. The funeral services were conducted by the writer in Mt. Pleasant church and her remains laid to rest in Mt. Pleasant cemetery.

J. A. Burgess.

Ivester.

Buried, at Keistler's church, Cleveland Circuit, November 15, 1919, a good woman, Mrs. Zula Lee Ivester, wife of Velus Ivester. Her maiden name was Edwards; and she was born December 24, 1879; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, when about 15 years of age. Was married to Bro. Ivester in May, 1899, and then transferred her church membership to Keistler's Methodist Protestant church so as to belong to the same church with her husband. She was true and faithful as a church member, much esteemed by her neighbors and acquaintances, and devotedly loved by her husband and children. She was virtually in the prime of life, Besides the heart broken husband she leaves seven children, a father, six brothers and three sisters to mourn their loss. Her death is a distinct loss to the community and the church and semingly but little short of a calamity to the home where she served as a kind of guardian angel. We can only hope and pray that the family and friends being fully persuaded of her salvation will continually strive to meet her in that world where there is no death.

The funeral was conducted by the writer, who used as a scriptural basis for a few remarks the description of the good woman as given in the 31st chapter of Proverbs. The grave was left completely banked with beautiful flowers, many of them done up in beautiful designs, showing something of the love and esteem the people had for this good woman. But no doubt but what the Master has placed on her brow a more beautiful wreath than any of those laid upon her grave.

Her Pastor, J. H. Stowe.

P. S.—I wish to apologize to friends and relatives for not sending in this obituary sooner. Conference duties, etc., is my excuse.

J. H. S.

Lilly Belle Vuncannon.

The death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jason Vuncannon of Why Not Circuit, Friday evening, November 28, 1919, and bore away their only daughter, Lilly Belle, aged nine years.

She was stricken with that dread disease diphtheria; complications developed, which resulted in death.

The many friends are in deep sympathy with the bereaved family. Lilly Belle is survived by her parents and five brothers, Vernon, Lee, Guy, Willard, and little brother.

On November 30 the remains were laid to rest in the cemetery at New Hope church. The Good Shepherd has gently taken a lamb into his fold, to act as a guiding star along the way.

"She has gone to heaven before us,
But she turns and waves her hand;
Pointing to the glories o'er us
In that happy spirit land."

RELAXATION.

In these days of intensive living, of physical and mental stress and strain, science proclaims "relaxation" as the great reconstructive agency for relief and up-building.

Physical relaxation, as when one sags down into the depths of some enfolding chair or lies at full length and imagines himself to be slowly sinking lower, and lower still, until all sense of muscular exertion and nerve-tension is forgotten, to rouse therefrom refreshed and invigorated and fitted for new demands upon his strength; mental relaxation, as when one's mind lazily muses and drifts hither and yon with little or no consciousness of effort—"day-dreaming," we say—to be recalled as from a refreshing sleep, quickened and alert for new tasks of mental activity.

The soul of man needs its seasons of relaxation and consequent refreshment, as well as does his physical and mental self and so God's word with its "Be still and know that I am God" comes as a loving reminder of this need and with implied provision for its satisfaction. When one learns the secret of resting in the Lord, he finds that "they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; theey shall run and not be weary; and they shall walk and not faint,"—strengthened with might in the inner man.

"REST IN THE LORD AND WAIT PATIENTLY FOR HIM."

WEDDING BELLS.

On Friday of this week Rev. Paul S. Kennett led to the hymeneal altar Miss Blande Trogdon, of Liberty, N. C. Father of the groom, Rev. W. F. Kennett, officiated in the marriage.

On Tuesday evening of next week, Prof. John Albert Holmes, son of Rev. G. W. Holmes, and Miss Willie McDonald Barrett will be married in the Presbyterian church at Matthews, N. C.

—A letter came to this city addressed "Mr. Editor, Greensboro, N. C." Internal evidence proved that it was intended for the editor of the Herald, though it went first to a daily paper office. The writer is a good sister living in Shelby, N. C. She wants us to warn all our readers to be ready for the coming of Christ. Surely that is an all-important preparation to make, for Christ is coming. In fact, He is here now, and it is all-important that we be prepared to live daily in His presence, to do His will rather than our own. We thank the sister for her expression of concern.

—Henry C. Frick, the steel magnate, died December 2. He began life in poverty. He is the man who was wounded by Alexander Berkman in the Homestead, Pa., strike years ago.

—A company is forming for the publication of a Christian daily paper in Chicago, to be national in scope. It is hoped that the publication will begin September, 1920.

—Elizabeth and Edna Nicholson, of Mebane, found the ten names hidden last week and sent us neat lists of them. We thank them. We wonder who will be the first to find those hidden this week.

—One of Rehoboth's best members writes expressing the belief that Bro. Bates is the right man for Granville. His manner of going about the work inspired confidence. Rehoboth's Thanksgiving collection for the Children's Home was about $115 besides a sum to the Oxford orphanage.

—The Bishop of Limerick charges that loud costumes for women are designed generally by Parisian Jews or Freemasons who are bitterly opposed to Christianity, and seek, among other means, to uproot it by the introduction into decent society of those dangerous and indecent dresses."

NOTICE TO MILLION DOLLAR CAMPAIGN TREASURERS.

In view of a recent decision with reference to War Savings Stamps, it will be necessary for each individual desiring to turn in War Savings Stamps on his subscription to convert the same into cash at his local post office and remit us cash. Of course, we will only be able to give credit for the cash received in these cases. Liberty Bonds are received at par provided all coupons not yet due are attached. MORMON EFFRONTERY.

Mormonism appeared in person at the recent World's Christian Citizenship Conference, in Pittsburgh, and claimed for itself a hearing there. Its spokesman was Apostle James E. Talmadge, one of its "Prophets, Seers and Revelators" and its ablest theological controversialist.

His demand for a hearing was denied as a right by Dr. James S Martin, the presiding officer of the day, on the grounds that Mormonism was distinctly non-Christian and its apostles could not claim place in any assembly whose whole character and work and purpose was distinctly Christian.

We Make a Specialty of Greensboro, N. C.

But as a courtesy, Talmadge was heard and then questioned. He admitted the teaching of polygamy by his church, as a divinely-ordained system of marriage, although he disavowed the present practice.

Mrs. Lulu Loveland Shepard challenged him to state whether or not he was wearing the secret under garment which is placed upon priests and priestesses in the esoteric rites of the Mormon temples and which is the ever present symbol of the awful oaths,—the treacherous and blasphemous oaths,—which the priests and priestesses take in the revolting ceremonial. Talmadge refused to answer and he declined to demonstrate to a committee of gentlemen,—in fact he tacitly admitted the wearing of the secret garment.

The significance of Apostle Talmadge's appearance and utterance is two-fold: First, Mormonism, which has always bitterly denounced evangelical Christianity, is now seeking to fraternize. Second, Mormonism admits the present teaching of polygamy.

And the significance of the conference action in refusing to the apostle any hearing as a right, will go far to clarify the issue. Mormonism is distinctly anti-Christian; and its emissaries have no proper place and are not entitled as a right to any hearing in any Christian body.

FROM THE COMMITTEE ON INCREASE CAMPAIGN FOR CHURCH PAPERS.

(This committee was appointed by President Andrews as authorized by the Annual Conference in adopting the Report of the Committee on Literature, and consists of Rev. L. W. Gerringer, Rev. J. E. Pritchard, and Rev. R. C. Stubbins.)

To our Pastors and People:

We ask your hearty co-operation in the effort to reach the goal set by our Annual Conference in obtaining new subscriptions to our four church papers: The Methodist Recorder, published in Pittsburgh, Pa., the Methodist Protestant, published in Baltimore, Md., and the Methodist Protestant Herald and the Woman's Missionary Record, published in Grensboro, N. C.

We ask that you make a quick campaign and yet a thorough one, trying during February and March to reach the logical goal of a paper in every family, or at least the number named for your charge in the list of apportionments.

Subscriptions must be prepaid to be counted. Two half-year subscriptions will count as one subscription.

Wishing you success in this and every department of church work, we are,

Yours fraternally,

For the Committee,
L. W. GERRINGER, Chairman,

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON APPORTIONMENT IN CHURCH PAPER CAMPAIGN.

We respectfully and tentatively offer the following list to the brethren. If any pastor thinks his number too great or too small, we would be glad to have him write us frankly about it. We have done what seemed to be the proper thing in each case, but more light might have changed the figures.

Subscriptions to be Counted.—We find that the action of Conference is susceptible of two interpretations. One is that we are to seek to add 1500 families to our circle of readers—get 1500 absolutely new names. The other understanding (the one we have accepted in making out the list) is that Conference intended to continue and extend the campaign begun last year, moving the goal from 1,000 to 1,500, so that at the end of the campaign 1,500 names will be on the books that were not on January 1, 1919. We shall therefore count renewals from those who were new last year. The only renewals not counted will be from those receiving the paper January 1, 1919.

If any pastor insists on the first interpretation as the only correct one, he will of course not wish us to count toward his goal any renewals from the new subscribers of last year.

WHAT IS YOUR AIM IN LIFE?

Starting life without an aim is like boarding a train, without knowing where you want to go. And it is astonishing how many girls are in this predicament. They live on from one day to another doing faithfully duties that present themselves, but without any looking ahead, without any big controlling purpose. They are more at fault than their brothers, even, for most boys have some idea what they want to do with their lives, as far as occupation goes, if nothing else. The boy who has made up his mind to be a civil engineer, has something in the shape of a guiding purpose, even though it is not enough.

What are you going to do with your life? That is a bigger question than mere employment, though it is a good thing for every girl to plan to fit herself for doing some kind of work which will enable her to support herself. But in addition to that, what kind of a woman are you going to become? What sort of influence are you going to exert? What are you aiming at with this sort of life of yours? What are you trying to do with it?

There are some things we want and cannot have. Some of you watch rather wistfully the automobiles that glide past you and then trudge on your way thankful for two strong feet to carry you. Some of you long to see foreign lands, the beauty of Italy, the majesty of the Alps, but you cannot feel sure that these desires will ever be granted. But a high aim, a noble purpose, a sublime ideal are among the possibilities for every one of us.—Selected.

SERMON BY THE EDITOR.

Published at the request of some who heard.

My theme is "The Gospel," commonly called "The Gospel of Jesus Christ." The word "gospel" is not found in the Old Testament scriptures, but occurs in the New Testament more than one hundred times. It is a word that sprang into frequent use in the days of Jesus Christ and has been a great word ever since. It would probably be no exaggeration to say that the word is now used not less than a million times every day, and its use is spreading over the world and seems destined to pass into all lands and among all peoples. It means something when a new word thus comes forward and passes into general use.

There are men in this congregation who in their boyhood days never heard the word "telephone." Now they hear it every day. What does that mean? It means that a new invention of great importancme has come forward and passed into general use since they were boys. Fifty years ago the average man would have thought it an absolute impossibility to speak in an ordinary tone of voice and be heard 25 miles away. Now that occurs every day and occasions no surpriese. Now millions of voices every day pass over the wires, carrying messages from friend to friend, from business man to business man. Then in these recent years we have wireless transmission, we have messages borne through the air over continents and across oceans, from nation to nation. Wonderful, isn't it? And now it has been boldly proposed that we provide means of communication with other worlds, with the inhabitants of the planets, particularly the planet Mars. That seems utterly impossible now; and yet in view of all that has been done who will dare say that it can never be done? If it ever is done, another new word will be born into our language to live as long as the new invention lives and to mark a new advance of mankind.

The word "gospel" marks a great forward step in the life of the world. It marks the bridging over of a greater chasm than that which separates us from the planets. It marks the introduction of an invention too great for the genius and power of man, an invention brought forth by the wisdom and power of God.

The gospel brings down into the darkness of earth the pure light of heaven. The gospel reveals to us that which we could never have known or even guessed—the character of Him who sits enthroned at the center of all power. The gospel shows us how we may regain the hights from which we have fallen and how we may rise to still higher hights. The gospel opens to us the dazzling prospect of immortality. The gospel gives to us a beatific vision of a future state in which we see ourselves basking in the ecstatic delights of heavenly glory. More than all this and better than all this, the gospel transforms us and prepares us for our high destiny; it takes us by the hand, as it were, and leads us on step by step to the sure realization of the great hope set before us. As Paul puts it, the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth.

Surely a thing that has such power for good as the gospel is declared to have is worthy of our best attention, and I feel that I can render you no greater service than by directing your thoughts to this great subject.

Already there may have sprung up in your mind this question: If the gospel is capable of doing so much for men, why has it done so little for me? I can perhaps help you answer that question.

In the first place, you have been hearing the gospel story from your childhood, and it may be that familiarity with the words of the story has kept you from thinking sharply of its real and wonderful meaning. Custom tends to dull the mind. Familiarity breeds contempt. The noise of the mill would keep you awake, but the miller lies down and sleeps undisturbed by the sound. Emerson said: "If the stars should appear but one night in a thousand years, men looking upon them would believe in God and adore; they would preserve for many generations the remembrance of the city of God they had beheld in the heavens." But as it now is we see the stars almost every night and have little thought or emotion when we see them. But it is not the fault of the stars that we are so little affected by the sight of them. They are there, in the heavens above us, in all their glory and grandeur, ready to impress all thinking beholders. If they affect us little, it is because we think but little about them.

If the gospel story is to you little more than an idle tale, it may be because you have never really thought about its profound and wonderful meaning.

Secondly, your mind may be under the bias of false theological teaching, and this may prevent the gospel's doing its perfect work in you.

But you say you never attended a theological school or read a book on theology in your life. That may be and still you may have had a chance to imbibe false notions about God. I wouldn't be surprised to learn that you have been under the direct personal instruction of one of the greatest teachers of theology the world has had. To whom do I refer? Who was it that came to our mother Eve in the garden of Eden and instilled into her mind false notions about God? Made her believe that God had a selfish motive in imposing restrictions upon her which it was to her real interest to disregard? Who was it that came to Jesus and tried by quoting Scripture to make him believe that God would protect him in a course that was contrary to the will of God?

You may never have thought of Satan as a professor of theology, but he is really the greatest teacher of false theology the world has ever had. There are but two systems of theology, the true and the false. Satan is the author and publisher of false theology and the greatest propagandist in the world. The Germans were charged with being great propagandists before and during the late war, and they were; but the Germans were bunglers in comparison with Satan. Satan's work is skillful and thorough and extensive—co-etensive with mankind. I have been surprised on going through an orchard that I could not find a single apple, peach, pear, or plum that had not been bored into and corrupted by an evil insect. That illustrates the thoroughness of Satan's work. He does not miss any of us. And yet his approaches are so insidious that we do not know when he comes; but he comes, and he does not leave us as he found us. He injects into our minds the seeds of error and leaves them to corrupt our thought and our lives. Satan is wise enough to know that if he would profoundly influence a human life, the place to begin is in the mind where thoughts are born, where our beliefs and conceptions about God are formed. If he can give us a false idea of God, if he can prejudice us against God, his work is done. As long as we are under the influence of Satan's error, we are almost proof against the truth of God.

Paul warned us against the wiles of the devil, and Satan's deceitful work upon your mind may explain why the gospel has had so little effect upon you. The thought of the world today, even in Christian lands, is impregnated with theological error probably due to the influence of Satan upon the minds of men. I do not know that Satan has ever been guilty of teaching the stupid error that there is no God. The Psalmist said, The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God. But surely only the mind of a fool can rest in blank atheism. It is evident to thinking men that this world is not a chance jumble; it has in it law and order and there must be back of it as its first cause some being capable of producing the world as it is. Satan does not waste his time teaching what he knows nobody but a fool will believe. Instead of teaching that there is no God, it suits his purpose equally well to give men a false notion of God, to misrepresent His character, to make Him seem far other than He is. And so we find current in the world today certain fundamental errors regarding the nature or character of God.

First, there is the false notion that God is an impersonal being, a mere blind brute force that moves on with the uniformity of nature, but without any thought, feeling, reason or purpose. It is vain to pray to such a god, for he cannot hear, and if he could hear he could not answer, for he is not master of his own action. The only thing for us to do is to watch the course of his movement and govern ourselves acocrdingly. Under this view, the only theology is natural science,—physics, chemistry, biology. The research laboratory takes the place of the house of worship, the lecture on science the place of the sermon.

Material power has had and still has many devotees. Napoleon Bonaparte said that God is on the side of the strongest battalions; in other words, there is no god but force. In the beginning of the late war the German emperor seemed to have a similar notion—I don't know what he thinks now. He spoke of England's "contemptible little army", and when his own immense army began to mobilize he said, "Now the world will see what a real army can do." But the worship of material power is not confined to military leaders nor to military ranks. There are many people in civil life who are falling down before the same god of force. Every man whose ruling purpose is to get rich, to accumulate material possessions, is a worshiper of the blind, deaf and dumb god that Satan puts on the throne of the universe. Upon such a man the gospel of Christ can have but little power.

Then to those who hold on to the thought that God is a real person and not a mere blind force, Satan comes with misrepresentation of the character of God. He makes men believe that God is an unreasonable tyrant with whom you would better have as little to to as possible. I venture to say that there are people in this congregation who really believe that religion is a thing which it is desirable to let alone as long as possible, but when the time comes when you can't ignore it any longer, then you would better accept it as the lesser of two evils, the other and greater evil being eternal punishment. How did such an outlandish thought ever get foothold in any human mind? Why, it follows at once from Satan's theology, from Satan's representation of God as a vindictive and cruel tyrant to be let alone as long as he will let you alone, but when the time comes when he won't let you alone any longer, then as a matter of policy you would would better yield to him, better surrender; for if you don't you'll have to do much worse. Just as Germany signed the peace treaty, not because she wanted to sign it, but because she thought of what would happen if she didn't sign—thought of General Foche and his legions camped upon her borders ready to rush in and inflict punishment, therefore she signed:—so many imagine that getting religion is really making a dishonorable surrender to a tyrant who has us in his power and who would inflict terrible things upon us if we did not make a show of submission and a profession of loyalty and devotion to his will.

But some people do not need any Satanic agency to lead them to resist the influence of the gospel; they keep the gospel out of their lives by keeping it out of their minds. Jesus spoke of the cares of this world and the deceitfulness of riches as causes that make the gospel of no effect. The gospel must be apprehended by the mind before it can produce its effects upon the heart and the life. But what chance has the gospel to enter the mind of a man who gives all his waking hours to other matters? Who never seriously contemplates or meditates upon the high and great things revealed in the gospel? You have been a hearer of the gospel all your life: have you ever been an earnest hearer of it? Have you ever spent a solid hour reading the Bible or otherwise seeking to find for yourself the way of life and salvation? If not, you need not be surprised that the gospel is failing to produce in your character and life the results for which it is recommended. If you have lived as much as ten years in this world and have not come under the influence of the gospel, it is time for you to begin to think. I you have been here 20, 30, 40, 50 or more years and have not been greatly changed by the power of the gospel, it is time for you to be intensely anxious about yourself.

Many pathetic things occur of which we read or hear: men shipwrecked and going down to watery graves in sight of land; men out in a blinding snow storm falling down and freezing to death almost in their own door yards; men, women and children starving to death in the midst of plenty which they might have had if they had only known about it. All these are pathetic, but the most pathetic occurrence of all is for a human soul to perish within hearing of the gospel of Christ—perish because the ears that hear do not convey to the mind within the force and power of the truth the gospel bears.

Paul declared that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation, not unto every one that heareth, but unto every one that believeth. In order to be saved by the gospel, we must believe the gospel. In order to believe the gospel, we must fasten our minds upon it, we must enter into its deep and true meaning, we must take up our abode amid the great realities it reveals to us.

Friends, brethren, sisters, are you ready to hear and believe the gospel?

A man was being driven out from prison to the place of execution to be put to death for crime. As he rode along he said, Driver, please drive slowly, that I may have more time to see the sunlight and the green grass and the trees and the sky, for this is the last time I shall ever see these things.

It might help you to hear the gospel if you would imagine that this is the last time you will ever be permitted to hear it. And with some of you this may be more than mere fancy. If you knew that this is the last time you will ever be permitted to attend church, wouldn't you be eager to hear the truth? I think there would spring up in your heart the desire expressed in the hymn:

"Tell me the story slowly, that I may take it in;
That wonderful redemption,—God's remedy for sin."

The gospel story is not a long story, but it is a wonderful story in what it reveals to us. I said it reveals to us the true character of God. It gives us a great revelation of God's character in just two words—words spoken by Jesus Christ. "Our Father!" Take down from you mind Satan's picture of God as a vengeful tyrant, a vindictive monster, and hang up there Jesus' picture of "Our Father." Henceforth when you think of God, think of one who hates you never but who loves you ever, who whether you are good or whether you are bad provides for you day after day and year after year because he is our "Father."

Again, the gospel reveals to us the true character of God and his feeling toward us in the matchless parable of the Prodigal Son. The father of that wandering boy represents God in His attitude toward us. Note what that human father did.

When he found that his son had become a wanderer and a vagabond, did he call for the family register that he might erase his name and save the family honor? Did he disown his son and resolve never to see him again? No, he didn't do that. Had he done so, he would not have represented God in His attitude toward us.

Did he send a detective, a police officer, after his son to bring him back in handcuffs and irons? No, he didn't do that. Had he done so he would not have represented God's treatment of us.

Did he feel indifferent and unconcerned about his absent boy, not caring where he was or whither he went or what became of him? No, had he done so he would not have been a true picture of God.

What then did he do? Why, his heart yearned after his absent son continually; I have no doubt that he lay awake nights thinking about him, and he spent his days in hoping and waiting and anxiously watching for his return, so that when at last he did return the father saw him a great way off. And when he saw him he did not turn his back upon him, he did not close his door against him. but—old man that he was—he ran to meet the wanderer; and when he met him he did not speak words of condemnation, words of sharp rebuke, but he fell upon his neck and kissed him; and then he led him to the house and put the best robe upon him, put shoes on his feet, and a ring upon his hand; he killed for him the fatted calf and invited in his friends to rejoice with him because his wandering boy had come home.

Jesus' picture of that human father waiting in silent sadness day after day for the return of his wandering boy is a picture of God waiting for you and for me!

Sometimes men of wealth pay as much as a hundred thousand dollars for a single painting, th ework of some great artist. I tell you that Jesus' picture of that father's reception of his wandering boy is worth more to you and me than a million dollars would be because it shows us how we may hope to be received when we turn from our wanderings back to our Father's House.

The gospel in these pictures drawn by Jesus gives us a look into the great heart of God and we see there ineffable tenderness, we see profound pity, we see unfathomable love.

Satan's picture of God terrifies us, it gives us troubled dreams and horrible nightmares. Christ's picture of God soothes us and comforts us and lulls us to repose. It takes away our fears and fills us with hope and happiness. The whole world is happier today because Jesus hung up before us those pictures of God.

And some stop here and think they have the whole gospel. They rest complacently in contemplation of the benevolence of God, expecting to find in this a sovereign and complete remedy for all the ills of the world. They are fond of quoting, "God is in His Heaven and all is well with the world." They recognize no responsibility and no power of their own to make changes for the better. They pluck the flowers of the gospel and are careful to avoid the thorns.

Great and glorious as is the gospel's revelation of the compassion of God, the tenderness of God, this is by no means the whole of the gospel. The God of the gospel is not only supremely good, He is also supremely just. His righteousness is as perfect as His mercy. He cannot fail in compassion; neither can He fail in justice or righteousness. Will not the Judge of all the earth do right? We may be sure that He will.

The thought of the everlasting love of God comforts us, but the thought of the holiness of God, the stern and inflexible justice of God makes us very uncomfortable.

We are not only members of a family, fa-

PRESIDENT'S LETTER.

NOT POWER SO MUCH AS WILL—

It is not the power, but the will, to obtain a better state that men need most. It was Dr. Samuel Johnson, I believe, who voiced this thought in his essays. It is a statement too true to require discussion except as to make it more fully known.

Every worker at reform has found this true to a distressing degree and the modern church worker is often reminded that Dr. Johnson had learned a most illuminating truth about the human heart. So the great question for us to solve is, How can we induce people to choose the better state for themselves. How can we prevail upon them, how can we induce them, to plan and to act for their own highest good. This is the everyday work of parent, teacher and pastor. It is hard to keep from falling back in despair as we see our best framed schemes fail to appeal to those who would receive the greatest benefit from them. Yet this is the experience of every real worker in the kingdom of our Lord.

Not power, but will, to do that we need the exercise of. I do not mean to imply that men and women do not need to be in touch with divine power in order to accomplish their tasks, but that they need to exercise their wills in order that they may be in touch with it. "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have eternal life"; i.e., they preferred something else than eternal life. And so, the dominating desire of the heart has kept men away from or with our Christ. We pray for power often when the power is already ours for the using. But when there is desire, real burning desire, for the accomplishment of a task the power is not far to seek.

OUR SPRING CAMPAIGN—

We are now entering upon a campaign, or should be entering upon it, a campaign that should mean more for our church than any campaign it is possible for us to put on. I believe in raising money for our boards and institutons as much as any man, unless he be some general agent; and I know that it does us who give great benefit as well as it benefits the institutions to which we contribute.

But so long as men and women are unspiritually minded, so long as they are not prayerful, not devotional, not worshipful in spirit, so long will even money fail to save souls. For dollars never have, nor ever can save a soul in themselves. They are daily being blessed of God in saving souls, but not by materially minded men and women. So we have set out for our spring drive to have a revival in all of our churches. They need reviving; they need to live again, to live more vibrantly, more consciously as members of the kingdom of Christ.

Has your pastor talked this? Ask him about it. Suggest to him a suitable time for a spring revival. Pray for this revival, seek it until the desire becomes real and abiding, then help to bring it to pass. If a few of our church people in every church would become truly concerned for a revival of religion, it would most surely come. Sometimes the pastor alone is able to so plead and pray and preach until the revival comes, but it requires much time to bring about these revivals. Only those come quickly that are sought by numbers of people in a community who will not be content until it does come.

We need to be united in this campaign. We can never accomplish much as a people until we get together.

We must make sacrifices, too. Will need to change our plans, it may be. Give up our own preference, yield to the judgment of others in order to bring this revival in our own church—but it is worth all it costs.

WINSTON, FIRST CHURCH, Rev. J. D. Williams, Pastor.

I visited this church last Sunday morning. It was not a good day, but there was a fairly good sized congregation present, more men than women, I think. The people are attentive and appreciative here, making it easy for the stranger to preach to them.

Last year the debt was cleared on the church, but now they are getting ready to put on a new roof and to make some other improvements which will doubtless cost them several hundred dollars. The Philathea class has outgrown its quarters and this will possibly claim the attention of the trustees before very long. Pastor Williams is serving his fifth year of the present pastorate and is deservedly popular; this makes the tenth year in all and during this latter period the church has gotten into the best condition to really do things in all its history, I suspect.

KERNERSVILLE, OAK RIDGE CHARGE, Rev. A. O. Lindley, Pastor.

I stopped off and preached at this church Sunday night, expecting to visit the other churches on the charge later on. It was rather a disagreable night, and the congregations here are small on good occasions, but there were several out. Rev. T. J. Ogburn kindly called in his service and came with some of his people over and worshiped with us, so what at one time promised to be rather an unpromising service turned into a helpful one for the preacher and we trust was such to those who were present. Our church here has had a hard time to keep things alive and do things since I first knew it. It has survived, however, and this fact encourages us to hope for better days still to come.

The death of Sister W. S. Linville has removed one of the substantial members of this church; she will be greatly missed. I will have more to say about this work later.

THE PUBLISHER WANTS SOME JOURNALS.

Will the brethren who may more Journals than they need please let me know how many they can spare. I have calls for about twenty; and some of the brethren who did not get enough are very anxious to get more. I will return postage on all Journals sent.

The Campaign.

N. M. Harrison, Jr.

The campaign is on, what are you going to do about it? Yes, it was planned at Conference last November. Our quota has not been assigned us, yet we cannot afford to wait on that. Our field is large and we must start now if we are to be first to subscribe the assigned quota. What, you have not heard about the campaign? Didn't you read about it in the church paper? Oh! You are not? Well, I guess you didn't know that the campaign was on, and there are lots of things about your church you don't know because you are not a subscriber to any of her papers. That's the campaign that is on, a campaign for subscriptions, and it is our aim to reach our quota before it is assigned us.

No Methodist Protestant can afford to be without one or more of the church papers. Without it you cannot keep up with the events of your denomination, nor even the work of your local charge. The accompanying reports are revealing to you facts about your own church that you did not know, because you have not had the paper to see the previous reports of these different departments. They appear from time to time and if you want to keep informed send in your subscription now. Do not wait for the canvassing committee to see you, fill out the blank below, designate which paper you desire, Methodist Recorder, Methodist Protestant, or Methodist Protestant Herald, enclose $1.50 for a year's subcription, and mail same to the pastor. Then when you have become a subscriber read the paper from cover to cover.

Enclosed is $1.50 for one year's subscription to ____________________ Yarborough Chapel, Church and Sunday School.

Miss Clara Jackson, Reporter.

We now have on our church roll one hundred and sixty members. The average congregation is about one hundred. Why can't we have it more? With the addition of an extra service a month, making services every Sunday except the fourth, we are hoping the congregation will be greatly increased. We have begun a new conference year; let us, therefore, make a new year resolution that we will be more regular and punctual in our church attendance, and make this the best year's work in our history.

We are not doing as much as we can, or should, or expect to do, but we are doing something, and in the following short space we will try to tell you some of the things we are doing.

A committee has been appointed to look after the sick and needy in the community. Already in the few months of its existence great things have come from their labors.

Several have promised by signing cards to try to bring one soul to Christ this year. What a glorious year this would be if all would do this.

Quite a number of our members have signed the tither's pledge. A Tithers' League has been organized between the Baptist, Methodist Episcopal, and Methodist Protestant churches, and monthly meetings are held. The program consists of discussions, etc., of different phases of tithing. The public is invited to the meetings.

The membership has been divided out between the seven stewards. They are sending out letters informing the members of the increase in the budget, and enclosing a card for their pledge. This will be followed by a personal visit to receive the cards. A record will be kept of each pledge, and each steward is expected to collect the pledge at the proper time.

We have thirteen members in the Woman's Home Missionary Society, and fourteen in the Ladies' Aid. Both of these are doing good work.

Our Sunday school seems to be improving, but we still want to make it better. We have one hundred and twenty members, six teachers, and seven officers, and the average attendance is about seventy. We are trying to double that this year by using the Cross and Crown System. Practically the whole school is trying for the gold pin.

Cards have been given out to the members of the school to sign, so that we can find out how many of the members are Christians and how many belong to the church. This is done so that we may know just where and how to work.

The entire school gives the first Sunday's collection to the Children's Home, and the primary class gives every Sunday's collection. The school also has adopted an Armenian orphan, and contributed five dollars a month to its support.

A Bible reading class is conducted by the school. Every member of the class answers whether or not they have prayed and read the Bible every day during the week.

Yarborough Chapel, The Young People's Society.

Richard Tucker, Reporter.

The Christian Endeavor was organized in July, 1919. There were few members first, but it has grown until now there are on roll about fifty.

It is gaining great headways to success in dealing with the moral and religious life of the young people. They have entered into its work with their whole heart, and a continuance of their present zeal for work will unlock for them a great future.

The social life of the young people is appealed to by the socials that are occasionally held. These are used as means of contact to reach the spiritual life.

A Relief Committee has been appointed. It is going out with a hand of cheer and comfort into the sick rooms of the young people of the community. Another point of contact to reach the spiritual life.

The Christian Endeavor is striving to give the young people a broad outlook upon the world in its great need of the Word of God. It is having a missionary program once a month, and is soon to commence a course in mission study under the direction of the pastor. It is contributing toward the support of a child at the Children's Home.

The Christian Endeavor is doing a wonderful work in training the young people in Christian leadership. A bright future awaits the true Christian Endeavor worker, and the society in which he works.

Yarborough Chapel, The Junior Society.

Miss Lily Yarborough, Superintendent.

The Junior Christian Endeavor society of Yarborough Chapel was organized July, 1919, with about fifteen members. This number is now increased to forty-five. The officers of the society are as follows:

President, Sara Mae Bishop; vice president, Dorothy Patton; secretary, Loyd Wilson; treasurer, Catharine Yarborough.

Much interest is being shown by the Juniors in the society, each one taking some part in every meeting, if only a memory verse, sentence prayer or in the songs. We are arranging to have topic cards printed with the leader's name for each meeting. We have planned quite a lot of memory work and also a mission study class for this year's work.

The Juniors made a very nice Christmas offering to the Armenian children. We have decided to clothe one child in the Children's Home this year.

Miss Hattie Lou Bishop has been appointed assistant superintendent of our society. She seems very much interested in the work and is very helpful in the meetings.

We would like to have the parents visit the meeting occasionally and see the progress the children are making.

Harmony, Church and Sunday School.

Miss Mamie C. Reeves, Reporter.

Harmony church has about fifty members on roll, but our congregations are much larger than that owing to the regular attendance of some of our good Baptist and Methodist Episcopal friends. Some of them attend so regularly that it seems as if they were our own members.

Services are held the second Sunday night, and the fourth Sunday morning and night. We regret that the second Sunday night appointment had to be dropped. Owing to the condition of the roads it was impossible for the pastor to fill his morning appointment at Yarborough Chapel and then get here in time for the night service. This is but a temporary suspension and we hope by the second Sunday in March that that service can again be held.

Our congregation seems to be very much interested in the work of the church. Quite a number of them have signed pledge cards, pledging to read the Bible and to pray, and to make this a daily practice, and also to try to bring one soul to Christ this year. So now we must get to work, and try and win some poor soul to Christ that is living in darkness. This is a promise that we have made, and the responsibility is upon us.

We have several tithers in the church. I do not know how many. We should all be tithers. We pay our grocery bills, and the taxes and rents on our farms, but do we always pay God the rent on the blessings that we enjoy? "Will a man rob God?"

We over-subscribed our quota in the Million Dollar Campaign. About eighty per cent. of the pledge has been paid. The entire amount of the pledge will be paid before next May.

We are looking for, hoping for, and praying for a great year in our church. We can all help make it a great year, and it will take all of us. Prayer and co-operation will bring the results.

Our Sunday school is doing fine, seems to increase very fast. We have on roll now seventy-five or eighty. Our superintendent, Mr. J. H. Balentine, is very faithful, and is always on time. He seems to be very interested in the work of the Sunday school.

There are six classes in the school. The teachers are: Miss Kate Medlock, Mrs. W. H. Balentine, Miss Ina Wood, Miss Sudie Medlock, Miss Judie Medlock, and Miss Joe Balentine. This is a very strong teaching force, which is necessary for the success of any school. Two of the classes give their collections to the Children's Home.

We have also signed a Sunday school census card to see who are members of the church and who are professed Christions. This will help the teachers and the personal workers in the church in their revival efforts during the year.

Harmony, The Young People's Society.

Miss Mamie Reeves, Reporter.

On the 28th of July, last, a number of young people met at the church with the pastor, Rev. N. M. Harrison, for the purpose of organizing a Christian Endeavor society. We elected the following officers:

President, Mrs. S. S. Beeks; vice president, Miss Ina Wood; recording secretary, Miss Claudia Stone; corresponding secretary, Miss Mamie Reeves; treasurer, Mis Julia Medlock.

The first meeting was held the first Sunday in August, and was led by the president, Mrs. S. S. Beeks. At this time she appointed a Lookout Committee, a Prayer Meeting Committee, and a Social Committee. The Lookout Committee was divided into two groups, the "red" and the "blue."

When we first organized our society we had only thirteen members, but now our little band has forty-nine members. All of them seem to be much interested in the society and are willing to take part in its services.

Christian Endeavor is a great thing. Every church should have a Christian Endeavor society. It trains the young people for leadership in the church. It has set a solid foundation for the lives of the young people.

Then the enthusiasm for missions has grown, not only in our own society, but the world over, because of the training received in a Christian Endeavor society. It has turn-miliar with the thought of father and father's house, of mother and mother's love, but we are also members of a state, subjects of government and familiar with the thought of obedience, of rulers and judges, of trespass and penalty.

The average man has little difficulty in keeping out of jail, out of the toils of the law as made and administered by man; but where is the individual who can measure his conduct by the requirements of the perfect law of God and not find himself falling short here and overstepping the bounds there? This discovery which we all make sooner or later, that we are sinners in the sight of God, is the most painful discovery of life. Life is never the same to us again after we make this discovery. We may not think much or often about meeting an angry God, but we bear about with us a sense of our degradation and the feeling that we have lost out in the battle of life. The hopes of our early days—the hopes of a life of perfect righteousness—have been dashed, and we find ourselves stunned and dazed and almost hopeless. The ugly past is part of our life and the faults of the past will forever mar our whole life; therefore it is impossible now to make a satisfactory record. We have lost our chance. We feel that we have not much to live for.

Just at this point where the hope of man fails the gospel of Christ meets us with the most heartening and cheering announcement ever made to mortal ears. The word "gospel" means good news, and no such good news as the gospel brings was ever heard in the world before. Its gladdening announcement is really a threefold announcement: it concerns your record, your character and your destiny. It announces wonderful possible changes in each of these.

Your bad record, your marred record, may be replaced with a good record, a fair record. Your past sins may be blotted out, erased, forgotten In place of the word "guilty" may be written the word "innocent." Instead of the entry "condemned" may be written the verdict "justified." Instead of the court's decree of punishment may be read the court's decree of acquittal.

And instead of your present character,—blundering, stumbling, falling, you may acquire a character of such strength that you can walk uprightly, keeping the laws of God as easily as you now keep the laws of man.

And instead of the destiny which you now contemplate with fear and trembling, you may look forward to a destiny so glorious that the very thought of it will fill you with exuberant joy.

All this sounds like an Arabian Nights' tale or a chapter from a fairy book: but it is based on the most authentic history, though the most marvelous history in all the career of this old world of ours.

The marvelous benefits secured and made possible to us were not secured in any magical way, by the waving of a wand or the glancing of an eye. The law of cause and effect was not violated. Great and wonderful as are the effects proposed, the causes in operation are adequate to produce them.

The gospel does not offer us a fantastic dream, a mere output of the imagination, and ask us to accept it and pin our faith to it and rest our hopes upon it. The agent concerned in producing the wonderful changes proposed is capable of the great part attributed to Him. He is infinite in power and unlimited in authority. He is none other than the eternal Son of God.

But even He could not arbitrarily deliver men from the consequences of their own sins. There is a law of righteousness concerned which must not be violated. That law connects sin with death; transgression with penalty. The law is fundamental and cannot be set aside. On it rests the great fabric of the moral universe. God Himself cannot set aside laws as eternal as Himself.

What then could be done for sinful man? Man himself saw the hopelessness of his case. He saw that he was doomed unless perchance he could escape through the merits of a substitute. He said to himself, Without the shedding of blood there can be no remission of sin. In his frantic desperation he began to shed the blood of the innocent brutes. He started flowing rivers of blood—the blood of oxen, the blood of sheep, the blood of goats, the blood of birds. But there was no merit in the blood of brutes to atone for the sins of men. The blood of all the cattle on a thousand hills could not wash away the sins of one human being. Sometimes human beings were sacrificed, but that availed nothing, because every man was under condemnation and must die for himself and could not die for another.

But there came into the world, mysteriously born of a virgin mother, one who lived his life out and had no sin, who met all the temptations to which man is subject and overcame them all, this wonderful man, who was the only begotten Son of God, had power to deliver man by becoming his substitute and receiving the penalty of sin in his own person. Would He do it? He was under no obligation to do it save the impulsion of his own love; but we find Him doing it; we find Him who had descended from a throne of glory at the right hand of God taking His place on a Roman cross; coming down from the loftiest hights of glory to the lowest depths of shame. And this was no mock humiliation and no mere pretense and show of suffering. His sufferings were terribly real and surpassed in intensity anything we can imagine. In Gethsemane he said, My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death. And the sorrow that surged in his soul affected his heart-beats and forced the blood out from the pores of his skin. An angel of God came and strengthened him and he did not collapse under the fearful stress. The same night he was arrested and subjected to insult and buffeting. Brutal men spat upon him and struck him with the palms of their hands In mockery they pressed a crown of thorns upon his brow. Kept awake all night, he was taken next morning before Pilate and Herod and Pilate again. At Pilate's command he is subjected to the dreadful ordeal of the Roman scourging. A muscular Roman soldier plied the cutting lash to his bare back till the blood oozed from many wounds. Pilate thought by this means to excite the pity of those who sought his death, but they only cried with greater fury, Away with him, let him be crucified. Then he was marched out of the city to the place of execution. He was nailed to a cross with nails through his hands and his feet. But this is not all nor the worst. The wounds in his hands and his feet were I believe but pin-scratches in comparison with the great pains that tore at his heart. Physicians tell us that he died of mental agony. The unspeakable sorrows of his soul were more than flesh could endure: the walls of his heart were ruptured, he died of a broken heart.

But why that mental agony? That great, profound, awful sorrow of soul came to him because he was bearing the sins of the world, he was tasting death for every man: He who knew no sin was dying for your sins and mine. He was taking our place, He was entering into the dreadful experiences of the lost soul. He was finding out what it means to be cut off utterly and absolutely from God. As He descends into the horrible darkness of utter despair there escapes from his lips the most distressful cry ever heard in this world, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?"

God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, and that is what He gave Him to. All this was necessary that your marred record might be made fair, that the verdict might be "acquitted" instead of "condemned."

But Jesus did not overlook the second part of the problem—the renovation of human character. He sent forth His Spirit into the world to regenerate, to comfort, to guide and perfect. He established His church in the world to instruct, admonish, persuade, encourage and edify. Each of us may have a part in the benefits of these divine and heavenly influences.

Nor did He overlook the third part of the problem, the preparation for our future destiny. Before He went away He said, "I go to prepare a place for you that where I am there ye may be also."

This is an outline of the wonderful story brought to us in the gospel of Christ. I doubt whether you ever hear a more wonderful story when you go out into eternity and receive reports from other worlds.

The gospel contemplates our exaltation from the lowest depths of sin to the highest hights of glory. How shall we escape if we neglect so great a salvation? God forbid that any of us should be so unwise as to neglect it.

WOMAN'S PLACE IN THE MASTER'S WORK.

I have been perambulating this sublunary sphere for more than three score and ten years, and have only quite recently been apprised of the fact (?) that no woman can serve the Master in any way except to hold the ecclesiastical offices in the church.

The viewpoint that I have attained from my ancestors that were led to heaven by the King James version of God's Word, is that the highest place in the gift of Jehovah—the next place to Himself—He gave to woman. Divine Love made mothers and when He placed those animated lumps of clay in their eager arms, He gave them more power over the destiny of the human race than he reserved for Himself.

Now our recent enlightenment (?) along the line of female duty to God, is by no means the first time that we have heard that the divine method of saving the world by perfect mothers is too slow, and the party that wears the horns scores a double victory when he persuades poor blind mortals that he can show them a better way to save men, and women than to follow the line of conduct laid down by divine Love. Too slow a process, do you say? Well, the majority of mankind have followed an opposite course for nineteen centuries, and the world is more in the grip of Satan today than it ever was, and, possibly the only reason that we have been saved from the fate of the Sodomites is that some mothers, actuated and sustained by divine grace, have followed the teaching of our divine Leader, instead of being led by one who wants to believe that the place for women to serve God is anywhere except in the home.

The six passages of Scripture referred to by our late correspondent have no bearing on the subject of holding office in the church. Every one of them was written to show the loving sympathy, and kindly physical ministrations to the needs of the disciples, by the women that had taken the name of Christ. They also followed the Master by ministering to the necessities of the suffering poor that the followers of Jesus were seeking to save. We have heard many times that women were called to preach, because the Master sent a message to His disciples by them, when their love and sympathy forced them to go to the sepulcher before day, to anoint the precious body of their Lord and Master. When He called men to preach He said, "Go ye into all the world and preach my gospel to every creature." If he called women they had only to carry a message to some men that were already saved, and would never have to be carried but once.

If the God-fearing mothers in Israel have ever entertained the idea that they hold a subordinate position, it surely comes from the arch enemy, for there is not a human being on earth—not an angel that serves around our Father's throne in heaven whose work can compare in greatness to the work of a Christian mother. When St. Paul said, "I suffer not a woman to teach nor to usurp authority over the man," and "It is a shame for a woman to speak in the church," he only meant that woman had her hands full in doing things that men could not do. The shame was to the men that expected women to do their work, and her own as well.

Our divine Leader intended for mothers to gain supreme happiness by maintaining a haven of love, and peace, and rest, of blessedness, and sympathy and kindness for their own families, and any wayfarer that chanced to pass their way, and their time will be fully occupied to compass this great achievement, and it will not add one iota to any of these things, to hold an office that any man can hold that pretends to be a man at all.

We are told, "If the Lord calls us to fill an office in the church let us be faithful." The God that I worship does not make as little of His male followers as that. If I should hear any such a call as that I should know at once who was doing the calling. I should know at once who was most interested in getting me away from my God-given home duties, and who wanted men to shirk their God-given responsibility.

It is a woman's place to train, and lead, and guide, and incite, and encourage and inspire men from the earliest dawn of their existence to do the work that will bring happiness to themselves and every human being with whom they come in contact. There is never a time that she will cease to influence them for good or evil, even after she has passed to the great beyond. Her influence is as deathless as God Himself. Our correspondent believes in "all women holding office and being active in the church of God." She seems to overlook the fact that if the men are entirely excluded from holding office the limited number of offices will leave ninety per cent. of the women with nothing to do since it is absolutely impossible (?) to serve the Lord in any capacity except by "usurping authority over the men."

If the Master ever advised Peter and John to loaf around the home of Lazarus, while Mary and Martha went with Him on His mission of service to the world, it is not recorded in the Bible I was brought up on.

I don't think we have any right to reserved seats in heaven, because women were first at the grave of our risen Lord. We have to remember that woman was first to partake of the forbidden fruit, and to persuade her husband to share her transgression. I have never tried to convince any one that women have no right to hold office in the church, but convince every one that she has a God-given right not to do so if there are any men in the church.

Ruth Fletcher.

DID YOU THINK TO DO IT?

"Sweep behind the door? Why, no one will think of looking there for dust. I'm in a hurry now. Next time I will do it."

But will you? Something about the act of neglecting even small duties makes it easier to do so next time. The only way to establish a good habit is to do the right thing every time. Never slipping over a single point that should be attended to builds up a wall against failure.

"How did you bring yourself to remember every little detail of your work?"

The lady who was asked this answered with a smile.

"It cost me something to do it, dearie. Often I found myself tempted to leave something undone. Then I would say to myself, "Go back and do it. You will miss it if you do not." And that is so. One single failure starts a new and a bad habit to growing. It is like striking a big piece out of the top of a dam holding back a great body of water. Enough such blows and you have broken the reservoir down.

In nothing is this danger of overlooking known duties more apparent than in the reading of God's word. A soldier boy across the seas knows this and he writes home, in speaking of his round of service for a day, "I get up at half-past six, brush my teeth, dress, and read two chapters in the Bible; then I am ready for work." How busy the men at the front were we all know. But in the midst of all the hurry and the excitement, to stop at the beginning of the day to listen to God's message cannot help putting hope and courage into the soldier boy's heart. To leave the little book in his pocket one day without reading would be a serious blow to a beautiful habit. Never do it. Keep the fire burning brightly in the heart. Sweep behind the door every time!—Selected.

MY FATHER'S WORLD.

This is my Father's world. O let me ne'er forget
That though the wrong seems oft so strong,
God is the ruler yet.
This is my Father's world. The battle is not done.
Jesus who died shall be satisfied,
And earth and heaven be one.
This is my Father's world. Should my heart be ever sad?
The Lord is King, let the heavens ring;
God reigns, let the earth be glad.

CUT IT OUT.

In discussing the subject of profanity, Dr. Frank Crane tells us that the trouble with profanity is not so much that it is wicked as that it is just plain dirty. It is not so much that you shock religious people as that you disgust decent people, that we object to it. Swearers are behind the times. They are hold-overs from a former century. Nowadays anybody who swears is set down at once as being coarse and vulgar. The young man who wants to succeed needs to take advantage of everything that may help him on, and swearing will be a black mark against him in any job he may have. And if he wants to associate with the right sort of girls, he must keep his talk clean. Nobody wants a swearer in the office, nor in the workshop, nor on the train, nor in the hotel. The only place that swearing fits is in the saloon. Swearing means you don't know how to talk. Your vocabulary is limited. It is the sign of ignorance. Swearing means weakness. You will notice that forceful men, whose words carry weight, use simple, plain words. When you swear, it shows your impotence. It is the petty refuge of the helpless. If you can help a thing, help it; if not, keep still; anyway, don't swear. Swearing has bad kin. It goes with ignorance, brutality, cruelty, drunkenness, licentiousness, viciousness and anger, and you can tell a habit by the company it keeps. When a man gets the habit of sprinkling oaths through his speech constantly, he ought to be tied out in the barn with the pigs. To abstain from swearing does not mean that you are a sissy. It simply means that you are decent. To show you are manly, you don't have to have a dirty face, nor greasy clothes, nor tousled hair. You can be manly, though clean, and you are not showing any manliness by filthy talk. Even if you want to hurt somebody's feelings, or insult any one the worst way, use plain English; it hurts much more than curses. Altogether, swearing is a useless, unclean and offensive habit. Quit it.—"Life Buoy."

(Through some oversight these two reports were omitted from the Conference Journal. They are important, and the publisher is trying to make amends, and to give them their needed publicity, by having them printed in the Herald. C. W. Bates, Publisher.)

COMMITTEE ON RESOLUTION OF THANKS.

Whereas, The pastor and wife and members of the Concord Methodist Protestant church have done everything possible to make our stay among them pleasant and profitable, and

Whereas, The members of our own denomination and many people of other denominations have thrown open their homes and graciously received us as their guests, and

Whereas, The press of the city and state papers have given us splendid recognition, now, therefore,

Be it resolved, That we, the members of this Conference greatly appreciate the hospitality offered us, and that we shall always remember with pleasure our stay in this city: and that, as we go back to our respective places of abode, we go with a prayer in our hearts and on our lips that the gracious heavenly Father may richly reward all those who have ministered to us.

J. E. Pritchard,
T. M. Johnson.

REPORT OF TH ECOMMITTEE ON LITERATURE.

While we realize the importance of all good literature and would have our people properly instructed with reference to it, we feel that this report should deal particularly with our own literature and should be made as practical as possible.

We, therefore, offer the following suggestions and recommendations:

1. We urge upon our ministers and people a hearty support of all our denominational papers, the Methodist Protestant, the Methodist Recorder, the Methodist Protestant Herald and the Missionary Record.

2. We call the attention of the Methodist Protestants to our Book Concern in Baltimore and urge that they give it their patronage.

3. We would remind our people of the importance of using our own Sunday school literature, and call special attention to the New Guide, an excellent paper for the young. And we call upon our reprsentatives to the General Conference to use their best efforts to secure a higher type of Sunday school literature.

4. We rejoice in the success of the drive for new subscribers to our church papers last January, and recommend a similar plan next January with a goal of 1,500 new subscribers, with the provision that a subscription to any one of our church papers be counted toward this goal. In connection with this recommendation, we ask that the editor of the Herald apportion the goals to the various charges of the Conference, and that the president be empowered to appoint a co-operating committee.

5. We have found that many of our people do not notice that their subscriptions are about to expire, and so miss some copies of the Herald; and that frequently they become careless about renewing. To meet this situation we offer two suggestions: a. That the publisher of the Herald furnish to each pastor at the beginning of the Conference year a list of the subscribers on his charge, which the pastor shall file and have for reference; thus enabling him to see members at the proper time. b. That the publisher of the Herald procure a rubber stamp with the words, "Your subscription expires with the next issue"; or use some other device to remind people of their duty to renew.

6. We feel that it is due our Conference that some knowledge of our activities be known throughout the whole denomination, and we recommend that some person be designated to send occasional notes to the Methodist Protestant and the Methodist Recorder; and that he glean the information from the Herald and such other sources as may be available, and that members of the Conference send directly to him such items as may seem proper.

MISSIONARY ITEMS.

By the invitation of the pastor, I met with the Woman's Home Missionary Society of Welch Memorial church on the night of January the 20th. Owing to the fact that the church had been closed for repairs, this society had held no meetings for six months. They decided to take up the work again, paying all back dues, and reach, if possible, the goal set for them at the beginning of the year. As the evening was very disagreeable the attendance was small.

A foreign missionary society was organized also. I expect a good report from the women of Welch Memorial church at our branch meeting. I promised to meet with them in their March meeting, at which time they will elect officers and plan for next year's work.

I want to urge all the auxiliaries in our conference to have public thank-offering services and endeavor to raise as large an amount as possible for our building fund. Even in churches where there is no auxiliary it would be a fine thing if the pastors would bring the work of the woman's missionary societies to the attention of their people on some Sunday in the month of February our anniversary month -and take an offering for our work and send it to Miss Velna McCulloch, Greensboro, N. C.

Arrangements are being made to have the slides showing our work in Japan and China used in High Point on the evening of February 15. Greensboro has asked for the slides, and if any other auxiliary can arrange for a stereopticon I will be glad to send the slides to them. The lecture that goes with slides may be given by some member of the church.

I want to ask our people—men as well as women—to observe February 20, which has been designated by the women's Boards as an interdenominational Day of Prayer for both home and foreign missions. If you desire programs for this service, you may get them at one cent each from Miss M. H. Leavis, West Medford, Mass.

I have a letter from our treasurer, Mrs. Lida K. East, in which she begs our branch not to put off doing its work until the last of the year. It makes harder work for the branch and board to meet their financial obligations. I am sorry to say that all of our auxiliaries have not sent in money monthly, as requested to do. Will you not send in all you can immediately, and begin now to make plans to work systematically next year?

Mrs. George R. Brown, President.

ed many a boy's or girl's eyes toward the fields afar who otherwise would not have seen the vision. Not only has the personnel of the mission fields been recruited from the Christian Endeavor, but gifts to missions have also been increased through Christian Endeavor missionary emphasis. Our little society is beginning to catch the missionary spirit. It is planning to commence a course in mission study, and it is contributing to the Children's Home.

Harmony, The Junior Society.

Miss Ruth Davis, Secretary of Junior Society.

There was organized at Harmony Methodist Protestant church on August the 31st, 1919, a Junior Christian Endeavor society, with 14 members. The following officers were elected:

Effie Compton, president; Ruth Balentine, vice president; Ruth Ravis, secretary; Mary Hughes, treasurer.

Up to this time we have enrolled about 30 members.

We are striving hard to keep the pledge that we have taken. None of us refuse do do any of the work that we are called on to do.

We are just beginning, but hope soon to complete the "String of Pearls." We are also using an Efficiency Chart and have challenged the Young People's Society for a contest in getting credits on it.

Ten copies of the Junior Christian Endeavor World are taken by our Juniors.

Last November we picked cotton one afternoon after school and made something over seven dollars, which we sent as a Thanksgiving offering to the Children's Home, at High Point.

Now we feel that we are just beginning to work and have done only a few of the many things we hope to accomplish.

INTEREST IN THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK IS INCREASING.

I am truly glad to see the increased interest on the part of the young people in Christian Endeavor work. Every few weeks I see the report of a new society organized. I wish more societies would do like the Burlington and Reidsville and West End, Greensboro, have been doing. These societies have been going out and organizing other societies. There may be others besides these three, but I happen to know about these. Keep the good work going. When you organize a new society you not only render the young people you organize a good service, but you add new life to your own society.

Scarcely a day passes that I do not think about the young of our church and wish that I had the time to help you with your Christian Endeavor work and with the Sunday school. From time to time I have made suggestions that I hoped would help you. I am going to make some now. I may repeat some that I have made before, either because I do not remember all that I suggested before or because I think some suggestions ought to be repeated.

First of all, be sure that the name of the corresponding secretary of your society is sent to Miss Eunice Long, Greensboro, N. C. This suggestion is for new societies or those that have not yet lined up with the state Christian Endeavor work. Miss Long is the state Christian Endeavor secretary, and she will take pleasure in enrolling your society and in helping you in other ways to make your society a success. Mr. or Madam President, see to it at once that your society is enrolled with the State Christian Endeavor Union. Write Miss Long.

A second suggestion. Secure a number of subscriptions to the Christian Endeavor World, Boston, Mass. Or for the Dixie Endeavorer, Chattanooga, Tenn. Both of these papers give programs and many suggestions that you will need to make your society go.

Begin now to think about and plan for a good delegation at the High Point convention May 18-20. Our conference Young People's Convention will be combined with our Denominational Young People's Convention. We are to be entertained on the "Harvard plan," which means, I believe, that we are furnished a place to sleep and breakfast free of cost, but that we pay for dinner and supper. I do not know how many delegates will be allowed. Will let you know later.

And do not fail to have some of your very best young people at the School of Methods that is to be held in Graham, N. C., March 10-12. Watch the Herald to see what President Andrews and Brother Pritchard have to say about this school; President Andrews is Dean of the school and Brother Pritchard is publicity man.

A word about our Sunday school work. Those of you who are interested in Sunday school work might get the idea that I am not much interested along that line. But I assure you that I am. The Christian Endeavor society can not do the work of the Sunday school nor can the Sunday school do the work of the Christian Endeavor society. There is a place for both. Both are to be emphasized in the School of Methods. Both Sunday school workers and Christian Endeavor workers will want to be on hand for the school.

I was very much interested in what our president had to say in his last week's letter about the Sunday school running all the year. It is a serious thing to leave the children without Bible teaching and religious instruction for half the year. And the fact that many country churches do run their Sunday school all the year shows that most country churches could do it if they will.

Look after the young people in the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor work and the future of your church is asured; neglect the young life of your church and the future of your church is uncertain.

My last suggestion for this time. Those of you who received blanks from Mrs. J. E. Pritchard to be filled out and returned to her, have you done it? If not, please attend to that at an early date. Mrs. Pritchard wants and needs the information asked for that she may the better serve you as superintendent of children's work of our Young People's Union.

Write me direct if these suggestions fail in giving what you need.

L. W. Geringer, President,
Conference Young People's Union.

—That is a sudden and great loss reported from Burlington in the death of Mrs. Fletcher Williams. She was a most excellent woman,

THE APOSTLES' CREED.

Some twenty-five years or more ago, my wife being very fond of flowers, I built a flower pit to keep them through the winter. It was much admired for itself and for the beautiful flowers. It was situated just across the road in front of my window and we enjoyed it for several years. But the weight of snows and years began to tell on it quite seriously. Besides, it was grown over with poison ivy, "Southern smilax", trumpet flowers, honeysuckle, poke berries and tangles of briars, cow itch vines, ragweeds and a conglomeration of indigenous stuff too tedious to mention. Furthermore, it had failed to keep flowers so often that we quit that purpose and I tried to grow plants for early transplanting. This proved a failure, too, as the plants grew spindling and worthless, so one morning I called my man and gave orders that it must be taken down and cleared away. One of my children persistently protested, saying that I was sacrificing beauty to utility—that it must stand—that it was a "lovely ruin." Well, I let it stay, although I felt that I was too old to enjoy a ruin! I wanted to see something in prospect and not altogether in memory. I let it stay a year or two. One day a wasp from "the ruin" stung my horse. I said to myself that place must be cleared away. A few days afterward a little girl at play became poisoned with the ivy. I became more determined to clean it all off. One hot August morning while walking out that way I noticed the track of a big snake that had wallowed across the road. Looking around awhile I found a big moccasin coiled up, his eyes gleaming, shooting out his tongue till it seemed a dozen times forked, lying under a box bush close to my front door, the specially chosen place for the grand children to play. I took my gun and ended the snake's career, of course. But I made up my mind that "the ruin" should not ruin me; and it is all cleared away.

I have been reading the conference minutes of late and I notice that some of our progressive people want changes in our ritual and creed. I do not know how "The Apostles' Creed" ever had its origin or name. I really think it does not matter as to these. If it serves a really good purpose it ought to be used; but if we are keeping it because it is old it certainly ought to be cleaned up until it is a creed (charitably granting that a creed is essential). Should we say that "God the "Father" is the "maker of heaven and earth"? The Bible does not say so and John 1:3 distinctly denies it. I have asked several preachers what is meant by the "communion of saints" and the nearest to an answer I have ever received was the loan of a book.

Our church does not believe in the "Holy Catholic Church" except by a small majority and they with reservations or secret evasions of mind so what's the use. Let's take it out of our ritual or amend it so it will mean something in our language and in our day. If it must be kept in our books I think it ought to have "the ivy green" engraved around it to call special attention to its limitations. You know Mr. Dickens made his poet say:

"Oh, a dainty plant is the ivy green,
That creepeth o'er ruins old!
Of right choice food are his meals I ween,
In his cell so lone and cold.
The wall must be crumbled, the stone decayed
To pleasure his dainty whim,
And the mouldering dust that years have made,
Is a merry meal for him.
Creeping where no life is seen,
A rare old plant is the ivy green."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR FEBRUARY 8.

(Decision Day.)

Daily Readings.

Mon. A life of unity. John 8:16, 19, 26.
Tues. Christ's life a pattern for us. Phil. 2:1-5.
Wed. A leader's clean record. 1 Sam. 12:1-5.
Thurs. Work for accomplishment of aim. Neh. 4:1-6.
Fri. A righteous life and sympathetic. Jude 20:25.
Sat. Through it all, yet worth while. 2 Cor. 11:18-33.

I believe that every normal person desires to attain what is termed success. It would be ridiculous to think of persons who do not wish for such. Yet every individual does not interpret success in the same way. What may be success for one may not reach the standard recognized by the other fellow. Thus we can seen that there may arise some difference as to what may be called a worth-while life. It would not do for all people to undertake the same thing. There must be diversity of professions but not of aims, that is, all lives ought to be conducted for the glory of the Creator. The worth-while life is then the life spent in the service of its Maker. It is true that every individual has not yet fully realized that this is the only way of attaining the real worth-while life, nevertheless it is true. It is for us who have realized that the Christ-like life is the worthwhile life, to give this fact to those who have not entirely admitted it. Jesus himself tells us in Jno. 14:6 that He is the life and in order to get to the Father we must go through Him. At another time Jesus said that he came that we might have life and that we "might have it more abundantly." We can construe that the "abundantly" signifies the "worth-while" life, as well as the larger and fuller life.

The first thing for us to do is to choose. There must be some definite decision as for the course taken in life. The right and wrong are before us, God and Mammon: which will you choose? The time for this choice is early in life. When the decision is put off it becomes a habit and indecision has ruined thousands of vigorous and beautiful lives. Joshua at the eve of his life became stirred and made a stern demand of the people because of their wavering disposition. He called for immediate decision—"this day." It is highly important to start right and to begin early.

After the choice is made which is only the start there must be faith exercised. It can be safely said that a thing has been half done when it is believed in. If there is lack of faith it would lead to the fact of failure of honest decision. Have faith in life's choice because it has wrought wonders. Abraham was called upon to exercise faith when he was told to get out of his homeland and go into an enemy country, yet he obeyed the command. Columbus had faith in his idea of a new world and gave proof of his faith by his manner of procedure.

A man's life is measured by his service. James states that "faith without works is dead," and so it is. The man who is in demand today is the man who will serve. Greatness in life is measured by the amount of service rendered. Those who have made great names for themselves have been those who have given their lives in the service of others and country. Washington, Lincoln and others gave of their service to their nation; Beecher, Moody and others gave of their lives to the gospel ministry; Jesus Christ lived to perform the will of the Father; and we should spend our lives in worthy endeavors. Let it be remembered that he who saves his life will lose it, but he who loses his life for the sake of the Master will truly find it. Don't expect something for nothing, but have yourself know that the life worth-while must be found through service, and the fuller the service the fuller and greater the life. No matter what the profession pursued may be, let it count for the abundant life which is found in abundant service. Wages paid for services does not indicate entirely the real value of the man, because some of the most valuable services performed can not be estimated in actual money, but only in what may proceed from the spent energy. Then the actual results of the worth-while life can not be estimated fully here on earth, however we know that the benefits are great. Be not contented until every talent has been exerted to its fullest capacity in unselfish service for the kingdom. Wait to see the results.

Special emphasis should be put forward to get people to make a decision in this meeting. Stress the fact that all worth-while undertakings have begun with worth-while decisions. Get new members for the Christian Endeavor, and have the associate members to become active members. At this meting will be a splendid time to find out if any will consecrate themselves to life service, such as the ministry or as missionaries.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

Charlotte Tidings.—Our paper canvass is still on. Our list has grown to 44 and we are so encouraged that we are not going to be satisfied until we reach the 50 mark, and then some.

Those on our sick list, Mrs. McCall, Mrs. Watson, Mrs. Broom and little Howard Garmon are all improving. Mrs. Watson has returned to her home from the hospital.

Among the out-of-town visitors who worshiped with us on last Sunday were Miss Virginia Jackson of Baltimore, Miss Bessie Wagner of Chester, S. C., Rev. Mr. Ogburn of Monroe and Mr. Wm. Simpson, a member from Pageland Circuit, and Mr. Jno. Garmon of near Concord. Rev. Mr. Ogburn is a nephew of Rev. T. J. Ogburn and has been for a number of years a missionary in Japan.

For the last two Sundays Miss Wagner has rendered most efficient service to our music department. Besides rendering some very beautiful special numbers she has been most valuable help to the choir. Miss Jackson has returned to her home in Baltimore, stopping over at High Point to visit the Children's Home. While she is in High Point she is to be the guest of Misses Xannie and Nettie Stowe. Miss Jackson is a member of Broadway Methodist Protestant Church which church was served by the Charlotte pastor while in Baltimore. The visit of Miss Jackson and Miss Wagner has been very much enjoyed by pastor and family as well as by the Charlotte church.

We extend sympathies to our siseer, Mrs. T. P. Thornton, whose mother, Mrs. Cordell, very recently died in Greensboro and was brought to Charlotte for burial.

On last Wednesday at a specially planned meeting it was decided that we are to build a parsonage just as soon as possible. We do not as yet know just how much the building of a parsonage will cost but it is certain that it will mean a large amount for the Charlotte congregation to raise. The people, however, are determined and are going at what is before them cheerfully. They realize that something must be done to get their pastor and family out of a basement into a home above ground and they are manfully planning to do that necessary thing,—build a parsonage. Now if any of our good friends can see his way clear to help a worthy cause a contribution will be appreciated. Send to the undersigned until a treasurer of the building fund is announced.

Last Sunday at both Sunday school and at preaching service an offering was taken for the Near East Relief.

Hoping all goes well, I am

Geo. L. Curry.

Hickory Grove, Guilford Ct.—We are still going forward, as is our custom. We still have the old-time religion and with the efficient work of our pastor, Bro. A. M. Hamilton, we believe that great good will be done; so let us hold on to the horns of the altar and ask God to remove these things that hinder the progress of the church and of God's kingdom. Bro. Hamilton preaches twice a month. He filled his appointment the second Sunday evening and preached a fine sermon which was enjoyed by all present. We were glad to have Bro. Hamilton back, for he is always on the job. It is one thing to be a preacher and another to be a pastor and we consider him to be a good pastor.

Bro. T. F. McCulloch preached for us the fourth Sunday in last month. We were glad to have him preach for us and glad to have him in our home. Come again, brother.

Brother A. L. Jones preaches fur us every second Sunday. He seems to be a man of great power.

Our Sunday school has been fine this winter. The attendance has been good, mostly children. We rejoice when we think of what our Savior said, Suffer the little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven.

Let us work and pray for the advancement of His cause. Yours in the work.

E. S. Jones.

Canaan, Denton Circuit.—Pastor Highfill did not fill his appointment here this month on account of having to be at home. Bro. Highfill preached a good sermon for us the 2nd Sunday in December which was enjoyed by all present. We are glad to have Bro. Highfill as our pastor, for we believe he is a good preacher. He is 72 years old, but that does not hinder his being a good preacher.

Our Sunday school is progressing nicely under the management of Mr. J. S. Harris as superintendent. We send the collection to the Children's Home every second Sunday.

We have prayer meeting every 4th Sunday evening with S. E. Martin and C. G. Loflin as class leaders. There is not as good attendance now as there has been on account of sickness;. there has been much sickness this fall and winter.

As this is my first time to write, I will stop for this time.

Dorcas Martin, Reporter.

Jan. 17, 1920.

Canaan, N. Davidson Ct.—We were glad to have our pastor with us the 4th Sunday. He preached an excellent sermon. His text was ''Watch''. He called our attention to a number of things of which we should be watchful: our ways, words, and works; our acts and attention; our teaching, time, thoughts and tongues; our conscience and company; our heart and habits. It seems to me if we would take up the above mentioned and observe them as Bro. Cecil urged us to do we will be much better prepared for service than we could be otherwise.

We held our Christmas service on Monday evening with our pastor present. We had a nice tree with presents and also a treat of fruits and candy for every scholar in the school.

The exercise seemed to be enjoyed by every one and the house was crowded. We were very sorry that we could not accommodate all the people. People stood around the wall and in the aisle until they were crowded and then there were a great number of people on the outside. Our children did their bit well and we feel that this service was a success. The first Sunday in this month we reorganized Sunday school and are planning that this may be the banner year in the work. We elected for our officers as follows: Supt., Mr. Ernest Weavill; Asst., Mr. Albert Berrier; Sect., Miss Mamie Berrier; organist, Miss Era Whicker; Asst., Miss Banks Reece; Teachers, Mrs. Bert Weavill, Miss Flossie Bailty, Mr. Harvey Berrier, Mr. Charlie Weavill, Mr. Bert Weavill, George Berrier. We are very sorry to report that Bro. G. L. Motsinger is sick. We hope for him a speedy recovery that his place may be filled at church again.

G. A. Berrier.

Whitakers, Whitakers Charge.—It has been some time since I made a report, but that does not mean we have not been doing anything. We are beginning the new year with a brighter prospect as a church, so far as I see it than ever before. We have adopted the duplex system of collecting our finances and it is acting like a charm, with a few exceptions the entire church are highly pleased with it. Our pastor, Brother Auman, came to us from the Seminary last Sunday, preached for us Sunday morning on The Open Door of Opportunity, and I for one was greatly benefited, as he preached I got a larger vision of our opportunity for the year 1920. At night he gave us a treat, notes from the Des Moines convention; he was just bubbling over with the good things he got there, and his optimism was contagious, for I am sure must of us felt lifted up.

We held our first quarterly conference Saturday afternoon with a good attendance, and made our plans for the year's work. One thing we feel so thankful for is the fact of doing so well with our debt on church. We started out to pay off $1,000, but we collected about $ 1,200, and we are hoping this may reach $1,,500 as that would leave us only $1,500 to pay off. And O, how happy we will be when we can dedicate it, free of debt. Our Christian Endeavor society is doing well. Last night the prayer meeting was conducted by Rev. Mr. Rosser, the Baptist pastor. It was not my privilege to be there, as I am in the country and the weather was bad.

We have a very interesting meeting planned for next week, a missionary meeting to be led by Mrs. J. Henry Cutchin. We are looking forward with pleasure to having Rev. J. E. Pritchard preach for us the first Sunday night in February. Our being without an all-time pastor just now may be bad, but it gives us an opportunity of having these visiting brethren which may be very helpful to us. Of one thing I am sure, ''All things work together for good to them that love the Lord.'' May this be the best year we've ever known as a church, both spiritually and financially, is my prayer.

Mamie Johnston, Reporter.

—That ''wedding room'' in Burlington parsonage may explain some things we have been reading about. It must be a very inviting place.

Friendship, Fallston Circuit.—The first quarterly conference for this charge was held at Friendship last Saturday. Our new pastor, Bro. Hunter, preached a splendid sermon at 11 o'clock, after which the Friendship people brought together their well filled baskets and a bountiful dinner was served. In the afternoon we reassembled to transact the business of the quarterly conference. With the exception of Macedonia all the churches were represented and everything moved on nicely. A reporter was appointed for each of the churches, therefore we are expecting to hear from the others.

Last Sunday at 11 o'clock Mr. Hunter again filled his appointment with an excellent sermon. We feel that we are fortunate in having the opportunity of listening to such sermons as his.

We have been having a good Sunday school all the while. We feel that we owe much to our faithful superintendent, N. J. Wright.

Now that we are entering upon a new year let us endeavor to make it the best in every way. We will only get what we work for, therefore we must get busy. Reporter.

January 20, 1920.

Burlington.—The condition of the weather last Sunday brought the attendance of the Sunday school down to 127. It was a rainy morning and a great many of our people regard the weather and stay at home when it is unfavorable. The Sunday school was delighted with a brief talk made by Prof. C. C. Haworth, superintendent of the graded schools of Burlington. Prof. Haworth said that he was always glad to be in our Sunday school because of the inspiration which he gained. He also stated that he was glad to see so many in attendance on a rainy morning. Prof. Haworth belongs to the Friends' Church, and since there is no church of his denomination in Burlington, he attends different churches and Sunday schools. The offering in the Sunday school amounted to $15 and was donated to the work of the local Y. W. C. A.

A fairly good congregation was present at the morning church service, considering the inclemency of the weather. Bro. Pritchard delivered an inspiring message on the theme, Stewardship. His sermon was divided into five sub-divisions, the stewardship of life, speech, song, money and sympathy. The congregation was highly pleased and uplifted by a very beautiful duet, rendered by Mrs. H. W. Wade and Miss Agnes Heritage. Five members were received by letter, coming from Mt. Hermon Methodist Protestant church, Mt. Hermon circuit. They were, Mrs. Elmina Garrett, Misses Verna, Lorena and Cynthia Garrett and James Garrett. We are very glad to have these good people to unite with us.

The meeting of the Junior Christian Endeavor society was held in the afternoon at two o'clock and was characterized by the usual interest and enthusiasm. The little folks of our church are doing a wonderful work under the efficient leadership of the superintendent, Mrs. J. E. Pritchard and the assistant, Miss Ila Stafford.

The meeting of the Senior Christian Endeavor was very largely attended, the Baraca class room being almost completely filled. The service was conducted by the president Bro. Ferry Gibbs. The topic, "Bringing the World to Christ," was thoroughly discussed by a number of the Endeavorers. Several visitors were present and one new member was received. It was a very interesting and helpful service.

Bro. Pritchard seemed at his best at the evening church service, for he delivered one of his best sermons. It was an evangelistic sermon, appealing to the unsaved, and an invitation was given to the unsaved to request prayer in their behalf, but no interest was manifested.

The mid-week church prayer meetings have been largely attended and unusually interesting for the past three weeks. The different organizations of the church are having charge of the services, a different one for each week. This plan gives variety to the services, and makes them very interesting and helpful.

The services for next Sunday will be unusual. The pastor will be in the eastern part of the state filling an apopintment for another pastor. The morning church service will be conducted by the Senior Christian Endeavor society. They will hold their anniversary service, commemorating the founding of the Christian Endeavor movement. Special music and brief addresses will be features of the service. In the afternoon at three o'clock the Junior Christian Endeavor society will render their annual program. There will be no preaching service in the evening. The Sunday school will be held as usual in the morning, beginning at 9:30. We are expecting interesting services and a large attendance of our people and visitors.

C. B. Way, Reporter.

Love's Grove.—As there has been some criticism in regard to the work on Midland circuit, we feel like we owe it to Bro. Alexander who has labored so faithfully among us for the past four years and ourselves to print some facts to show that we have not been entirely dead on this circuit, nor Bro. Alexander while he served this circuit so faithfully the past four years. Here are some facts as they stand: When Bro. Alexander took this work four years ago, Mill Grove church, half of the church, had no seats in it. Bro. Alexander seated it, put in recess pulpit, a choir platform, painted it. The Sunday school was nearly gone under; he built up a good Sunday school of about one hundred or more and a good congregation and had things moving on.

Pine Bluff: There was but a handful of people there and a Sunday school of about 30. He built it up to one hundred and thirty and a large congregation, and a new church started and all the people interested. I heard one man, not a member of our church, say that Brother Alexander was the best building man that he ever saw or ever heard preach.

Love's Grove had a Sunday school of 35 when Bro. Alexander came here and no interest in it; the Sunday school grew to 150 and the congregations to house overflowing. We built choir platform and bought chairs for same, and carpeted the church, painted church inside and outside and seats painted also and no indebtedness on church. For the four years our Sunday school bought one-half of an acre of land at the Children's Home and our collection to help support the Home for the year 1915 was $9.47; for the year 1916 was $24.84; for the year 1917 was $29.62; for the year 1918 was $35.32; for the year 1919 was $61.45. Friends, this shows what this church and pastor have done, for I know whereof I speak, for I have been the Sunday school superintendent for the last seven or eight years. In regard to the increase in membership there were about 230 added to the church. Our church is badly torn up over the situation; we are going to lose some of our best and loyal members. One has called for letter already and I fear more will later. I am a Methodist Protestant and stand for its rule of the majority. In the Herald of January 15 I saw an article in regard to the majority during. I am willing for that but I do not think the majority ruled last Conference. I think the minority ruled, for I don't think our delegate was allowed any voice there in the Conference. I am writing this letter with the best of feelings to all. I want some facts now as some people are criticized about it. I do hope and pray that all will work out all right to them that fear the Lord, for through criticism and persecutions we are made strong in Christ Jesus. With best wishes to the Herald and all of its readers.

John N. Smith.

Asheboro.—We have been keeping rather quiet in Asheboro, but that does not mean we are asleep.

Our people are well pleased with Mr. and Mrs. Gerringer, and the way they have taken hold of the work. His sermons are inspiring and helpful and his bright cheery manner has won many friends in our town already.

We have been pleased to have the following persons unite with our church since Conference: Mrs. L. W. Gerringer, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Brown, Mrs. A. C. Cagle, Miss Nell Leach, Mr. A. C. Cagle. We feel that they will strengthen our church and pray that the church may be a blessing to them.

A Young People's Christian Endeavor Society has been organized, and will meet each Sunday evening just before the preaching service. The following officers have been elected and are already proving their efficiency. President, Miss Mary Fox; vice president, Mr. Lacy Lewis; recording secretary, Mr. Robert Jones; corresponding secretary, Miss Mattie Hughes; treasurer, Mr. James Neely.

The third Sunday in February our Woman's Foreign Missionary Society expect to hold their annual Thank-offering service.

The third Sunday in March we will begin a series of meetings. Mr. Geringer will do the preaching. It is expected the meeting will embrace Easter Sunday, and we hope this will be a revival in the true sense of the word. Reporter.

Uwharrie Circuit.—We have not been pounded as some who have reported poundings, nor have we been pounded like some of our people might think we might like to be, but the following list shows at least a few who anticipate our needs and appreciate our service: Mrs. John Cameron, Mrs. Joe Delk and Mrs. Wyatt Galimore, meat and milk; Mrs. Robert Hoover, meat; Mrs. Lee eDlk, meat and turnips; Mrs. Ella Varner, meat; Mrs. Jap Surratt, milk and beans; Mrs. Moses Morgan, cabbage; Mrs. Sam Loftin, meat, butter, and beans; Mrs. Jim Ragan, milk; Mr. A. W. Prevost, sausage; Mr. Frank Cashatt, flour.

Special Christmas gifts were received from the following: Mr. and Mrs. Joe Delk, Miss Mabel Morgan, Mrs. Clive Grimes, Mrs. J. I. Delk, Mrs. R. C. Hoover, Misses Lalah and Blanche Delk, and Alice Galimore.

There are several outstanding needs on this field to which I shall refer, primarily for the benefit of those who are supposed to be most vitally interested.

One need of no meager import is a permanent home for the present pastor, and his successors. It is conceded by a sufficient number of men who are able to transform visionary castles into an actual reality, that the paramount concrete need of this work is nothing less than a parsonage. Plans may be submitted and ardently discussed, and every "discusser" may have a perfect mental picture of the perfected and completed parsonage. But mark one thing: the Lord alone will never build a parsonage on Uwharrie, nor on any other charge. Why? It is not according to his plan. God uses human instrumentality for doing such work. We have the men, the means and the muscle; why not go God's way, seek his aid, and then—move your pastor in? More about our needs later.

Lincolnton, Shelby Circuit.—Our Sunday school is going nicely. Today was a good day for us, considering the rainy weather. We had $65.50 Sunday school collection today, which we are going to send to the Near East Relief. We were sorry to give up our former pastor, Rev. H. F. Fogleman, but were glad to have Bro. Morris back with us again. Our church work is progressing nicely. We have adopted the budget system and are paying all claims monthly. We have also adopted Little's Cross and Crown System and hope to increase our attendance and make this year the best we have had. We have only two preaching services a month; would be glad if we could have more. On last Sunday morning Bro. Morris gave us a fine sermon. Our church and Sunday school adopted the six goals for 1920 and ordered them posted in the church. We hope that all will strive to help us reach them. H. J.

Caroleen, Shelby Circuit.—The church here is getting along nicely. Bro. Morris preached two able sermons here Sunday. We have a good Sunday school with an average attendance of 100. Sunday, January 25, the Sunday school contributed $19 for the relief of the Armenians.

The Ladies' Aid society met Friday night, January 23; they are doing a splendid work. Our church desires the prayers of the Christian people everywhere that we may accomplish what the Lord would have us.

Reporter.

CLARK'S CHAPEL, BUNCOMBE CIRCUIT.—There were only 19 present at Sunday school last Sunday. The decrease in attendance was caused by bad weather and sickness. The collection was taken for the Children's Home, $2.00.

Bro. Spencer filled his appointment at 11 A. M. We greatly enjoyed his sermon and wish others could have been present.

Our S. S. Supt, Mr. B. R. Watts, is confined to his bed with influenza, and his two sons, Clarence and Roy Watts. Liston Cheek has recovered from an illness of several weeks with typhoid. Reporter.

UNION GROVE, FORSYTH CIRCUIT.—Yesterday Pastor Kennett preached one of his good sermons. Our Sunday school is progressing nicely under the leadership of our faithful superintendent, Mr. C. T. Evans. Our collection for the Children's Home, $3.02. A collection was taken for the suffering Armenians which amounted to $37. We are out on part of the Million Dollar campaign. We are small in number, but we give liberally of our means. We are glad to report the health of our community very good except some whooping-cough among the children. Lillie Nifong, Reporter.

WON A PLACE BY A WHISTLE.

He was an odd-looking figure as he came merrily whistling down the street the morning after the big snow. His nose was red, and his hands were bare, his feet were in shoes several times too large, and his hat was held in place by a piece of paper on the inside; but he piped away like a steam-engine, and carried the big snow-shovel much as a soldier carries his rifle.

"How much?" from an imposing-looking man, who was asked if he wanted his walks cleaned.

"Ten cents."

"A nickel's enough."

"It would be if I couldn't do no better; but I've got to do the best I can, and business is rushing. Good-morning!" And the merry whistle filled the air as the boy started away.

"Go ahead and clean 'em!" called the man, whose admiration and better nature had been aroused.

"Just see the little rascal make the snow fly!" he said laughingly to his wife, who stood at the window with him. "Why, he's a regular snowplow, and he does it well, too."

"What a little mite! And how comical. I wonder if he's hungry?"

The wife called to the lad as soon as he had finished, but he would not take time for more than a cup of coffee.

"Too busy," he said.

"What are you going to do with the money?" asked the man as he insisted on settling at twenty-five cents, instead of the ten cents the boy asked for.

"I'm going to get mother a coat. She's wearing one you can see through—it ain't right."

On he went, with glowing cheeks and his cheery whistle. But they had his name and address. It was the wife who took the coat to the mother, and it was the husband who installed the sturdy shoveler as office-boy in a bright new uniform, and with permission to whistle when he feels like it.—Selected.

I WOULDN'T LOOK BACK.

I wouldn't look back, brave eyes,
  To the fear of Failure Town,
For the bound are free, and the blind now see,
  And the way is up, not down.

I wouldn't turn back, true heart,
  To the triumphs not to be;
For a purpose high and a will to try,
  Have their joys in store for thee.

Let's fare with the best we know,
  To the heights of every day,
With a brave look on toward the friendly dawn,
  While the best things lead the way.

A BOY BOUND TO PAY UP.

An old-time newspaper writer stepped into a cheap restaurant one night for a cup of hot coffee. He tells this of what followed:

"As I took my seat at one of the small tables a ragged little boy planted himself on the stool opposite. There was a hungry look in the boy's eyes as he fumbled a nickel and said: 'A plate of beans.'

'I sipped my coffee and watched the boy ravenously devour the beans. Whispering to the waiter I told him to bring a plate of corned beef, some bread and butter and a cup of coffee for the boy. The little fellow stared for a moment, and then began his meal. In a few minutes the beans, beef, bread and coffee had disappeared, yet the boy's appetite was not satisfied.

" 'What kind of pie do you like?' I asked.

" ''Most any kind; they're all good,'' replied the boy.

" 'Bring him some mince and pumpkin pie,' said I to the waiter.

"The boy gazed at the two pieces of pie in wonderment, and then looked at me shyly and pushed his nickel toward me.

" 'What's that for?' I asked.

" 'To pay for the spread. It's all I've got.'

"Taking a quarter from my pocket, I laid it on the boy's coin and pushed it across the table.

" 'I've paid your bill,' I said.

" 'Then is them for me?' said the boy, with his mouth full of pie. 'Am I to have all that?'

" 'Yes.'

" 'Thank you, mister; you is good to me."

"Months passed. One day a boy stopped me near Brooklyn bridge.

" 'Say, mister,' he said, 'I owe you a quarter. Here it is.'

"Recognizing my guest of that winter night, I gently refused the money, telling him that he had better keep it.

" 'No, you take it,' he persisted. 'That supper and the quarter you gave me brought me luck, and I have not been so hungry since. You was so good that night, and I want you to take the quarter now so that you can give some other boy a supper.'

"I took the coin, and many a poor newsboy has had a good dinner with it since."—Selected.

RESOLUTIONS OF ESTEEM.

Mr. William Penn Pickett.

At all times and under all circumstances death is very sad and dreadful, but particularly so when it lays its hand upon the head of a household and a man strong, useful, and prominent in the life of his church and city, as was our late lamented brother and co-worker, Mr. W. P. Pickett. Althought he had attained the age of more than three-score and ten, the span of years allotted to man, he was strong and vigorous in mind and body, and blighting age had not chilled his spirit and enthusiasm.

Born and reared by godly parents of the Methodist Protestant faith, he reflected great credit upon them by a life of devotion and loyalty to their church. Having moved here in his young manhood, he was closely identified with the progress and development of High Point from a small scattered village to the fair city we have today, and he devoted much time and thought to its upbuilding. His life is an example to the young manhood of our community, for by unwaning industry, honesty, economy, and the exercise of sound judgment, he accumulated a large fortune by his own efforts. It is thus most fitting that we, as members of the quarterly conference of the First Methodist Protestant Church, place on record a testimonial of our esteem and regard, and also a sense of our loss. Therefore be it resolved,

First, That our church has sustained the loss of one of its charter members and founders, who was faithful in attendance upon all its services and the Sabbath school as well, and who served as the efficient treasurer for many years, giving much time and personal attention to its affairs. No member of this church loved it more than he, and he loved to work in and around the building. There are many ēvidences of his personal handiwork in several additions and conveniences in the church, Sunday school rooms, and the yard. He contributed liberally of his means to the support of the local church and its various interests, and also to different enterprises of the denomination outside.

Second, That the city of High Point has lost an esteemed and valuable citizen, having served one term as mayor, and several terms on the city council and school board. At the time of his death he was closely identified with several leading business enterprises of High Point.

Third, That his family has sustained the greatest loss of all; the children have lost a kind and affectionate father, but to them he has bequeathed the richest of all legacies, the memory of a good, Christian father; and the wife of his youth, with whom he walked in unusual harmony and congeniality for more than 40 years, has lost a tender and devoted panion. To these we extend our hearty sympathy.

Fourth, That his pastor has been sorely bereaved by his passing, for he was always a staunch and loyal friend to the preacher, and his friends have lost a thoughtful and considerate neighbor, as many of us can personally testify. Those who knew him best appreciate most his great kindness of heart.

Fifth, That these resolutions be included in the minutes of the quarterly conference, and a copy be furnished to the family; also, that they be sent to the Methodist Protestant Herald, Greensboro, and the Methodist Protestant, Baltimore, for publication.

Respectfully submitted by the committee,

Mrs. R. T. Pickens,
Vernon W. Idol,
C. C. Robbins,
H. A. Moffitt.

McDonald.

Died at her home in Worthville December 30, 1919, Mrs. W. L. McDonald. She had been sick for six long weeks. Mrs. McDonald was a member of the Methodist Protestant Church, but on account of home cares was never able to attend very much, but she was a true wife and mother and a good neighbor. She leaves a husband and six children, a father, mother, two sisters and three brothers to mourn their loss, but their loss and ours is her gain, for she left this testimony that she was ready to go.

"Not now, but in the coming years,
It may be in that better land,
We'll read the meaning of our tears,
And then some time we'll understand."

GREAT EXPECTATIONS.

One of the strong and effective influences making for character and worthy living is that lurking thought that someone somewhere is expecting something worth while of us. There have not been many fine things done in the world's history that, if we knew everything, we could not trace much of the impulse that made them possible back to some fine expectation. It must be, therefore, one of the very best things we can do for any friend of ours to let him know by some subtle process that we are looking for him to do the clean, noble, heroic thing. That maybe one of the very effective ways open to us of adding to the nobility and heroism of life in general. The man from whom we expect good things and who has an inkling of our expectation is not likely to fail us badly. And if we owe this to our friend, perhaps we owe something to ourselves. If we do our work and live our life under the subconscious spell of someone's high expectation of us will it not help very much? And if we could make that someone the Great Idealist Himself surely that would help in the largest way.—The Christian Guardian.

THE CHARM OF KINDNESS.

John Hay, writing about a friend, said, "I once introduced him to an eminent writer, who remarked: 'I understand now the secret of his charm. It is his kindness.'"

There are other charms, such as beauty and of education and of accomplishment and of the possession of wealth, but they all fade into comparative obscurity before this one of kindness. It outshines them all as it flashes before human vision.

This was one of the characteristics of the Master which drew men to Him with its rare power of fascination. It is no idle sentiment of which we so often sing: "And the heart of the Eternal is most wonderfully kind." One of the ideas embodied in that wonderful word "grace" as related to Jesus Christ—that word whose depths we seem unable to fathom—is that of kindness. When men thought of His grace they thought of His compassionate tenderness, of His helpfulness, and of the many loving deeds which had characterized His life. They thought of His sympathy for the sorrowing, His healing of the sick, His giving bread to the hungry, His words of cheer to the disconsolate.

May we all, especially those of us who name His name and profess to be His followers, imitate Him in this quality of His life. Of it one of the poets said:

"Kindness is wisdom. There is none in life
But needs it and can learn."

It justifies itself. Though usually manifested with no thought of reward, it nevertheless brings rich blessings to such as give free rein to its expression. Its greatest reward comes not from some return made by the one befriended, but from the happiness and joy that pours itself like a flood into the very depths of the soul.

That this grace may find a more full and complete expression in our lives we should cultivate the habit of looking at life from the standpoint of others. There is a great deal of truth in the lines of David Garrick:

"Their cause I plead—plead it in heart and mind.
A fellow-feeling makes one wondrous kind."

Being self-centered closes our eyes and ties our hands and paralyzes our tongues before other's need. But when we enter into their experiences and look at life's problems and behold their difficulties from their viewpoint rather than ours, service becomes easy if performance and difficult of restraint. Cultivate this "fellow feeling" which has underlain all the really great achievements for the betterment of man and the uplift of the race. "Be ye kind to one another."—Evangelistic Messenger.

JUST BEING CHARMING.

It was in a Kansas town fifteen or more years ago when a certain young girl sat reading under a large oak tree, or perhaps we should have said, sat with a book in her hand looking up into the leaves of the old tree. She may have been day-dreaming, for a certain sentence had struck her with all the force of an August storm. School was soon to open and she had hoped to have read "Les Miserables" as her one great vacation achievement. The day was hot and there was danger of her ambition wilting. She read throu' the long descriptions, thinking of the talents of the other girls in her set and wondering all the time why she couldn't do something really and truly big. Why couldn't she wake up some morning to find herself a genius, or very beautiful, or—and then came the remarkable sentence. She read it over again and then sat up straight. "There. I believe I'll write that down. Maybe—I wonder if I could. I wonder if I can."

Many years later in a New England town she found this scribbled sentence of so long ago. It had clung to some old papers and long been forgotten. Whether it had ever been realized in the life of the Kansas girl no one seems to know, but we do know what she said when she found the little scrap of paper: "Oh, if I had only read the last sentence more carefully, I should have understood better what it meant to be charming. It seems such a natural thing for a young girl to be charming. Yes, it is her natural state." Let's read the quotation once more:

"There is in this world no function more important than that of being charming. The forest-blade would be incomplete without the humming-bird. To shed joy around, to radiate happiness, to cast light upon dark days—is not this to render a service?"—Selected.

"THE HARM IS TAKEN AWAY."

Speaking of over-sensitiveness, Marcus Aurelius said:

"I have been harmed, but take away the thought that I have been harmed, and the harm is taken away."

The person whose feelings are easily hurt, is going to have a hard time of it in this life. In the first place, a person of ths sort is sure to imagine a great many things that have no foundation in fact. It is easy for her to get it into her imagination that people are thinking and saying things about her when these people have never given her a thought. I know a girl of this type who cannot see two other girls talking together in a low tone without feeling sure that they are talking about her. During the past summer she was one of an automobile load of young people who were going to a lake for a picnic supper. On the way to the lake the three girls on the rear seat of the automobile fell to laughing immoderately, and the girl who is so sensitive in regard to her feelings, and who was sitting on the front seat with the chauffeur, called out:

"What are you laughing about?"

"Oh, that is a secret!" said one of the other girls.

"But I want to know!"

"And we don't want to tell," was the reply.

"Then I know that you were laughing about me," retorted the other girl, and she at once fell into a fit of the blues that lasted the rest of the day.

Marcus Aurelius' idea: "Take away the thought that I have been harmed, and the harm is taken away," would be a good one for this kind of girl to make her own. The person who is constantly subject to hurt feelings never has a very strong capacity for friendship, because even her closest friends will be sure to hurt her feelings no matter how hard they try not to do so. It is impossible to keep a person of this kind in a happy frame of mind, and her friends soon tire of trying to do so. No girl is more exacting than a girl of this kind, and it needs hardly be said that such a girl is petty in her way of thinking. Her outlook on life is woefully narrow, and she will never be able to adapt herself to the give-and-take kind of life that girls of less sensitive "feelings" are wise enough to live. In most cases "hurt feelings" are the result of sheer imagination that might be called a mental disease. One must be one's own doctor in the curing of this disorder and take away the thought that produces the "hurt feelings." Then they will cease to exist. —Manton Marlowe.

Mt. Moriah, Cleveland Circuit.—Bro. Stowe on the second Sunday preached a good sermon as he always does. We are glad to have Bro. Stowe with us for another year.

Our Sunday school has not started yet, but we hope it will start up soon. Sorry that there were not many present to hear Bro. Stowe, but we hope that there will be more next time. We should take more interest in our work and go to meeting every Sunday. We have some members who hardly ever attend. We must get to work and bring them out again.

With best wishes to all Christian Endeavorers. Susan Sisk.

Minnis and Scott.

At the home of the bride on December 25 at 10 o'clock, Mr. Sam Minnis and Miss Gladys Scott were happily married by the bride's pastor, Rev. J. E. Blalock. A number of near friends and relatives were present on this happy occasion. After the vows were taken, the couple drove out to Mr. Minnis's home, where a bountiful dinner was waiting.

A CARD OF THANKS.

We wish to take this method of extending our sincere heartfelt thanks to our many neighbors and friends for their many acts of kindness shown us during the long illness, and at the time of the death, of our dear wife and mother.

Words cannot express our appreciation of the help and sympathy which we received, but we earnestly pray that the God of love and mercy who rewardeth all according to their work, will abundantly bless and richly reward each and every one.

Mrs. R. F. Williams Dies.

Mrs. Queen Spoon Williams, wife of Bro. R. F. Williams of Burlington, passed away this afternoon at about five o'clock. She was a most excellent woman, one of the most enthusiastic workers in the Baptist church and was interested in everything for the betterment of humanity.

Bro. Williams, her husband, is one of the leading members of the Methodist Protestant church in this city and has a host of friends throughout the conference who will sorrow with him in this hour of bereavement. Four children, Misses Miriam and Eugenia and Freer and Robert survive. No arrangements have yet been made for the funeral.

Resolutions of Respect to the Memory of Mrs. T. M. Johnson.

(By the Ladies' Aid society of the Asheville Methodist Protestant church, Asheville, N. C.)

Be it resolved:

1. That we have been shocked, grieved and saddened by the sudden call of our beloved sister, friend, fellow-member and co-worker; that we bow in quiet submission to the will of our Master who summoned her to a higher world where parting and suffering are unknown.

2. That we wish to put on record our high appreciation of her life and work in our midst. Her beautiful Christian character won the admiration of all with whom she came in contact; her warm sympathy, gentleness, unquestioned loyalty, unremitting zeal and never-failing interest for humanity won her way in the hearts of all, and leaves a vacant place in our midst that cannot be filled.

3. That we extend to our pastor and his family our sincerest sympathy and pledge ourselves to aid them in any way possible. May the Holy Spirit comfort and sustain them.

4. That we call upon every member of our society to show her deep appreciation of the life and work of our sainted sister and to profit thereby by renewed consecration to the Master's work, by taking hold with zeal, interest, and enthusiasm every effort of society and church to extend Christ's kingdom in this community and everywhere.

5. That a copy of these resolutions be given our pastor and family, be recorded in our minutes, printed in the Methodist Protestant, the Methodist Protestant Herald and The Asheville Advocate.

"I LOVE DRAMMAS."

A very young mother with her child entered one of the city's crowded street cars. Notwithstanding the plainness of dress, both wore positive evidences of refinement, and revealed a spirit of culture and beauty. The little one had reached that interesting age when her thoughts were being put into words.

Seated opposite these two was an old woman, ill clad, whom the child watched intently. At last she became so restless that her mother let her slip down and stand by her knees, when suddenly the child threw herself against the old woman, and said in her sweet baby tones: "I dot a drawma home: I loves drammas."

Startled by this unexpected display of affection, the hardened face softened, and the eyes filled with tears and she pushed the baby from her saying, "I'm not fit for yez to touch, child; ye're so sweet and pretty." But the child still leaned against the old woman's knees and repeated again: "I loves drammas."

And thus the heart which had years before shut its door to the world, was opened by one of Christ's little ones. As His children, perhaps, we might be more successful in reaching cold hearts would we come into personal contact with those next us.—Baptist Union.

LIFE'S CALENDAR.

* * *

Off goes another leaf We tear it away, and put it into the wastebasket. We have no more use for the dates of the days that are past. And is that true also of our lives? Have the days been such that there is nothing further for them than to be torn off and put into the wastebasket at the end of the month? Or is here an eternal quality in them? Have we put something into them such that they shall be cherished and kept, if not on earth, then in heaven—like one of those calendars which have on them, with the passing date, some great word of poet or prophet, which comes as a message to us, so that we do not cast the leaf away, but save it, put it into our scrapbook, or perhaps in our pocketbook. That passing day has a living word. Such should be our lives!—Sunday School Times.

THE MISSING ELEMENT IN MODERN CONVERSIONS.

"Conversions are not like they were when I was young." This expresses the belief of many people somewhat advanced in years. Is it true? If so, in what sense is it true?

The Gospel or plan of salvation has not changed. Human nature has not changed. Sin is the same deadly thing it has ever been. The end to which sin leads is no less horrible than it always has been. Heaven is no less real and no less glorious than it always has been. The sense of pardon and peace with God is as full of relief and comfort as it ever was. The joys of salvation and a life of righteousness are as sweet as ever they were.

Wherein, then, is there any difference in conversions?

The older people will tell you how the emotions of people were wrought upon in former days; of how penitents mourned and wept because of a sense of sin, how they threw themselves prostrate at the altar and agonized in prayer for hours, day after day, until finally peace came, and then joy, a great joy that shone in their faces and moved them to shouts of praise. Now-a-days they say there is no evidence of feeling, that conversion is a shallow thing, that it means little or nothing, that it produces little or no change in the life.

Those who express these views probably do not make sufficient allowance for the difference of age of the converts. They are comparing adults of the past with children of the present. Be it said to the credit of the church of today that it is looking after the lambs of the flock better than the church of the past did. The conversion of a child should not be expected to have the same emotional accompaniments (in degree) that the conversion of an adult has. In this day, the majority of converts are children. In former times, converts averaged a considerably greater age.

But after due allowance has been made for this fact, there still seems to be some ground for the view expressed by the older people. Conversions of adults do not seem to be as thorough as a general thing as once they were. There seems to be a missing element. The difference between before and after is not great and striking enough. Formerly people knew when they had been converted. Now they are doubtful about it—they don't know whether they are Christians or not, whether they have passed from death unto life or not.

How is this fact, if it be a fact, to be accounted for? And how are we to get back to the good old way of genuine conversions and real Christian life?

We believe part at least of the explanation is to be found in a change in the fashion of presenting the Gospel's appeal. There are, of course, many ministers who put the emphasis where John the Baptist and Jesus and the Apostles put it, and who lead people to a saving knowledge of Christ. They preach to people as sinners in need of pardon for past sins, in need of the Holy Spirit to empower them to overcome sinful tendencies, in need of the church with its bracing influences, its instruction and edification, and its field of useful activity.

But there have come upon the pulpit platform in these later years a company of preachers who present the Gospel in a different way. Sin does not seem so heinous and the penalty of sin does not seem so dreadful nor so sure as once it did. The necessity of Christ's death as a substitute for the sinner's suffering does not seem so imperative. Doubt is thrown upon the doctrine of the vicarious suffering of the Son of God. The character of God is misrepresented, the element of stern justice being softened, if not eliminated. "Getting religion" is made to mean little more than joining the church and agreeing to live a decent life, such as church members are presumed to live. The door between the soul and God is left closed. Conversion simply brings one into a new human relationship, gives one a new set of human associates. The great deep of the soul is not affected. God has not been enthroned in the life, Christ has not been accpted as Priest, Prophet, and King. Vague and groundless hopes of future bliss have been awakened, but the reign of selfishness and false ambition has not been broken. The "convert" finds himself in the church with many others who are not really of the church, and his last state may be worse than his first in that now he is laboring under a great delusion as to his spiritual state.

The way to bring back the era of genuine conversions is to preach the Gospel with the emphasis placed where Christ and His apostles placed it. The sinfulness and lost condition of man, the atonement made by Jesus Christ through His inconceivable sufferings and death, the gift of pardon and peace on condition of sincere penitence for sin and faith in Christ as personal Savior.

We have heard evangelists appeal to the pride and manliness of young men as an incentive to them to come to the altar, as though it would be a gracious condescension on their part to become disciples of Christ! The sinful soul that sees itself as it is can have no pride in its condition, but is ready to utter with downcast eyes the prayer of the Publican, "God be merciful to me a sinner!"

Let men hear the truth—the ugly truth—about themselves and let them also hear the truth—the glorious truth—about Jesus Christ. Then we will witness genuine conversions.

—How true it is that we do not know what a day will bring forth. Every day has its surprises, and some of them are painful in the extreme. One day last week, Mr. Frank T. East, of Bellevue, Pa., left his home for his place of business as usual. Two minutes later he was dead, or mortally hurt. He slipped (on the ice, we suppose) going down some steps, his body shot out into the ~~street~~ just in time to be struck by a passing automobile. (Mrs. East is the treasurer of the Woman's Foreign Missionoary Society of our church.) In this city on Tuesday, Miss Maggie Barber, a book-keeper at the Columbia laundry, started to her work, riding in a motor truck. At a railroad crossing, the truck was hit by an engine and Miss Barber was killed and the driver of the truck was seriously hurt. Death lurks everywhere. There is no escaping his dagger, and sometimes his thrusts come when least expected.

—We were glad to have Mr. John Swain in Grace church choir last Sunday night.

—Bro. R. H. Shaw of High Point gave us a good address last Sunday night in Grace church, the service being in charge of the Christian Endeavor society. There were also several short talks by the young people that were to the point.

—Our congregation at Grace was somewhat reduced in size by sickness last Sunday. The influenza is in a number of our homes, but we have heard of no severe cases. The city has had a number of deaths from pneumonia following influenza. It behooves every one who can to keep well, that he may minister to those who must be sick.

—Bro. Stowe writes: "Our Panthers are as harmless as human beings, so don't be scared."

ABOUT REVIVALS.

The Scng Service.

Scarcely of less importance than preaching the word and praying, in revival work, is the song service. This can be very helpful, or it can be very damaging. Church music and song should not be judged, or estimated, from the standpoint of being entertaining. Church music and song should be devotional, worshipful, praiseful. Not aesthetic nor operatic. This is the gist of the whole question. The worldly-minded, unspiritual, undevotional, make the mistake of supposing that church song and music are to entertain—view it from the operatic standpoint; whereas the correct viewpoint is that of devotion, worship, and praise. This does not mean that the music must be poor, but that the artistic feature of it is to be secondary—the spirit of it to be primary. In other words, the tune, as well as the words, should be evangelically religious, such as to stir the religious emotions—the religious sensibilities. There is nothing more untrue than the remark often heard, that "There is nothing in a tune." The truth is that there is almost all, or everything, in the tune. There are tunes that stir the emotions of patriotism; i.e., love of home and country. Others that stir the emotions of human affections—of the old home-place—reminiscences of childhood, of bygone days, of absent places and old associations. Others that stir the love sentiments and emotions. Others are light, rolicking, emphatically worldly and anti-spiritual. They do not make one feel like, or think of, praying—of heaven or hell, or of the judgment, of things serious. But such tunes—we are not speaking of words at all, but the tune alone—get into the feet, and it's,

> "Come and trip it as you go,
> On the light, fantastic toe."

Or, it's

> "On with the dance; let joy be unconfined,
> When youth and pleasure meet
> To chase the glowing hours with flying feet."

But there are other tunes that stir the religious emotions. That touch the strictly spiritual nature of man. That transport us into the "heavenlies"; especially when the words accompanying the tune are of a devotional, spiritual, heavenly kind. Tunes of this kind should be used in religious services, and most especially in revival services, and no others. Such tunes awaken a sense of the Divine, of judgment, of responsibility. They make one feel like praying or praising, or rejoicing in the Spirit. And just at this point is where the most of our so-called modern revival tunes break down. They fail to stir the deep religious emotions. They are entertaining—to some—that's all. The hymns of Wesley, Watts, Cowper, Doddridge, Newton and others of a like kind are immeasurably superior, for religious effect, to the new religious doggerels, that have in many instances largely displaced these spiritual hymns, full of Bible truth and sound theology. And the new ragtime jingles are far inferior to such standard tunes as Old Hundred, Martin, Ortonville, Windham, Arlington, Asmon, Laban. Nettleton, Greenville, Dukestreet, "There's a Fountain," Hebron, Rockingham, Kentucky, and a number of others that could be named.

Such hymns of invitation as, "Father, I stretch my hands to thee," "Come, trembling sinner," "Come thou fount," with the chorus, "I will arise and go to Jesus," "Jesus, lover of my soul," "There is a fountain," "O how I love Jesus," etc., are the very best. These, and similar hymns and songs, sung to tunes like those named above, stir the religious emotions and consciousness with a mighty power, that sometimes following a powerful sermon of the truly evangelical kind, is almost irresistible. Some good hymns of invitation break down, because sung to tunes lacking in moving power. For instance, "Just as I am without one plea," "I need Thee every hour," "Blessed assurance," etc. The sentiment of these hymns is good, but the tunes are lacking in moving power, as generally sung, at least. "I am coming to the cross," and "What can wash away my sins," are good songs evangelically, good theology, set to touching, sympathetic, moving tunes. They are always good in revival work. Now we want to ask in all candor and sincerity, what sense or reason is there in throwing these tried and effective hymns and songs and tunes on the "scrap heap," for some new jingle and rattle of a tune and song, just because somebody wants to sell it, and brands it "revival"? The publisher calling it "revival" does not make it revival. They've been weighed in the balances and found wanting. Many of them are worse than nothing. Better have no singing at all in the revival than to sing some of them. Many of these so-called revival songs would kill a revival if it were started. There is no depth, nor power in them. They entertain some folks, but there is nothing to awaken or arouse the sinner. So far as affecting the sinner is concerned, we had just as well sing, "Old Black Joe," "Suanee River," or "Nellie Gray." These, while not strictly religious, would at least have a tendency to soften the feelings and stir the emotions.

Such men as Charles Wesley, Watts, and Cowper wrote hymns, not as a business, but from a full and overflowing heart. But there is a class in these latter days who write songs and tunes, and others publish them, as a business, it seems, as much as he who spins cotton, makes shoes, or mines coal. Let us beware of their goods. They are generally inferior. They are made to sell. Our church and other churches have printed in our hymnals the best. Why not use it? Why use a third or fourth rate article when we can get the best. We do not mean to say that there is no new song or tune good, but do mean to say that which we have embodied in our hymnals is as good as the best, and has stood the test of years, in actual use. Not that we mean to say that every good hymn and tune is contained in our hymnal. Some, we regret to say, had to be left out—all could not be put in—a selection had to be made.

Many of the new tunes are dry, rattling, noisy, juiceless. As has already been said, they fail to stir, or move the religious sensibilities. All observant spiritual persons know this. Who has not seen the effects of a strong, moving sermon neutralized, if not wholly destroyed, by one of these rasping, rattling, dry, unspiritual tunes? While one of these "old-time" moving hymns and tunes, following a good sermon, was like the victorious onrush of an invincible army following a terrific and successful bombardment. This is a matter of common observation.

An instance: Not many years ago, after an average sermon, an altar call was made, accompanied by the hymn, "On Jordan's stormy banks I stand," with the chorus, "I am bound for the promised land." The effect was magical—no, not magical, it was divine! It swept everything before it. No one seemed to escape it. Strong men, unsolicited, arose and came to the altar, and were saved. But whoever saw such a scene follow one of these modern rattles? One of these modern "come and trip as you go, on the light fantastic" affairs, that have largely displaced the real, moving, melting tunes of other days? We do not attempt to explain these differences. We know they are facts. They are too deep for explanation. They are psychological facts that defy explanation. Armies have been stirred into a kind of supernatural or "divine fury," or courage, under the moving power of certain songs. Bruce's address to his men at the battle of Bannockburn is an instance. It is the stirring of the soul or spirit of man until he becomes almost supernatural. Man is intellectual, and we must not ignore his intellect. He is also emotional, and his emotional nature must not be ignored. Talk and reason as we may, some persons, if not all, in the last analysis, are finally, and ultimately reached, religiously, through the sensibility, or emotions. The hardest and most stubborn natures yield, or melt down, under an att[illegible] upon the motional nature, when the citadel of the intellect would have remained intact, or impregnable. We verily believe that this is largely overlooked in many of our modern so-called revivals. Do not think we are advocating empty noise, rant, whoop and hollow. We are far from it. This is as much to be avoided as the other extreme, being as detrimental to real religious work as the other. Preach, pray, and sing the real songs of Zion "with the spirit and with the understanding."

Don't make a specialty of telling ludicrous things to make the people laugh, singing sensational, operatic songs, clapping the hands and acting the miniature clown. The Holy Spirit does not need such things to convict and save sinners. These things generally seem to grieve the Spirit and leave the meeting dry and empty.

An incident: A few years ago, the writer and another person were standing on the street corner, on our way from church, discussing the question under consideration in this article. An unconverted young man standing off a little, hearing us, joined us, and remarked: "The old songs make a person feel like going to the altar, but these new ones don't." His testimony of experience confirms what older persons of observation believe. This is the testimony of a sinner to the effects of the two kinds of songs on the unsaved. Let us consider and be wise. Use the kind of gun that brings down the game.

ANCIENT TIMEPIECES.

It is difficult to tell precisely when an instrument at all resembling the modern clock first appeared. In 1288 a clock-tower and clock were set up in Westminster at the expense of Chief Justice de Hengham, as a punishment for falsifying the record of a fine; and weight-clocks are known to have been used in European monastic houses as early as the tenth century. It is doubtful, however, if these clocks had a dial face and hands. Probably they merely sounded a bell at stated intervals.

Sand-glasses boast an antiquity of more than two thousand years, and although now enjoying an honorable retirement or merely presiding in very old-fashioned kitchens over the boiling of the breakfast egg, they formerly had a place in almost every parish church, where they served to keep the sermon within reasonable bounds. At one time the hour-glasses of superior quality contained not sand, but egg-shells, which, when finely powdered and kiln-dried, were less likely to absorb maisture from the atmosphere.

Of even greater antiquity is the clepsydra, or water-clock, which was made in several forms. One of the simplest was the Hindu's copper basin, pierced with a small hole in the bottom, which, when placed in a vessel of water, filled and sank after a certain established interval. More elaborate forms were known in Europe and Egypt.

Although varying somewhat in construction, all used a ‘‘float.’’ The float was placed either in a full cylinder from which the water gradually escaped by a hole in the botton—usually bored through a pearl on account of its resistance to erosion by the constant flow—or in an empty vessel to which water was admitted from above. In both varieties the float, falling or rising as the case might be, pointed to the scale of hours marked on the side of the vessel. The float sometimes took the form of a miniature boat, in which an outstretched oar was the pointer.

Clepsydrae such as these were used in the Athenian courts of law, and were put in charge of a special officer. One ‘‘water’’ apiece was allowed to plaintiff, defendant and judge. During the reading of any document that bore upon the case, the flow of water was stopped. A clepsydra, which in its action and appearance, foreshadowed the modern clock, carried upon its float an upright rod that acted on a toothed wheel, which in turn moved a hand upon a dial.

But the precursor both of the sand-glass and the clepsydra was without doubt the gnomon of the sun-dial; a simple rod which, standing upright in a sunny place, measured the passage of time by the moving shadow that it cast upon the ground.

The earliest time-teller at all conveniently portable was the dial-ring. Within its broad-banded circle the hours were engraved; a ray of sunlight falling through a small hole in the upper side of the ring when held erect gave the time approximately.

The dial-ring held its place until comparatively recent times, since watches, although well-known, were still too expensive for general use.—Edwin Tarrisse.

CHARACTER IN LETTERS.

The superintendent of schools in one of our large cities said recently, in a private conversation, ‘‘I make it a point not to engage a teacher until I have received a letter from her. Experience has taught me that letters are wonderful revealers of character; and sometimes applicants with whom I have been particularly pleased in a personal interview, have failed to receive their appointments simply because they ‘gave themselves away,’ as the boys say, in their written communications. There I have discovered the carelessness, untidiness, inaccuracy, indolence narrowness and other traits which have been concealed in a brief conversation, but which I should have discovered to my sorrow, had the writers become teachers in my schools. On the other hand, a letter has sometimes shown me that an applicant of whom I felt doubtful, possessed the firmness, the accurate information and the high ideals, which I consider essential in those who undertake the training of our boys and girls.

‘‘Naturally, I insist upon having our pupils taught the art of letter-writing, for I consider few things in education more important. The boy or girl who will take pains to write, in a clear hand, a carefully thought out, well-expressed letter, without mistakes in spelling grammar, or arrangement, can almost always be relied upon to do other things well.’’

This is the testimony of a prominent educator. Let us hope that his words will inspire many of our young people to perfect themselves in ‘‘the noble art of letter-writing.’’—Selected.

‘‘ABOVE EVERY NAME.’’

He, who first wrote the name, wrote it at the end of the list—below every name. He was a Roman officer, charged with the duty of the census of the district about Bethlehem. All day long the line of tired pilgrims had filed before the desk. At last the wearying record was completed. Then suddenly a shadow fell across the page. He turned impatiently toward the doorway to see the figure of a stalwart man outlined against the setting sun, a child in his arms.

‘‘I could not come earlier,’’ he said, ‘‘The child was born last night.’’

‘‘You are at the inn?’’ the officer asked.

‘‘No—we arrived too late: the babe was born in a manger.’’

‘‘Your name?’’

‘‘Joseph.’’

‘‘Of what tribe?’’

‘‘Of the tribe of Benjamin and David. We are the descendants of kings,’’ he added.

The officer did not look up. The world was full of the sons of former kings—and now there was no king but Caesar—lord of the earth by right of war.

‘‘Your wife's name?’’

‘‘Mary.’’

‘‘And the child's?’’

‘‘Jesus.’’ The voice of the big man was soft, as though fondling the syllables. ‘‘It means the Savior of his people.’’ The officer merely nodded.

‘‘Jesus, son of Joseph, of the tribe of Benjamin,’’ he wrote and closed the book. It was the last name on his list.

In other years men have written His name high or low, according to the temper of the time. There have been generations in which no business was so urgent as the task of adding glory to that name. And again, suddenly, the flags of battle have flown high; the lowly banner of His cross trails behind them in the dust; in guilty afterthought the rulers turn to implore His blessing—placing His name again at the end of their ambitions and hate.

But His name cannot occupy that place. Underneath the roar and smoke of battle there are signs today that the world is groping its way back to Him. One finds them in the market-place, the council-chamber, and office. Even in the midst of battles come cries of men in their helplessness, putting His name above that of their leaders. Wherever families gather silently above a vacant chair, His name is breathed on the lips of women and of little children.

When, at length, weary of war, the world turns its scarred, blood-bathed face, seeking peace, it will be His name in which its prayer will be raised. Across the ruin of man's hopes His voice will answer back:

> ‘‘Peace I leave with you,
> My peace I give unto you.’’

Out of the war will be born a new list of heroes. But when these, too, in time shall have been forgotten, the eyes of men will still turn upward to behold His name.

Among rulers, His yoke alone is easy, His burden light. Among reformers, He alone dared to teach men that they are relatives of God and so the equal of their kings. He, too, was torn and wounded. But in the moment when the world had crushed Him, He could say: ‘‘Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world.’’

For faith like that the tired race is ready now. The age is ripe for Him again. The name that nineteen hundred years ago was written last, upon the census rolls, is to be the ‘‘name which is above evey name: that at the name Jesus every knee should bow, and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord.’’—Collier's Weekly.

STRENGTH IN PROPORTION TO OUR WEAKNESS.

Christ gives us strength in proportion to our weakness. Those who are weak and not those who are strong get the most of it. ‘‘Power is made perfect in weakness.’’ Paul got special strength from Christ because he had a thorn and had to bear it. Human love does the same with weakness. If there is a blind child in a home, that is the one who gets the most thought, care, sympathy and help from all the family. If it is harder for us to live than it is for others, if our burden is heavier, if our suffering is greater, if we have fewer to care for us and help us, then we are the very ones to whom Christ gives most of his strength, whom he holds nearest to his heart.—Selected.

All our earthly mornings have evenings; the day is followed by the night. The fairest days hasten towards the sunset. But there is a morning that shall expand into high noon; the sun shall never go down. There shall be no sun to go down nor moon to shed her light, but "the Lord shall be thine everlasting light" and the lamp thereof shall be the Lamb. We are moving towards it.—W. W. Weeks.

What Prayer Will Accomplish. Psa. 34: 1-22.

Daily Readings.

Mon. Psalmist's prayer was heard. Psa. 116: 1-8.
Tues. Prayer delivered Peter. Acts 12: 5.
Wed. Paul's prayer for the Ephesians. Eph. 1: 15-19.
Thurs. Pray for coming of kingdom. Matt. 6: 10.
Fri. The Spirit assists soul in prayer. Rom. 8: 26, 27.
Sat. What prayer will accomplish through faith. Jas. 5: 13-20.

"Prayer is the soul's sincere desire,
Uttered or unexpressed,
The motion of a hidden fire
That trembles in the breast." Etc.

This is the poet's definition of what prayer is. Prayer may be said to be the key that unlocks the door to God. Truly God is ready all the time, but man must be fit, that is, he must get himself in the right attitude before he is accessible to God. Mere words do not constitute true prayer. Prayer is a longing of the soul for God. In Rom. 8: 26, 27 we are made to know that even the Spirit assists those who are striving to make supplications. So we infer that it is very important to have the true attitude before prayer will be granted.

There must be real need before true satisfactian can be realized. No completion or fulfillment until a void has been filled. Prayer can be said to bring about the satisfaction or completiong. In order to make the results beneficial it is imperative for man to exercise on his own part; that is, if prayer is offered, man must work for the ends set forth in his supplications. Therefore don't pray if you are not willing to work for the accomplishment of prayer. What benefit to say, "Thy kingdom come," if we are not ready to try to bring it about?

Prayer has accomplished great things for those of Bible times. The Psalmist portrays the attitude of the children of Israel when he declares that whenever they are in trouble they call upon the Lord and he delivers them out of it. In the Old Testament prayer is represented as talk with God and we know that Abraham's talk with the angel was granted insofar as he made request. The prophets prayed to God and he granted their requests insofar that they were in accordance with God's will. The New Testament gives us many instances where prayer was answered. Jesus felt it necessary for him to talk with the Father. How much more should we feel the necessity. Psa. 116: 1-8 tells us how grateful the Psalmist is because of answered prayer and James tells us, "the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." So the accomplishments gathered from the exercise of prayer in the Holy Book have been numerous.

History has given us incidents where prayer has been the initiating factor of great reformations. It was the hay-stack meetings which preceded the great sweep of Methodism and which brought so many into a knowledge of a Savior. So it was the prayers of a few which brought about the great reformation and caused Protestantism to be born which now is making a world-wide program for the cause of Chist. When war encircled almost the entire earth we were called upon to pray and what was the consequence? You know the result. The answer came and how gloriously we welcome the cessation of war. Results have come from the use of prayer and we are led to believe that prayer will accomplish wondrous things yet for us. We can only know what has been accomplished which is sufficient proof for what is to come in the future. The individual has along with the affairs of nations been blest. The individual may have receiveed more gracious compensation than the world has knowledge of, and this is the consoling part. Christian Endeavorers, may you "Count your blessings name them one by one," and "See what God hath done."

LETTER FROM PHILADELPHIA YEARLY MEETING OF FRIENDS.

To All Who Love Representative Government in the United States:

Our Fellow Citizens: The perils of the war are behind us, but the problems of peace are before us. The world is seething with unrest, disturbances and conflicts. New ideas are finding expression, new theories of social life are being voiced, new demands for changed conditions in government and industry are assailing our traditional institutions. Extremists, both reactionary and radical, are proclaiming strange creeds. We in America, though distant from the storm center, are finding that we are not immune from this world restlessness. It has knocked at our doors, it has crossed our threshhold, and it is asking us the searching question: How will you deal with this confusion of thought and turbulence of action?

Upon the way in which we answer that question in our national life, hangs more than we know of good or evil for our country. There is one way—and one way only—in which we can hope to achieve sane and peaceful progress. It is the way of education, of increasing understanding of the causes and cures of this great unrest. And there is one condition—and one condition only—upon which we can hope to follow this path of peaceable and orderly advance. It is the condition of individual liberty, liberty to interchange ideas and information, liberty to speak and write, liberty to discuss. In any other direction lies stagnation or upheaval.

Because we believe liberty of expression to be of the highest importance to the welfare of our nation and of the coming generation, we are profoundly disturbed by the widespread tendency to forget and depart from this principle. From many quarters we hear of speakers prohibited from delivering addresses, and of meetings prevented or broken up. In recent strikes the police and powers of government have been invoked to enforce the prohibition of gatherings, instead of to protect men in their lawful right of peaceable assembly. The menacing and pernicious interference with meetings by organized groups of private citizens in the name of patriotism is a sinister blow to our American liberties, which should not go unchallenged. In challenging the right of five Socialists to take the seats to which they were duly elected, the Legislature of New York has laid violent hands upon the foundations of representative government. Sedition laws for peace time, such as those already passed in some states, and those now pending in Congress are inroads upon the domain of American freedom, pregnant with injustice and danger.

No man can measure the harm that may ensue if we continue these encroachments upon freedom of expression. History is replete with lessons of the folly of suppression. Many a religious and political martyr should have taught us long ago that you may torture and kill and silence men, but you do not silence truth. The ancient truth spoken when Christianity was the feared and hated doctrine still holds today: "if this counsel or this work be of men it will come to naught, but if it be of God ye cannot overthrow it." Yet while suppression cannot silence truth, it can work many evils. It can produce stagnation of men's minds, and in so doing cut the taproot of democracy. It can bring disaster to those who impose it, as it did when the Federal Party passed the Sedition Law of 1798, and in the words of a leading historian, "From the day the bill became law, the Federal Party went steadily down to ruin." It can produce revolution. Let France and Russia bear witness. "I will make them conform or I will harry them out of the land," cried James I. of England against the Puritans, and these words, it has been said, "Heralded the struggle which within half a century was to deliver up James's son to the executioner."

No easy indifference will suffice to maintain freedom among us. Liberty asks of us a price, the price of tolerance towards those to whom we do not wish to show tolerance. But it is only the unpleasant or hated utterance that really tests the quality of our liberty. "The supreme test of civil liberty," a noted English lord has said, "is our determination to protect an unpopular minority in time of national excitement." In times of intolerance and oppression the founding of a great Commonwealth by William Penn on the principles of religious and civil liberty helped to form our national policy of individual freedom. Our loyalty to that policy is now undergoing trial. In new ways our times are proving afresh whether this nation "conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal" can govern itself on such a principle. We appeal to all who with us love this great Republic and cherish high hopes for her future, to help her meet the test.

We may differ as to the good or evil of the ideas which are finding expression, but let us take to heart the recent words of a foremost editor of this country:

"What I have said is not a plea for the new radicalism, for to me most of this new radicalism is the very negation of political and economic sanity. What I am pleading for is the restoration of the traditions of the Republic, for the restoration of the proved safe-guards of human liberty, for the restoration of the free play of public opinion, without which democracy is stifled and cannot exist."

WHAT IS THE SUN?
Beliefs in 2020.
By a Layman.

A layman of ordinary intelligence and education asks a layman of similar intellectual equipment, living one hundred years hence, a series of questions regarding prevalent beliefs among intelligent people of that coming day and age. Following are the questions and replies.

"What is your opinion of the sun?"

"It is a huge, electrical furnace generating its own electricity. It is also the source of light."

"Is it also a source of heat? Don't the sun's rays warm the earth?"

"Yes, but not directly and they are not rays of heat, as you have been taught and probably believe. We believe in fact we know that such a thing is impossible."

"Why impossible?"

"Because we know enough of the laws of heat to know that heat, no matter how intense it may be at its source, could not pass through the ninety million miles of ether between the sun and earth, which is as much colder than ice as ice is colder than hot water. To believe that heat from the sun can warm the earth directly is as contrary to intelligent reason as to believe that the heaf from a huge campfire on an island in an inland lake surrounded by a wall of ice a mile thick could warm people living outside the wall."

"How then does the sun warm the earth?"

"By electricity. The sun generates and sends out both light and electricity. They travel at about the same speed, but neither is heat. Light passes through both the ether and blanket of atmosphere supposed to be forty or fifty miles thick, which surrounds the earth, without obstruction. Ether offers no resistance to the electric current, but the atmosphere does. It is not a good conductor of electricity. The friction caused by the struggle of the electric current to reach the earth through the atmosphere heats the air and warms the earth."

"Can you illustrate this by something with which we are familiar?"

"Yes, the intense white electric light in the glass bulb which lights your room is produced by friction just as is the warmth of the atmosphere. Two copper wires, copper being a good conductor of electrity, pass into and out of the bulb. They are connected by very small platinum wire, which is not a good conductor. The electric current, in its struggle to pass through this poor conductor and reach the earth by the return copper wire, creates both intense heat and intense light. While the light can be seen for miles, the heat penetrates the atmosphere only a few inches. Fifty of them could not heat an ordinary room. Another illustration is that wood, especially when green, is a better conductor for electric current than air. Hence electricity in the form of lightning often strikes trees and sometimes houses. The latter, being dry, are likely to be set on fire by the friction."

"Why is it that in the tropics near the seashore the air may be uncomfortably warm, or even hot, while the not distant mountains are covered with snow?"

"Because of the difference in the thickness of the blanket of atmosphere which covers the earth. At the seashore surface the blanket is thick; on high mountains the blanket is thin and offers less resistance to the electric current from the sun to the earth, hence less friction and less heat. Exactly the opposite is true at the ocean level."

"Why is it colder in the north temperate zone in the winter than in the summer?"

"Because the electric current from the sun to the earth is less direct. It seeks the earth by the shortest route, and much if it is drawn off to the south of us before it reaches our latitude. For substantially the same reason the air in our longitude is colder in the morning and evening than at noon."

"We were taught in the nineteenth century, and so far in this, that while Mars, and possibly Venus, might be inhabitated by beings constituted physically like ourselves, that life similar to ours would be impossible on Mercury and Jupiter; Mercury because it would be too hot, being so much nearer the sun, and Jupiter too cold because it is too far away. What is your belief in the 21st century?"

"I have seen those textbooks; they are still to be found in our libraries, but their teaching is discarded. Believing, as we do, that the earth's heat is produced by friction generated by the electric current passing through the earth's blanket of atmosphere, we reason that so far as heat is concerned all the change the Almighty would have to make in any or all of the planets in the solar system would be to give to each its proper thickness of atmospheric blanket."

"How about the moon?"

"The moon is cold because it has no atmosphere. The same is probably true of the moons of Jupiter."

GOVERNMENT REPORT ON CHURCHES.

The Bureau of the Census has just issued a report on "Religious Bodies, 1916." The report is very comprehensive, but probably is not all-inclusive because some denominations did not make complete reports.

According to this report there are 227,487 church organizations in the United States; 41,926,854 members reported; 203,432 church edifices. These church buildings have a property value of $1,676,600,582; and there is a debt on them of $164,864,899. The value of parsonages is reported as $218,846,096. The expenditures total $328,809,999. The number of Sunday schools is given as 194,759, with 19,935,890 pupils. There are apparently 202 denominations or branches of denominations. Of this number 158 are grouped in 24 families and 44 listed as separate denominations.

In the Methodist "family," are included the Methodist Episcopal Church, Methodist Protestant Church, Wesleyan Methodist Connection of America, Primitive Methodist Church in the United States of America, Methodist Episcopal Church South, Congregational Methodist Church, Free Methodist Curch of North America, New Congregational Methodist Church, African Methodist Episcopal Church, African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, Colored Methodist Protestant Church, Union American Methodist Episcopal Church, African Union Methodist Protestant Church, Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, Reformed Zion Union Apostolic Church, African American Methodist Episcopal Church, and the Reformed Methodist Union Episcopal Church.

These churches have 65,760 organizations and 7,166,441 members. The number of church edifices is 61,467, with a value of $317,916,402, and a debt of $23,887,132. The value of the parsonages of the Methodist "family" is $53,503,462. The expenditures of this group was $70,887,406 annually. The number of Sunday schools is reported as 60,923, with a membership of 6,473,500.

THE GOOD PHYSICIAN.

I do not know that I have ever been so moved by any picture as I was by one which hung on the walls of the Academy three years ago, Mr. John Collier's picture of "The Death Sentence." A young fellow is sitting facing the light in the consulting-room of a doctor. The kindly man has evidently been breaking the news to him of the disease which has gripped him so tightly that human skill cannot disengage its grip. And as I looked at it, the thing that struck me most was not the look of despair upon the wasted face of the young man upon whom the world was slowly closing its gates; but it was just the look upon the face of the surgeon, the look of impotent pity on the countenance of the man who knew what was wrong but had not the power to deal with it. But, blessed be Christ's name forever, I have never seen that look on His face. I have never seen the risen Lord for one moment at a loss to know what to do with a man who accepts His diagnosis of his disease and puts himself into His hands.—Christian Endeavor World.

DENOMINATIONAL YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONVENTION.

All Methodist Protestants who are concerned about the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor work in the Methodist Protestant Church will be interested to know the when and the where of the denominational young people's convention.

When and Where.

Jot this down on the tablets of your memory until you cannot forget it,—the denominational Young People's Convention of the Methodist Protestant Church meets in High Point, N. C., May 18 to 20. High Point is situated almost in the center of the "Old North State," on the main line of the Southern Railroad about half way between Washington, D. C., and Atlanta, Ga.

High Point, N. C., and May 18 to 20 have been selected because the General Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church meets in Greensboro, N. C., on Friday morning, May 21st, at ten o'clock.

The Young People's Convention will close on Thursday evening, May 20, and as the seat of the General Conference is only fifteen miles away those going from the Convention to the General Conference can easily be in their places in Greensboro the next morning at ten o'clock.

Delegates to General Conference.

We are expecting a large number of the General Conference representatives to be in this convention. You will only have to leave home just two days earlier to take in the convention.

Show your interest in the young people by being present and helping to make the convention a success. Not only so, but get representatives from among your young people to attend. It will do them good, and they will work all the better in the local church when they return.

A Special Request.

Please send me a photograph. I am getting together a number of slides for use in a stereopticon address illustrating our young people's work. Am anxious to have this completed for the convention in May. If you have a Sunday school, or some department of a Sunday school that is doing work that is worthy to be shown to other people throughout the denomination, or if you have a Christian Endeavor society, or a Junior Christian Endeavor society, or an Intermediate Christian Endeavor society which is doing good work, then please send me a photograph of same and I will do the rest.

Please send me the photograph at the earliest possible date. Kodak pictures, as a rule, do not make good slides. It will pay to have a good photograph made.

Now, dear people, I am not joking. I want a good picture of some of the best work that is being done in the Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor societies in the Methodist Protestant Church.

I cannot promise to use all that may be sent, but I can use about sixty. So who will be the first? Send just a note explaining what the picture represents. Yours in the Master's service,

A. G. Dixon.

TO WOMEN ESPECIALLY.

I will write a few more words in regard to our new missionary movement. As it is intended to reach all our churches, I will put what I have to say in the Herald where our whole "family" can read it.

I feel that I cannot say anything that will be of much benefit. I know too little of missionary work to make any suggestions or plans, so will leave it to those who are more competent. I don't like to acknowledge my ignorance before so many, but will say I will try and learn.

My idea was that there might be a few women found in all churches containing no auxiliary who would like to become members in some city. This would call for no new officers. Of course we could not do much but keep up our part of the finances, but that would be better than doing nothing.

I think it a better plan, though, to have an auxiliary of our own, provided we can get enough together to "stand alone". I believe we would take more interest in it.

As a usual thing, we women in the country are too scattered to organize and keep up a society like it should be. I live seven miles from my church and rarely get there during the winter season; so you see the impossibility of doing much in this line of work.

I am strongly in favor of every church having its own auxiliary, if circumstances will allow, but if not, it looks like there might be some way to get the "faithful few" together.

I don't believe there is a church in our conference, which does not contain a few good working women who could be induced to join the Mail Order Department. We need a missionary campaign.

We have had campaigns, and then more compaigns, till I would not dare ask a preacher to get up in the pulpit and mention a new one. But I will risk saying this much: if you are the least interested in missions, get some of your best women to one side where no one will hear you, and see if you cannot get a few members. If you do not get them the first time, you might go after them like I heard a certain preacher say he went after Herald subscriptions: he kept going till they subscribed to get rid of him—and they are still letting him preach for them. Needless to say he came out ahead in the race. I think the Bible teaches us that perseverance will sometimes win when other methods fail.

It seems to be the tendency of human nature to hold back in things of this kind, even when they want to do it.

However, thanks to Mrs. Brown, the way is open, there is not a thing to do but send in your name and pay your dues. It does not amount to much when you consider one member, but our strength lies in our union. We have the strength to send that woman physician to China. Will we use it?

We will arrange for our meetings in the Herald later. I can tell you right now, if somebody else does not come, it will be a lonely meeting all by myself.

Mrs. J. J. Crawford.

IS THE WORLD WORSE?

"The world is more in the grip of Satan today than it ever was."

The above is a quotation from an article from "Ruth Fletcher" in the Methodist Protestant Herald of January 29 and she is not alone in entertaining this view, but it is foreign from what I think. I admit since man by transgression fell there has been a great conflict between good and evil, God directing the former, Satan the latter, and as I see it it depends upon which side we are on how we see things. I claim to be on the Lord's side and all the devils of earth or hell can not make me believe that they have everything going their way at an unheard-of speed and the Lord and His innumerable hosts are asleep and can not prevent it. I admit there are a great many Benhadads in our time and they frighten some of God's servants nearly to death and they seem ready to give the whole thing over to the devil, but I praise the Lord, all the Elishas are not asleep or dead and when they pray the Lord to open the eyes of His servants, He does it and they behold the mountains full of God's people and they come out more than conquerors every time (2 Kings 6:15, 16, 17; Jer. 5:22; Rom. 8, especially from verse 35 to end of chapter). If, as she says, "the world is more in the grip of Satan than ever," her theory that "God's divine method of saving the world by perfect mothers" is indeed "too slow" and the motherhood of our land has fallen far short of their duty. I would not say aught against the motherhood of our land, for I verily believe they have more to do with shaping of man's life than they get credit for and every true mother has made the world better by having lived therein. They are the bedrock of nearly every good move for rightousness, and as I see it, the mother has a right to use her influence for good in the pulpit or pew or as a church official (I am not a suffragette either). Wherever the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ has been fully established the world has been made better. I know of no christianized land (and the gospel is all that really christianizes) that God's teachers are arrested and up before some Sanhedrin and fastened in stocks as was the case a few hundred years ago.

I can not believe God would have made us reflectors and then let Satan shut off all the light, it matters not how hard we try to keep him from doing so. Are the various orphan homes, state hospitals, and many other homes for the unfortunate an evidence that the world is in the grop of Satan, or the Lord? And why is it that never in the history of man had the people opened their purses and filled God's treasury with millions of money to more fully establish righteousness in the world? Has this a tendency to make the world better or worse? (Isa. 55:10, 11. In the light of all this and much more I can not believe Satan has or will overcome. If I believed this I would have no encouragement to continue to do what little I have done and am doing to help humanity to a higher life. It would be a sad thing indeed at the end of this life if Christ had not through me made the world any better. Perhaps I may have the wrong view of this matter, but such are my views after studying it for some time.

TO MISSIONARY AUXILIARIES.

At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the North Carolina Branch of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, held on Saturday, January 31, 1920, it was found that there is still a great portion of the budget for North Carolina to be raised, with only two months of the year remaining. Are all of our auxiliaries doing their best? A large Thank-offering is the best means we know of increasing this amount. Won't you make yours unusually large? We submit the following report:

Asheboro	$ 93.27
Bethel	16.00
Burlington	28.40

THE STANDARD OF HUMAN FRIENDSHIP.

In a true friendship there is no thought of service as service, or of duty as duty. That pure and unselfish love which is the soul of all real friendship makes service of any form or in any direction an unalloyed pleasure. The question never is, What does my friend require of me? but it always is, What can I do for my friend? Not how much must I give to my friend? but rather, How much will my friend consent to receive from me? Nor is there any thought of laying a friend under obligation by any service performed for him. We only love him the more, for the enjoyed privilege of doing for him. Moreover, there is no special fear on our part that we shall fail in proving our friendship for a real friend: or that we shall offend him by any inevitable lack of faithful service toward him. We do not, in fact, worry over the details of duty toward a friend for we know that we love him, and we are sure that that carries everything with it, since "love is the fulfilling of the law." Nor do we worry over our friend's possible undersanding and judgment of us: for "there is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear: because fear hath punishment: and he that feareth is not made perfect in love." And this standard of human friendship is pointed out to us of God as a pattern of the relation which He desires to have between us and Himself. —Selected.

FOLLOW DIRECTIONS.

Whatever we are doing, we should make it our aim to learn everything possible about our work, since only by doing that can we hope to gain the best results. A writer in the Etude says:

I was once seated in the studio of an eminent teacher of the piano. In the course of a pupil's lesson there occurred the word "strepitoso."

"What does 'strepitoso' mean?" asked the teacher.

"I don't know," answered the pupil; "really, Professor, I don't have time to bother about those jaw-breaking words in the music. If I did, I would get no practising done at all."

The teacher stopped then and there to give the pupil an earnest talk.

"My dear child," he said, "what would you think if you should get a prescription of medicine filled the drug store, and yet were unable to read the directions on the bottle, so that you would not know when to take the medicine, nor how much to take at a time? You would never dare to take the medicine without knowing at what times and in what doses it ought to be taken.

"It is very similar with a musical composition. The composer writes directions through the music, explaining how he wants it played, where loud, where soft, where fast, where slow, where swells should be introduced, where it should be retarded, etc. Now, how can you play the composition intelligently if you cannot read these directions? They are written in Italian, because Italian is the language of music, just as Latin is the language of law and medicine, since it is necessary to use one certain language so that musicians of all nations will be able to understand it."

TRUST HIM.

Charles H. Spurgeon, the great preacher, once dealt very tactfully and successfully with a young man who came all the way from Holland to call upon him in London. He wanted to know what he must do to be saved. Mr. Spurgeon said:

"Well, it is a long way to come to ask that question. You surely know that you are to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ."

"But I can not believe in Jesus Christ."

"Well," Mr. Spurgeon said, "now look here. I have believed in him a good many years, and I do trust him; but if you know something or other against him, I should like to know it, for I do not like to be deceived."

"No, sir; I do not know anything against him."

"Why don't you trust him, then? Could you trust me?"

"Yes, I would trust you with anything," said he.

"You do not know much about me?"

"No, not much, only I know you are a preacher of the Word, and I believe you are honest, and I could trust you."

"Do you mean to say," said Mr. Spurgeon, "you could trust me, and then tell me that you can not trust Jesus Christ? You must have found out something bad about him. Let me know it."

He stood still and thought for a moment, and then said:

"Dear me, I can see it now. Why, of course I can trust him—I can not help trusting him; he is such a blessed one that I must trust him. Good-by, sir," he said; "I will go back to Holland; it is all right now."—Selected.

HERO OF AN EARTHQUAKE.

It is a beautiful story told by Lafcadio Hearn of an old man whose great deeds belong to Japanese history.

He was Hamarguchi, and his farmhouse stood on the verge of a small plateau, overlooking the bay. The plateau, mostly devoted to rice culture, was hemmed in on three sides by thickly wooded summits; and from the outer verge the land sloped down to the sea. Below were ninety thatched dwellings and a temple; these composed the village.

One autumn evening, Hamarguchi Gohei was looking down from his balcony on the preparations for some merrymaking in the hamlet below. All the villages were out, and he would have gone with them had he not been feeling less strong than usual.

Suddenly there came an earthquake shock, not a strong one; but Hamarguchi, who had felt many before like this, recognized its long, spongy motion. As the quaking ceased, he chanced to look toward the sea, and there he saw the strangest possible sight; it seemed to be running away from the land.

Apparently the whole village had noticed it, for the people stood still in wonderment; only Hamarguchi drew any conclusions from the phenomenon, and guessed what the sea would do next. He called his little grandson, a lad of ten, the only one of the family left with him.

"Tada! Quick! Light me a torch!"

The lad kindled a pine torch, and the old man hurried with it to the fields where hundreds of rice stacks stood ready for transportation. One by one he lighted them in haste, and they caught like tinder, sending skyward masses of smoke that met and mingled in one cloudy whirl. Tada, astonished and terrified, ran after his grandfather weeping and wailing, "Why? Why? Why?"

Hamarpuchi did not answer. He thought only of four hundred lives in peril. He watched for the people, and in a moment they came swarming up from the village like ants.

And still the sea was fleeing toward the horizon. The first party of succor arrived, a score of agile young peasants, who wanted to attack the fire at once, but Hamarguchi, stretching out his arms, stopped them.

"Let it burn, lads!" he commanded. "Let it be. I want the whole village here."

The whole village came, mothers and children last of all, drawn by concern and curiosity.

"Grandather is mad! I am afraid of him!" sobbed little Tada. "He set fire to the rice on purpose. I saw him do it."

"As for the rice," said Hamarguchi, "the lad tells the truth. I set it on fire. Are all the people here?"

"All are here," was the answer. "But we cannot understand this thing."

"See!" cried the old man at the top of his voice, pointing to the open. "Say if I am mad!"

It was the returning sea, towering like a cliff, and coursing swifter than a kite. There was a shock, heavier than thunder, as the colossal swell smote the shore, with a foam-burst like a blaze of sheet lightning.

Then a white horror of sea raved over the village itself. It drew back, roaring and tearing out the land as it went. Twice, thrice, five times it struck, and ebbed, each time with lesser surges, and then it returned to its ancient bed and stayed there, although still raging. Of all the homes about the bay nothing remained but two straw roofs, tossing madly in the offing.

All lips were dumb, and Hamarguchi observed gently, "That is why I set fire to the rice."

He is now as poor as the poorest man in all the village, but he saved four hundred lives.—Selected.

NOTICE!

We want all those who are interested and those who are not to get interested, and make some money for the Woman's Home Missionary Society, to be used in the work at Pine Ridge, Kentucky, Pittsburgh Mission and our Children's Home.

If you so desire, you can specify to which one of these you wish your money to be sent.

The Finance Committee suggests that we observe the week March 10-17 as Self-Denial Week.

If you do not think of any self-denial by which you could save any money, we would suggest you try the talent plan, which has been used before.

For any information regarding either of these plans write me.

In Memoriam.

In January Sister Mary Jane McManus was called to her reward. She leaves many friends and loved ones to mourn after her. It seems sad to part here, but what a blessed thought there is for those that are ready. They can meet again never to part. Is not that sweet to think of? We can meet again, bless the Lord for His goodness to us.

Sister McManus was a good Christian lady; her age, 69 years; the widow of Amos McManus, the daughter of Elisha and Rhodise Phifer. She professed faith in Christ at the age of 12 years and joined the Methodist Protestant church at Antioch; remained faithful to her vows until death. Was the last of a large family, as her husband and eight children had already passed over. She is survived by three brothers and one sister and one half sister to mourn their loss. She was laid to rest at Antioch Methodist Protestant church, the funeral conducted by the writer. A. Ridge.

J. O. Routh.

On January the 31st, at Mt. Pleasant, the writer conducted the funeral of Mr. J. O. Routh. The following written obituary was furnished the writer:

"J. O. Routh was born January 12, 1879; died in Canton, Ohio, January 26, 1920, age 41 years and 14 days. He leaves father, mother, widow and six children, and a host of relatives to mournt their loss. He was a model husband and father, and will be greatly missed in the community in which he lived."

Mr. Routh went to Canton to visit friends, but in less than three weeks time he died. The bereaved family has our sympathy.

William H. Neese.

A Sad Death.

On Tuesday, January 27, Ned, the 15-year-old son of Bro. Lacy Sharp of Bellmont, while fooling with a pistol, accidentally shot himself, the ball entering the back part of his head and killing him instantly. The funeral was conducted by the undersigned on Thursday following and interment was made in the cemetery at Bellmont. Ned was a consistent member of Bellmont church. His parents and brother and sisters have our heartfelt sympathy. J. H. Bowman.

Mrs. Connie Webster Dead.

On January 30 the wife of Connie Webster of Bellmont died after a very brief illness. Her funeral was conducted by the writer the next day at Bellmont where she was buried. She leaves of her immediate family, a husband and two small children who have my sympathy. J. H. Bowman.

MARRIED.

W. T. Ingram and Miss Alma Swaim were married at the Methodist Protestant parsonage in Kernersville, N. C., on January 28, 1920. We wish them much happiness.

A. O. Lindley.

A Ministers' Conference called by the Interchurch World Movement is to be held in Charlotte, N. C., March 8-10. At that time all the ministers of the State will be asked to consider the Kingdom's interest in relation to the State, the Nation and the World. Similar conferences will be held in every State in the Union.

It is proposed to give the ministers of North Carolina the facts as they were presented at Atlantic City, together with a large amount of material revealed by the Survey now being conducted in the various counties in this State under the direction of the Interchurch World Movement. A frank discussion of all facts presented will be freely encouraged. A team of trained experts will lead in the Conference, and will assist in interpreting the facts.

In order to make it possible for all the pastors in the State to attend, the Interchurch World Movement has been authorized to pay the railroad fare and the sleeper fare, (where necessary) of all the pastors who attend the Conference. No other item of expense will be paid on acocunt of the large number of men expected. E. N. Orr, Field Secretary of N. C.

—The larger part of this alien sedition in the United States is of Russian origin in birth and in blood. Some of it is Italian and some of it is Finnish and a little of it came out of Central Europe, but for the most part it is an expression of Russian gratitude for the generosity of the American people in affording a refuge to the victims of Romanoff oppression. In that respect it is unique to modern history. There is certainly no other record of a great population suddenly turning against its protector. Government would never have interfered with them if they had not begun to interfere with government, and no government can allow its existence to be challenged by an alien population that is wantonly abusing its hospitality.—New York World.

—Roy Leib, a shell-shocked veteran of the late war, was employed as a telephone lineman at Pottsville, Pa. He often had to work near wires carrying high-voltage currents and was constantly fearful of coming in contact with them. One day he happened to touch one for an instant. The shock, it is said, could not have harmed any normal man—no burns were found on him—but he died as a result of it, apparently having been scared to death.

"There seems to be a great feeling of unrest through the country."

"Yes, I've noticed that. Most of my clerks yawn so freouently through the day that I'm dead sure they're not getting sleep enough."—Detroit Free Press.

Jenkins was sitting down to breakfast one morning, when he was astounded to see in the paper an announcement of his own death. He rang up friend Smith at once. "Hello, Smith! Have you seen the announcement of my death in the paper?"

"Yes," replied Smith. "Where are you speaking from?"

WHEN JOHN CHANGED HIS MIND.

The wind had twisted some of the city telephone wires earlier in the evening. That may have accounted for the reason John Thornton had for believing that he had not heard the message exactly right. But after the operator had repeated it he was really convinced it was for him. Turning to his mother, he exclaimed, excitedly, ''That was the superintendent of the Columbia Wheel Works. He wants me to come in to see him Saturday morning. Do you suppose that he has considered my application for a place there?''

His mother nodded her head hopefully. Edward, the fourteen-year-old member of the Thornton family, regarded his older brother with a look akin to admiration. ''I guess it's a Saturday call,'' he ventured, ''and maybe some work after school evenings, too. But remember this, old fellow. You'll have to give up being on the track team this spring if you take steady work. I heard Coach Farraday say that he wasn't going to have anybody on his track team this spring who was in a bit of danger missing part of the practice.''

Mrs. Thornton followed Edward. ''Are you quite sure an out-of-school place at the Works will pay you for giving up the track team, John?'' she asked. ''Last year you were almost wild about the honors you won.''

John laughed in spite of his effort to control himself. How could he make them understand what a chance to work with superintendent of the Wheel Works meant to him? When he was a young boy he had invaded the factory's domains every time an opportunity presented itself. Every part of the wheels made there—from the rim to the axle had entranced him. Then his ambition had been to help make wheels.

As time passed, his ambition grew. On the day almost three years back when he, a Freshman, had entered the Manual Training High School, he had decided that he would some day be superintendent of the Works and see that all the wheels turned out there were perfect.

''I'll make my way clear up to the top,'' he had told his father.

How hard he had worked at the Manual Training High School in order to get ready for this place! His record last year had been one of the best of the students there. March this year found him leading the entire Junior class. That record had been enclosed with his application when he had mailed it to Superintendent Gregory of the Wheel Works. Deep in John's heart was the feeling that it had played a very important part in his receiving that summons.

Early Saturday morning following the direction of the message, John went down to the office of the Works. Just before noon he came rushing back home.

''Mother,'' he shouted across the dining-room, ''it's regular work, not just part time. I'm to have fifteen dollars a week and a chance to learn everything about several different departments. Isn't that splendid for me?''

His mother wiped her hands on the roller towel before she spoke. ''That would mean giving up school—wouldn't it, John?'' she asked.

John nodded. ''But it's the chance of a lifetime, mother,'' he exclaimed. ''Mr. Gregory didn't hesitate to tell me so, either. When I get out of school in almost two years, they may have only the most ordinary places open—in departments where I learn just one thing, while this place gives me a chance at everything about the whole factory and—'' slowly and impressively, ''gets me ready for a place at the top.''

His mother said nothing. At the dinner table she merely listened while John and his brother discussed the former's situation. Not until the meal was over did she tell John that she wanted him to drive her out into the country after next week's supply of butter.

They took a roundabout route for that journey—at the mother's suggestion. It was a road she had traveled much in years before and now she delighted in showing John the landmarks there—the little church she went to when a girl, the ''haunted'' schoolhouse and the bridge her own grandfather had built. After these, they came to the queerest house John had ever seen.

Tall and round, it looked more like a silo with a lean-to at the back than a house. But yet it was evident that the builder had intended it for a house; right now it was being used as one. The round part was still very pretentious, the upper part having been shingled and made brave with ornaments, now cracked and partly missing. But the back part—the lean-to was of the roughest, cheapest lumber purchasable.

''Who built it and why?'' John asked and stopped his machine to get a better view of it. ''Did I ever se it before? I never have happened over this road before, or if I have, I've forgotten that house. It's a strange conglomeration.''

''Yes,'' his mother said, ''you used to see it quite often when you were a little fellow. Then it was quite a curiosity and we came out here of evenings to watch its progress while being built. I had almost forgotten about it myself until today.''

John slowly drove the machine on toward their destination while his mother talked. ''The man who owns this place was then just a hard-working farmer on very poor land when a company suddenly discovered oil on his farm. It seemed to be a rich vein and fabulous wealth loomed before him. Right away he began to plan to build this house which was to be the most elaborate piece of architecture in this county. His friends and even his family begged him not to begin it until he was sure that the wells turned out as rich as they then thought them to be. His wife wanted him to bank the money so that if the wells ever happened to go dry, they could buy some better farm land, but he went right on with his house. He said it had always been his boyish ambition to live in just such a house as the one he was then building.

''Well,'' she smiled slightly, ''the oil well did go dry, and the part of the house which was decorated by the cupola was the the only part finished enough to stand the years. He built on at the back the ell for practical purposes and—''

''And his show part is still here,'' interrupted John. ''I guess I see your point, mother. You think that if I stopped school for this new place at the Works because it has been one of my 'early desires,' that I would be building just a showy bit of structure, instead of the real, all-round building.''

''At any rate, you would be investing what little capital you have in one piece of architecture instead of securing more capital,'' she said.

On they drove in silence, but before his mother left the car, John said, ''I've decided to go back to high school and finish my course. ''I'll be sure I have a decent capital of knowledge before I invest it. I'll finish the Manual High before I take a place to work, and—''

IN MEMORIAM.

It is with sorrow that we record the death of Mrs. Mary Thompson, one of our earnest workers. Mrs. Thompson was, before coming to our auxiliary, one of the leading spirits in the Bethel Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. She was hopeful of our work and was always willing to do all she could to advance the work.

Therefore, be it resolved, That while Grace church Woman's Foreign Missionary Society has lost one of its truest friends, we would admonish each member of this society to emulate all her virtues, and to put forth greater efforts for the cause of missions.

We express our deepest sympathy for the husband and children, and commend them to the One who, knowing all our sorrows, careth for us; also that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family and Missionary Record.

Dr. Harris Glascock,
Mrs. A. B. Kimball.

Alonza House.

Death visited our community and took from our midst on Friday afternoon, January 23, 1920, Mr. Alonza House. He had been sick for a long time, but he stood his suffering without a word of complaint. His wife preceded him to our heavenly home about six years ago. He leaves eight children and one brother, also a host of friends and relatives to mourn their loss.

Our deepest sympathies go out to the bereaved ones in their trial and troubles. On Saturday afternoon his mortal remains were laid to rest beside his wife's in the family graveyard near his home in the presence of a large crowd of sorrowing friends and relatives. The burial services were conducted by Rev. F. M. Draper of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

May the Lord bless and comfort the bereaved ones in this dark hour of trouble, for we know not who will be the next to be called. But let us prepare our souls to be ready when the summons call us home. It is hard for us to understand why he was taken away. But some day we shall know.

Burlingtcn.—Last Sunday was ''Christian ndeavor Day'' in the Burlington church. here were 159 in the Sunday school, an inrease over the previous Sunday.

The senior Christian Endeavor society conucted the morning church service, and renered a program in observance of ''Christian ndeavor Day,'' celebrating the 39th anniersary of the founding of the movement. Iiss Cleater Durham presided, and the folowing spoke: L. A. Braxton, on ''The Funamental Principles of Christian Endeavor:'' . B. Way, on ''Brief History of Christian ndeavor;'' Miss Elma Garrett, on, ''The hristian Endeavor Pledge;'' J. B. Wagonr (of the Presbyterian church) on. ''Chrisian Endeavor as a Training School.'' Ferry ibbs, the president, delivered the address of elcome preceding the speeches by others. rof. H. C. Stout spoke briefly, stating that e joined the Christian Endeavor society hen he was a young man and it put him to ork for the Lord, and he had been at work ver since. Special music was rendered by the hoir and a quartette by Mrs. H. W. Wade, Iiss Lula Riddle, Prof. C. W. Davis and W. . Loy.

In the afternoon at three o'clock the Juior society presented their annual program n a public meeting. Miss Mabel Hargrove as the leader of the meeting. The officers ere seated around a table, and Vernon Jones. he president, delivered the address of welome. A large number of the Juniors took art in the service, rendering their speeches n a splendid and commendable manner. The ttendance at both services was fairly good, onsidering the extreme cold weather.

Bro. Pritchard was in Halifax county fillng an appointment on Rev. Clyde Auman's ircuit. There was no evening church service.

The funeral service over the remains of Irs. Fletcher Williams was conducted by ro. Pritchard at the First Baptist Church n Friday afternoon of last week. The church as filled with sympathizing friends and eighbors. Mrs. Williams was one of the est and most devout women of Burlington.

The ''wedding room'' of the parsonage was he scene of a marriage on Friday night of ast week when the ''marrying parson'' perormed the ceremony that united Samuel H. mith and Miss Grace Allbright, both of Haw iver. We did not learn whether these young eople belong to the Methodist Protestant hurch at Haw River, but we wish them appiness in their new relationship.

Usual services of the church, Sunday school nd Christian Endeavor next Sunday.

leveland Circuit Officers Please Take Notice.

All the stewards, class leaders, trustees, unday school superintendents on Cleveland ircuit will please meet at Kistler's church n Saturday before the fifth Sunday in Febuary, at 11 a. m., for the purpose of holding he quarterly conference; which had to be postponed on account of the prevalence of influenza on the work. We will follow the usual program for such occasions: preaching at 11 a. m., dinner on the ground, quarterly conference will open about one p. m. Everybody invited to come out and be with us.

Preaching also on fifth Sunday at same place at 11 a. m. J. H. Stowe, Pastor.

Concord.—Despite the inclement weather Sunday, our attendance was very good. Those who did venture out were well repaid by hearing two good sermons by Bro. Shelton.

The senior and junior Christian Endeavor societies are observing Christian Endeavor week this week. The first service, ''What Our Pledge Requires'' was held Sunday afternoon, and the second service, ''Fellowship Day,'' will be held next Friday night, at which time our society will entertain the other societies of the county union. The last service, ''Decision Day,'' will be held next Sunday and our pastor will be the leader.

We are using the Christian Endeavor week programs, gotten up by the United Society of Christian Endeavor. Reporter.

Shelby, Shelby Circuit.—Our Sunday school is going nicely. Quite a lot of sickness in the community and a lot of cold weather. But in all we are proud of our Sunday school. We ask the prayers of Christians for the faithful few, for we know the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man or woman availeth much.

Our Christmas entertainment was indeed good. We heard praises from those present.

Our Ladies' Aid is moving along. We hope to do something worth while in the near future.

Our first quarterly conference will meet with our church on Saturday evening before the third Sunday in February. Hope all churches on this charge will be well represented.

We were sorry to give our former pastor, Rev. H. F. Fogleman, up, but we were indeed glad to have Bro. Morris with us again.

Bro. Morris preached here today. His sermon was grand. All who did not hear it missed a treat. Reporter.

Greenesville Circuit.—Since our last report death has claimed two of our members, Bro. Thomas Moore and Bro. Robert Philips.

Bro. Moore came to us from the Methodist Episcopal Church last summer. The writer had the pleasure of talking to Bro. Moore about his spiritual welfare and was told that he was trying to live a Christian life. Bro. Moore leaves a wife and one child to mourn their loss. May God bless and comfort them in their bereavement.

Bro. Philips passed to his reward last Thursday night. He was a young man of a fine Christian character. He was converted and joined Philadelphia Methodist Protestant church September 22, 1892, and till the time of his death was a well-wisher to his church. Bro. Robert leaves behind his aged father and several brothers and sisters. May the God of love and of mercy comfort them in their bereavement.

We filled our appointments at Philadelphia and Matthews Chapel today. Notwithstanding the cold day we had a very good congregation. From Matthews Chapel we went out to Bro. Wright's for supper and after spending an hour or two in this good home and partaking of the bountiful supper prepared by Mrs. Wright and daughters, we went out to our Ford to start home. We found one dozen cans of fruit and vegetables in it. We can not find words to express our heartfelt thanks to these good people for this act of kindness.

May God bless you all and may his richest blessings rest on the entire work this year. With best wishes to the Herald and its readers. L. S. Helms, Pastor.

Matthews Chapel, Greensville Circuit.—Bro. Helms filled his appointment with us this afternoon with a very large crowd considering how cold the weather was. He delivered us a fine sermon which every one enjoyed very much. We must put in a word of praise for our Sunday school. We are carrying on our school very nicely and hope to have more to come in the spring. We are extending an invitation to all to come and help us along with our work. I was more than glad to have every one of my scholars present in our intermediate class and some visitors today, and I must tell you that they always have good lessons. And listen! I ask Bro. Helms to hear my class the next preaching Sunday, which will be the third Sunday. So now let's do our best to have a good lesson. We are always looking forward to our preaching Sunday, for we are sure Bro. Helms will have a good sermon for us.

Wonder what has become of Bro. J. M. Morgan. We certainly would be glad to see something from him in the Herald. But we can rest assured that he is at work whereever he is. We shall never forget him and his family at Matthews Chapel.

This is the first time I have ever attempted to write to the Herald, and if this escapes the waste basket I will write again. With best wishes to the Herald and its readers,

Estelle Wright.

Brunswick, Va.

Matthews Chapel, Greensville Circuit.—Bro. Helms was with us on third Sunday in January and again yesterday (first Sunday); the attendance both Sundays was very good, but could be better. We have some church-going people and some that will let almost any little thing keep them away.

Our Sunday school is doing nicely, 40 present yesterday, if the weather was extremely cold.

Mr. A. W. Moore, our senior teacher, was absent yesterday on account of sickness. We missed him, as he is one of our regular attendants.

Mr. C. N. Riggan, of North Carolina, who expected to teach singing school at this place, has postponed his coming until the first of March, on account of bad weather and bad roads, and he lives so far from church.

Mrs. Will Clary, who has been very ill, we are glad to say is improving very fast.

Bro. Helms will be with us again third Sunday. He has bought himself a new Ford and we have very good roads, so he is preaching for us people twice a month. Best wishes to Herald. Lottie Edwards, Reporter.

February 2, 1920.

Henderson.—Our services yesterday were unusual in this particular: besides the pastor, five ministers worshiped with us. A breakdown in the gas plant closed several of our churches for the morning service and the pastors of these churches worshiped with us. We were glad, also, to see in our congregation several members of other churches who came with their pastors, to our service. We hope that they were all blessed.

A hopeful and progressive spirit characterizes our work. With few exceptions, our church is organized along every line, and every organization shows a readiness to serve. We need a Junior Christian Endeavor, and plans are already in the making for organizing it. The very best way to strengthen the church of the future is to train the children of today; and there is, perhaps, no better way to train them than through a Junior Christian Endeavor society. Our senior society, now two months old, is growing in interest and efficiency with each meeting. Nothing in our work is more refreshing to us than to see our young people interested in active Christian service. Our society is made up of an interesting group of young people, and we are expecting great good to come to the church through this organization.

A new and happy feature in our recent work was an after-service reception, given on a recent Sunday night, to the strangers and visitors at our service. Our Young Ladies' League gave this reception in the Sunday school room of the church; they were well rewarded by the large number who readily accepted their invitation, and by every token of a worth-while occasion. We shall not be surprised to hear that some of our other organizations want to share in this pleasure. We are confident that such interest shown to our visitors and strangers will promote the good of our services from every standpoint.

There is considerable sickness among our church members and in our church families. We sympathize with them all, and pray constantly for them.

Dr. Fincher and his assistants are here with the Presbyterian church in a ten-days' meeting. We hope and pray for them the greatest possible success. S. W. Taylor.

February 3, 1920.

And Still They Come.

Some people are not like the old lady at the experience meeting who said she had been a member of the church for forty years and had been living a Christian off and on ever since; but these people are not that way, for if by their fruits ye shall know them, then these people are of the very best. The following kind friends have remembered us in a substantial way since Conference. Brother Hugh Troxler and family; Sister Sallie Troxler and family; Brother T. P. Troxler and family; Brother Bob Troxler and family; Brother Mat. Bevil and family; Brother Bob Bevil and family; Brother Dillon Moore and family; Brother Dolph Moore and family; Brother Levi Dixon; Brother Walter Maxwell and family; Brother Will. Chilcut and wife; Brother Henry Stansfield and family; Brother Robert Small and family; Brother J. M. Weatherly and family; Brother Pinctney Gordon and family; Brother Charles Gordon and family; Brother Charles Smith and family; Brother Murphy and wife; Captain Murphy and wife; Mr. Webb and his daughter, Miss Hattie. The above is in addition to a machine nearly full of the good things of life the Mizpah people put in my car the first Sunday in January. I could not get all the names of these good people, but the Lord knows them every one by name and will reward them accordingly. In addition to the foregoing I wish to mention Brother J. W. Hopkins and wife; Brother John Pugh and wife.

The Spanish influenza has not passed us entirely by. Among the sick I find Brother Jack Troxler, Captain Murphy and son; Brother Howard Gunn and all the family. In addition to these Brother Grover Wagoner's children have been sick. Brother O. V. Smith's little boy has been right sick. I am glad to state that so far as I know all are improving.

Dr. and Mrs. Flagge are so kind and attentive that they always leave a warm place in the heart of those whom they touch in life. The roads are getting bad, but I have missed no appointments on that account.

W. E. Swain.

Roberta Station.—Despite the inclement weather Sunday was another good day for us. At the morning service the following new members were received: Mr. and Mrs. R. D. Ballard, Misses Annie and Mahala Ballard. They come to us from Kerr Street Methodist Episcopal church, South. We are indeed glad to have them. May we prove a blessing to each other. These make a total of 20 received since we came on the work. We have in hands the letters of three more and have written for another, making four more in sight. At the evening service we gave an invitation for penitents to come forward for prayer; one young man responded, and professed saving faith in Christ. We are conducting our Sunday night services on the evangelistic order, and find it profitable. The influenza is spreading very fast in our community. Those sick of our church are: Bro. J. W. Kiser and family, Bro. J. J. Gant, Bro. E. J. Linker, and Mr. W. D. Hudson's little daughter. Our school has closed for a week, or until conditions are normal again.

Thanks to Bro. and Sister W. C. Alexander for fresh meats and sausage. Mrs. Z. D. Cochran for milk. And Mr. C. S. Cochran for $2 in cash. May the Lord bless you, good people, is our prayer.

Glad to have Miss Ida Blackwelder of Charlotte, N. C., worship with us Sunday. With best wishes to all, I am;

Yours in His name,

J. T. Sisk, Pastor.

Concord, N. C., R. 6.

Allison's Grove Mission.—The following persons have given to the mission work at Allison's Grove to help them build their church. We thank them very much for their kindness:

J. A. Barnhardt, $10; Rosco Auten, $1; Geo. T. Penny, $10; Mrs. L. R. Pierson, $1; Charlie Alexander, $5; Eumenes Alexander, $5; Stafford Alexander, $5; William Taylor, $5; Sam Cochran, $2; Fred Quay, $1; Joe Sossamon, $2.

Now, my Methodist Protestant friends, I have on this list eleven names, only three Methodist Protestant names, eight names of other denomination. If other people will give to help Methodist Protestants, should we not be willing to help our own cause? Cannot I add some more Methodist Protestant names to this list? Seems like I should get more than three names to help this good cause out of 22,000. Any amount you can give will be appreciated very much. The sooner we get it the better before our people get busy in their farms. We have people who will do the work free if we can get money to get lumber which is very high. Send funds to Rev. J. F. Alexander, Harrisburg, N. C.

Mt. Hermon, Creswell Circuit—Today was a very good day for us. The cold weather made the congregation small, but those present were attentive and interested. Bro. Hethcox preached a very interesting and helpful sermon, his text being, ''Search the scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me.'' John 5:39.

We have part of the lumber sawed for rebuilding our church; hope to have it complete by the time for the revival meeting.

One of our girls, Miss Arbell Ambrose, who has been away, is at home again: we are very glad to see her back, for she was missed very badly at church.

Sunday school and Christian Endeavor are geting along as well as could be expected for the kind of weather we are having now.

Callie Barnes, Reporter.

Halifax—Now if the groundhog holds his ''rep'' some of our campaign work on the country charges is going to be delayed. I am sure mine will, for there are some roads here that I cannot make in bad weather. But I take this method of saying to the Halifax folks, as most of them take the Herald: Read your church paper closely, pay up your Million Dollar Campaign money when due, (for the mail man comes and goes every day and you can send me a check for the amount); do not let your church paper lapse. You can renew for that, and above all, pray earnestly for an ingathering of souls.

Up to the present I have met nearly all the appointments, though have not always met all the folfs; but the finances are in good shape. Some have overpaid, which makes up for the delinquents, and the people who have come to church have been an inspiration to the preacher. We have a few sick people, but to the present we have been well blest. Roads have been good and I have been doing a lot of visiting.

I want to thank Mrs. Frank Avant and Miss Bessie Draper for raising $17.50 from Harmony for a Christmas present; Mrs. Bettie

Draper, three pounds sausage; Mrs. J. C. Edwards, two pounds Quaker oats, two packages Postum, two cans California peaches; this latter was a part of the Hollister pounding for which Mrs. W. A. Wagner and Mrs. W. A. Delbridge are responsible. Thank you, good ladies.

Mrs. J. R. Locke, nine pounds ribs and back bones, three pounds sausage, peanuts for the children; R. B. Hunter, five loads weed; W. R. Neville, dozen very fine apples; Ben Willey, Sr., nice shirt, silk collar, lisle hose, etc.; Mrs. F. M. Taylor, bag of winesap apples (of course they were good). We sincerely thank you all. N. G. Bethea.

Littleton Circuit.—As there has been no report from the Littleton church this year I thought that I would write a few lines to let you all know that we are still in existence.

We are having a very good Sunday school here now and I am so glad, because I do like to be in Sunday school, it helps one so much to be in a good Sunday school. However, our school here is not so largely attended, but we feel that it justifies us to keep the school going. We had a very good attendance January 25 and we believe when spring opens that our school will grow. We are proud of our superintendent, Mr. W. N. Thornton, and we are all trying to help him enlarge the school by increasing the attendance. Miss Rebie Glasgow has done much to build up the school by using her car to convey people to and from church. She is a mighty sweet girl anyway and works hard for the Lord. Mr. George O. Rightmyer and Mrs. Z. B. Mitchel, teachers of the adult and primary classes, are working hard to make the Sunday school work interesting. Miss Rebie Glasgow's class is growing in interest and in number. Miss Mildred Thornton is our good and faithful organist. If we can only get all the membership to attend regularly we will soon have a fine Sunday school here. Mrs. Dickens is also doing a very acceptable work teaching the small boys. Miss Hattie Cullum is our faithful and loyal secretary. Father is very much encouraged over his work at this time: the outlook for a good year is very evident.

Pray for us that our work here may continue to grow in number and interest. As this is my first report to the Herald I will not try to write much this time.

Hadie De-Golden Loy.

January 29, 1920.

Davidson Circuit, Chapel Hill.—Bro. Hulin preached for us the third Sunday a good sermon; he always does. We are pleased to have him back for another year. Congregation small, but attentive. We started up our Sunday school, but weather is too cool for people to go, many of them, and yesterday it was rainy. They ordered new literature, but we have not had Sunday school since we got it. Hope it will be a nice day next Sunday so we can get together. I love to go to Sunday school and do not see why others do not. I would be glad to see all of the parents around bring their children and come. I think it would do them good. Parents, come, let us all work together for good. We have slept and slumbered long enough; let us wake up; Mrs. Mabry Russell's eyes are troubling her again. Sometimes she can not see how to do anything hardly; hope they will soon get better. We missed her at preaching the last third Sunday. We know there is something the matter if her seat is vacant.

Mrs. Dule Russell has been sick for the last two weeks, but is better now.

I noted an article the 15th of January about Canaan church. I enjoyed reading it. I would be glad if there is anybody that knows the beginning of Chapel Hill church that they would write a sketch about it.

We would welcome everybody to come to Sunday school. Miss Hazel Loflin is our organist. She is a good leader. We have no trouble since the camp meeting to get her to play. We are glad to see her take so much interest. With best wishes to all, we close.

Lizzie Cranford.

Hebron.—Our church services and Sunday school have been moving along very nicely up to Sunday, January 25. Church and Sunday school were suspended an account of another outbreak of "flu." Some of our members are ill at this writing, but I hope they will soon recover, and that Sunday school and church may continue. However, we have been very fortunate this winter with our church work, and hope soon to see those who are now sick well, and resume our work again.

The people have attended well and have taken a great deal of interest in Sunday school this winter. Our good superintendent, Mr. Boone, has certainly filled his place well, and I am sure his effort has been appreciated by all. The young men's prayer meeting has proved to be most beneficial to the church. The ladies are now invited to attend every Wednesday night. Best wishes to all for a prosperous year's work in the church..

EXPERIENCES IN JAPAN.

There are a few outstanding things which are connected with our brief sojourn in Japan.

Our visits to the Girls' School of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society located in Yokohama, where, after addresses, Brother Broomfield dealt with a few of the girls who had been greatly moved, and his subsequent visit when several met him with earnest inquiries as to the way of life.

The greetings by a number of the missionaries of the city and surroundings one afternoon was especially appreciated as opportunity was given to renew acquaintances with friends I had known there when laboring as a missionary.

The two opportunities to address the students of our Board's night school were eagerly seized. I spoke the first evening when, on call for those to arise who desired to become Christians, all but one arose, and the next evening Brother Broomfield spoke and definite stand by signing inquirers' cards was taken by twenty-four; some thirty others had already signed following special meetings and had risen the evening before.

The young and energetic pastor, Brother Odake, will impart necessary instruction to all in preparation for baptism. Unfortunately we could not visit Hamamatsu before Saturday and then only a few hours could be spared with Miss Coates in her comfortable home and fine surroundings, in which the new kindergarten is to be built. She is very happy in her work and is rendering excellent service in that growing city.

The headquarters of our Board's work is in Nagoya, one of the great cities of Japan, which is enlarging and developing her industries.

Interest centers in our nagoya College with its enrollment of considerably more than 600 young men. Special time was assigned for our addresses. We had gone to the special exercises at Miss Williams' kindergarten and after a brief message I hastened to the college while Brothers Broomfield and Obee remained for the former's address.

Principal Kimura—he spent ten years in America and is a highly respected leader—explained the motto over the platform which is permanently in place. It is in large Chinese characters, "Worship God, Love Man."

A small motto in use for a year is hung at the back of the platform and means, "Cooperation in love and fellowship." Principal Kimura had us write on long paper a motto. Brother Broomfield wrote, "Live on the plane of your greatest strength." I wrote, "Fear God, Do Right. Live Nobly." We wrote with the Japanese pen—a large round brush.

We spoke to over 500 bright young men in the chapel and had full freedom as if we were addressing students in the United States. One young man was reported to Brother Broomfield as having decided to devote himself to the ministry instead of the profession he had formerly determined to follow.

Our Thanksgiving dinner was enjoyed with all our missionary force in Nagoya at Miss Cronise's home. She occupies the Lafayette cottage, having been teaching in the college for several years.

Needless to say, old memories were awakened, as I had superintended the construction of the cottage, and was the first to occupy it on the former site, and of course thoughts and remarks were about those in the homeland.

We were the recipients of the utmost consideration kindness on the part of all Methodist Protestant missionaries in Japan, and shall ever cherish remembrances of their courtesies and attentions and fully appreciating the conditions in which they are placed, the great task they strive to perform, and their purpose and endeavors to develop all the work entrusted to their hands. We hope to inform and enlist the whole church to greater efforts to fulfill our mission in the world.

TEACH ME TO PRAY.

Teach me to pray;
Not only when the morning breaks
Into a glad new day,
Or when the night with sable pall
Shuts out the light;

Not only when attuned to praise
By some sweet mercy
Which has crowned my days,
My joyful heart mounts up
To thank the Giver for the gift,
And rests, apart from earth,
'Mid heaven's uplift.

Not only when around my soul
The tempests rage and billows roll,
My heart cries out, O Master, save,
The winds rebuke
And still the wave,
But in the quiet hours of life,
When neither joys supreme
Nor sorrows great are rife,
At such a time
Teach me to pray—
"For all the little needs
That fill each day."

—Retta Bryson Titus.

KNOWING THE SCRIPTURES.

Secretary Daniels says: "I never knew a wise man who was not familiar with the Scriptures." How can a man be wise who is not acquainted with the divine wisdom? One may know a good many things, but if he is only acquainted with secular facts he is only worldly-wise, and this is foolishness with God. A man who does not know anything about the Bible is sure to have a very small mind, and to be but a very small and sorry figure.—Herald and Presbyter.

BURDEN BEARING.

When burdens are given us to bear, it is well that we search diligently to find the best way of bearing them. A log of wood carried at arm's length will soon prove too much for us—we must sink under its weight; we cannot go with it. But grasped firmly, and carried upon the shoulder, we walk easily, and may bear it a long way without even staggering. There are those who carry their burdens in such a way that all the harsh surfaces, rough edges, and sharp corners seem to protrude themselves quite beyond the province of the bearer, and to be always hurting his neighbors. Beware lest the burdens which we might have kept to ourselves mar the happiness of another's life! Our neighbor has his own load—let us not add to it the weight of our own. Of hard things in this life there are many, and each one of us must have his share of them. We should walk under them bravely, manfully, but never alone. One arm is ever stretched out to help, which we need not fear to weary—one ear is ever listening to hear our tale of woe. Where the telling of it will do no harm, no good, one blessed voice is ever saying to us, if we will but hear it, "Fear not, for I am with the."—Selected.

"It is a good thing to give thanks to the Lord." Then why do we not do more of it? Probably we would have to think awhile before we could answer that question. And why is it such a good thing? It might take a philosopher to really answer that question, but any ordinary individual can at least glimpse an answer.

It is a good thing because it is a seemly thing and no man can afford to go through life neglecting to do that which an enlightened intelligence and a good heart would unhesitatingly tell him he ought to do. It is a good thing because the one and only way that a man may hope to really enjoy the gifts and blessings and opportunities of his life is to have a spirit that is appreciative of and thankful for them.

Men are miserable and grasping and dissatisfied, not because they have not enough to make life comfortable and happy, but because in their eagerness to grasp for more they fail to rightly appreciate and enjoy what they have. A proper spirit of appreciation would turn thousands of miserable lives into happy ones.—Christian Guardian.

Ye who weep, come to this God,
  For acquainted is He with grief;
Ye who suffer, come to Him,
  For rest can He give and relief;
Ye who tremble, come to Him,
  For His smile from fear secures;
Ye who pass, O come to Him!
  For eternally He endures.

—Victor Hugo.

GOD CARES FOR EACH LIFE.

Happy is the man who feels that God cares for him, that he journeys forward under divine convoy, that his Father is regent of universal wisdom, and represents the whole commonwealth of love, who is all nature and who commands all nature to serve his child. Such a man is weaponed against every enemy, and is invincible. He dwells in the very realm of restfulness. He abides far above all fear, as eagles above the arrow's flight. He who ever carries with him this sense of God's loving providence is fitted to pass through fire, through flood, through all the thunder of life's battle. He has in himself the pledge of victory in the midst of things unvictorious, conquers midst things low, things hard, things strifeful. God cares for you—then you cannot be too rich, for riches makes you the almoner of divine beauty; and you cannot be too poor, for the whole realm of life is thine. God cares for you—then you cannot live too long, and you cannot die too soon, for heaven ever lies all about you. God cares for man—then from every storm there is a harbor in the eternal heart and a pledge of refuge within the everlasting arms. God cares for you—therefore his providence, smiting the rock in the desert, shall bring forth living water. God cares for you—therefore in thy world and stormy night he shall come to thee, walking upon the wave, to bid thy storm be still. God cares for thee—therefore thou shalt see his angels sitting at the door of the sepulcher digged in thy life garden. Because he cares for you, the whole kingdom of love yearns and waits for your home-coming. Therefore, every day reach up and shake down the bough of infinite bounty and fruitfulness. Let every thought and feeling sing as an Aeolian harp gives music to every wandering wind. Put away care and anxiety, and cast out all fevered fears. Joy and song betoken royal kinship. He who bears commission from royalty wears not sackcloth unless he has fallen among robbers. The insignia of royal commission are royal apparel, kingly equipment, abundant treasure. Because thou art the child of providence, thou shouldst be the child of hope and trust. God careth for you—therefore live a trustful, tranquil, God-centered life.—Selected.

WORKING FOR SOMETHING BETTER.

"I'm out for the dollar," laughed a young man who had been discussing his life work with an older friend. And when the older man shook his head reprovingly the youth added with an air of defending himself, "I'm no worse than the rest. That is what everybody is doing."

If that boy had stopped to think he would have hardly uttered that challenge to the honor of humanity. For out of his own circle of friends young men had put on the uniform of soldiers and gone their way to endure suffering and to face death in the service of their country. They were not out for the dollar, these boys in khaki. While wages soar to unprecedented heights, they risked their lives for a dollar a day and few of them grumbled.

The fathers and mothers of our land are thinking less of the dollar than other things. Mothers have been defined by some observing child as the people who work for everybody and don't get any pay. The father who wears his overcoat till it is threadbare and denies himself the luxuries his associates enjoy that he may keep his boy in high school and perhaps send him to college is not thinking of the dollar. If he were John would leave school at fourteen and go to work, instead of enjoying eight years more of school life.

There are a good many people in the world who are working for something more than the dollar, who put the chance to serve far above pecuniary returns of their work. And if it were not so life would no longer be worth living. A world so mercenary as this thoughtless boy thought it, would be a place to flee from like a building infested with the plague One who is out for the dollar alone, who has no joy in his work, no pride in his skill, no sense of service, belittles the God who made him and his own soul.—Selected.

HOW ARE YOU GOING TO STOP?

A crowd of boys went out on the lake for a sail in an iceboat. Their destination was a little island some twelve miles distant, and the dozen miles were covered in about as many minutes. Everything went well until, as they neared the shore, it occurred to the boy who was steering that he knew no way of stopping the boat except by letting it run aground. The little craft was moving as rapidly as the swiftest express train, and as it struck land, the entire crew were thrown headlong. All were seriously bruised, and one boy was unconscious for some time.

There are boys who are not on an iceboat who need to ask themselves whether it will be possible for them to stop in the course they are pursuing without running aground. —Selected.

OF GREATER WORTH.

An artist takes a piece of stone worth one hundred dollars and out of it carves a statue worth a thousand dollars—that is art. Jesus Christ takes a human life that is morally though not intrinsically worthless, and out of it makes a priceless character, of surpassing beauty in its godliness—that is salvation. Salvation, like art, enhances values, but the carving of character is of immeasurably greater worth and significance than the cutting of a cameo or the polishing of an earthly jewel —Zion's Herald.

RECEIVING.

''I like to give Christmas gifts,'' said the old, whitehaired minister.

Every line of his face bespoke unselfishness. He had no need to protest that he liked to give; his whole life showed that.

But he liked to get, too. He was old enough and honest enough, that he dared lay aside all pretense of being bored by Christmas, and confess his unspoiled, childlike joy in getting things.

''I reasoned it out long ago,'' he went on to the young listeners. ''I always liked to get things, but I used to be a bit ashamed of it. I was afraid it might seem greedy.

''I remember well my first gift. It was a tin horn that mother brought me from town one day. I can feel yet that thrill of delight with which I undid the wrappings. I wonder if we would love our mothers quite so much if they never gave us anything. It's an unthinkable thing, though, isn't it? Why, the very name 'mother' means giving to us. It's a part of the preciousness of mother.

''And don't you see that God means giving, too? The old prophets understood that. Isaiah tells us, in that forty-sixth chapter that the gods of the heathen have to be carried, that they are just heavy burdens borne on the shoulders, but our God carries us, even to hoary hairs. There's the wonderful difference. The heathen gods get service and adoration and sacrific, but our God gives and serves us. He delights in pouring out the rich gifts of heaven and earth upon His children. Surely they ought to receive with joy as well as gratitude. Don't be afraid that the powers will exact from us a measure of joy. That was a heathen notion, too. Let us take freely as our Father gives, with no more dread of a lurking shadow just beyond than the little child feels when it takes a gift from mother.

''And I think the nearer we come to being the Father's little ones, the sort of whom the kingdom of heaven is, the more joyously we will take and use all good gifts. We will give too, because we love, and cannot help giving and because we want to show a likeness of our Father to the world. But always will feel the mystery and joy of the child in receiving the unexpected good things that come to us.''—Elsie Vernon, in Christian Standard

CHEATS HIMSELF.

If we look at a snowflake through a microscope, we discover that instead of being a shapeless speck, it has a regular geometric form, and is fashioned as perfectly and as beautifully as if it were to last as long as the hills. If we study a flower in the same way, we find that the parts so tiny that the unaided eye cannot distinguish them, are shaped as perfectly and colored as richly as if they were the most striking features of the flower.

''Oh, well, it won't be noticed!'' we heard someone say regarding a clumsy piece of work. How many of us have taken comfort to ourselves because our mistakes would not show! Sometimes we have gone even farther, and come to the conclusion that it was a waste of time to take pains with anything unless the effort expended would be plain to the most casual observer.

This is not the principle upon which the Master-Builder has made the world. The snow-flake is fashioned as carefully as the star. The great oak is no more perfect than the tiniest flower that grows. And those whose achievements have brought them honor have not been the ones who thought that trifles were beneath their notice. The one who slights whenever he can do so without attracting notice, cheats himself, for conscientious and careful work is its own reward.—Selected.

SOMETHING STILL LEFT.

It is an old saying that a penny held close to the eye will shut out the sunshine, and certainly it often happens that little losses blind us to great blessings. A merchant who failed in business a few years ago went home in great agitation, a look of despair on his white face.

''What is the matter?'' asked his wife.

''I am ruined; I have lost my all!'' he exclaimed, pressing his hand upon his forehead.

''All!'' said his wife; ''No, I am left.''

''All! papa?'' said the eldest boy. ''Here am I!''

''And I, too,'' said his little girl, running up and putting her arms round his neck.

''I'm not lost,'' repeated Eddie.

''And you have your health left,' said his wife.

''And your hands to work with,'' said his eldest, ''and I can help you.''

''And your two feet to carry you about, and your two eyes to see with'' said little Eddie.

''And you have God's promises,'' said the grandmother.

''And a good God,'' said his wife.

''God forgive me!'' said the merchant, ''I have not lost my all. What have I lost to what I have left!''

He took coamfort and began the world afresh.

KEEPING FRIENDS.

Have we stopped to think how poor we would be without friends? Life itself is only a little sweeter than friendhsip. About the deepest degree of misery imaginable is to have people all around us, and yet have no one we can call ''my friend,'' no one to love us, to think about us and to show some interest in us and our affairs. And do we know that friendship must be fostered and fed? It will no more grow without cultivation than will a garden of vegetables. Imagine that you once had a friend. You and he were bosom companions. He moves to a distance. He writes to you, but you do not answer. He inquires about you, but you do not inquire about him. He comes back to the old home and meets you on the street. He greets you cordially, you greet him indifferently. He asks how you are getting on, but you make no inquiry as to his welfare. How long will the old friendship last? You see that friendship must be cultivated. It must be kept warm and glowing. It costs something. We must put ourselves out to enrich it. It means sacrifice, but not sacrifice without reward. And is not the same thing true in every particular of the friendship of Jesus? Will it live and flourish if we do not love Him and tell Him so, if we do not often think about Him and speak with Him, if we do not read the Word He has left us? Friendship has two sides. It is with our side that the danger lies. Jesus is our friend, are we His?—Selected.

TO BE KEPT.

''Keep going.'' There are no more cowardly words than ''give up.''

''Keep your head.'' Train your thoughts as soldiers are trained, not to fly into a panic and scatter helplessly in the hour of peril and difficulty, but to be firm, collected, alert, ready to fight a way through.

''Keep clean.'' Let no seeming obstancle persuade you that your path must diverge, even for a few days, into the mire. There is a clean way to everything worth having.

''Keep faith.'' Above and beyond all else, keep faith; faith in the fatherhood of God, in the loving, tender presence of Christ, in the overruling of the Almighty, and the final triumph of right.—Selected.

The love of God is the source of all virtues; and in order that they may subsist eternally, He gives them Humility as a foundation.—Bossuet.

OTHER NAMES FOR THE CHRISTIAN LIFE.

The term ''Christian life'' embraces all the elements that belong to the life of a disciple and follower of Jesus Christ. But some who have taken the name ''Christian'' have failed to exhibit all the elements that belong to a complete Christian life, and this had led to the feeling that the name was being degraded and the idea corrupted or at least robbed of some of its best elements. Hence other names have been chosen from time to time in the effort to save the true conception of Christian living. Divisions into new sects in the church have resulted in a number of instances. The new names chosen usually give prominence to some one element in the Christian life at the expense of other elements. In process of time, some who take upon themselves these new names are found lacking in what the names imply, and again the same trouble comes as in the beginning.

A church in California called itself ''The Church of God.'' There was a split in it: one part thought the other part not true to the name, and drew out and formed a new church which it called ''The True Church of God.'' In process of time, this new church developed two factions, one of which repudiated the other, and seceded from it, forming another new church which it called ''The Only True Church of God.''

''The Holiness Church'' sprang up in a protest against the unholy living of many professing Christians. It was thought by incorporating the word ''Holiness'' in the name to insure the purity of its membership. But there is no way to keep unholy people from professing to be holy any more than there is to keep unchristian people from professing to be Christian, and the ''Holiness Church'' has had the same trouble that other parts of the Christiaan church have had. Many members have belied the name and brought reproach upon the whole body.

''The Victorious Life'' is a term now receiving prominence. From what we can gather as to its meaning, it is simply the Christian life with the emphasis put upon the overcoming of temptation by the power which every Christian may receive from Christ. We believe good service is done the cause of Christ by these efforts to bring into due prominence neglected factors in the Christian life. We believe the holiness movement has done good in calling attention to the need and possibility of holiness; the salvation army has done good by calling attention to the value of social service; and the ''victorious life'' movement is doing good by advertising the power of Christ to give victory over sin and sinful tendency. But the true, full, complete Christian life includes all. The Christian life is

(1) A life of victory over evil.
(2) A life of holiness.
(3) A life of usefulness or service.

To narrow the Christian life is of course wrong, but there is danger of doing that when undue prominence is given to one element of it.

The real Christian life is the life of Christ in the believer, and Christ's life is full and complete. It can [illegible], it makes men like Christ, and hence like God. The highest ideal to set before men is the life Christ actually lived in the world. His was a life of holiness, a life of triumph over evil, and a life of self-sacrificing service. We can't go astray if we follow in His steps. The name we bear and proclaim is not so important as the character we have and express. That is the thing that most impresses the world.

—Miss Forrest paid this high compliment to the members of Grace Sunday school orchestra: ''People that can play so well here will play up yonder.'' But she doubtless did not mean to proclaim the doctrine of salvation by skill.

—A brother writes us an interesting letter on tithing, but he enjoints its publication. He wants to hear more on the subject from those who have thoroughly studied it. So do we. Let us have a fair and honest discussion of the matter with a view to establishing ourselves in the truth and following truth wherever it may lead us. We cannot afford to be blind to duty. Let us seek to know our duty and be brave enough to do it, whatever becomes of our money in the process.

—We do not know where S. R. H. got that story about Augustine, but we do not hesitate to doubt the truth of it. Augustine was much too logical a thinker to reason in any such way. Besides, we do not believe that the question as to what are the canonical books of the Bible was ever submitted to him for authoritative decision. We must avoid receiving or creating the impression that the leading Christians of early days were fools or simpletons. They were not. They were men of sharp wits and knew what they were about.

—The reader who writes on tithing reveals a most commendable spirit. Such a soul could give ten-tenths to the Lord's work easily, if occasion called for it, and rest in confidence that the Lord would provide.

WHY ANOTHER MILLION.

By Dr. G. H. Miller.

It was to be expected that because of our original Million Dollar Campaign many would ask "Why another Million?" Those who expected that this question would be asked have not been disappointed. It is most fortunate that a reasonable answer can be given to this very justifiable question. It must be remembered that our Million Dollar Campaign was a one-year program. The faith of the Methodist Protestant people was not great enough to launch a program covering a period of years. Indeed there were few among our number who weee hopeful that a million dollars could be raised in a period of years by the Methodist Protestant Church. The slogan sent down by our General Conference of 1916 of a Million Dollars for our Boards and Institutions was a mighty challenge of faith. There were many who said that it could not be done. Events, however, have proven that it could be done, and counting in our general church benevolences the Methodist Protestant Church, since the last session of our General Conference, has raised in cash and subscriptions at least one million dollars for the general work of our denomination. In our first campaign we have realized our strength and the comparative success of the first becomes a great incentive for a new campaign...

Another million is not really being asked of our Methodist Protestant constituency. There are three separate items in the new asking of a million dollars. First there is the $120,000 apportioned to our conferences and our charges by the denominational Executive Committee for the general benevolences of the church. Every one, of course, desires and intends to raise that, for this is the very life-blood of the denomination. This is an obligation that should be faced with as much seriousness as the necessary expenses of the home are faced. It is no more important to pay rent or the grocery bill or any other item of over-head expense in the home than it is to meet the assessment for general benevolences. The whole program of the church depends upon realizing to the full this general budget. Charit ybegins at home, but charity that never goes out of the door of the home becomes bitterness of spirit in the home.

The second item of this new million is the balance still unsubscribed in the original Million Dollar Campaign. We are asking for another million because we did not get all of the first. Please do not say that here is a contradiction. It is true that the Methodist Protes'-Church did raise a million dollars, but it did not raise a million dollars in its special Million Dollar Campaign. Some one says that is because it was not possible to do so, the people did not have the money. If that were true it would be nothing short of criminal to ask for another million. Every one knows, however, that this is not true. If the average income of the membership of the Methodist Protestant Church is $300 per year and that amount was tithed we would have six million dollars every year for the Lord's work. Every pastor's salary would be doubled, every parsonage that is desired would be built, every new church that is needed would be erected and all necessary repairs would be made on the other churches and at least three million dollars would be placed in the hands of the Boards and Institutions of the church to do the work that the Lord expects our denomination to do. The fact that the full $1,020,000 is not secured becomes then a great reason for asking for another million.

The third item in the new asking is $660,000 additional. This is to be divided among all the mission boards and educational institutions; our homes for children and the aged, the beginning of a denominational Ministers' Aid Society, and so forth.

The fundamental reason for asking another million, however is the actual opportunity and responsibility that rests upon our denomination as a body of Christian people. Money is asked because money is needed, not because it would be a nice thing to have a little more money in the treasury of the various Boards and institutions but simply because these Boards and Institutions cannot do the work that must be done unless the money is provided. If the work needs to be done and our people have the money to make possible the doing of that work it would be a great wrong, both to those who have the means and to the work of the Kingdom itself if our people were not asked to provide another million. The fifty-eight millions of people in America not allied with any religious organization whatsoever, the 26 millions of young people of twenty-five years of age and under, not receiving any religious instruction whatsoever, the problem of Americanizing and Christianizing the alien among us the neglected rural districts in every state of the Union., the opportunities to establish churches where churches are needed, constitute a great responsibility and opportunity for our Board of Young People's Work and for our Board of Home Missions. The neglected mountain people of Kentucky, the almost forgotten field of Christian service among the colored people of the South, many of whom are a part of our own denomination, constitute an opportunity and responsibility for our Woman's Home Missionary Society; the long established mission fields in Japan, the new responsibilities in China and the opportunities in India tax beyond mersure the treasury of our Board of Foreign Missions, while our Woman's Foreign Missionary Society dare not close its heart to the cry of the neglected women and children in Japan and China. For years our colleges have been doing a splendid bit of work because of the sacrifices of men and women who constitute their faculties. No longer can the Methodist Protestant Church be content to allow a little group of men and women to make this sacrifice in behalf of the whole church. Our colleges and our theological seminary must be endowed, and another million is one step toward furnishing that endowment. The heart of the Christian church cannot remain closed to the cry of fatherless and motherless children, nor can we be indifferent to the need of the aged. An underpaid ministry for a half century has faced the years of retirement without the promise of a livelihood. Another million is asked in order that these faithful servants should have some consideration at the hands of the church. May it not be forgotten that the real answer to the question, "Why another Million?" is the need that exists.

The immediate reason though for another million is the Interchurch World Movement. The Methodist Protestant Church had to decide and to decide now whether it would have a part in this significant movement or not. It could only have a part by facing its own responsibilities and opportunities and going along with this movement with the purpose of accepting its opportunities and responsibilities. Under the inspiration and the momentum of this great movement, courage was given to send down the challenge to our people for another million. Because the needs of the work entrusted to our care and because our people have the money and need the inspiration and the momentum of this great movement, the membership of the Methodist Protestant Church will no doubt follow out the program and do the work that the Lord expects them to do.

CHRIST IS RISEN INDEED.

Easter in America has become in so many places a fashion-opening, the time for new bonnets, and straw hats, that some of us have perhaps forgotten the days, so long ago, when these customs first found light.

Even the bright colored eggs left by agile bunny rabbits in grassy nests in the garden or queer corners about the house have in the far away land of the Mediterranean sea a meaning very much more serious and sacred than the mere pleasure of children.

In Armenia, were for the last five years there has been no Easter morning, this year will prove of new significance, a light after darkness indeed. In the days before the war, according to one of the young refugees who found her way to America through the Near East Relief, Easter and its preceding days of fasting and repentance was a series of ceremonials of great interest and beautiful memory.

And it is strange, and yet not so, since Armenia is the oldest Christian nation, to realize how close our own customs follow those of the Near East; to know, that as our children are "cracking eggs" on Easter morning that over there little children are playing the same quaint game.

Before the days of fasting, which corresponds to lent, the little maid related, there are two weeks of carnival; during the first everyone abstains from all meat, and during the second week only dairy products are allowed. This is known all over Armenia as "cheese week," when milk, butter, cheese, and eggs may be eaten, for after this period of feasting, all animal products are prohibited. The truly pious Armenian will not touch meat, fish, or even milk and eggs or any animal fats during the forty days of fasting and prayer.

Perhaps we have found the origin of the Easter egg in the fact that eggs are the last bit of "food of the flesh" eaten before lent begins; and the brightly colored Easter eggs are the first food of this kind tasted after the lenten season.

In the Greek and Armenian churches during Passion Week, which begins with Palm Sunday and ends with Easter, the greatest events in Christ's life are reiterated with appropriate ceremonies. Christ's entrance into the city amid the enthusiastic demonstrations of the people, the pageant of the ten virgins, where, with proper ceremonies, ten maidens enter the church and march toward an inner door. Five enter and the door is closed, while those without wail, and sing a chant of mourning. The Thursday before Easter Sunday, in both the Greek and the Armenian churches the ceremony of feet-washing is performed in memory of the Master who at the last supper washed the feet of his disciples.

The bishop of the church, after the communion, washes the feet of twelve priests, while twelve passages are read from the scriptures on the sufferings of Jesus.

On this day also the eggs which have been stained with henna and other vegetable dyes in beautiful shades especially the brilliant purples and deep red, are taken to the church where they remain throughout Passion week, to be taken home on Easter morning, for the breaking of lent.

Good Friday, the day of Christ's crucifixion, is commemorated by a very beautiful procession, when the tomb of the Lord, represented by a shrine, is carried through the church and into the surrounding grounds, that all the crowd may see and touch the hangings.

At midnight between Friday and Saturday there is the "crying night" celebrated with hymns and scripture reading regarding the suffering and burial of Jesus.

The real Easter service takes place early Sunday morning when the spiritual leader stands in front of the altar with a lighted candle. As he looks into the shrine, which represents the tomb of Christ, he calls out: "He is not here." This is the dramatic climax, when the whole nature of the congregation changes to rejoicing, the singing takes on a new glad note, and as the cry is heard, "He is risen," the people in one voice acclaim, "Blessed be the resurrection!"

For three days following Easter morn, this is the greeting of friend to friend: "Christos hareov!" Christ is risen. And the salutation in return: "Orhneal eh harootune Grisdosee:" He is risen indeed.

From the candle on the altar, all light their little tapers, signifying that Christ is the light of the world shedding hope on a world of darkness.

To Jerusalem, at the holy sepulcher, where the fire is always kept burning, pilgrims journey from as far off as Russia during the Easter week, and there, on Easter morning, light their tapers from the candle of the prelate as returns from the altar. If it is possible to reach home with the flame still burning, the light is regarded as sacred and guarded carefully.

Now follows rejoicing and merry-making and friendly greeting. One is very impolite in Armenia if he does not pay respectful calls on all his friends, sometimes with little gifts, sometimes with a word of greeting, and is always served with sweetmeats, cakes, or similar delicacies.

On Good Friday the church is draped in mourning, the people wear black and business houses close.. On Easter, the house of worship is decked in its finest hangings, flowers strew the aisles, and the congregation is garbed in gala attire. Perhaps from this originates our intense desire for new millinery and dresses for Easter day.

Another quaint custom follows the Sunday after, for while there can be no marriages during lent, the week after Easter proves a time of nuptials.

So the Armenians in their deep sincerity and great Christian faith celebrate this greatest day in the history of all the world. So today, they are again able to turn once more to their friends with the glad greeting,—"Christ is risen," and receive the reply,—"Blessed be the resurrection!"

The Near East Relief has brought hope to the country once more. Through the help of America this gentle nation is again looking forward to the light of a new day. So long as that help lasts, that the strong arm of a friendly brother is held out in support, that the hearts of these people of the west beat in sympathy for these unfortunate ones of the Near East, so they may say, "Christ is risen indeed."—Near East Relief.

THE MONTENEGRINS OF ARMENIA.

"O smallest among people! rough rock-throne
Of freedom! Warriors beating back the swarm
Of Turkish Islam for five hundred years."

Thus wrote Tennyson about the people of Montenegro, in his well-known sonnet, twoscore years ago. It might have been written for another race under the domain of the Unspeakable Turk.

We have all admired and applauded—very justly too—the brave, free, and elemental people of the Black Mountains; but how many are familiar with the exploits of the Armenians of Zeitoon who, for more than half a thousand years, stood firm, like the rocks of their native mountains, against the incessant attacks of the Mohammedan hordes? Montenegro, after all, was situated far away, on the outskirts of the lands over which the sultans ruled. But here in the province of Aleppo, in the very heart of the Turkish Empire, was a town of 4000 inhabitants—the only town under the sway of the Turk—which, amidst the ravages and desolation of centuries, repelled again and again the encroachment of the Moslem rule and retained its unshaken independence until these latter years.

Up on the craggy brow of a mountain in the Taurus ranges these people lived simply, gloried in their arms and kept their faith and freedom. Medium-sized in stature, ruddy in countenance fearless in heart, "arm'd by day and night against the Turk," these brave people not only kept their faith and freedom, but also stood guardian over the Armenians of the city of Marash and the outlying districts. Although the Mohammedan inhabitants of these places greatly outnumbered the Christians, yet they never dared to harass these subjects of theirs to the full extent of their devilish customs; and this because they feared the vengeance of the people of Zeitoon.

It was in the days of Sultan Abd-ul-Mejid, the father of the "great assassin" Abd-ul-Hamid—renamed by Mr. Gladstone, "Abd-ul-the-damned"—that the "White Czar" drove from Russia a number of the Circassian tribes who were nothing more nor less than packs of thieves and brigands, having very little interest in useful occupations. These lawless outcasts the sultan received with open arms into his domain and also into the fold of the religion of Mohammed, and ordered them to be distributed in those districts where his Armenian subjects were most thickly settled, to harass and repress these Christians whom he hated most cordially. Some 50,000 of these adopted Circassians he sent to Marash and said:

"Go against the giavoor town of Zeitoon—only a day's journey—and take possession of it. Go! Its men are food for your swords; their women and damsels are for your harems; and their houses are your habitations."

These fierce outlaws of the north were overjoyed at the prospect of plunder, slaughter, and debauchery; and besides, here were a thousand or more houses all ready to occupy, and hundreds of vineyards, orchards, and grain fields to take possession of. Could there be anything more satisfactory? More than 10,000 Turks in Marash armed themselves and joined their new allies to share in the forthcoming pillage, and flung out their taunts to the Christians among them that after coming back from the expedition to Zeitoon, they would put their men to the sword and take possession of their women.

Great was the unholy joy of these Moslems at the prospect of wreaking vengeance upon a people who had successfully defied the authority and power of the Ottoman Government for all these hundreds of years. But greater was the consternation of the Christians of Marash on those memorable days. The utter misery and helplessness of those people my pen can never describe. They were like sheep without a shepherd, doomed to slaughter and the fiendish lust of a savage race. They wept and prayed and fasted, not a few in sackcloth, and hoped against hope that God would send them deliverance in His inscrutable way. Yea, their hope rested in the God above, and in the might of the people of Zeitoon. Could these brave mountaineers thwart the fiendish purposes of the 60,000 warriors of the sultan. Ah, could they? That was the question uppermost in every Christian heart in Marash and the outlying districts.

This army of the Crescent soon started for Zeitoon headed by drummers, fifers, and dancers, their banners flying in the breeze. This was to them an excursion, not a military expedition. Who could dare to stand against this latest might of the sultan. It was unthinkable.

Hastily messengers were sent from Marash to Zeitoon, where immediately the priests, the elders and leaders came together to devise means to face the coming attack. Very little time was there for extensive preparations. While consultation was in progress, there stepped in 84 of the bravest men of the town, armed to the teeth, who proposed to go and meet the enemy's forces at a village 12 or 15 miles away, and give them fight then and there, and at least retard their progress if unable to defeat them. Fourscore and four picked men against 60,000 barbarians! Surely the dauntless spirit of the galaxy of the heroes of the past was living again in the hearts of this handful of men. They met the enemy and fought valiantly, and 72 of them fell, never to rise again. Witness the fortitude of these brave men! One of the twelve, besieged by his enemies his ammunition exhaustd, seeing the futility of further resistance, threw himself upon the ground, pretending to be dead. Two of the Moslems came to the prostrated body and slashed off now one of his ears—then the other. Not a muscle moved to indicate life. They were about to dismember him still further when others pulled them away, saying:

"Let the dead giavoor alone. Pretty damsels are awaiting us in his town yonder. Let us hasten."

This Armenian was one of the first of the twelve to carry to his townsmen the sad news of the conflict. He fought the next day, and lived 16 years after that—sans two ears.

Now an appalling gloom fell upon the town of Zeitoon, but there was no time for lamentations, the foe was now but a few miles away. They hastened, therefore, to be ready for the fearful clash of arms that was surely to come on the morrow.

The sun shone brightly on that eventful morning over a town that seemed deserted. No sound broke its stillness besides the little stream that gathered its strength from the hills above, and gurgled, and splashed, and plunged its way towards the deep valley below. Not a soul appeared anywhere. But the fighters of the town were all there, concealed behind walls and windows, behind trees and rocks, silent and watchful. Trere were also women among them—women who could shoot as straight with the flint-locked guns as any man. There were still other women who stood by their fathers, husbands, or brothers—to reload their pistols and guns during the battle. The aged and the children were sent to a garden some distance away, there to pray to heaven to spare their people from slaughter and worse. Some mothers with their children climbed a precipitous hill, there to watch the progress of the conflict, determined, should the enemy prevail, to hurl themselves with their children down into the chasm below rather than fall into the hands of the enemy.

At last the foe appeared on the crests of the high southern hills and advanced in two divisions—the smaller one to take possession of the monastery situated on the slope of a hill at the enemy's right, and the other towards the town. Soon, however, they discovered that the monastery, at least, was not abandoned. A handful of men within its walls—the priests, novices, and a few townsmen—had vowed that while life remained in them the unclean hands of the heathen should not defile their sacred edifice and the cloisters, and they stood their ground doggedly.

The main division of the army, headed by the seven Circassian chiefs—all brothers—stopped almost within a gunshot of the first house of the town. There, by the narrow road, under the overhanging side of a massive rock, the chiefs sat and, after a short consultation together, sent some one to the town to see if it were really deserted; and, if not, to command its people in the name of the sultan and the government to surrender. The messenger went into the town, but did not return. The chiefs waited, and were puzzled. Verily the town seemed dead. Impatient of delay, the chiefs sent another man to the town to observe and bring report. He, too, failed to return. Still the third did not appear again. The unbroken silence they faced awed and disturbed them far more than the roar of guns would have.

But the quiet was not to last much longer. A young man of Zeitoon had crawled slowly and warily nearer and nearer to the waiting enemy, and, lo! the seven chiefs were sitting now at the very foot of his shelter. How he longed to hear just then the signal to attack, which, according to the prearranged plan, was to come from the "castle," the residence of the chief leader of the town! Here was a great opportunity slipping by, and he could wait for the signal no longer. He aimed, pulled the trigger—a roar though the valley—and behold! one of the chiefs was sprawling on the ground. Another shot and another chief lay prostrate. The third and fourth shots, following in the wake of the second with wonderful rapidity, brought down two more chiefs. A hero, this youth, whom I met frequently some thirty years or so after these events—a simple, quiet, respected, almost adored, Christian gentleman.

By this time the townsmen, taking his gun reports as signal for attack, showered lead upon the enemy from behind their shelters. The charge was sudden, and fear took possession of the Moslems, and they turned and fled as though Ezrail was upon them. Soon, however, they rallied and returned to attack, but with little success. Their demoralization was complete, and the townsmen pursued them relentlessly. The day was well spent, and still the slaughter went on. They wished to press on the enemy even to the city of Marash and mete out to them according to their own measure; but before the darkness brooded over the battlefield the priests and other leaders were, at last able to persuade their townsmen to desist from shedding further blood and to turn their steps homeward.

Deep and heartfelt were the rejoicings that night in the town of Zeitoon. Thousands upon thousands of the enemy were lying then stark dead in the valleys and on the hills, among rocks and bushes; and hundreds had been drowned in crossing the river Gihon which had swollen greatly by the recent rains. God had, indeed, given their enemy over to them. But there were tears in their eyes, and their hearts were heavy: for, scores of their loved ones had fallen by the hand of the accursed enemy.

O the discomfiture and trepidation of the Turks of Marash! How they asked "thousand pardons" of their Christian neighbors whom, but a few days ago, they had threatened to subject to untold horrors. And how, on their knees, they implored to protect them from the vengeance of the fighters of Zeitoon, whom they expected momentarily to swoop upon the Moslem inhabitants of the city!

And, O the joy of the Christians of Marash! Who can describe it? How they poured forth their praises before Him whose ways are past finding out! Could they ever forget the memory of those brave men of Zeitoon whose noble heroism and sacrifice had withstood the tyranny and lust of the Moslems, and had saved tens of thousands of Christians from torture, butchery, and worse?—John T. Theodore, in Zion's Herald.

PRESIDENT'S LETTER.

GOALS FOR 1920—

A revival in every church.

A family altar in every home.

A Sunday school in every church.

Every school contributing to the Home.

A church paper in every Methodist Protestant family.

Every cent of every claim paid by November 10.

TWO IMPORTANT THINGS—

A pastor writing to me said, "I wish you would emphasize the importance of the stewards' preparing the elements for the sacrament. This is often neglected by the official members, and being neglected the pastor is not permitted to administer the sacrament as often as should be administered."

It is too bad that we cannot have all of our boards filled by officials who are thoroughly competent and who are unfailingly faithful. The work of the church demands just that sort of official, but we have to do the best we can in filling the official places with the material we have. That explains why all church officials are not A No. 1 officials. But as it appears to me there is but scant excuse for this failure on the part of those who have been requested to make this preparation; certainly no such failure should be so frequent as to indicate a lack of vital interest in this means of grace to all who partake of it. I sincerely hope that not only this pastor, but no other pastor will have occasion to complain of this neglect again.

As to the other matter, it is indeed a frequent occurrence; not only the small children, but often the grown-up children "snap church," as though it was no very bad thing to do. They are not dishonest, do not lie, would not steal, but just missing church services about half the time is no serious harm, that is the way they regard it. It happens too, that many of those who can not remain for the church services are found on the street corner, or in some "soft drink joint" listening to some tirade against religion by some foul-mouthed city vagabond. These are members of the church, people who have promised to attend the church services and to support it, they are violating their obligation and befouling their souls by the same act.

Parents are not often strict enough in requiring their children to attend the church services. Both the morning services are not longer than the morning period in the city schools and there is no physical reason why children should not remain; it certainly would not injure their health, stop their growth or cause them to suffer hunger to remain through both Sunday school and the praching services every Sunday. How about it, parents? Are you guilty? I have known parents to take their children from Sunday school on a visit somewhere and miss the entire preaching service; to permit them to return home after the preaching; in fact, I was told of an After Sunday School Club held in a certain North Carolina town; boys who went to Sunday school gathered at the homes of their parents, alternating each Sunday, and having a good time during the preaching hour; the parents must have been a party to this. And still some parents are wondering why their children do not grow up in the church.

HAS YOUR CHURCH CHOSEN THEM?

It is just two weeks now to the time for the School for Religious Workers in Graham. Has your church chosen the ones you want to attend this school yet? It is most vitally important that you do this. We must train up our young people to do better work than we can do in all departments. And parents as a rule are interested in doing this along certain lines, but are satisfied for their children to grow up and be "dummies" in the church, idlers in the harvest field. To be without both the desire and the knowledge for doing church work. This school was instituted to give out a great deal of helpful hints and instruction relating to church work in the school. We want to have a large representation there. The Sunday school, Christian Endeavor, missionary societies, boards of stewards, etc.,—these phases of church activities should be well represented in this school because we shall give much help to these particular phases of church work. Watch for the full course of study in the Herald next week.

ANDERSON CHARGE, Rev. C. C. Lindley, Pastor.

I visited this charge, held the second quarterly conference and preached at both the churches on Sunday. It was the regular preaching service at Fairview and the house was comfortably filled; there was a fine attendance of young people at Liberty Hill church at night. Both services were seemingly profitable from point of view of attendance and attention.

Both churches voted to send a representative to the School for Religious Workers at Graham, most of the necessary funds for railroad expenses were secured at Fairview before we dismissed. We expect the full amounts to be secured in ample time and hope to see at least two representatives at Graham April 6, 7 and 8.

Pastor Lindley has been hindered in the work, first by sickness and death in his home, losing his mother; then by the epidemic of influenza in the neighborhoods of the churches. It was difficult to do much work during the month of February.

The quarterly conference was fairly well attended, and considering the distance the members from one church have to travel to these conferences, I might say it was very well attended. There was nothing out of the ordinary before the conference. Finances were fairly well up, would have been better could the regular services have been held. The salary has been increased to $1200 for this year and the people seem to have a mind to pay it up in full with all conference claims. As yet they have done but little on the Million Dollar Drive; Pastor Lindley expects to take up this matter later and see what can really be accomplished.

There is really great possibility for this work. It could soon be so well developed that both churches might support a pastor for themselves and have preaching every Sunday. Were I the pastor and felt that I was fitting in well enough to remain four or five years, that would be my purpose. I feel confident it can be done. As the churches now stand they are so far apart, being thirty-odd miles; both in the country, off the railroad, making them hard to be well served. Pastor Lindley uses a car and is visiting the people and has already made a good impression; the people have a mind to co-operate with him and I am expecting good results there this year. These churches have been part of our conference now for something like twenty years, and have been served by some of our best men. There have been some mistakes made, no doubt, but they have confidence in our preachers, and are glad to be a part of the North Carolina conference; and I hope that the future history of this work will be replete with progress and greater achievement along every line of churchly activity.

A LITTLE ABOUT TITHING.

Dear Editor: If, after all the best things are printed, there is still room in our good paper to allow me a little space, I will gladly give my experience and belief about tithing, which will be in a feeble way, as the readers will see my education does not premit me to write big flowery letters.

I am ony an infant in Christ Jesus, but I am striving to do His will that I may grow in grace and knowledge of Him. When God for Christ's sake pardoned my sins and gave me the Holy Spirit bearing witness with my soul that I am His child, my poor blinded eyes surely were opened, for I have seen all things in an entirely different light ever since. I have been made to realize that the earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof, and the things that I had thought to be mine belong to Him, and through His goodwill he has permitted me to have these things in my possession to make use and dispose of, which I am trying to be very careful how I do.

I felt that I ought to give back to God's cause one-tenth, so I decided at the first of the year I would take 10 cents out of every dollar that came into my possession and set it aside, and call that part God's money to be used for missions, charity or what I feel that He would have me use it for (not to pay my pastor's salary, as I would feel that I was paying my debt out of the Lord's money). So I began tithing. I have never had as many dollars come into my hands in one quarter of a year in my life. I have taken the Lord's part out and the balance has proved a blessing to me. I have had my temptation during this experience. I have had many debts to pay and sometimes means ran short. The thought has come to me that I could use what I had taken out for the Lord's money and pay it back. I decided in my heart before I would do that I would sell something and secure means to meet my obligations if there was no other way out. I have not had to sell anything yet. One week before I was to meet a debt which was to be paid the first of the next week I could not see anything in sight to meet my payment, but to my surprise on Friday I received in the mail a good fat letter containing money to more than cover the bill. I rejoiced over money that time, feeling that the Lord had sent it to me through some of His agents. This had come from a friend whom I had done some work for some time ago, not wanting any pay or expecting to get any.

I long to see the day when our dear old church will realize more fully the greatness of God's promises to them that love Him and keep His commandments. I believe we ought to pray to God to increase our faith. We do not trust Him far enough. It seems to me that if we would read Matt. 6: 25, 34 and take this lesson with its promises to heart we would stop so much worrying about the future, and how we are to get enough laid up to take care of us in our old age. If we were reading and giving thought as we should to the reports that come out in the Herald from the mission fields, we would gladly tithe, make freewill offerings or do anything in our power to send gospel light to those dark lands. It seems to me that tithing is a thing of love, faith and works, and ought not to be a thing for the true-hearted Christian to stumble over. I do not know just whom tithing is required of. But I do believe if we (every child of God) accept it and carry it out through love for our Lord and His cause, He will bless us in our deed and never suffer us to see the day that we will regret or want for a penny that we have given back to Him. Dear brothers and sisters, if you have any desire to give our Lord one-tenth, do not let Satan make you believe you will need it, but give in faith and trust God who is abundantly able to supply all our needs.

Love for all.

—Studies of maternal and infant mortality in city and country carried on by the Federal Children's Bureau have indicated clearly the need for the public protection of motherhood and babyhood on a basis which would make proper care available to every mother throughout the entire United States.

THE INVISIBLE WORLD EMPIRE.

"I don't believe in anything that I can't see," stoutly asserted an argumentative man. "In that case you don't see anything in which to believe," replied his friend on the other side of the question. "What do you mean by that?" asked the first. The reply came qquickly, "Sight is just looking at a piece of a thing and believing in all of it because you have looked at a part."

When we stop to think of it the really mastering and defining things of life are most of them invisible. You cannot see thoughts; you cannot see purposes; you cannot see feelings. Yet these make up the fundamental and essential meaning of life. An invisible tie can hold men together more effectively than any bond which is visible to the eye of men.

Christianity cherishes at its heart a tremendous dream of world empire. It lives in the light of it. It labors in the light of it, and the inspiration of this dream sends it forth on far journeys and high adventures. It is an empire of faith. It is an empire of daring trust. Against hard and evil and disillusioning facts Christianity presses its brave and dauntless way in the name of the high hope which it holds in its heart. It lives as seeing the invisible.

The amazing and striking thing about the Christian religion is just this power to inspire belief in things which the eye cannot see. Christianity is perpetually saying, "There shall be no Alps." It is perpetually declaring, "This thing is impossible, therefore I will do it." And even in the larkest days it sees in vision the reality of that empire of clean and noble love which is the rule of Christ in the world.

Building the Empire.

"What are your marching orders?" the Duke of Wellington is said to have inquired when somebody asked him if he believed in foreign missions. We have the marching orders in one form as a part of our study today: "Ye shall receive power. . . . Ye shall be my witnesses . . . unto the uttermost part of the earth." And in the background of our thought today we have that massive imperial word: "Go . . . to the whole creation."

The building of the empire is an age-long task. It means thinking in the terms of the ideas of all the kinds of people there are in the world. It means coming in understanding sympathy to all the kinds of people there are in the world. It means translating the luminous, gripping message of the gospel into every language and into the very terms of the experience of every race and of every type of man. It means the universal diffusian of a great moral compulsion. It means the releasing upon all the world of a great spiritual momention. It means the uplifting of one great figure who has indeed to become the Captain of the spirits of men. It means the saturating of the human mind with the ideals and the principles of Jesus Christ.

The intellectual versatility, the moral and spiritual resiliency involved in the adequate building of the empire of Christ fairly bewilders the thinker who is trying to appraise the quality and the magnitude of the great

BACHELOR'S QUARTERS.

Make no mistake: the "quarters" has no allusion to money; and hence no hint at any tendency in a bachelor to limit himself to quarters, when it is all has! I am having a new experience, in fact several of them. Of course this means that I am getting some new knowledge.

Ta begin with, my wife started last Tuesday on her annual visit to "the children." When you take into consideration that there are nine of them, and that they are scattered over three counties in North Carolina and in four different states you may understand that it takes some money for tickets and war tax. But she is surely entitled to all I have accumulated, except what belongs to the Lord, and I am confident that He would gladly put that in her hands, too.

It is only just to say that my next door neighbor and his wife "went off" too. I think this is fair because I don't want to accuse my wife of all that isn't done. I am really at a loss whether to say that they left me the quietest place on this "mundane sphere" or whether it is the conglomeration of all noises, spooks and witches. Sometimes I think one thing and suddenly I am hurled with hair on end to the opposite conclusion. But sometimes it is so quiet! We have a very modest clock—it has stood on our mantel 40 years "come next Christmas," and I never heard it tick, unless I had directed attention sharply to it. But since she's gone, it has somehow evolved a trip hammer inside it, and it bangs, bangs, bangs, until I feel my foot going with it bang tramp, bang tramp, so that my leg aches from the exercise. I then get in the bed and cover up my head, till I can stand it no longer and I poke my head out, and my ears catch the rhythm, and away it goes again, swish bang, swish bang, swish bang, until in sheer desperation I move the thing out and I expect finally to have to put it in the wood shed.

I never knew before what a big house we live in nor that its acoustics would some day make it the talk of the world. If I could bring myself to believe in the Apostles' Creed I would say "communion of saints" was a good possibility. But it does not appeal to me a particle more than dear old St. Augustine's reason for four gospels. In establishing the canon when other gospels were presented the old fellow is reported to have said, "Well, there are four corners to the earth, and four great winds, and four directions; and large animals have four legs; and four gospels is according to nature and is all that is needful."

Solomen—poor fellow!—said he would rather live on the houseop, than in a large house with a brawling woman; but if I am to live in one as big as this, I want somebody to catch the noises and sweeten them and soften them to fit the living conditions. I never knew before how she does smooth out the rough places and turn all the discords into harmony and sweeten all the joys and allay all the fears. When she votes if she soothes turbulent politics as she quiets the home, the millennium is at hand!

I was sitting reading the other day and it was so quiet it was oppressive. I got up and went out of doors and it was quiet there. Nobody else I'm sure ever saw it as still. The chickens had an eery look about them. One old hen cackled like she wanted to sing but was afraid. The old rooster started to crow; but when it struck the stillness he turned it into a scream and ran under the wood pile. He seemed to think an eagle or hawk was about to get him. I saw no eagle nor hawk; but I did feel like walking a little faster, to see if I could catch my breath. And the day was so long—it seemed it would never end. I spent a day at home—I spent a day down town—I came back and spent another day, then went to sleep and when I awoke it was only three o'clock and I wondered if it was the day I began with. Suppose that fellow had been right when he said "time is money" and the world could spend it and then have it, wouldn't folks be liberal!

Before the madam left she gave us minute instructions in the culinary art, since it was possible the cook might not come. Sure enough she did not come. I really believe that there are some women no better than men; and I think the old layman that I used to hear pray on third Sundays was right when he prayed "Bless every sinner in this neighborhood, bot male and mafele." We have learned to cook (I say we, because I hate to desert the poor boy). We can broil a steak to the king's taste (the queen would have manners enough to enjoy it anyway). We can make biscuit so fluffy and light we have to be careful how we pick them up lest tht bottom fall off (like the cider jug when the woods burned: what a disappointment that was!) We know the formulae as laid down by the mater familias: S1M2BP2F5L3, but we do not always conform to the formula. We try new methods and alas! sometimes we reach new results! But new things must be tried in the interest of progress. Mr. Wesley recommended orange peel, cut very thin and rolled to fit the nostril and pressed up tight to cure a cold; but that wouldn't do for these days. I sometimes wonder if he intended to foist his intenation on an unsuspecting preacherdom always. S. R. H.

P. S.—Since writing the above my wife has written me a recipe for shortening the days, which is as follows: "Take one good brush broom and sweep the back yard until that is perfectly clean; then play on the front yard fence with a good brush and a bucket of paint!" I am not quite sure of its shortening the days, but it chops the nights off all right. Try it for insomnia; if it should not absolutely cure you it will do you good, and will certainly preserve the fence. S. R. H.

THE EASTER INGATHERING.

Churches to Report Results to Evangelistic Campaign.

We would like to know NOW how many and what churches are planning for the Easter Ingathering. Wouldn't it be fine if every Methodist Protestant Church throughout the land would be putting forth its utmost strength in evangelistic effort during this Lenten season and making ready for a great Easter Ingathering?

If you were going to choose one thing upon which the whole church could most consistently and whole-heartedly unite would it not be a united evangelistic appeal? Now is one grand opportunity to get together in a great spiritual movement that will stir the Methodist Protestant Church as it has never been stirred and set the joy-bells of heaven ringing.

Brother Pastor, I know you are busy, but will you not drop me a line here at the Committee Headquarters. 507 Pittsburgh, Pa., where I am located till May, and tell me four or five things as follows:

1. What is the specific evangelistic aim of your church this Spring, particularly this Easter season?
2. Give numerical result to date as nearly as possible.
3. What ones of your churches will have an an evangelistic program for the Easter season?
4. Tell of the most interesting incident you know in connection with a special evangelistic effort in your church this year.

Yours in the bonds of Christian service.

A. G. Dixon.

THE PUBLISHER RISES TO EXPLANIFY.

I seem to be be accused of many things, most of which I am probably guilty of. And when an error needs correction, it does not become me in justice to those who have done so nobly, to be silent and let it pass.

Brother W. F. Kennett states in the Herald that St. Paul's overpaid salary to the amount of $196, whereas the Journal only gives credit for overpaying $56. I have just looked up Brother Kennett's blank and find the figures as follows: Promised pastor $500; paid pastor $656. This leaves $40 that Brother Kennett did not report in his official blank.

I am not prepared to say who is responsible for the error of $100. I do want to make this explanation, though. Brother Gerringer, Mrs. Bates and I copied all the figures on the pastors' reports on large sheets, at the suggestion of the printer. In order to save delay in geting out the Journal, I told the printer that I would let him read the proof of the statistical tables, and would accept his copy as correct. Whether the error occurred in his proof, or whether we made it in copying the figures, I have no means of knowing, since I do not have the sheets from which the figures were set up.

My heart goes out in sympathy to the poor editor who must be constantly in fear of mistakes. I do not like to make them, especially in so important a thing as the Conference Journal, whose record stands through the year. And I do testify that no one tried harder to keep it correct than I. But in spite of very great care, errors do creep in.

Are there other erros that ought to be corrected so that those who deserve it may have credit? If so it is the duty of those who know of them to point out the errors, and to do it as soon as possible. I assure you the publisher will not get mad. On the contrary he will esteem it a very great favor.

PART OF ADDRESS TO THE COMMUNITY MASS MEETING OF THE CITY OF NEWBURGH.

By William H. Anderson, State Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of New York, Sunday Afternoon, March 21, 1920.

The wets of New York City are making a terrific outcry over the loss of their "personal liberty" to guzzle. If it were possible for New York City to dribble to hell through a beer funnel without dragging anybody else down there there are plenty of people who would say, "Let her go." But the entire State, the Nation, and even the world-wide movement for social betterment are tied up with New York City. Therefore it is necessary for us to save New York City from herself, just as a matter of political sanitation, regardless of whether she has the intelligence to know she needs it or the moral sense to desire it.

The wet New York City newspapers complain that New York City has more population than up-state but does not have a majority in the legislature. The registration for the last general election gave New York City a shade over one million and up-state almost two millions of voters, suffrage being based on citizenship. The exact figures are: New York City, 1,014,305, up-state 1,902,669, showing that while New York City has more than half the population she has only a trifle more than a third of the voters. New York City's population includes the more than one-half million persons, who, according to the testimony of the attorney general of New York state before a senate committee in Washington recently, are committed to the overthrow of all government. We have no apology to make for refusing to allow Tammany and the vicious special liquor and vice interests to count and use these anarchists and the unassimilated foreigners against the conscience of the nation, as though they were entitled to the same voice as bona fide American citizens up-state.

New York papers have charged that the Anti-Saloon League has set the up-state portion of the commonwealth against New York City. On one point we admit it. When New York City, under the leadership of newspapers that have neither conscience nor moral bias and only provincial intelligence that stops with the eastern bank of the Hudson, sets herself against the conscience of the nation we consider it an act of good citizenship to set the rest of the state against New York City in that particular. If New York City suffers in other respects on that account it is a part of the consequences of following such immoral leadership. If up-state New York has to choose between standing with the American Union on one hand and New York City on the other, then up-state will stand with the Union and American civilization.

THE PILGRIM FATHERS IN HOLLAND.

NEW DISCOVERIES IN LEYDEN ARCHIVES SHED LIGHT ON AN OBSCURE PAGE OF HISTORY.

By Rev. J. Irwin Brown, Pastor Scots Church, Rotterdam.

For years it was popularly imagined that the world in general and historians in particular knew everything of interest about the Pilgrims during their sojourn in Holland. Indeed, there was a widespread idea that their stay in the Low Countries was of no great significance and there was almost no recognition of the undoubted influence of twelve years' residence in the then most enlightened nation of Europe upon that impressionable group of English men and women. Until recently there was little research in the Leyden archives, and that little was concerned with merely a name here and there and was neither systematic nor exhaustive.

This former attitude of neglect is now completely abandoned. A number of distinguished Dutch scholars have given this matter their earnest attention; and at least one great Englishman has enthusiastically furthered their investigations. To Dr. J. Rendel Harris of Manchester belongs the honor of being a leading spirit in these discoveries, and—what is still better—of having encouraged and helped the Dutched scholars in all they undertook.

Another contributing cause was the zeal of a young Professor, lately appointed to the Chair of Modern Church History in the University of Leyden. Professor A. Eekhof threw himself heart and soul into the task of finding out in Holland and in America, what was to be known about the Dutch Reformed Church, and about other kindred churches of the Reformation. His researches carried him to London, to Edinburgh, to New York and to the old Dutch centers in the United States, of which, indeed, he has written a standard history. Dr. Eckhof's researches brought him into frequent touch with Pilgrim records. Fired with a contagious enthusiasm to make their story more complete, he has taken up the subject systematically and in a series of articles has given the world the benefit of much that had been forgotten or neglected.

Professor Eekhof's writings in the Dutch Journal of Church History should be carefully studied by all who are writing on the Pilgrims, as he sets forth many important points hitherto obscure. For example, he shows the wide learning of a man like William Bradford, his accurate and extensive knowledge of Dutch, and makes clear that the Pilgrims were zealous, industrious and well-behaved, absolutely refuting some aspersions cast upon them by a recent magazine writer.

One of the most interesting of the many discoveries regarding the Pilgrims was made recently in Leyden by Dr. D. Plooy, the Secretary of the Netherlands Pilgrim Fathers' Commission. It seems that, when the Pilgrims were about to leave Amsterdam and go to Leyden, they wrote to the Leyden magistrates, asking permission. The magistrates granted their request, but King James the First through his ambassador, Sir Ralph Winwood, denounced them to the Council of Holland, as "ill conditioned Brownists, not submissive to King and Hierarchy—banished men, who deserve no sympathy." The magistrates replied in a noble document which in reply to the accusation states:

> "It is, however, true that in February last a petition was presented to us in the name of Jan Robarts (i.e., John Robinson), Minister of the Gospel, together with some people of the Reformed Christian Faith, born in England, requesting that, as they intended taking up their abode in Leyden, they might be granted free permission to do so. We answered officially, stating that we did not refuse free entrance to honest people that behaved honestly and submitted to the Statutes and Ordinances of the city; and that therefore the entrance of the Petitioners would be welcome and agreeable to us
>
> "This may be verified by the petition and by our Reply of which we send your Excellency a copy.
>
> "We may add that no further steps have been taken by us in this matter. We were not then aware, nor indeed are we yet aware, that the Petitioners have been banished from England, or that they belong to the sect of the Brownists.
>
> "We, therefore, beg your Excellency to forward this information with the accompanying document to the Lord Advocate, so that no misunderstanding may arise between ourselves and Their Excellencies the Ambassadors, or His Majesty himself; and that we may be held excused by their Excellencies and, consequently, by His Majesty."

The Dutch people are justly proud of this brave stand taken by Jan van Hout and his fellow magistrates in Leyden. They feel that it is typical of one of their best national characteristics, courteous firmness on matters of principle.

Other records recently brought to light are the marriage deeds of William Bradford and Dorothy May and various documents containing the signature of John Robinson. These last show conclusively that some alleged autographs of the famous clergymen held by collectors in America are spurious. The writing is clear-cut in the English fashion, and does not follow the Dutch style of chirography shown in the American specimens. Thus the signatures of many other notables on manuscripts, soon to be reproduced in a memorial volume, will serve to check up various American documents.

In Holland the Pilgrims learned the great principle of tolerance; or, at least -for Robinson from the very first was a tolerant man—they had that principle immeasurably reinforced. William the Silent had impressed it upon the Netherlands a generation before.

In Holland they learned many practical things, the outcome of a nation's faith; the accountability of magistrates to the people as under the divine rule; the value of popular election whether of ministers or magistrates; the consecration of minute labor to the commonweal, as in the registration of deeds and mortgages, as in the personal care of the poor; the duty of the privilege that devolve on thinking and responsible men to secure and jealously to guard the freedom of the press.

They learned, in a state not rudimentary but highly organized, that government, to be just and equitable, must be of the people, by the people, for the people.

These lessons they made their own for twelve years; they learned them well; and by them they laid the foundations of the American Commonwealth, and anticipated the Declaration of Independence. But their great concern was religion; their great glory, freedom and faith and charity.

"LITTLE COURTESIES."

I think Bro. Bates struck the keynote in his article in Herald of March 11, page 6.

I am so anxious that my people read it that I call their attention to it from the pulpit. I find the article is bearing fruit.

W. D. Reed.

Church papers are hard hit these days. The World's Outlook was held up by the printers' strike in Ohio and finally appeared by having the press work done in Ohio. Zion's Herald was held back a week in one of its issues by delay in the shipment of paper. Many other instances of unusual difficulties and delays might be given. The price of paper has risen more than 250 per cent. since the war started. We are paying over 10 cents a pound for paper that we formerly bought for less than 4 cents.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR APRIL 4.

The Power of an Endless Life. Heb. 7: 15, 16 25; 1 John 3: 1-3.

Daily Readings.

Mon. Heaven's drawing power. Heb. 11: 13-16.

Tues. Saved by hope. Rom. 8: 22-28.

Wed. The joy set before us. Heb. 12: 1-2.

Thurs. Power to sanctify. 1 Peter 1: 13-25.

Fri. Power to make steadfast. 1 Peter 1: 1-9.

Sat. Power to serve. 2 Tim. 4: 6-8

(Do not neglect the daily readings. The daily readings will help us to keep that part of our pledge which says, "I will make it the rule of my life to pray and read the Bible every day".)

Do not forget that this is Easter consecration meeting.

It is characteristic of the human heart to want to live on. The human mind desires the "endless life". We hear of a few cases occasionally where the individual tires of life, but these few cases are abnormal. Either the life has been misspent and the individual hopes to end all by suicide; or it may be that in a few rare cases the life had been well spent and the aged person is nearing the gate that leads to the better life beyond, and in such a case the individual desires that he may be with Christ.

Not only do we desire to live as long as possible here in the flesh, but every normal human heart longs for eternal life. And though we may not have any very clear conception of what the resurrection means, yet we want to have part in the resurrection. It holds out to us the hope of a continued and an endless life.

The Endless Life.

Think for a moment about this question: Do I really want my life to be without end? The kind of life I am now living, do I want that to be endless? The kind of life we young people are now living while here in the world will determine what kind of a life we will live in eternity. It will just be a continuation of the same life in many respects. Remember, young people, that the kind of life we live while we are young, while we are growing into womanhood and manhood is very likely to be the kind of life we will be living when death or old age overtakes us. Only the power of God can convert and make over the human heart and life. Therefore it is of the utmost importance that we make our lives now what we want them to be in later life and in eternity.

How Is the Endless Life Acquired?

It is a gift. "The gift of God is eternal life." That seems simple enough. It is a gift. Then for us to come into possession of the endless life we must come into possession of "the gift of God." And how do we obtain "the gift of God"? "The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ." We obtain the gift of God then through Jesus Christ. By allowing Him to possess our lives we come into possession of the endless life.

We Are God's Children.

The Bible tells us that we are (at least we have the privilege of becoming) joint heirs with Christ. Joint heirs means equal heirs. Then, if Jesus has immortality or the endless life, we too may have it. And he does have the endless life, for 2 Tim. 1: 10 tells us that he "brought life and immortality to light." Also in 1 John 3: 1-2 we are told that we (Christians, I understand that to mean) are the children of God. And further, that when he shall appear we shall be like him. Certainly like Him in that we possess the endless life.

If, then, we are children of God, it behooves us to walk as His children. We should now be preparing ourselves for the mansion in which we are to spend the endless life.

What is the power of the endless life? If we really and truly believe that we are the children of God, joint heirs with Christ, and are therefore entitled to this endless life, there will come with such a belief the power to overcome the lower life, and power to live the higher and better life that will fit us for a higher home. We will need this power not only to enable us to overcome, but to help us to perform our duties. This power in us will impel and propel us heavenward and will at the same time draw others with us. Whosoever is abiding in Christ shares his power; hence this power of the endless life is ours as well as his.

L. W. Gerringer.

DENOMINATIONAL YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONVENTION.

Plans for the Denominational Convention are going on apace. An excellent program is in course of preparation. If you are interested in the young people of your church then you are interested in this convention, provided you are a Methodist Protestant.

Not all who read this can go to the convention, but a great many can, and we want you you to plan to go if you can.

The good people of High Point, N. C., have invited you into their homes for the 18th to the 20th of May. They will give you lodging and breakfast and also plan for you to get your lunch and dinner at very reasonable rates.

They do make this one requirement, which is but reasonable, that you notify them on or before May 14 if you expect them to provide a home for you. Do not forget to do this much. Write to Rev. George R. Brown, D. D., 609 North Main Street, High Point, N. C., and tell him that you will be there, and tell him as nearly as you can when you will arrive and he and his people will do the rest.

A registration fee of one dollar will be asked to help bear the expenses of the convention. The churches sending delegates should pay this and at least a part of the traveling expenses.

We are expecting a large attendance and we are depending upon the loyalty of those Methodist Protestants who love the young people to see that we are not disappointed.

Yours for a great convention,

A. G. Dixon.

MISSIONARY NOTES.

I feel like I must tell the readers of the Herald about the splendid work Miss Forrest is doing in our branche, and I hope all the pastors who can possibly do so will arrange to have her in their churches.

March 14, she raised about $1400, and on March 21, about $400 besides some during the week. She has secured a number of new members, though I am fearful we will not reach our goal of five hundred. Some of us have been working for this number, and I had hoped to secure several through the Mail Department.

Are the auxiliaries ready for the branch meeting? Do not forget to send names of delegates to Mrs. H. O. Sapp, Winston-Salem, at your earliest convenience. We have a good program, and we are anxious to have the best meeting in the history of the branch.

We want every woman who belongs to the Mail Department, or who is interested in it, to attend the branch meeting as a delegate and help us work out plans for the permanent establishment of such a department, and help select a suitable name for it. I understand that some of our women object to the name we now have.

The Winston-Salem women are preparing for you, and they will be disappointed if you do not attend the meeting. I am sure, if you do attend, that you will receive so much inspiration and information that you will not regret making the sacrifice.

A member of our church in Asheville said that he would like for Miss Forrest to go there. That part of the conference needs to be organized for women, as well as many other sections of the state. We should not work in a circle, and in a small circle at that, but branch out and give all our women an opportunity to help in this great work.

Mrs. George R. Brown.

BRANCH MEETING.

Auxiliary Apportionment: Asheboro, $250; Bethel, $60; Burlington, $150; Center, $50; Charlotte, $25; Concord, $10; Graham, $25; Greensboro, $600; Henderson, $325; High Point, $250; Lebanon, $75; Littleton, $10; Mebane, $50; Moriah, $50; Mt. Pleasant, $50; Reidsville, $50; Siler City, $5; Winston-Salem, $50; Tabernacle, $50; Thomasville, $10; Cross Anchor and Julian to be heard from.

This apportionment was published in the beginning of our year.

Some of these auxiliaries were apportioned too little. Reidsville and Winston-Salem should both double.

Now, if you have not your amounts, please get busy. Elect women who will attend branch meeting. Please use report blanks sent out last week.

We are expecting the best meeting. Miss Forrest will be in attendance and we are hoping to have Dr. Fleagle too.

Harris Glascock,
Corresponding Secretary.

endeavor, and the triumphantly true Christian characteer which is required to validate the whole enterprise brings a man to his knees before the high and helping God.

The Builders of the Empire.

"Our task is very much easier," declared a thoughtful teacher of church history, "because Christianity has a past." He sat silent for a moment and then went on: "If nobody had ever exercised faith in the midst of an evil world; if nobody had ever achieved victories for righteousness and for God; if Paul and Athanasius, and Augustine and Saint Francis and Luther and Wesley had never lived and loved and suffered and achieved, how perfectly impossible the Christian ideal would seem."

The memorry of the builders of other days and the thought of the builders who today are putting stone upon stone makes it much easier to have a sturdy and practical belief in the substantial quality of the empire of Christ.

David Livingstone, whose marching feet marked a great cross upon the continetnt of Africa, has answered some questions for all time. Carey, of India, and Verbeck, of Japan, have cleared our minds as to some possibilities and some issues. The Boxers' revolt, in China, taught us, if we needed teaching, the stuff of which many a native convert is made. The builders make it possible for us to believe in the building, or, to put it more adequately, the builders are themselves a part of the building.

The recruiting of empire builders is all the while going on in our colleges. The greatests of tasks is requiring the best equipped of men, and to look upon the vigorous and keen and well-made young men and women who have become recruits is to have a new and joyous sense of the possibilities of the enterprise.

The Visible world Empire.

"Christianity is not merely an ideal; it is a series of events," declared a stout apologist. It is well for us to remember that if from one point of view Christianity is a noble dream, from another point of view it is an historic achievement. Life has been changed because Christianity has come into the world. Multitudes of men and women—such multitudes that no man can number them—have put righteousness and brotherhood in command of their activities. Vast and far-reaching institutions have been created and have proven their power to maintain themselves in the world. The very thoughts of Jesus have become on many subjects the thoughts of the Western world. He is the conscience of the contemporary civilization. When the men and women of western Europe and of America think of right and wrong they think in the terms of His teaching, and the silent presence of His authority is felt over the world in millions of ways every day.

His empire is to come. Yet in a real measure it is here. In a real measure it has been here for a long time. In visible and concrete fashion it has made a place for itself. Ever since the dramatic surrender of Constantine to the power of the cross Christianity has been somewhere in a place of power in the world. In this visible structure good and evil have been strangely combined. To change the figure, the wheat and the tares have grown together, and this commingling of good and evil has brought confusion to many minds, but all the while the empire of Christ has been changing from a hope to an accomplishment. Every time a man opens his life to the transforming power of Christ a new step is taken. The missionaries, by their evangelistic and medical and educational activities, are pioneers of conquest. The invisible empire is to become the visible triumph of the one Personality the world has known who can be trusted with imperial power.—Selected.

THE CALL.

They were mending their nets, those brothers,
In their ship on Galilee,
And the golden beams of the morning
Left sparkling trails on the sea,
When along the shore, through the sunshine,
O'er the paths they daily trod,
Came that lover of light and beauty,
The glorified Son of God.

They were mending their nets, those brothers,
He called them to follow Him.
Did they question His right or wisdom?
Nay, their eyes with joy grew dim
As they left the nets with their father,
And over that shining sand,
With gladness they went with the Master
To love and to understand.

They were mending their nets, those brothers,
And they loved the seething foam,
As it tossed and caressed their boat-craft,
The fisherman's sun-kissed home.
But they heard the voice of the Savior,
Jesus, Redeemer, their Friend—
And with wonder and great rejoicing,
They followed Him to the end.

We are mending our nets, my brothers,
And we love our ships at sea.
If our Father asks us to serve Him,
Shall we stay on Galilee?
Though our treasures are at our hearthstones,
If our country needs our best,
Shall we not offer loyal service,
And leave with our God the rest?

THE BIRTH OF A GREAT HYMN.

We are told that when George Matheson realized that he was going blind he wrote a letter to his fiance offering to release her from her covenant of love because of his certain blindness. To his surprise and deep regret, she accepted the proffered release. The young poet-preacher was plunged into a veritable Gethsemane of sorrow. In time, however, his feet found the Rock of Ages; he became aware of another who was "acquainted with grief." He went to his desk and, in the travail of his soul, a great hymn was born. Sore and sick at heart for the love that had let him go, he wrote:

"O Love that will not let me go,
I rest my weary soul in thee;
I give thee back the life I owe,
That in thine ocean depths its flow
May richer, fuller be."

Then, as victory over his impending affliction found utterance, he wrote that wonderful second stanza, a prayer of resignation with which few of us could face the defeat and disappointment of blindness:

"O Light that followest all my way,
I yield my flickering torch to thee;
My heart restores its borrowed ray,
That in thy sunshine's blaze its day
May brighter, fairer be."

Mounting yet higher, with the same note of noble victory, he wrote:

"O joy that seekest me through pain,
I cannot close my heart to thee;
I trace the rainbow through the rain,
And feel the promise is not vain,
That morn shall tearless me."

And, finally, conscious of the spirit of victory in Him who transformed the cross from a symbol of defeat to an emblem of supreme victory, he penned the closing lines:

"O Cross thtat liftest up my head,
I dare not ask to fly from thee;
I lay in dust life's glory dead,
And from the ground there blossoms red—
Life that shall endless be."

—Claude Allen McKay, Brockton, Mass.

FEELING.

A little Boston girl named Mary, aged five years, is a Christian Scientist to the marrow.

Mary fell one day and barked her shin, and rubbing the hurt with her hand she began to cry. Her aunt, an unbeliever, happened along at this moment. The aunt was mindful of Mary's faith and of those [illegible] years and with a mocking smile she said: "Why, Mary, are you hurt?"

"No, I ain't hurt," sobbed the little girl, restraining her sobs as best she could.

"But if you are not hurt, why are you crying?"

"I am crying," said Mary, "because I am mad."

"And what are you mad about?"

"I am mad—boo-hoo!" went the little girl, "because I can't feel I ain't hurt."—Selected.

EXCUSE MAKERS.

People who are made of the right kind of material do not make excuses; they work. They do not whine; they keep forging ahead. They do not wait for somebody to help them; they help themselves. They do not wait for an opportunity; they make it. Those who complain of "no chance" confess their weakness—their lack of efficiency. They show that they are not equal to the occasion, that they are not greater than the obstacle which confronts them.—Selected.

"WHAT WILL 'HAPPEN' ON APRIL 4?"

Are you a pastor?

Are you a superintendent?

Are you a Sunday school teachehr?

Are you looking forward to April 4 —Easter Day—as a joyful day of rich harvest when a goodly number of the boys and girls of your Sunday school will make their public confession of Jesus Christ by uniting with the church?

Are you longing for it?

Are you praying for it?

Are you working for it?

Are you expecting it?

May we urge the pastor and superintendent of every church and school to have an earnest conference over this important matter at once, for nothing "happens" in Christian work. Decide first of all to make the best possible use in your school of the precious weeks between now and April 4. The following suggestions may help you though local conditions often require different methods.

1. Call all the officers and teachers of your school together and take them into your counsel. Seek to secure their interest and co-operation. Spend an entire evening together with no other business on hand. The very first thing to accomplish is to bring all the workers face to face with their opportunity and responsibility. This is really the work of the Holy Spirit but it is within your power by prayer, devotional Bible study and consecration to create the congenial atmosphere.

2. Hold an evening meeting of all your Sunday school workers, once a week for the six weeks of Lent, which begins on Sunday, February 22. While there will be much prayer at each of these meetings the central feature should be an earnest talk or study, of some topic fundamental to that finest of all the fine arts—soul winning. This meeting need not exceed sixty to seventy-five minutes in length.

3. The teaching of the regular lessons Sunday by Sunday in the classes should not be interrupted, but whenever practicable the emphasis should be upon the acceptance of Christ and deepening of the spiritual life.

4. Place in the hands of all the workers appropriate literature, especially leaflets, on all subjects relating to soul winning. These leaflets are inexpensive and may be had of any denominational publishing house. They will instruct and inspire the workers along all needful lines.

5. Urge the teachers to visit their pupils or to invite them one at a time to their own home for the purpose of seeking their decision for Christ, or of giving them such instructions are they need. Reports from the teachers at the weekly meeting of their successes in these personal interviews will furnish much occasion for rejoicing and prayer. These reports will stimulate others to try harder. Soul winning is individual work for the most part.

6. No public announcement should be made of this soul-winning campaign. The sessions of the school should be conducted as usual except that much care should be taken that only such features are introduced into the program as shall be helpful to the task in hand.

7. The pastor should preach several times during these weeks—the oftener the better—along lines that will help the teachers to secure results—such as home religion—the family in the church—youth God's harvest time, etc.

3. The pastor will do well to gather those scholars who manifest sufficient interest and instruct them in a pastor's class, meeting perhaps at the close of the public school session on a week day. He will lead them into an understanding of what they are doing, of the meaning of the Christian life, the reasons for and the advantage of church membership, the significance of the ordinances (baptism and the Lord's Supper), the proper habits of Bible study, prayer, etc. He should also keep in close touch with the parents of the boys and girls.

9. Set apart the Sunday before Easter—March 28, as "Commitment Sunday," when at the regular school hour, and under proper influences, with no undue pressure, the decisions which have been secured by the teachers shall be publicly declared by the scholars themselves. These testimonies should be spontaneous, natural and freely given. They will be if the previous work has been well done and the atmosphere is what it should be. This service need not occupy the whole school period and should be made very simple. The departments having separate rooms should remain by themselves and the service should be conducted by their own officers and teachers; or the Commitment may be in the separate classes with their teachers. Massing of the school and the methods usually found in public meetings are not desirable.

10. During Easter week all scholars who have decided for Christ and others deeply interested should be encouraged to attend the services each night, and particularly the one meeting which is planned especially for them. At that meeting they will receive further instruction for the great service on Easter day, when they will publicly enlist in God's great army.—Marion Lawrance, in the Internatianal Searchlight.

KANSAS EXPERIMENT PROVING SUCCESSFUL.

In an address delivered in Boston last week Governor Henry J. Allen of Kansas told the story of the creation of the Kansas Court of Industrial Relations, the new movement in that state the originality and effectiveness of which as a means of preventing strikes have been demonstrated during the past few months. The Court of Industrial Relations came into existence following a coal strike called in the state of Kansas last November. The acute situation which resulted was met by the Supreme Court, which delivered over to the state under a receivership the property of nearly two hundred mining corporations and companies. The state then called for volunteers and with this volunteer labor proceeded to operate the mines, producing sufficient coal to relieve all actual emergencies. After the failure of the coal strike a special session of the state Legislature was called to enact industrial legislation which would make impossible a recurrence of such a situation. The Kansas Court of Industrial Relations, the result of this legislation, provides, said Governor Allen, "a substitute for strikes and lockouts, and protects the public against the abuses which heretofore came upon it during the course of industrial controversies. The court holds the power of equal and exact justice for employers, employees, and the public." He stated that the new court is founded upon the principle that government should have the same power to protect society against the offenses of ruthless industrial strife that it has always had to protect itself against crime."The legislation enacted," asserted Governor Allen, "does not deny labor the right of collective bargaining, but establishes something saner and juster when an effort at collective bargaining has failed than recourse to strikes." The court established consists of three judges to be appointed by the governor with special reference to their fitness for righteous and impartial judgment. This tribunal is vested with authority and power to hear and determine all controversies which may arise in industries effecting the necessities of life. Governor Allen gives it as his opinion that one of the results of the workings of the new court will be the departure from Kansas of the radical laborites and a corresponding increase of conservative labor men who will remain there to their own and the entire state's advantage. The court has already handled more than a dozen cases, half of them brought by unions and the other half by capital, which seems to show that state labor is beginning to see that the law establishing the court is as fair to the unions as to the employers, and that disputes can be settled without loss of wages and without detriment to the foundation principle of organization. "I believe," said Governor Allen in conclusion, "the thing we have done in Kansas can be done in the nation at large. It is no more experimental than the establishment of the civil and criminal courts were experimental when the evolution of society led us to their necessity."—Zion's Herald.

MARRIED.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

Greenesville Circuit.—Since our last report God has called from our midst Brother Littleton M. Noward. Bro. Noward was born April 17, 1860, and passed to his reward on March 4, 1920.

Bro. Noward was a good man and always loved to help his neighbors when they needed his help. He was a devoted husband and father; he leaves his wife, Mrs. Jennie Noward, and seven children to mourn his departure.

He professed faith in Christ August 17, 1895, and joined Philadelphia Church, and since that time has been a faithful member. He loved his church and always helped to support every cause to the betterment of the church and community.

May the God of all comfort and love bless and comfort the bereaved family and friends and may they bring their burdens to the feet of Jesus for he has promised to bear them.

And may we be able to say, The Lord gave and the Lord taketh away; blessed be the name of the Lord.

The flu has about gone, but the groundhog weather is here yet.

L. S. Helms, Pastor.

Roanoke Circuit.—I take this opportunity to inform the people of this charge that I have not had "flu," but my teeth gave me trouble for about three weeks, then an abscess formed and I had to have the tooth extracted and have been under the care of the dentist for three weeks more, making a total of six weeks that I have not been able to look after my work. But I am glad to say I'm improving. This has delayed my rounding up the Million Dollar fund, but hope to be able to look after it within the next few days.

D. R. Williams.

Attention Orange Circuit!

The second quarterly conference for Orange charge will be held on Saturday before the second Sunday in April at Chestnut Ridge church at 2:30 p. m. Remember April 10 and make your "presence be felt" by attending.

H. Freo Surratt.

Orange Circuit.—President Andrews was at Chestnut Ridge and Efland the second Sunday. His messages were greatly appreciated; however, the congregations were not normal due to the fright of influenza. Dr. Andrews, having been pastor about twelve years ago, knows the work very thoroughly and his official visits are awaited with a great deal of interest.

Union Grove community has been in the throes of "flu"; one or two deaths have occurred, but from information received the malady is somewhat abating now. Other points on the work have recovered. As the more agreeable weather comes and the going of the epidemic is fully a reality we hope for more and better efforts expended for the church work.

Yesterday was our day at Efland and services were held in the morning and in the evening. Very good audiences at both services with a manifestation of interest for the Word from the Book. The Sunday school elected Miss Lettie Thompson to attend the School of Religious Training at Graham April 6, 7 and 8. The Christian Endeavor is expecting to send a representative and we trust the church will do likewise.

Hebron church: Services were resumed at Hebron the second Sunday and President Andrews preached for us, leaving wholesome impressions upon our minds. The attendance here was fairly good considering the previous conditions. The Sunday school and young men's prayer meeting have started up with church services, and we expect much renewed interest now and great good accomplished. The Lord's Supper will be observed the fourth Sunday morning, March 28.

H. Freo Surratt.

High Point.—Miss Annie Forrest, our returned missionary to Japan, whom we have known and loved for a number of years, met with us on Sunday morning at the 11 o'clock service, which was held under the auspices of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. She made a most interesting and beautiful address on behalf of the work in China and Japan, which lies so near her heart. We have never heard a more earnest and touching appeal, and it brought tears to many eyes. After the address a thank-offering collection was taken for our Foreign Missionary Society and Miss Forrest knows how to get money. In fact she might be called an adept in the art, and is never so happy as when raising money for missions. The sum of $300 was quickly subscribed, and it will be left to the missionary society to decide whether this money is to be used for Miss Williams's work or Miss Hodges'. The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society has raised $500 this year, more than in any other year of its history. Mrs. George R. Brown and Mrs. W. P. Pickett, the faithful and efficient president and treasurer, will go to the branch meeting in Winston-Salem in April with happy hearts and smiling faces, for the report will be splendid, and we are very grateful. Miss Forrest went to Lebanon church in Mechanicsville to speak at 2:30 o'clock Sunday afternoon, and to Pleasant Grove in the evening.

The White Sale conducted on Saturday at Jarrett's Book Store by the ladies of the Foreign Missionary Society was very successful. Fancy articles of clothing, cakes, and candy were sold, and the sum of $65 was realized.

Mr. V. W. Idol, who has been in the grocery business here for nearly 18 years, has disposed of the business to Mr. Allen of Martin county, and is taking a much-needed rest.

The Sabbath school is preparing a special service for Easter Sunday.

Reporter.

March 22.

Bess Chapel Circuit.—The weather and "flu" have hindered on this field of labor as on others. Perhaps not more than others, but it affects us more.

Fairfield.—It has snowed each of the three Sundays, or at least came so near it that it kept many from the services. However, there has been enough each time to encourage me to believe that when good weather does come will have good attendance.

The Sunday school has not suspended though several Sundays there has been none, on account of sickness and weather.

They also think the pastor does not live too far away to be pounded. Mrs. McConnell and Mrs. Prim filling my suit-case with canned goods and butter.

Bess Chapel.—This is the old mother church. Located in a rich farming section, wide-awake and progressive farmers, she is asleep as to her great opportunity to do great things for her Master. However, I believe she is beginniing to open her eyes and look towards the dawning of a brighter and better day.

Bessemer City.—Keep your glasses clear, and I think you will see something interesting from this point very soon.

A Spring Day.

Last Sunday was a good day with us on Forsyth charge. An ideal spring day with increased congregations and other signs of increasing interest.

A Call to the Ministry.

Bro. James L. Martin, who was converted the 19th day of last August and joined the church at Union Ridge, has had an irresistible call to the gospel ministry. Bro. Martin has a good home, a good wife and three interesting children. He is about 30 years of age; must go to school before entering the ministry. His surroundings—his good home and family—makes it difficult for him to yield to this call, but the call to him is so clearcut and so insistent that he feels impelled to make every sacrifice that he may, at the earliest possible day, devote his time to preaching the gospel. This requires much faith and deep consecration. May God lead him by His Spirit and make the way very clear to him.

Union Ridge made a good payment on pastor's salary and lacks less than $3.00 of having paid the amount due on general interest for the first quarter. This church seems now to be a candidate for first place on the charge and keeping up with the finances.

At three p. m. we were at Maple Springs.

Over the Top.

Maple Springs is now over the top on the Million Dollar Drive, having raised for this cause $331.86.

Another thing to the credit of Maple Springs is that neither the "flu" or bad weather has closed the Sunday school a single Sunday during the winter. Among the efficient and faithful teachers are Miss Lucile Henning, who has charge of the primary class and who never fails to be present; and Miss Addie Long, teacher of a class of adults. It would be difficult to find teachers better equipped in heart and head than these faithful young women.

After the service we visited Bro. F. E. Shamel, who is very feeble in body. We found him strong in faith and perfectly reconciled to the will of the Lord. Bro. Shamel has been a member of Maple Springs for 66 years, having joined in 1854. He gave us some interesting points in the history of this church. The church was organized in 1849 by Rev. George Whitaker. In 1850 a camp meeting was held with Rev. C. F. Harris as pastor. At this meeting 76 persons were converted. A little later Rev. J. M. Kennett, uncle of the present pastor, was pastor of Maple Springs and while pastor was guilty of a theft that did not get him into trouble, but on the contrary, blest his entire life. The article taken clandestinely was one Miss Mary Stultz, who became his wife and the mother of a large family of children. This good man went to heaven from the state of Oregon a few years ago.

The township Sunday school convention is to be held in Maple Springs in May. We are glad to send in two new subscriptions to the Methodist Protestant Herald this week. The Forsyth readers of the Postal Card may look for a special notice in next week's Postal Card.

Thanks to Sister Martin for a good dinner served without her missing church, and to Bro. Martin for the trip across the city to Maple Springs.

New Salem, Randleman Circuit.—We had a good service the second Sunday. Bro. Lowdermilk preached us an extra good sermon on thought. And judging by the attention of the congregation he had them thinking. He gave us some grand things to think about. After preaching the pastor administered the sacrament to a number of the members. New Salem is considering the matter of buying a communion set.

Bro. Lowdermilk having to conduct a funeral service the third Sunday, Rev. J. F. Dosier preached for us. He preached a very instructive sermon.

We are very glad to have Robert Wood back in Sunday school from Elon College. Bro. Ivan Siler and wife of Greensboro worshiped with us last service. We are always glad to have them in the choir.

Our Sunday school is beginning to take on new life since being closed on account of "flu." L. R. Hughes.

March 22, 1920.

Randleman.—The second quarterly conference of this charge will convene at Worthville Saturday, April the third, at 3 p. m. A full attendance of all the officials is much desired.

E. G. Lowdermilk, Pastor.

Harmony Junior Christian Endeavor.

Now that the winter is past and the beautiful spring days have come, we are hoping to have larger attendance and to do greater work in our Junior society.

We began the third Sunday in January memorizing the String of Pearls. The following girls have completed them: Effie Compton, Ruth Davis, Mary and Edna Hughes. Two others, Mildred Crawford and Christine Killingsworth, will complete them this week.

We have pledged to pay ten cents per member each month. This is to be given to Children's Home or some other worthy cause.

We, with the young people's societty, observed Dixie Endeavor Day March the 14th. Our offering that day was to help support the Dixie Endeavor workers.

We are expecting Mr. F. P. Wilson, superintendent of Christian Endeavor work of the Laurens District, to be with us next Sunday afternoon. We hope to have a large attendance of the members and parents to hear him.

Ruth Davis.

Ware Shoals, S. C., March 22, 1920.

Zoar, Mecklenburg Circuit.—Our Sunday school has started again after being closed so long on acount of "flu" in the community. But we are sorry to say that there was one of our church members taken from us with the "flu," Mrs. Emma Bailey.

Our pastor was with us again today. He wasn't feeting so well today. He has been sick for a few days. But we were glad to have him with us all the same, if he could not preach for us.

Mr. Haywood preached for us today. We were glad to have him with us. He preached a helpful sermon.

Our Sunday school collection for Children's Home today was $3.80.

We decided today to have a few days of meeting in April beginning on Tuesday night, the 13th, before the third Sunday in April.

Christian friends, pray for us that we will have a good meeting and the church be greatly revived.

There were a good many pledges on the million dollar campaign paid in today, and we hope they will all soon be paid.

Wishing the Herald and its many readers great success, A Reporter.

Matthews Chapel, Greensville Circuit.—We have started our Sunday school and all church services after being closed out since first Sunday in February, on account of "flu." But we are truly glad to say it has about subsided and all the people are able to get out to church again. We feel that we have something to be thankful for, that so many of us have been spared throughout this epidemic, while we feel sad that some have been taken from us.

Wilkins Hampton fell a victim to the "flu" and then appendicitis, and was taken to the Roanoke Rapids hospital and underwent an operation and died on the third of March. His mother, Mrs. Fannie Hampton, preceded him only two weeks. They died, leaving one little girl eight years of age. She is now being cared for in our home.

Bro. Helms was with us yesterday, preached to a very good congregation owing to the condition of the weather and roads.

Bro. Andrews will be with us on Saturday, April 17 at 3:30 if no other change is made.

Joseph Edwards is home again from hospital, and is now being treated by Dr. Bynum.

Come again, Bro. Morgan. We love to see a word or so from you through the Herald. Glad indeed you remembered us. Much success to Herald and readers.

Lottie Edwards, Reporter.

Bessemer City Church.—Brother C. H. Whitaker preached Saturday night, Sunday and Sunday night as it was our preaching day. He is spending a few days in Bessemer this week with the members. We are surely glad to have a pastor that will visit the members.

Our Sunday school is increasing some now, but we have no superintendent yet, but hope we will have before long.

We plastered and papered the inside of the church last fall and we are making up money to paint the outside now. We are going to start a meeting the fifth Sunday in May, Rev. T. A. Williams as helper. Pray that it will be a successful meeting.

Mr. J. P. Sills of Gastonia has moved to Bessemer City now, where he can come to Sunday school all the time.

Will close, with best wishes to the readers of the Herald. Mae Baldwin.

Bessemer City, N. C., March 22, 1920.

Lebanon Church, Lebanon Circuit.—Miss Annie L. Forrest, returned missionary, was with us last night at Lebanon. The writer could not be present on account of our baby being sick of cold. Am sure I missed a treat by missing the service. I understand they had the stereopticon slides showing scenes of our work in China and Japan and our people at Lebanon enjoyed the privilege of hearing and seeing Miss Forrest. $23.25 was raised. The congregation was not as large as it should have been on account of there being a speaking in Mechanicsville school the same hour in the interest of special tax.

Our Sunday school is making an effort to grow some more in number, having set 200 as a goal to reach by June 30th. Sunday school student, please keep this in mind and invite your friends.

A business meeting of the Philathea class will be held at the home of Miss Daisy Welborn on Saturday, April the 3d at two o'clock. All members are urged to attend.

Mrs. J. W. T., Reporter.

March 23, 1920.

Henderson.—We are now engaged in a two-months evangelistic campaign, through our regular services. Our program is threefold. First, To have all services well attended; second, To enlist our people in personal evangelism; third, To reach the unsaved, and to win them to active Christian service.

We are working hard and praying much to reach these ends. They are so reasonable and so worthy that we are expecting but little difficulty in enlisting the hearty co-operation of our people in this program. And already we "thank God and take courage." Let us have your prayers. "God's arm is not shortened, that it can not save," and he wlil prove that when the church proves him.

Some of our people are still sick, and we miss their activities in the work of the church. Many who have been sick are better, but some do not improve rapidly. The infant son of Brother and Sister W. C. Hight is still very ill. We hope and pray that all may be well very soon.

We are sorry to have to announce that death has again come to our church family. This morning at 2:30 Mr. Oliver J. Grissom passed into the great beyond. Mr. Grissom is a brother of Sister J. T. Stone and Sister Exie Grissom, and it was at the home of the former in Henderson that he died. Mr. Stone has also been sick and confined to his home for several months. In their bereavement and affliction the family has our sympathy and prayers. S. W. Taylor.

March 21, 1920.

Whitakers, Whitakers Charge.—We are glad to say the "flu" epidemic has passed over and we are back at our church work again. I can say, like Mrs. Nicholson of Mebane, it is indeed a punishment to me to be deprived of these things.

Brother Auman came to us again Sunday and we were glad to have him; he gave us what I consider two very helpful sermomns. The early train he takes to get back to his school work was late this morning; therefore we had the pleasure of having him with us this afternoon at our Ladies' Aid. We met this evening in the home of Mrs. Martha Neal, one of our members who has been an invalid for several years, had a large attendance and I am sure all enjoyed the service, for we felt we gave some cheer to this afflicted sister.

Christian Endeavor is back at work and we hope as the spring opens up now people will attend these meetings; they mean so much to us. We have organized a Sunday Egg Club with 15 members for our Children's Home. For a number of years we have been giving every first Sunday collection for this cause, but we are not satisfied with what we have been doing so we hope our egg club will mean much more for this cause. If everybody could only see that when we contribute to this cause we are investing in human lives that will one day mean much to the cause of Christ and to the church! Our pastor is urging the question of tithing. I do wish we could get more people to do this; if so, the Lord's treasury would always be full, and people would be looking for the place they could make the largest investment for Him.

I believe we as a church are determined to do greater things toward soul-winning than we have ever done. There are numbers about us who are not allied with the churches and yet are trying to live the Christian life. We believe this is a stumbling block to sinners and makes it harder to reach them.

With best wishes to the Herald.

Mamie Johnston, Reporter.

Oak Ridge.—Rev. R. M. Andrews, our president, will preach for us at Oak Ridge next Sunday at 11 a. m.; at Ai, at three p. m.; and at Pine Grove at night.

Clark's Chapel, Buncombe Circuit.—Our work is moving along nicely once again.

On next Sunday night we expect to begin a singing school with Mr. H. Tomberlin as director.

On Easter Sunday we expect to have special music. Sincerely Reporter.

St. Paul.—Last Sunday we had a fine Sunday school: 157 present and $10.60 collection; but we would be pleased to see a great increase in the attendance at Sunday school and church services. Our pastor preached a most interesting and helpful sermon Sunday at 11 a. m. and also at 7:30 p. m.

We have been fortunate in having Miss Annie Forrest with us twice. Each time she gave an interesting lecture on missionary work in the foreign fields in China and Japan. We had no Woman's Foreign Missionary Society at our church: she helped us to organize and elect officers and we hope we will be successful in the work. She took an offering for Miss Williams's Community Home in Japan and received $127. We are hoping to have Miss Forrest with us again in the near future.

Eva Routh.

Elbaville, Mocksville Circuit.—Yesterday was another good day for us. Our pastor, Rev. C. J. Edwards, filled his appointment and we had a larger attendance than we have been having. He brought us a helpful and inspiring message on Truth. We seem to like him better every time we hear him. Our offering for the Children's Home was $3.09.

We were very glad indeed to have Bro. A. H. Evans from Shiloh worship with us yesterday. Come again, Brother Evans, as we are always glad to have people from other churches to come and worship with us.

Our Sunday school is still progressing and how thankful we are that we have not had to stop our Sunday school this year on account of "flu," although we are sorry to report that some of our folks have had it. Our superintendent's family has been indisposed with it, but we hope for them a speedy recovery, as we miss him so much when he is kept away from Sunday school and church. With best wishes to the Herald and its readers,

Clara Shutt.

March 22, 1920.

Pine Grove, Oak Ridge Circuit.—We have been greatly hindered in our work for the past two months. The influenza invaded our neighborhood and several of our members were stricken with the malady. We are glad to report that all have about recovered and no deaths occurred among our membership.

Our pastor preached for us Sunday afternoon to a very large congregation. We hope now to move forward and have good attendance at all services throughout the remaining part of the year.

I am glad to report that some steps have already been taken towards building our new church. This is to be a brick structure and some work has already been done towards preparing to burn the brick.

Bro. Lindley has requested all members of the church to be present the first Sunday in April.

Rev. R. M. Andrews is to preach for us the fourth Sunday night in this month. We hope there will be a large crowd out to hear him.

Since our last report another one of our girls has got married. The contracting parties are Miss Grace Walker and Mr. Andy Beeson. We wish them a pleasant voyage on the sea of matrimony.

Miss Rosa McCuiston, who has been seriously ill for several weeks, is now convalescing. Bertha Barrow, Reporter.

March 22, 1920.

Pleasant Grove, Lebanon Circuit.—We had a good Sunday school yesterday. We are going to have Easter exercise. Our school is taking a nice start since we opened up after the "flu." Bro. Suits and his family were with us and he gave us a good sermon.

Brother Suits announced the second quarterly conference for Lebanon charge to meet with Pleasant Grove April 17 at 2:30; hope the brethren will be there with good report.

On Sunday night we were glad to have Miss Forrest with us and she gave us a very stirring address, after which she took an offering for foreign missions, which amounted to $30. We were very glad to have Miss Forrest with us, enjoyed her visit; hope she will come again, and we pray God's blessings on her and her work.

We are very glad that our people are getting well of the "flu": we saw a lot of faces Sunday that we have missed because of "flu," and we are thankful to the Lord that he has spared all of our members so far.

Friendship, Haw River Circuit.—We have been silent, it seems, for some time. On account of bad weather and the influenza epidemic, mostly, we were kept from holding our regular church services and Sunday school.

Yesterday was such a good day for us all. It seems that we are again in the right channel when we can hold our regular services. We had Sunday school at the usual hour, after which Brother Swain gave us a splendid sermon, which I am sure made every one feel the words of his text, "It is good for us to be here" Matthew 17:4.

Our attendance for Sunday school was fine. Our class of young people was large and when I looked over just opposite and saw about the same number of mothers and fathers, this looked like having Sunday school. Our collection went to the Children's Home. I shall not state the amount, but we may look for the report in the Herald. It was very good, I am sure.

Brother Swain told us of some things that are to take place in the coming two months which we are looking forward to with much interest. It is the coming of Miss Forrest, Rev. Mr. Andrews, our president, and lastly, Bro. Garrett is coming with the children from the Children's Home. We shall give each and everyone of them a hearty welcome.

We had with us Sunday for both services, Bro. Weatherly and family. We were certainly glad to have them.

Let us not forget Sunday school and come every Sunday. Try to bring as many new scholars as possible.

March 22, 1920.

Mrs. Jason Hamilton, wife of one of our Asheboro members, died March the first. She had been sick only a few days with influenza. She leaves her husband and three children, father and mother, a number of brothers and sisters. These all hove our sympathy. Mrs. Hamilton professed faith in Christ when about fifteen years of age. She left her loved ones with the assurance that all is well with her soul. May the comforting presence of the Holy Spirit be with the bereaved ones.

L. W. Gerringer, Pastor.

Miss Neva Hunter, now Mrs. Gillam, is in Greensboro visiting her father, Bro. W. W. Hunter. She lives in Iowa. Her friends were delighted to see her at Grace church last Sunday. She looks well and happy.

—It takes 13 minutes of human labor to produce a bushel of wheat in a good American wheat state. In Europe a bushel of wheat requires four and a half hours of labor.

—Mr. Ferdie Stont, for years secretary of Grace Sunday school, has recently entered the rank of teachers, taking a class of interesting boys in their early teens.

IN MEMORIAM.

Ellis.

Owen Ellis was born in Vance county, N. C., January 10, 1897, and there lived until his death at the Sarah Elizabeth Hospital, caused by influenza-pneumonia, March 2, 1920, age 23 years, one month, 21 days. Owen will be greatly missed, because it is good people that we miss and it is a pleasure to me to say that he was a good man. When a child he was kindhearted and seemed to want to do something for the pleasure of some one. I well remember that when a child he was fond of nice flowers and he learned that my mother was a lover of flowers and he would pluck his choice chrysanthemums and Cape Jessamines and give to my mother. What sweeter act could a child do than to pluck his choice flowers for an older person? I remember once that he wished to go on an excursion on which I was going. His mother said that he might go if I would take him in my care; and it is a pleasure to have anyone in your care that acts as nobly as he did on that excursion. From childhood on he was economical and did not waste his money as lots of boys did.

His father died in 1912, leaving him 15 years old and the oldest child. He continued on with his mother in a gentle way still using economy and making money for himself and mother.

In December, 1917, he was married to Miss Fannie Thompson, the accomplished daughter of Mr. Thomas Thompson of Warren county, N. C. She, being a wonderful Sunday school and church worker, accepted a place as teacher in our Sunday school at Mt. Carmel, Granville circuit. It was a noble sight to see [illegible] church and Sunday school [illegible]

[illegible] and he took a position with the American Agricultural Chemical Company of this city.

He was laid to rest by the side of his father in the family burying ground near the city.

Besides his wife he leaves a mother, four sisters and one brother to mourn the loss.

W. Polk Garrett.

In Memory of Little Willis Hampton.

Willis was about 14 years old. He was a member of Matthews Chapel Sunday school and was a good boy and loved by all who knew him. He had the misfortune of losing one of his limbs a few years ago, but has always been cheerful. He was buried by the side of his mother in the family burying-ground who preceded him only a few weeks. He leaves a father who has been suffering with insanity for five years, and one little sister and a host of friends to mourn his departure.

L. S. Helms, Pastor.

Mrs. Elizabeth McFarland was born [illegible] 21, 1[illegible]. She married Mr. William McFarland in 18[illegible]. To this union [illegible] one son. One [illegible] to the better world near [illegible] years. Her husband preceded her near 17 years. She leaves six children, and [illegible] grandchildren and 10 great-grandchildren. She was laid to rest at Mt. Moriah Cemetery the 23rd. Many friends were present to pay their last respects to her in this life. Mr. Avery Towery conducted the funeral service and made a good talk. Mrs. McFarland has been a member at Mt. Moriah from early life. She was a good member to attend the church as long as she was able, and was a good Christian woman. She will be missed at home and at the church. We sympathize with the bereaved ones. God be with them all. We all hope to meet her on the shores of eternity and together we will spend the countless ages in the land where no tears are ever shed and we say goodby no more.

Farewell, dear one, farewell. It is hard from thee to part, although the Lord has called thee home, it almost breaks our hearts.

Mr. John Crow was born Jan. 17, 1847, and died at the age of 78 years, one month and four days. He married the first time Miss Isabel McFarland, daughter of George McFarland. To this union were born two sons both of whom are living. His first wife has been dead about 40 years. He married the last time Miss Lizzie McFarland, daughter of Mr. William and Elizabeth McFarland. He leaves two sons, four grandchildren and his wife, one brother and one sister to mourn their loss besides a host of relatives and friends. He was a good neighbor and a Christian man. He was laid to rest in First Broad Cemetery Baptist Church. Mr. Avery Tower conducted the funeral service. God bless his wife. She loses her husband and mother both. We sympathize with the bereaved friends who are left behind. Mr. Crow was a soldier in the Civil War; he served three years and was a true soldier to his country.

[illegible] forever. In His own good time God will call us from our rest to [illegible]

Sunday eggs: Mrs. S. P. Montgomery, one and one-half dozen; and Mrs. M. C. Auman, three dozen.

Winston-Salem has inaugurated some new methods for increasing its contributions. Did you notice that it had already helped?

Whitakers has organized a Sunday Egg Club and we would like for some of our other progressive women to fall in line with them.

Mrs. W. E. Martin, Winston-Salem, has our thanks for a box of valuable goods.

We are glad to announce that the Christian Endeavor society, Tiffin, Ohio, has pledged itself to clothe a child in the Home. Some years ago one of the Sunday school classes of girls began clothing a child and on account of a number of the class leaving a class over at Mt. Vernon assumed the obligation and they are still keeping it up.

A Helpful Visitor.

Rev. T. J. Ogburn offered a prize of two dollars to that boy or girl in the Home who would rewrite the nearest correctly an incorrect story which he had published in the Methodist Protestant Herald several months ago. Three of the 10th grade and three of the eighth grade entered the contest. The papers were sent to Bro. Ogburn for correction. He knew nothing of the age, grade, or name, but passed strictly on their merits. It was found that No. 6 had the best paper. Bertha Brown of the eighth grade was the lucky one.

He made us the best talk, calling our attention to errors in the usage of common every-day words, we have ever heard. It helped all.

We thank him for his interest, and he will always find a warm welcome awaiting him. We are sorry Mrs. Ogburn was kept away on account of her physical condition. We hope to have her later.

NOTICE TO WOMAN'S HOME MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The branch meeting will be held in Winston-Salem April 14, 15.

Please be sure your part of the budget is in hands of treasurer by April 9 in order to get in the report.

Don't forget your special offering for Pine Ridge, Pittsburgh Mission and our Children's Home.

See that your society is well represented at the meeting.

In remitting do not fail to state definitely for what purpose the money is to be used.

EVANGELISM IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOLS AND CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR SOCIETIES.

A Call to Action.

Much stress is being placed today upon winning the one next to you. All Christians who care whether or not the unsaved are brought to Christ are hearing a clarion call to service. It is startling to know just how many unchurched people there are about us and just how little is being done to lead them to the Savior.

What Am I Doing?

Every one who loves the Lord should seriously stop and face the question, What Am I Doing to Win Others for Christ? Perhaps many of the people with whom you deal every day of your life are not Christians, and yet, perhaps they do not know from anything you have ever said to them that you are a Christian, or that you care one whit whether they ever become Christians or not.

Seize the Present Opportunity.

The Spiritual Resources Department of the Interchurch World Movement is calling upon everybody in every department of church life to win at least one person to Christ during the last two weeks preceding Easter. Every Protestant Church will be asked to conduct, in its own way, revival services during those two weeks. Christians will be asked to stop for prayer at the noon hour wherever they may be and what ever they may be doing. Then they will be asked to help answer their prayers by endeavoring to lead some individual to Christ, in office, in shop, in store, in the home, on the street, or in the church.

The Greatest Field of Opportunity.

No one living is past hope; hence, approach the man of big business, seek out the working man, speak to the man who is down and out and tell them what the love of the Lord Jesus will do for them, believing that they will turn from their sins and accept Him. But after all the most fruitful field from which to win individuals is right in our Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor Societies. There the fields are ‘‘white already to harvest.’’ Be sure you cast in the sickle ere the harvest falls down for lack of reaping.

In Union There is Strength.

Christ said, ‘‘I pray that they may be one, as we are.’’ Some of us believe in the organic union of the churches and some of us do not; but surely all Christians believe in the spiritual union of God's forces—and surely if there is one thing on earth that God's children can unite upon it is A Union Evangelistic Effort where each church in each community will hold its own meeting in its own way, and yet be united in the one thing of trying to win America for Christ. It will hearten us to know that all Christians are working at this most important job for the two weeks before Easter.

The End of All Sunday School Work.

We organize our Sunday schools, we grade them, and we are careful to standardize them, and we want to have the very best Sunday school in the community. But after all the end, and aim, and object of running a Sunday school is that all the pupils may be led to Christ and strengthened in Christian graces. If the Sunday school fails in the one thing of bringing its pupils to Christ it fails in the most important thing in all its work. Plan and pray and work to win all the accountable pupils of your school to Christ before Easter Sunday. This should include both children and adults. It ought to be done, and if it ought to be done, by the grace of God it can be done. To do less than our best for Christ is a sin.

The Purpose of Christian Endeavor Work.

We have been thinking of the Christian Endeavor Society as a training school for service, and so it is. But pray! are we to meet together week after week just to train ourselves to testify in public and to speak in public, and to pray in public just for the sake of doing these things? No, we are in training that we may learn how to reach the unreached and win them to the Savior.

Palm Sunday, March 28, is Acknowledgement Sunday, and Easter Sunday is Join-the-Church Sunday. Will you get one or more to acknowledge Him, and to Join His Church on Easter Sunday? Then get busy, there is no time to lose. A. G. Dixon.

COLONEL POPP AND CORNELIA COBBE.

Once upon a time there was a little girl who had so few real toy playthings that she had to play with such things as her grandfather found time to make for her, or with second-hand toys given her by some city children she knew, who came to the country every summer.

This little girl, Frances Cooper, found that the city children liked some of her toys better than they liked their own. She had all sorts of things they did not have—burdock furniture, hollyhock parasols, acorn dishes and poppy-seed teapots, card-board-box doll-houses, and out-of-door play-houses made of fence corners with branches for roofs; and her dolls were of so many different kinds that even the city children did not own half so many, though the ones they did had cost a great deal of money. Frances's family of spool-dolls alone would fill a story-book.

Among all her funny dolls the ones she liked best of all were two which would make you laugh just to look at them. They were made of corn-cobs and their names were Colonel Popp and Cornelia Cobbe. Frances thought Colonel Popp's title should be spelled K-e-r-n-e-l, but grandfather said so brave a doll ought to have the real military spelling. He was made out of the longest ear of popcorn in the field, and now you know why his second name was Popp. .

Cornelia Cobbe was the shortest ear of the early corn. Frances thought her first name should have a hyphen to separate the ‘‘Corn’’ from the ‘‘elia’’ and that her last name should be spelled just plain C-o-b. But grandfather said he thought the fancy spelling the better.

Colonel Popp and Cornelia Cobbe had more adventures than had all the other dolls put together. Once this brave pair sailed down the brook and were nearly drowned when the old umbrella-boat they were sailing in suddenly overturned and spilled them out. After this mishap, the Colonel had to have a new uniform made of scraps left from Frances's last red flannel petticoat, and poor Cornelia had to be dressed anew in a piece of a salt-bag, the very worst part of the bag, too, for it had the printed label on it, telling all about the salt and where it was packed. The new salt-dress was most embarrassing for poor Cornelia, Frances thought, but at least it would keep her warm. Grandfather was more encouraging about the costume.

‘‘Why!’’ said he, with a chuckle, ‘‘it will tell everybody right away that Cornelia is the salt of the earth, and what could be better than that?’’

Many other things had happened to the Colonel and to Cornelia. Once they were left up in a tree all night, where Frances had been playing. Again, they were carried by mistake to mill when grandfather took his wheat to be ground.

The time they were carried off in grandfather's coat-pocket is a long story by itself, for he did not know they were there at all, as Frances had not told him she had put them there when she was having them play hide-and-seek with the other dolls.

Their latest adventure was the worst, for Frances thought she never would see them again. This time they were lost, indeed. She could not remember when she had seen them last, nor where, and for days every one thought poor Colonel Popp and Cornelia Cobbe would never be seen again.

One night, Frances had a dream. After she awoke in the morning, she could not tell what it was about, but she did know that in the dream she saw Colonel Popp and Cornelia Cobbe, and that they were being chased about by squirrels. How the poor dolls did run! And how fast the squirrels' tails whisked about! Frances's head whirled when she woke up, and grandfather said at the breakfast-table, after he had heard the mixed-up dream:

‘‘Why, don't you remember how we watched the squirrels yesterday, over near the woods? That is why you dreamed of them, and, because the dolls are lost, you had been thinking hard of them too, and so squirrels and dolls followed you into your dreams, you see. I am sure no squirrel would be bad enough to chase either the Colonel or Cornelia.’’

Ah, but there is just where grandfather was mistaken, for the squirrels had more to do with the dolls than he thought. He said so himself, when, the very same day, he heard a great chattering on the roof of the wood-house. He knew what was the matter. The squirrels were scolding him for hiding his corn which had been outside in a basket, and which they wanted to carry off and put into their winter pantry.

Grandfather looked up at the eaves, and suddenly began to laugh. He laughed so hard that off whisked the chattering squirrels. Then he called:

‘‘Frances, where are you? Come here.’’

Frances came running from the house. Grandfather said, when he could stop laughing long enough to speak:

‘‘Well, little girl, your dream was a truer one than we thought. Look up at the corner of the wood-house.’’

Frances loked, and what did she spy but a bit of bright red—Colonel Popp's red-flannel petticoat uniform—and some lettering on a bit of white cloth—Cornelia Cobbe's Syracuse, N. Y., Salt Works bag-dress!

‘‘Now, I'll soon see if we can get the Colonel and Cornelia,’’ said grandfather, as he took a ladder and climbed up to the eaves.

‘‘All safe and sound, and not a bit hurt,’’ he announced, and down he came with the dolls in good order.

The squirrels had been partly right and partly fooled. They were right when they found the dolls were ears which once had had corn on them, but they were partly fooled too, for not a grain of corn had been left on these ears when they were made into dolls.

"We were just in time," said grandfather. "The squirrels might have whisked poor Colonel Popp and Cornelia Cobbe off into a hollow tree, for even if the dolls were not good to eat the Colonel's uniform and Cornelia's gown would at least have made soft beds."

"I remember now," said Frances, "I was playing on the saw-horse, and Colonel Popp had just enlisted and was going to war on the horse, and Cornelia and I were riding with his as far as the camp, when Aunt Rose sent me to the store!"

"Anyway," said grandfather, "I think the Colonel may well say he has seen active service now, and so has Cornelia, for squirrels do not take many minutes to get over the ground. I'm sure too that after this you will not so [illegible] when you play with [illegible] and that you will not leave them out any more. Remember that even a brave Colonel and a courageous doll like Cornelia have to be looked after by a wide-awake keeper. Next time you play with them, look at the Colonel very closely, and listen hard, and maybe you will see him draw himself up proudly and will hear him say, 'Attention!'"—Blanche Elizabeth Wade, in The Christian Register.

Progress is reported on 23 charges this week, adding about 75 names to our list. Now that conditions are better for work, progress will probably be more rapid. We thank all who are putting effort into the canvass.

—There are thousands of wild horses near the Utah-Nevada line. They draw off domesticated horses to their company and tear down fences.

—A cow defended her calf against a bear which broke into a barn near Olean, N. Y. The cow, hearing the calf cry out in distress, broke her rope and after a battle defeated the bear.

—Bro. Gerringer has had sickness in his family and feels that he has fallen behind with his work.

THAT ODD BOY.

He may be of well-to-do, or poor parents; he may be bright or dull; he may be agreeable or disagreeable. Remember that he is a human being, and that some day he will either be a blessing or a curse to society. What he will be will largely depend on what the Sunday school will do for him, in the community in which he resides. Regardless of his home, environment, and training, do not neglect him. Get him into the Sunday school, and give him the very best teacher your school can afford. That boy has a way of approach, whereby his life can be touched, to receive and digest the things that will make him a man, to take his place in society, to bless it, says A. P. Stover, in the Sunday School Gem.

I have heard the Pennsylvania Dutch say, "Our lousechy kelver gebts abmolls the shansta uxa." "Out of lousy calves we get sometimes the nicest oxen." There is much truth in this saying, and I am sure that odd-looking boy in your community, if properly looked after, may surprise the community, or for that matter the world, some day. There are wonderful possibilities in every boy, and that odd-looking boy in your community is no exception. Get after him and neglect him not. If you did not find him up to this time, look around until you find him. He is in your community. Every community has one or more of them. Again, I say, get after him, and give him a vision for a grand and noble life, and some day when the mists and clouds have rolled away, God will wondrously bless you through him.—Selected.

Have never known one but what prospered either in worldly goods, spiritual wealth, and influence for good. I doubt any exceptions to this. Have never known a tither but what was a good personal worker for souls, and for the interests of the church. There may be some who are not.

Some one said, "One-tenth is a test of our loyalty to Christ; what we do with the nine-tenths is a test of our consecration." I believe that the person who gives a tenth with the expectation of having plenty of money to "blow in" will do wrong. God's word teaches economy.

Now, if any reasons are wanted why I believe in tithing from a scriptural standpoint I shall be glad to give them. I have been studying this for years even when I was a boy when mother taught me to tithe; and while I was poor and had to work my way through school. I have never been where I had to go in debt for anything. This can be proven by every business man in every community where I have lived.

I do not think that any argument brought up to try to get any preachers to quit tithing will be effective, for those who do it know too much about the joy that comes from sacrifice.

And that reminds me of an experience I had a few years ago.

I was in a community where a protracted meeting was in progress and the preacher urged personal work and there was a person there who did not believe in personal work, and that person did a lot of "personal work" to keep the preacher from teaching that doctrine. But that did not stop him, he knew the joys of it.

I knew also of a lady that did not believe in woman's work in certain ways and in this meeting some one said to a dear old brother, "When will your meeting close?" The reply was, "We haven't heard from our General Informant yet."

It's strange how some people try to bend every other person's opinion to theirs and yet disclaim doing it. Now what I have said may not be clear, but if it is not, like the publisher of the Journal, I'll try and "rise to explanify," if necessary.

Give us some more rich experiences like "A Reader" of last week. N. G. Bethea.

TITHING.

I do not think the Bible sets forth any definite amount (for those in this dispensation) to give to the Lord. We are living in the age of grace. In 2 Corinthians, eighth chapter, the apostle sums up the Christian doctrine of giving. It is a grace, a privilege, a disposition created in every truly regenerated heart, different from the dispensation of law, when giving was imposed as a divine requirement. Christian giving is voluntary and a test of love and sincerity to God and our fellow man. This privilege is universal, belonging, according to ability, to rich and poor. 2 Cor. 8:1-3, 12-15. 1 Cor. 16:1-2. The apostle exhorts us in 2 Cor. 8:7, "See that you abound in this grace also." And verse eight, "Prove the sincerity of your love." John 1:17.

Giving is to be proportioned to income. 2 Cor. 8:12-14, and 1 Cor. 16:2. 2 Cor. 8:12, "For if there first be a willing mind it is accepted according to that a man hath and not according to that he hath not." And there will be a willing mind if we have truly accepted this free grace, and we will do as exhorted in 1 Cor. 16:2.

First receive the gift, "grace." Read Romans 12:1, and we will be ready to obey 1 Cor. 16:2.

Some of the rewards of Christian giving: God gives us everything we have that is good, and does not withhold from us good comfortable homes with plenty to sustain life, (Psa. 37:25). Allows us to "Eat the fat and drink the sweet" to our comfort; but we are not to forget the fact that we owe Him through our fellow man some of the comforts of life. We are awarded by increased ability to give to that which has already been given. I could here give some personal experience to this truth, but will forbear.

Increased thankfulness to God, 2 Cor. 9:12. "Give and it shall be given unto you good measure, pressed down, shaken together and running over." "He that giveth to the poor shall not lack."

Prov. 19:17 and Prov. 22:9, Matt. 10:42, Heb. 6:10. "He which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully."

In conclusion I will say I think about giving, or tithing, somewhat as I do about the campaign (or whatever it is called) in our church that is now on to increase our church membership 25 per cent. during 1920 (or whatever proposed per cent. it may be). I don't think we have anything whatever to do with any definite per cent. It is the preachers' duty to shun not to declare all the counsel of God. Preach the word. Sow the gospel seed. "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." And every Christian in his sphere should do the same thing. And leave the per cent. with God. If this is done I am sure the Lord will take care of the increase "And add to the church daily such as should be saved." The marginal reading is: "adding to the church day by day those being saved." I think this same Word when preached, taught and lived by Christ's professed followers will settle the tithing quqestion in this age of grace.

Please read and study carefully the eighth and ninth chapters of 2 Corinthians.

BRASS AND GLASS.

I listened the other day, says a writer in the American Messenger, to a short conversation between two girls about twelve years of age. One of them was dressed very fashionably, with ruffles and trimmings, long pendants hanging from her ears, and her collar ornamented with a highly-colored brooch; the other child was simply dressed, her only ornament a bow of plain ribbon under her chin.

"Why don't you wear jewelry, Lizzie?" said the more gayly dressed of the two. "You would look very pretty with ear-rings, and I never saw you even with a breast-pin on."

"My mother says she does not like to see little girls wear jewelry; and she would not be willing to allow me to waste money in buying it either." answered Lizzie.

"Nonsense! they don't cost much. I have seven sets; and some of them were only two shillings a set; and half the people would not know but what they are real. I think we ought to look as pretty as we can."

"Mother says," answered Lizzie quietly, "that it is 'acting a lie' to wear 'make-believe things'; and I do not think you would like to hear any of your seven sets spoken of by their right names, 'brass and glass'—for they are nothing else."

I heard no more, but I felt that these two children unconsciously had laid bare the root of all evil. This wearing much jewelry leads to a love of display, and fondness for dress, which is one of the great temptations of the day. The fatal love of adornment has led many a fair and innocent young girl, step by step, down the broad road that leads to utter ruin both of body and soul.

An immense amount of money is wasted in this cheap jewelry traffic; hard-earned money, too, which might be laid aside against a dark day, or given to those in need. And then does not this love of display divert one's mind from seeking for the "hidden treasure," the "pearl of great price"? While adorning ourselves with these frail and worthless trinkets, are we seeking for "goodly pearls," the glorious gospel which will make us wise unto salvation?—Selected.

SIX GRAVE DIGGERS.

Henry Mueller, a pious German, who died two hundred years ago, used to say:—"When I look upon the youth of our day I see six grave-diggers. The first is called 'drunkenness.' How many kill themselves by excessive drink! The seed must spoil when there is too much water. Therefore, young men, if you wish to live give up drinking.

"The second is called 'lust.' How many have thereby hastened death! By unbridled appetite the body is weakened and loses its strength. Is it not true that all that is exposed to fire is ultimately consumed?

"The third is called 'wrath.' Sirach says:—'Jealousy and anger shorten life,' and Paul in the book to the Galatians places next to each other wrath, strife and murder. Wrath brings on strife; strife is often the cause of murder.

"The fourth is called 'disobedience to our parents.' We know what a blessing the fifth commandment proclaims. Who does not keep it will feel its curse. Dry wood which cannot bend must break.

"The fifth one is called 'Bad Company.' How many who thereby have lost life and soul eternally! Tie a corpse to a living body, and although the living being cannot bring the dead body to life, yet the contaminating odor of the corpse will ultimately kill the living.

"The sixth and last is called 'idleness.' It kills man though he seems alive. Is an idle man more use than a dead body? When the tree will not bear any more fruit it is cut down and thrown in the fire. With six grave-diggers at work a man's grave is sure to be ready soon. Are any of these grave-diggers at work for you? Ye who have a desire to live consider this, and leave these grave-diggers and pall-bearers alone."

—A great storm last Sunday swept through Georgia and other states, leaving death and devastation in its wake. More than 150 people were killed.

PRESIDENT'S LETTER.

GOALS FOR 1920—

A revival in every church.

A family altar in every home.

A Sunday school in every church.

Every school contributing to the Home.

A church paper in every Methodist Protestant family.

Every cent of every claim paid by November 10.

SCHOOL FOR RELIGIOUS WORKERS— "LAST CALL"—

We are publishing in the Herald of this week the full course of study and list of faculty, with other important information concerning the school. Please to look it up and read it. It is very important that this school be well patronized, not for itself alone, but because the school is so worth while. There is offered to our church people a great opportunity to quicken the church life and to increase the efficiency of the workers in the church. Will you seize the opportunity? It rests largely with YOU, Brother Pastor. Will you not urge and help to send those who ought to attend this school from your charge?

We are having certificates made; we would like to give at least fifty of them away April the 8th. You can have one, but better still, we want to give you the important information this school offers. YOU MUST come if we give it to you, though.

IMPORTANT—

First drop Miss Marcie Goley a card saying that you expect to be there, if from the east, on Monday night; if from the west, on first train Tuesday morning.

Train leaves here (Greensboro) for Graham at 7:25, arriving at Graham 8:17. The second train leaving here at 9:20 does not arrive there in time for much of the morning session.

Second, take, take along your pencil or fountain pen and a good supply of note books or paper for making notes of the lectures.

REPORTING CHURCH NEWS—

The Herald has rendered a great service to our church in this state by being so largely a newsletter of the churches. It has afforded a medium for our people to express themselves on many vital issues; it has also brought us together as a people. We have learned to know each other better because of the newsletters written from time to time from different churches. The Herald, to me, is a great big newsletter from our people; I read all the letters, not always all the controversial letters, but all the newsletters. I look for them and certainly miss them when not there.

Our church reporters should report the activities of their churches. By inquiry and "nosing around" for news, it would be quite easy to fill the Herald every week brimming full of newsy letters from our own people about our own church activities. I should be glad to see that happen. YOU REPORTERS can make that happen: will you?

ANOTHER WISH—

I am not the editor, as you all fully know, but I would like to see articles on live issues more frequently appearing in the Herald. It is hard for me to believe it worth my time to read all of any paper, whether news or church, unless I know the contributors who fill its columns. If I know them to be worth while, then I will take the time to read what they say, One reason why some people never read their church papers more is because they know so little of those who write for it. If our ministers would take the time to contribute an occasional article on some vital theme, they would doubtless find that it was gladly received in homes where the paper is rarely read, simply scanned. I know enough of the editor to know that he would rather fill the pages with such articles than put other articles in, many of them of no vital interest to us either in church or social affairs. But these must be written and then sent in before they can be published.

DENOMINATIONAL LOYALTY—

In these days much is being said and written about broadening out on church affairs. Denominationalism is deplored in certain quarters. UNION is the one panacea for all the present ills of the church, according to others. But one thing must not be forgotten, people never rally around a general, but a specific truth. It requires a definite statement of a particular fact to gain the fixed attention of people. No student ever fires up over the whole system of theology; it is about some particular doctrine that he rallies. This desire to cast aside all denominations, disregarding all denominational barriers, if accomplished, would result in a church as devoid of fervor and real enthusiasm as a home for the aged or a county home. Think of a Baptist church, live, aggressive, pushing forward to success that never emphasizes water baptism by immersion and close baptism, or close communion. When you have found such a church, I will believe in the possibility of such a one The aggressive churches today are the ones that rally around their tenets and church standards. The others are more like mausoleums of a glorious, but buried past. The three denominations in America that have made the greatest gains are the Campbellite-Baptist, Missionary Baptist and Roman Catholic. I speak of the larger bodies. Every intelligent person knows that these three denominations are not in favor of union, preferring to stand alone, but always upon their peculiar tenets. I have but little hope of a united Christendom; it appears impractical and impossible to me. I do see some hope of a united Methodism, a united immersionist church, a united presbyterian church (i.e., all presbyterian bodies might get together.

But we should be loyal to our own even though it carried us among strange faces and strange church names. People who are in a denomination they cannot be loyal to ought to get out and do it quick, just as quick as those who are in a country and cannot be loyal to it should move on. Both the church and the country would be better off without them.

If we Methodist Protestant people had not been allured by a possible housing in another denomination that was stronger and more comfortably situated than we during the past score of years, we would be today in a much better condition to carry on on aggressive warfare against sin. It never pays to wait for things to turn up, for even the sod that covers the Micawbers of earth must be turned up by other hands before they can be put away.

If many church men were no more loyal to their wives than they are to their church, the courts would have to run day and night to turn out divorces fast enough to meet the demands. Men will never agree upon Biblical doctrines. They are too vast for all men to see all of them, but few of us see more than a mere segment of the great circle of truth. But those of us who can see certain truth and who believe in this truth can agree, and we who agree can work together -and only we. The denominations afford us a force with which to labor in a prescribed field. Do away with denominational loyalty and your have released your workers in organized Christian service. There may be some who labor, but not co-operatively: not in organized forms.

OAK RIDGE CHARGE, Rev. A. O. Lindley, Pastor.

I visited two churches on this work; Oak Ridge and Ai; had an appointment at Pine Grove, but the rained prevented us from holding it. I had already preached at Kernersville this year.

The service at Oak Ridge was the first the pastor had held here since the influenza epidemic swept the country and there were not a great number of the people in the community out, but the presence of the student body of the Institute made a good congregation, and we enjoyed preaching to them.

At Ai there was not a large congregation. The membership here is small, but loyal, and such loyalty will eventuate in good results some of these days.

Pastor Lindley has done a good work here, this being his third year. The work has moved slowly since I have known it It has sustained some heavy losses at many of the churches, and yet there now appear hopeful signs of progress that doubtless encourage the pastor and leaders.

There is talk of painting and moving Sandy Ridge church; a new church is planned for Pine Grove; the Sunday school at Kernersville had taken on new life before the influenza and the pastor hopes that this life may reappear now that the epidemic is past.

Others matters of vital interest may be reported from time to time on this work; but really, what ought to be done here would be give more preaching to the churches; if this could be done, and the pastor could thereby give more of his time to them the work would grow more rapidly. But this can be done only by dividing the work. I do not know when this can be done.

Faculty: T. M. Johnson, J. E. Pritchard, L. W. Gerringer, C. L. Whitaker, H. C. Stout, A. G. Dixon, J. F. McCulloch, Miss Annie L. Forrest, George R. Brown, R. M. Andrews, N. G. Bethea, J. D. Williams, C. W. Bates, R. C. Stubbins, S. W. Taylor, Prof. T. C. Amick.

Officers: R. M. Andrews, Dean; J. E. Pritchard, Secretary of Faculty.

All examinations will be conducted immediately after the lecture is given.

All subjects are open for every one, no certificates will be awarded except to those who take at least twenty subjects, making a grade of 70.

The School opens at 9:00 a. m. Tuesday. It will be necessary for those attending to go down Monday afternoon unless they can go down on the train leaving Greensboro at 7:20 a. m. Those coming from the east should arrive on afternoon train Monday in order not to miss the first half-day.

The School will close in time for those who go west to leave on train for Greensboro Thursday, 9:15 p. m.

All will be expected to register; no fee, however; it is earnestly desired that all will take the entire course of study. R. M. Andrews.

What about that School for Religious Workers at Graham next week? It is getting a little bit late, but better send the names yet of those who are to attend to Miss Marcie Goley, Graham, N. C., telling her when they will arrive. Remember that we want the school to succeed, but that it cannot succeed without the folks.

This school will be a great thing for those who go. In fact, no one can go off to a great meeting like we are to have there and go back home the same person. We absorb things unconsciously besides what we try to get. So come on and help to make it a success.

Publicity Agent and Secretary.

INFORMATION DESIRED.

I have been a reader of the Herald for some time. I try to study carefully every page and item. It has proved a great benefit to me. I have gathered much valuable information, courage and inspiration from its pages. Yet there are some things I do not understand. Being one of the little fellows perhaps is due the cause for the dullness of my understanding. This is what I want to know. What was the writer's object or intended lesson to be gathered by the readers from two recent articles printed in the Herald? One, "The Snoring Piece," I call it, the other "Batchelor's Quarters," written by S. R. H. I am not judging that there was not anything in these articles; possibly there was a good lesson for the wise.

It seems in this age of lack and need for spiritual knowledge, if we know and feel to say something that will help others we ought to get it simple enough in form to be understood by all. Read 1 Cor. 14:9. If we want to say something just to be talking, let us find some other way than use so much of the valuable space in our church paper. B. P. T.

[The editor thinks these articles were written chiefly for amusement. Some readers enjoyed them, especially those who know who S. R. H. is. A certain amount of humor is legitimate in life and in literature. S. R. H. sometimes writes with a serious purpose, as B. P. T. may have noticed.—Editor.]

Edmund Tucker.

Mr. Edmund Tucker of Seagrove, N. C., was called away February 25, 1920, aged 76 years, seven months and 18 days.

He had been in declining health for the last few years, heart failure being the trouble.

He was the son of William Tucker, who departed this life several years ago.

He was married in 1869 to Miss Delana Spencer. There are left to mourn his loss the widow, one brother, four sons, a large number of grandchildren, and a host of friends.

He was a faithful member of the Methodist Protestant at New Hope, where his remains were laid to rest February 26.

A Granddaughter.

—A bad landslide has choked the Panama Canal. More than twenty ships were "tied up" because they could not get get through. The British battle cruiser Renown, with the Prince of Wales on board, was expected to go through the Canal this week and will probably be delayed. The Prince is on his way to Australia. The landslide made an island in the Canal 50 feet wide and three feet above water.

The Maryland, America's largest and most powerful dreadnought, has been lauched at Newport News, Va.

SERMON TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

The Resurrection of Christ.

Text: "The Lord is risen indeed." Luke 24:34.

If the men of this generation had been accustomed to seeing the dead raised to life, but had never seen a snow storm, then a snowstorm would seem a greater miracle than raising the dead to life. To the one who has all power it is just as easy to raise the dead to life as to send a snowstorm.

If the men of this generation had never seen a rosebush in bloom, but had been accustomed to seeing the dead brought back to life, then a rosebush in bloom would seem a more astounding miracle than raising the dead. Our God who causes the rosebush to bloom after the chilling blasts of winter, will make the graveyards bloom with immortal life and glory on the resurrection morning.

If the men of this generation had never seen a chicken hatched from an egg, but had been used to seeing the dead come back to life, then hatching a chicken from an egg would seem a more amazing miracle than raising the dead. It is just as easy for Almighty God to bring a dead man back to life as it is to bring a chicken from an egg.

If the men of this generation had been accustomed to seeing the dead raised to life, but had never seen a worm changed into a beautiful butterfly, then the transformation of the repulsive worm into a lovely butterfly would appear a more amazing work of God than raising the dead. The God who changes the worm into the butterfly will some day, after the winter of death, change these bodies of ours into the likeness of Jesus Christ, by the mighty power manifested in the resurrection of His Son. I am sure God will not do less for His children than He does for the ugly, helpless worm.

There are more miracles in nature than in the Bible. The things with which we are familiar we call natural and befool ourselves into thinking, that because we have named facts and things, we have thereby explained them. Familiarity with a thing does not necessarily mean that we understand it. And giving a thing a dignified name does not explain it. Heaven and earth are crowded with facts, things, and mysteries too hard for human knowledge. The thing we call nature is one vast, stupendous, unfathomable miracle; and no man knows the exact line that separates between the natural and the supernatural—between the physical and the spiritual. The one word that accounts for the miracles in the Bible and in nature is God, whose wisdom, power, and love are infinite.

During the last forty years there has been much cheap talk and shallow thinking in the name of evolution. Under this magic term some have thought to dethrone God and get rid of miracles and mysteries. Now, whatever truth evolution may represent or suggest relates solely to a process. It simplly pushes a little further back into the misty past the stupendous miracle of creation. The essential, fundamental fact lying behind the visible universe is the almighty, everlasting God. And this God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ has not bound Himself by what our ignorance has called "the laws of nature," so that He cannot do whatever needs to be done for the comfort and salvation of His children. The resurrection of Jesus Christ was a moral and spiritual necessity.

Had such a life as Jesus lived ended in death and the grave, that would have been a greater miracle than His resurrection. Such an ending of the all-conquering, sinless, life of Christ would have taught poor, trembling, despairing humanity that death is stronger than life, that love and truth are no match for hate and falsehood, and that sin and hell had defeated almighty God. The most natural and reasonable fact in the history of our race is the triumphant resurrection of the Son of God; and the next most natural and reasonable fact is a general resurrection at the end of the age in which death shall be swallowed in the victory of immortal life. Paul had reached the highest region of inspired philosophy, when he wrote: "For as in Adam all shall die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." The king of death shall be dethroned and his dark kingdoms flooded with life.

That Jesus Christ did rise from the dead on the third day after His crucifixion is one of the best authenticated facts in all history. The evidence is so clear and strong and abundant, that no reasonable man may doubt. It will be to our profit and comfort to take a glance at some of the facts.

His own disciples did not believe He would be crucified. His death for our sins was one of the things about which they were strangely blind. Jesus had told the twelve disciples over and over, that He must die at Jerusalem for the sins of the world, but they were so dazzled by their vain imaginations about a worldly kingdom that they did not understand Him. And when He was crucified, these disciples were so overwhelmed with disappointment, it did not enter their thoughts that He would rise from the dead. His death so blasted their hopes and plans that they actually went back to their fishnets. And when He arose on the third day, those who had not seen Him refused the testimony of eye witnesses from their own company. None were Only fifty days after resurrection, in the disciples themselves.

Only fifty days after the resurrection, in the city of Jerusalem where He was crucified, dead, and buried, the apostles began to proclaim boldly the triumphant resurrection of the Son of God, and three thousand persons were converted under this first sermon—a sermon preached by the man who was intimidated by a servant girl at the mock trial of Jesus before the High Priest, and so unnerved that he denied that he ever knew Christ. What had happened that made the cowardly Peter a new man—a man delivered from fear? There is but one answer, the resurrection of Christ. In that sermon Peter charged the rulers of the Jews with the murder of the world's Redeemer. Now, if the apostles were bearing false witness, why did not these Jewish rulers, who hated Christ and His apostles, produce His dead body, and put to eternal shame and silence those who were charging them with the murder of Christ, and publicly preaching that this Christ arose from the dead on the third day after His crucifixion? If Christ did not rise from the dead, as the apostles preached, His dead body was in the grave, and could have been exhumed and exhibited to the utter confusion of the apostles and their converts It was to the interest of these rulers of the Jews to have done so. Why did they not do it? There is but one answer: the mighty Christ had risen from the dead, led captivity captive, gone up to the right hand of power, and had begun to make His enemies His footstool.

The apostles constantly faced death to preach the resurrection of Jesus. They had nothing earthly to gain by preaching Jesus and His resurrection except poverty, prisons, stripes, and death. It was not the way of an imposter to needlessly face danger and want and death. It is evident that nothing less than the power and inspiration of the risen Christ could have nerved them to their work. To this day their written words carry a power and conviction which no other writings have—a power and conviction which have convinced some of the greatest minds our race has produced. The triumphant courage and enthusiasm of these apostles was kindled and replenished by the resurrection power of the Son of God, who was crucified on Calvary, "and the third day He arose again." Nothing less than the resurrection life of the Son of God imparted to these men enabled them to despise dishonor and pain and infused new life into a dead world.

About three or four years after the crucifixion there occurred on the Damascus road a marvelous event which has put to confusion the infidels of every age and nation. This marvelous event was the conversion of Saul, the bitter enemy of Christ. This Saul was a highly educated Pharisee, a man of profound convictions, and deep-rooted prejudices. He had been taught to hate Christ and His followers, and believed that in persecuting the church he was doing God service. He was on his way to Damascus to persecute and imprison the disciples of Jesus. But just before he reached the city, this Saul was suddenly, radically, and diametrically, changed contrary to all his worldly interests and plans—changed in creed, ideals, convictions, and associations. Now, every thoughtful man knows it is contrary to every law of psychology and philosophy for any man to thus suddenly and radically change his creed, ideals, and convictions, and that contrary to all earthly interests; such a change is impossible to any man, except by the sudden revelation of supernatural light and power. Saul was so changed. He himself says that the risen Christ appeared to him, and wrought this sudden, radical, change. Saul was so transformed by this vision of Christ, that he began at once to preach in Damascus the Christ whom he had hitherto hated. Saul's conversion on the Damascus road, and the life afterwards lived, can only be accounted for by that vision of the risen Christ.

But let us come to present-day facts which we have seen with our own eyes. Here is the Christian church with its hundreds of millions of members and its permanent institutions—its history, its literature, and its indelible impress on civilization. This church has existed historically from the day of Pentecost. And every well informed person knows that the Christian church was founded on the resurrection of Christ. The church was organized before the Gospels were written and before the Epistles were written. It was established to bear witness to one great and all-important face—the resurrection of Him who had died for our sins, according to the Scriptures. Preaching Jesus and the resurrection was the very heart and life of the apostolic message. Every effect must have an edequate cause And you can find no reasonable and sufficient ground for the existence of the Christian church but the resurrection of Jesus from the dead and the new faith and hope which it inspired. But for the resurrection of Jesus the disciples would have remained in the Jewish church.

This great Republic, known as the United States of America, no more certainly proves the fact that George aWshington led the Colonial armies to victory than does the existence of the Christian church prove the fact of Christ's resurrection. This Republic exists because of the victory of the Colonial arimes over the British; and the Christian church exists because of Christ's victory over death. Methodism stands as the infallible evidence that there was a John Wesley who inaugurated the religious movement known as Methodism. The Democratic party is the infallible evidence that there was a Thomas Jefferson who lived and taught the principles of democracy.

The Christian church is here. It can be traced back through reliable history to the resurrection of Jesus. It is filling the world just as Isaiah and Daniel wrote centuries before Christ came. It is dominating the thought and life of the race; and it is doing this because it was and is founded on the greatest fact in human history—the resurrection of Jesus Christ.

And because He arose, we, too, shall some day arise from the dead. He is the resurrection and the life. The hour is coming when all who are in their graves shall hear His voice and come forth—they that have accepted Him to eternal honor and glory and power, and they that have rejected him to eternal shame and sorrow. The hour is coming when Gettysburg and Waterloo, Mukden and Marathon, Port Arthur and the Wilderness, and all the other battlefields must give up their dead. The trump of God shall sound and its voice will be heard in all the length and breadth of death's vast and awful empire. Then the sleeping millions in earth's crowded cemeteries, London and Paris, New York and Berlin, Rome and St. Petersburg, Jerusalem and Babylon, Athens and Alexandria, and all the rest, shall give up their dead—and these cemeteries shall be crowned with immortal life by the resurrection power of Jesus Christ.

Many a mother with streaming eyes and bleeding heart has seen her dear babe laid in the cold dark grave, and heard the preacher say, "Earth to earth, and ashes to ashes, dust to dust," and gone back to her desolate home and sobbed in such anguish as only mothers know—

"Oh, ever thus from childhood's hour,
I've seen my fondest hopes decay;
I never loved a tree nor flower,
But 'twas the first to fade away."

Mothers, dry your tears, Jesus Christ is going to make the graveyards bloom in the resurrection morning, and your sweet child will come back to you sparkling with the dew of eternal life on its garments and the glory of heaven on its brow. The king of death has been dethroned, and his kingdom put in subjection to Jesus Christ who is "the Resurrection and the Life."

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

Henderson.—The Henderson church elected, yesterday, the following delegates to School of Methods:

Miss Lucy Taylor and Mr. Willard Harris; alternates, Miss Leona Williams and Miss Agnes Faulkner. S. W. Taylor.

March 29.

Siler City Charge.—Our second quarterly conference has just passed. It was held rather early in the year, but circumstances seemed to make this necessary. The attendance was good, in fact much better than usual.

Stewards' report showed one church, Liberty, overpaid, while the other churches showed small deficits.

Bros. John W. Curtis of Liberty and W. H. Andrew of Hope were made nominees for delegate to the annual conference.

It has seemed very hard either to buy or build a parsonage and so the conference voted to pay the pastor the sum of $200 to be used as parsonage rent. Since no house can be rented this will have to be applied on board but will be very useful. A committee of trustees composed of L. L. Wrenn, A. P. Brower, R. R. Brewer, W. B. Cooper and M. M. Lowe were given power to make provisions for next year.

It was suggested that they secure a lease on some suitable house as soon as possible and that the circuit pay the rent until building seemed more desirable. However, they have power to buy a house if it seems wise.

Anyway, the preacher next year will have a place to live and this will satisfy a long felt want on the charge. Paul S. Kennett.

Mt. Carmel and Union Grove.

Last Sunday at 9:15 a. m. Bro. A. C. Patterson called for me in his car and by 10 a. m we were at Mt. Carmel ready for Sunday school. I sat in Bro. J. E. Faw's class. His grasp of the teaching of the lessons of the quarter surprised me. He is a very interested and interesting teacher. Bro. Charles M. Faw is the efficient superintendent.

Mt. Carmel is beautiful for situation. The mount is there all right. As you stand in the door of the church, or in the pulpit, with the door of the church open, you have a fine view of Hawstown on the southbound railroad. Mt. Carmel has 51 members. They have paid to date $44.25 on pastor's salary. This is about 88 cents per member. Only a small amount has been paid on general interests, but this church never fails to meet its financial obligations in the end. This is a splendid church.

Union Grove.

After a good dinner with Bro. Faw we were off for Union Grove over in the edge of Davidson. Two Berrier boys, cousins, had come for me. They were very kind and considerate young fellows. As we sped over the good road they would ocacsionally look back and ask, "Are we running too fast for you?" I appreciated this, for I have never fancied that I would enjoy being killed by a Ford car, and this is perhaps one reason I do not own one myself. We were at Union Grove in time for the Sunday school session and at three o'clock I preached to a very good congregation. The singing was inspiring and the attention to the preaching all that could be desired, and the sermon—well, let that go. I enjoyed it anyway.

Union Grove is the little church attached to Forsyth at the last conference and it is leading all our churches on the finances, being up to date on all assessments. If they do but collect $8.98 by the meeting of the second quarterly conference they will be up for the first half of the year.

After a good supper with Bro. and Sister S. L Tesh, Bro. Tesh took me in his machine to the car line at Southside and by seven p. m. I was in my room at 924 N. Liberty Street. It was a good day and I enjoyed it. Thanks to our heavenly father and to the good people.

That Special Notice.

The second quarterly conference is to convent in Mt. Carmel church on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in April. There will be preaching at 11 a. m. and dinner "on the ground." A genuine old time quarterly conference. Only one thing is likely to keep the pastor from enjoying it and that is the possibility of a small attendance. The official members must not allow this to happen. If they do the pastor will probably look sour all of the next round. Bro. Martin, our young brother who will apply for license, will preach, and the pastor will follow with a short exhortation. This is the time to select nominees for delegate to the next annual conference. We anticipate good reports at this quarterly conference. Let all of us get busy and make the reports even better than conditions now promise. Let us move forward, for these are the days of Forward Movements.

Winston-Salem, March 29, 1920.

Burlington.—The services here for the past two Sundays have been well attended. The Sunday school attendance for the two Sundays has been 272 and 250

The second quarterly conference was held on the second Tuesday evening. The treasurer reported pastor paid to date and the money in the treasury to finish paying conference claims to date. The reason this charge was not credited with having met the claims for pastor's salary in the president's report was that the report was sent in before the end of the month and the treasurer makes settlement at the beginning of the month. The fourth Sunday in April has been agreed upon as the time when the church will vote on the proposition of buying a new location across the street from the old site half block nearer the center of the city. Four members of the church bought the property some time ago when it was thrown on the market for the purpose of offering it to the church.

Our evangelistic services are on this week. The pastor did the preaching yesterday, but this evening—Monday—Rev. R. S. Troxler of Graham will be present to do the preaching each evening. We are praying for good results. Last week we had two prayer meetings in the homes of the people each evening in preparation for the revival.

Our choir, assisted by Prof. Betts and other singers from Elon College and several of the best singers from the other churches in this city, is rehearsing for a great program of Easter music to be given next Sunday afternoon at four o'clock. We shall be disappointed if the church house is not overflowing at that time.

Bro. C. B. Way went to Henderson yesterday to attend the funeral of an uncle, the editor of a paper who died there a few days ago.

This pastor is using a new typewriter now with standard size type so that he can no longer be known to the Greensboro Daily News force as the man with a funny typewriter.

J. E. Pritchard.

P. S.—Miss Annie L. Forrest, the returned missionary now touring our conference, will speak in our church here Sunday morning, April 11, at eleven o'clock. J. E. P.

Spring Valley, Vance Circuit.—Since our last report the death angel visited our community and took from our midst Mrs. Benton, mother of Bro. H. T. Britt, our adult teacher; he and family have our sympathy. We had a good sermon the third Sunday; Bro. Powell preached an extra good sermon, very helpful to all present. The second quarterly conference will convene here third Saturday in April at ten o'clock. We hope to have a good crowd.

Sister J. W. Hight, our little folks' Sunday school teacher, has our sympathy in the illness of her mother. We are planning to hold Easter service Easter Sunday night, 7:30 o'clock. Pray for us. Best wishes for the Herald and its readers. Reporter.

March 29, 1920.

Mt. Pleasant, North Davidson Circuit.—Owing to the sickness of our pastor, Rev. C. A. Cecil, our special meeting was postponed from this week. The date will be announced later. We were mighty sorry Bro. Cecil could not be with us at our service yesterday. Hope he will soon be well again and can be with us.

Rev. R. Otho Stone preached at the 11 o'clock service and Bros. Murphy and Shoaf went after Bro. J. H. Abernethy to preach for us in the afternoon. He delivered one of his good sermons and we were all glad to have him with us and hope he will come again.

We reorganized our Sunday school yesterday and will start up next Sunday with the following officers: J. R. Stone, superintendent; Elma Murphy, secretary; Mrs. Ethel Clodfelter, organist; H. F. Murphy, Ed S. Welborne, S. H. Hilton, Girtha Stone, Robert Motsinger and Mary Eller are the teachers. The collection for Sunday school yesterday was $2.15. The collection for this month on budget was $10.85.

Mrs. C. A. Greene is at High Point hospital where she has undergone a serious operation. She is getting along nicely and hopes to get home in a few days.

R. Otho Stone is spending his vacation with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Stone. He will return next Sunday for the spring term at Western Maryland College.

Several of our Mt. Pleasant people attended the quarterly conference at Canaan Saturday, and all enjoyed the day, especially the good sermon from Bro. Edward Suits.

Best wishes to the Herald.

Orange Circuit.—Last Monday night and all day Tuesday, March 22 and 23, at Chestnut Ridge school a Mobile or "Rolling" College was held under the direction of the Y. M. C. A. Mr. Ransom of Charlotte is the leader and the course offered gives splendid opportenity for the rural districts to get better informed along lines of progress which the country folk need. Various phases were treated briefly showing the importance of education along lines of better schools, better recreation or varied, better health, better farming, better home economics and better service all around. The special speakers were, Prof. Hobbs of University of North Carolina; superintendent of schools, Mr. Clayter; Dr. Sleurty of Board of Health; county demonstrators, Mr. Vanatta and Miss Cornelius of Orange county; and two demonstrators from Durham county, besides the director. Other points were visited by this educational service during the week and the week prior. Much good, we feel sure, was acomplished by the wholesome information. Orange county is the first county in the state and North Carolina in the Southern states, to have this new presentation and it is worth while.

Yesterday was our day at Hebron and Chestnut Ridge and fairly good congregations were out. At Hebron communion services were observed with a large number of communicants. Mr. J. R. Boone, superintendent of Sunday school,, was elected to attend School of Religious Training, Graham, for the officers of church; Miss Lucy McAdams, to represent the Sunday school; and Mr. Kennett McAdams to represent the Young Men's Prayer Meeting.

The Sunday school at Hebron is entering upon increased interest. At Chestnut Ridge delegates to the Religious School were elected: Mr. Geo. F. Crutchfield to represent the Sunday school; Mr. S. N. Hayes for the officials of the church; and Mrs. T. P. Cheek or Mrs. S. W. Crutchfield, representing the ladies of the church. It was announced that next Sunday, Easter, at 10 o'clock, all interested in Sunday school would meet for organization and election of officers at Chestnut Ridge church.

The collection for the Million Dollar Fund is coming along very well. We urge payment at an early date, so other things can have our full attention. H. Freo Surratt.

Gideon's Grove, Flat Rock Circuit.—We have had a hard time battling with influenza; the malady hit us pretty hard for the last two months and our hearts have been made sad for the grim monster death has visited several homes and taken loved ones; and, sorry to say, taken some that had not made their calling and election sure. In such cases it is sad indeed; but we must obey when the summons comes, prepared or unprepared, and while we are in health we should prepare to meet our God.

While we have not done much in church work we think some have kept in touch with the divine Spirit through prayer and supplication. We hope our Sunday school will start again next Sunday and hope all will do what they can to make the best Sunday school we have ever had. For if the church will do its full duty it will have but little trouble in getting hold of the world, for when they see that the church is fully alive they will come flocking to it.

We had our second quarterly meeting yesterday at Bethany, a new point on our work and we were well impressed with these brethren and sisters. Churches well represented and had good interest and a harmonious meeting. Yours for Christ, Reporter.

Porter, Stanly Circuit.—We are glad to say the "flu" epidemic has passed over and we are back at our church work again. I can say, it is indeed a punishment to me to be deprived of going to church. Our Sunday school is on the increase, but it is not what it ought to be yet. If I could only persuade our members to attend Sunday school! We hope that all will remember the collection next Sunday for our Children's Home.

We had a good service Sunday. Our pasttor preached us an extra good sermon on "Laying up treasures in heaven." And judging by the attention of the congregation he had them thinking. He gave us some grand things to think about.

Let us not forget Sunday school and come every Sunday. Try to bring as many new scholars as possible. A Member.

Union Grove, Forsyth Circuit.—The "flu" has about subsided and everything is getting back normal. Yesterday our pastor was with us and preached a very helpful sermon to a very attentive congregation. We all seemed to be hungry to hear the word as our pastor was not with us at the February appointment on account of having "flu" Our Sunday school is moving along nicely under the leadership of our faithful superintendent, Mr. C. T. Evans. Collection for the Children's Home amounted to something over three dollars. We have changed our Sunday school from two p. m. to 10 a. m. Best wishes to the Herald.

Lillie Nifong, Reporter.

Graham.—Everything seems to be on the move on this work. We are having a fine Sunday school with good attendance and every one seems to be interested very much. We had several visitors with us yesterday. Among them we noticed Mr. George Clapp and a Mr. May from Hillsboro and Mr. Willard Goley from the University and some others. Come again: we were glad to have you. Mr. C. A. Allbright and family have moved back to Graham and we are more than pleased to have them back with us. We were glad to see his girls and boy in Sunday school Sunday. The Junior Philathea class had charge of our school last Sunday and everything was carried out nicely. Mr. John Fogleman, one of our best members, was recently married and we are glad to have his wife with us in our Sunday school. Our pastor is helping in a revival at Burlington this week. May he have a good revival. We are looking forward for the school of methods which will be with us next week; hope it will be a great success. We are putting on a campaign to raise the money to finish paying for our Sunday school rooms, which we hope to raise this year. With best wishes to the editor. I will close for this time.

P. B. Core.

Weavers Chapel, Littleton Circuit.—Bro Loy preached Sunday, and it makes my heart ache to think how many members and others could have been there and did miss one of the best sermons ever preached. O, may he be spared to preach another one like that next time. May we have our church filled with people next Sunday to hear Bro. Loy preach, and may we sing louder and with more spirit. Bro. Loy spoke so many words that hit me so hard I could not be satisfied until I tried to write a few lines.

Annie Harper.

North Davidson Circuit.—The second quarterly conference met at Canaan March 27. Preaching at eleven o'clock by Rev. Edw. Suits. His sermon was good, bringing out the part of steadfastness very strong. We certainly did enjoy the good singing by the choir, also the good dinner given by the people at Canaan.

After dinner conference reassembled for business. Our dear pastor, Rev. C. A. Cecil (although his health is not good) was with us all day and helped to transact the business, making his quarterly report. The attendance was good. Number of officials present, 34. The reports of Sunday school superintendents and trustees were not as good as usual on account of the "flu" and winter months. The class leaders' reports were hopeful.

Stewards' reports this quarter: Shiloh, $91.50; Bethesda, $134.00; Friendship, $47.27; Canaan, $48.16; Mt. Pleasant, $65.00; total, $385.93.

Our pastor asked the question, What churches are insured? Shiloh, Bethesda and Friendship reported being insured. On motion next quarterly conference will meet at Mt. Pleasant.

Bro. A. H. Evans, our financier, reported the pastor's part of the budget from Union Grove (as we all remember Union Grove was a part of this circuit last year and when it was taken from this circuit would have cut down our pastor's salary but we voted for it to remain $1200 as last year); and this amount being apportioned to the remaining churches—Shiloh's part of this, $16.49; Bethesda's $9.62; Mt. Pleasant's, $6.46; Friendship's, $5.87; Canaan's $3.27; total, $41.71.

On motion the writer and Bro. George Berrier were nominated for delegate to next annual conference.

Chas. M. Yokley,
Secretary.

Liberty Hill, Anderson Circuit—We are on the road of progress now taking up some new work. We feel that our Sunday school is going to do better this year than ever before. Our pastor, Rev. C. C. Lindley, is deeply interested in Sunday school work and Christian Endeavor work. We think this is a great help with our host of young people. Our pastor filled his regular appointment second Sunday morning and evening, preaching splendid sermons. On the third Sunday evening Dr. R. M. Andrews preached a fine sermon that was heard with much interest. We are always glad to see and hear Bro. Andrews. He commended us for our patience, but who would not have patience to hear such as he.

We voted to send a delegate to the meeting at Graham, N. C. Pray for us down here in South Carolina. We love the Methodist Protestant Church and its cause if we are a long way from you all. We are preparing for an Easter service.

We Did not Understand.

When the hard crack of thunder came and took our worshiping stand on the ninth of June, late in the afternoon, shingles, bell, and windows fell, all from the sky. It is well God knows best. Oh, we love to fight, when we know our hearts are right. Our grief was great, but it was "a great mistake." It was all because we did not understand.

It all fell on the ninth, just to make us work and fight. Now our new church is almost done. By the help of the Lord, our will power, money and fun, we hope to be in it soon and do better work in the afternoon. We did not know how to appreciate, and that is why the Lord did take. But now we will understand.

But we with our earnest vim are going to cling to Him and a lot better work each day we are going to do. And we are to trust and pray. Why? It is all because we understand. The Lord has the power and we have the strength, and that is why we all have to repent. He will lend the power, but we must pay it back, or he will take all away, and will not help in any awy. We thought all we had was gone. But the power, it was so strong, and that is why we went right along. For a church we must have, and will if we try for God at our side. And now we understand.

I am very sorry to write that Bro. Ridge is sick and could not fill his appointments yesterday. We have had quite a lot of sickness lately. But all are improving now. We had Sunday school yesterday, with a very large congregation. Also the Ladies' Aid society met and most of the members were present. We all enjoyed the talk very much given by Mrs. M. L. Stallings. She spoke from the 16th chapter of John.

Lillian Noles.

Asheboro.—We are in the midst of a wonderful revival. Dr. George R. Brown of High Point is preaching, and in his simple, clear-cut messages is driving the truth to the hearts of the unconverted. Numbers have been converted and much interest is manifested.

Miss Annie L. Forrest was with us Sunday morning and our people were pleased to hear her again. She fills us with enthusiasm and zeal. The offering at this service amounted to about $100. Ten new members were added to our roll.

We have been pleased to have the following members unite with us recently by certificate: Mrs. O. W. Rich, coming from the Methodist Episcopal church of Star, N. C.; Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Hamlin from Giles Chapel Methodist Protestant church.

Mr. Virgil Presnell, of our congregation has been ill in the Reaves Sanatorium in Greensboro for several weeks His condition is improved now and we hope he may soon return home.

Little Miss Mary Frances Gerringer has been sick for a couple of weeks, but is now much improved.

Mr. M. C. Spoon, one of our members, died at his home in Ramseur last Friday. Funeral services were conducted in the Asheboro Methodist Protestant church Sunday afternoon by Rev. L. W. Gerringer, assisted by Rev. Mr. Smith of the Methodist Episcopal church of Ramseur.

Reidsville Christian Endeavor.

We have been silent for some time, but we are by no means asleep. We missed having our meetings for several weeks on account of an outbreak of influenza, but things are moving along nicely now.

Our pastor had some little pamphlets printed, which we appreciate. They have the name of the leader, subject and date on them through the month of April, so each leader knows ahead of time when he or she is supposed to lead.

We met with Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Dixon last Friday night and held our business meeting for the month. There were a goodly number present, and it was encouraging to see all of [illegible] ham. Misses Effie McCollum and Sallie Sands were elected delegates to the Young People's Convention at High Point in May.

Our society had a contest which closed at this time and resulted in fourteen new members. The losing side will have to entertain the winning side but we do not mind that as long as we can secure new members.

Several other items of interest were discussed and at the close of the business Mrs. Dixon served delicious cream and nabisco wafers.

On Sunday evening Miss Kate Harmer led an interesting meeting. The special music rendered by Mr. H. W. Swann and Misses Effie McCollum and Louise Thompson added much to the program.

Our Junior Christian Endeavor society is doing splendid work under the leadership of Mrs. M. A. Jones and we are proud of them.

Mabel Thompson, Press Reporter.

Reidsville, N. C., March [illegible]

West End—The recent epidemic of influenza interfered very much with the work on this charge. A great many of our people were stricken with the disease, but we had [illegible] deaths and all the sick ones [illegible]. Our congregations for the last two Sundays have been splendid, and the people express themselves as being thankful to be able to be present at church again.

The second Sunday after the reopening of the church we received into the West End church two members, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Smith, who come to us from West Moore Methodist Episcopal church, South. They are splendid people and we feel sure that they will prove a blessing to the church. We are expecting others to unite with us next Sunday, Easter.

THE CHURCHES' APPEAL TO THE NATION.

At 2 P. M., on Sunday, April 25, the greatest united financial canvass in the history of the Protestant churches of America will begin. Thirty denominations co-operating in the United Simultaneous Financial Campaign will ask the nation for $336,777,572 for the spread of Christ's Kingdom in the United States and abroad.

It is fitting that such an undertaking begin with prayer. As the financial campaign is a united simultaneous effort by thirty denominations, so prayer should be united and simultaneous.

Christian men and women in every city and town, on farms and in homes, are requested at 2 P. M. on Sunday, April 25, when the greatest drive for voluntary gifts in history will be launched, to unite in five minutes of silent prayer—not only for the financial success of the campaign, but that the service so rendered, and the money so given shall in truth be consecrated to winning a war-torn world to the spirit and message of Christ.

Supported by the power of prayer, the United Simultaneous Financial Campaign cannot fail. Without the power of prayer it must fail. Therefore a call has gone to all the members of the co-operating churches to pray continuously for the campaign, and for all that it means.

In this great United Simultaneous Financial Campaign each of the co-operating denominations will work along denominational lines, through denominational channels and in accordance with denominational policy, but all will work unitedly together in accordance with a Stndard Plan that was agreed upon in advance. Friendly citizens in every community not officilly connected with any of the cooperating denominations will serve on citizens' committees with members from the participating congregations and will canvass those not connected with the participating churches to give them an opportunity to subscribe to the community goal.

The churches taking part in this united effort have a combined membership of 14,939,413, which is approximately 60 per cent of the Protestant church membership of the United States.

This united campaign and combined budget does not mean church or denominational union. It simply indicates the purpose of the cooperating denominations to follow the practical method of combining their several Forward Movement campaigns to raise their money at the same time.

Such a United Simultaneous Campaign is bound to effect great economies in the matter of personnel, meetings, publicity, and many details related to the task of gathering funds. It is already evident that by cooperating the denominations have saved considerably more than $1,000,000.

While none of the denominations has sacrificed its individuality and each will press its own special features, all will merge their efforts into the joint campaign of the Interchurch World Movement. This united effort will make a deep impression on the entire nation.

The omission of certain denominations from the list should not be taken as indicating opposition to the plan but inability to cooperate at this time, due in some cases to the fact that it has not been possible for the higher church authorities to meet and authorize coooperation.

In most of the cooperating churches the pastors preached special sermons on the campaign on Sunday, April 11. Special sermons and addresses will be delivered April 18, when the results of the survey and the world-wide need for the vast sum asked will be told. During the week of April 18 final arrangements for the campaign will be completed. All the local church teams will have finished their organizations and on Friday, April 23, will meet to receive their assignments.

It is planned to hold union services or report meetings in each community on Sunday evening, April 25, the day the campaign opens, and on Sunday evening, May 2, when the final reports will be made.

Each denomination will receive all the money it raises. The community fund subscribed by the friendly citizens not officially connected with any church will be sent to the Treasurer of the Interchurch World Movement in New York and at the end of the fiscal year be distributed among the cooperating denominations in accordance with the amounts actually secured by them from living contributors during the year. All the money raised will be spent by the participating denominations.

TO THE WOMEN OF THE METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCHES.

The Interchurch surveys have revealed such critical conditions of suffering and sorrow following the war, and such evidences of social and spiritual unrest in all the world that unusual and united effort on the part of all Protestant churches in America is required if those needs are to be met. An Interchurch World Movement has been organized for this purpose. The Methodist Protestant church is fully identified with this Movement.

Women represent 60 per cent. of the membership in the churches and upon them will fall much responsibility, not only to co-operate in every effort which their own church puts forth but in addition to all these demands to undertake that special work for women and children which women alone can do. Certain definite tasks have been turned over to the women of our church.

This special work is to be done through the two missionary organizations, the Woman's Home Missionary Society and the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. These societies have more than doubled their budgets for the next five years and have been asked also to assume responsibility for their share of new fields and new types of work.

The W. H. M. .S. has been asked to furnish Christian schools in two colored conferences of our church, to take up work for women engaged in the canning industry of our country and to furnish foreign literature for new Americans.

The W. F. M. S. has been asked to take up work in territory in Japan and China unoccupied by any Christian forces and to furnish relief for the war stricken countries of Europe.

Both societies must furnish better equipment and many more workers for the tasks already undertaken. These societies need the help if every woman in the church to carry out this program and they ask auxiliaries be organized in every church by May 1, 1920, that together plans may be made at the annual board meetings in May for hearty cooperation in this great united attempt to take the Gospel to all the people in all the world.

A MISSIONARY SOCIETY

Will
Bring the women of the church together in a closer fellowship.
Will
Keep the women of your church in touch with the women of other churches of your denomination.
Will
Lead them into fellowship with women of other denominations engaged in the same great work.
To study and to plan,
"Together"
To pray and to work,
"Together"
Bind heart in love and sympathy
"Together"
May all the women of all the churches enlist for service in this great Movement and work
"Together"
"To reach the last woman in the last church"

We may face our task in America
Where
58,000,000 people belong to no religious organization;
27,000,000 boys and girls attend no Sunday school;
5,500,000 people over ten years of age are illiterate.
That
We may face our task in all the world,

Where

One-half of the population has yet to hear the Gospel of Christ;

1,000,000,000 men and women cannot read or write;

ON TO TOKYO—OCTOBER, 1920.

The "Monteagle," "Siberia Maru" and "Suwa Maru" are the three ships that have been engaged for the exclusive use of delegates who will attend the Convention of the World's Sunday School Association which meets in Tokyo, Japan, next October. Then there are a goodly number of reservations on at least nine other great trans-pacific steamers. A revised edition of the tour bulletin has just been issued. That was necessary because the dates of the steamer sailings indicated in the "Bulletin No. 1" which was issued by the World's Association have been changed. The "Monteagle" will take the place of the "Empress of Japan." At least half of the reservations have been taken by those who have applied for credentials and other applications are arriving daily at the office of the World's Association, 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York City. There are still good reservations on each of the 12 ships but applications should be made soon. Full information will be found in the "Revised Bulletin," which will be sent to any one upon request. Information concerning the Around the World tour in connection with the Sunday-school Convention will be ready in March.

Pennsylvania has the largest number of registered delegates. Through the special activity of their State Secretary, William G. Landes, over 100 have asked for credentials from the Keystone State. These have paid their initial deposit of $25 and will make the second payment of $50 on April 1st. The first convention sailing will be on the "Fushima Maru," from Seattle, July 30. The last ship to leave will be the "Empress of Russia," from Vancouver, September 23rd. This boat will reach Yokohama October 4th. The Convention will convene on the evening of October 5th. Frequent bulletins of information will be issued from the office of the World's Association, and will be sent to all who have applied for a delegate's credential.

FIRST POLICE WOMEN IN CZECHO-SLOVAKIA.

Prague, Czecho-Slovakia, will soon have its first police woman. She is one of the twenty-eight young women of that country who took the summer course in social service given at Prague by American Y. W. C. A. secretaries at the request of Dr Alice Mazarye, daughter of the president of Czecho-Slovakia and herself president of the Red Cross in her country. Convinced of the need for enlarged social work in Czecho-Slovakia and also of the desire of many young women to be of service to their country in its time of readjustment, Miss Mazarye, who had studied social agencies in the United States and had worked with Miss MacDowell in the stockyard district of Chicago, asked the American Y. W. C. A. to send secretaries to make a survey of conditions in the cities and to conduct a school of social service for women in Prague. There were two hundred applicants at the opening of the school last summer but only room for twenty-eight students. The positions held by some of the graduates cover many new lines of occupation among women of that country—policewoman; director of playgrounds; worker with dependent children; director of new movement to recruit nurses, etc. Women are just beginning to take up higher education and all are eager to do something of service to the country.

DIGGING TO EARN BIBLES.

To an Epworth League in Chicago, C J. Stauffacher writes from Inhambane, Africa:

"Yesterday a strange incident happened to me. Shortly before noon three big fellows came running, saying, "Hurry up, a man is bleeding to death." I was off in a jiffy, Jim galloping and the men on a dead run ahead. For about five miles we bobbed up and down through the long grass and thick jungles. On arriving I was taken to the injured man who had severed a large artery in his left leg. Two witchdoctors were there, but they seemed helpless and a great pool of blood frightened them. A few stitches around the artery, and a couople more to close the wound, brought the hemmorrhage to a sudden stop, to the surprise of the witch-doctors and the crowd.

"While dressing the wound one or two asked if I wanted to buy eternal life. I could not imagine what they meant, and I thought it was some fancy produced by the effects of their drinking the liquor, so I gave no heed to it. However, when I was on my mule ready to start the chief took hold of my bridle and asked, 'Do you want to buy eternal life? We have it inside of the hut and will sell it cheap to you.' By this time my curiosity was aroused, so I got off and went inside. They had just received the things of the dead daughter, two or three boxes. They began to throw out her clothes and I thought, 'This is what they call eternal life.' They emptied one box, but it was not there, but finally they brought it out of the second box, and what do you suppose it was?—a Bible in their own language! I cannot tell you what thoughts went through me as I looked at that mob of half naked, half drunken men and women. They knew that to the Christian this Book was the dearest and most priceless thing in the world and under the influence of demon Drink they were willing to sell it for more beer.

"I called the chief and asked him to read it to his people. He shook his woolly head and said, 'I cannot read.' I told him to ask the crowd if there was anyone who could read, but there was no one. He gave me a look I will not forget, and said, 'You never sent anyone to teach us.' I read a couple of chapters from John and told the chief he must get someone who could read, and handed him back the Bible, saying, 'The greatest thing you can do for your people is to have them able to read and understand the Bible.'

"I have tried to imagine what would be our fate if we had to live in a land without a Bible and Christian influence. Would we be as good as these natives or would we be worse than they? And sometimes when I see a little boy or girl, or an old grandmother carrying dirt, or digging in a garden for forty days, under this tropical sun, to earn a Bible, I wonder if all the Epworth Leaguers in America, under these conditions, would have a Bible. If you could imagine all Chicago without a Bible or Christian literature, you would get a faint idea of what it is out her. Pray hard to the Master of human destiny, He who destined us to live in a land of Bibles, to make people willing to give money, lives, and prayers to those who live in a land of darkness, that they might have Eternal Life."—Missionary News.

Recommendation in the hospital program of the Interchurch World Movement calls for the establishment in the United States of at least four hospitals for incurables which shall be under church control. The great need for such hospitals revealed by the survey recently conducted by the Hospitals and Homes Department of the Movement has resulted in the proposal to establish institutions in Massachusetts, Missouri, Ohio, and Virginia.

According to the American Society for the Control of Cancer, one woman in eight and one man in fourteen, over the age of forty, dies of cancer. There are also not sufficient beds provided in America to care for persons suffering from incurable tuberculosis.

As an example, there were until recently only 24 beds for incurables in the Protestant hospitals of greater Boston. A new sanatorium at Dorchester will add 75 beds to this number, caring for patients suffering from cancer, tuberculosis in the last stages, and other incurable maladies. This is the only hospital of the type in the United States under denominational control.

Brother C. F. Johnson, our faithful Sunday school superintendent, who has been kept at home for a number of Sundays on account of the serious illness of his wife, was at his post of duty again last Sunday. At this writing Mrs. Johnson is greatly improved. The Sunday school, under the leadership of Brother Johnson, and Brother F. S. Stockard, his predecessor, has made good, steady progress since its organization and we feel safe in saying that it is one of the best small Sunday schools in the conference, and in a few years will be one of the largest. It has overpaid its quota to the Million Dollar Fund—$1 per member.

We were delighted to have with us last Thursday night week Miss Forrest, who gave us a very interesting talk concerning our work in Japan. After her address quite a number of the ladies of the church gave their names as being willing to become a member of the Woman's Missionary Society, which we hope to organize at an early date. R. A. Hunter.

Uwharrie.—I filled my regular appointment at Mt. Pleasant yesterday at eleven. An effort is being put forth at this place to buy a new organ. In a few minutes $29 were subscribed, making a total of $85 in sight. Mr. Ernest Briles is the efficient superintendent. He believes in doing things that count.

From Mt. Pleasant I started toward Mt. Zion, arriving there some time in the afternoon. A considerable portion of the road connecting the two churches is Macadam, though rather irregular, since nature has not been interfered with, but let alone to wear gullies and uncover rocks.

A faithful little band worships at Zion. In earlier days this church was stronger than at present. An awakening may yet take place.

Hannersville, March 29, 1920.

Halifax. — The "flu" experience has kept this pastor from reporting much lately. But while I was shut in for two weeks some things have been going on. Three thousand dollars have been paid in to Dr. Beck on our Drive pledges. Several out yet. Hope to get most of them. Our attendance at church services is gratifying since the weather opened up.

Best attendance at Sunday school at Hollister yet,—hope to see the others take on new life now. Eden, Hollister, and Bethesda, and we hope the other churches, will send representatives to Graham to our School of Methods

Our finances are in good shape to date and considering the weather, the "flu", and other hindrances, we think we are in advance of last year. We are planning our campaign for souls and quite a number of names have been given for prayer.

We have received the following gifts recently, for which we are thankful: J. W. Hardee, three pounds sausage, eight poinds ribs and back bones, bushel of peanuts, Graham flour, etc.: Mrs. Thos. Taylor, sweet potatoes; Mrs. S. M. Lewis, four pounds sausage, six pounds ribs and back bones, and one pork shoulder; J. H. Vinson, dry feed for cow.

A Question.

I heard it charged recently that the complaint of space taken to report gifts either came from preachers who got none or from laymen on charges that did not do much for their pastors. Is that true? I'm not giving you my opinion now, just stating the charge.

We serve an appreciative people and I am giving you these reports to stir some others that I know are just as able as my folks, yet never do anything, as much as to show my appreciation for their kindness.

May the Lord give us all a greater spirit of liberality, especially with our time, that more of it may be given to His service.

Sincerely, N. G. Bethea.

Harmony, Yarborough Circuit.—Sunday was a rather bad day. It was raining so hard that many could not attend preaching Sunday. But we had a congregation of thirty-five. Rev. Mr. Harrison preached an excellent sermon, and I am sure everybody enjoyed hearing him. Sorry that I could not be there. And Sunday night it rained us out.

But we hope that next second Sunday night we shall have a grand meeting and some soul be brought to Christ. We must get to work and not wait on another to make the start. Now is the time, so we must begin and get to work.

Our Sunday school is doing fine. We have good attendance every Sunday. Since spring has begun our attendance will be large. We have now on roll about seventy or seventy-five, and hope it will still increase.

Our Christian Endeavor was rained out Sunday p. m. Had a real interesting program made; sorry that we could not have it. I am sorry to report that one of our members, Mrs. J. H. Balentine, is very ill. But hope she'll soon recover. Best wishes to the Herald and its readers. Mamie C. Reeves, Reporter.

Ware Shoals, S. C.

Stanly Circuit.—Our second quarterly conference will convene at Plyler on Saturday before the third Sunday in April.

Those who have remembered us in a substantial way since last report are: Miss Attie Hatley, potatoes; Mr. and Mrs. Philmore Hatley, potatoes and fine loaf bread; Master Oscar Hatley, goobers; Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Harkey, a fine lot of potatoes; Mrs. J. H. Snotherly, sausage; Mrs. Alonzo Lowder, a variety of nice things.

Had a splendid congregation at Porter Sunday; the interest is growing here. Glad to have Elmer Marbry worship with us Sunday since having spent the winter at Midland school.

W. D. Reed.

Greensville Circuit.—Yesterday was a good day at Hobbs and Ebenezer. We preached to a good sized congregation of attentive hearers. The spirit of God was with us. The people of Hobbs brought out lunch and in the afternoon they reorganized their Sunday school, which has been closed on account of bad weather and bad roads. We hope from now on they can go forward with the Sunday school work.

At Ebenezer we held our first service in the new church, a large congregation being present. The church seemed to be revived and the people rejoiced in the fact that they once more had the privilege to come back to the old place and worship God as they used to do. The remark was heard from many yesterday, that we have gotten back home.

We still lack the ceiling and painting before our church will be complete. So let us get busy and finish. God has been with us in this work and given us unexpected help. This is God's way of doing things. If we do our part then God will do the rest, for he says, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and all these things will be added unto you." So let us put ourselves in the hands of God and we will soon have our church finished. Brethren, pray for us.

Bro. R. M. Andrews will be with us on the 17th and 18th of April. His appointments will be as follows: Wesley's Chapel, Saturday, 17th, at 11 o'clock a. m., quarterly meeting at 1:30 p. m.; Matthews' Chapel at 3:30 p. m.; Sunday, 18th, at Hobbs' Chapel at 11 a. m. and Ebenezer at 3:00 p. m. and Philadelphia at 7:45 p. m.

Brethren, don't forget these appointments.

Yours in the Master's work,

L. S. Helms, Pastor.

Lebanon, Spring Church Circuit.—We have opened our Sunday school after having a lot of "flu" and whooping cough in our community.

Sunday was a good day for us. Brother O'Briant preached a beautiful sermon. Surely all that heard it were benefited by it.

It was decided that our meeting begin the second Sunday in August.

We are planning to have an ice cream social Easter Monday; everybody invited.

Reporter.

Canaan, North Davidson Circuit.—Our Sunday school is almost at its best in its history, not the largest in attendance, but in interest.

Bro. Cecil was able to be out Saturday, after having been confined for some time. The second quarterly meeting was held at our place last Saturday. All the churches were largely represented. From the reports we found the entire work in fairly good shape.

Bro. Cecil was feeling very weak and not able to attend to both services. So he was accompanied by Bro. Suits, who preached at 11 o'clock. He gave us a very inspiring sermon. We were all glad to have him with us. Bro. Cecil did not fill the appointment either on Sunday, which was the usual time, having a special meeting planned for that day. Bro. George Berrier filled this place. He gave us some very good thoughts and left with us many things of interest to think of.

The health of Mrs. Philip Berrier is somewhat improved, though she is not strong enough to be in her seat at church yet. Also Bro. George Motsinger is better, but is still confined to his home. Let us all pray that the sick may soon be resored to health, with our much beloved pastor included.

Mrs. Bert Weavil, Reporter.

—Bros. T. D. Sharpe and J. W. Causey are Grace church's nominees for delegate to the Annual Conference.

—Miss Lela B. Holliday has moved to Rocky Mount. It is with regret that she leaves her old home church, Whitakers Chapel. We have a number of people in Rocky Mount, some of whom regret that our church there was sold.

Bethany, Randleman Circuit.—At the regular hour for preaching last Sunday, instead of a sermon by our pastor, we listened to an excellent lecture by Miss Annie Forrest. The service was well attended and every one seemed to be very much interested in her touching story of the needs of the women and children in far-away Japan. Our people responded to her call for money and about forty dollars was pledged and collected. We wish Miss Forrest success in her earnest efforts to help send the gospel across the sea. God forbid that any of his children should fail to co-operate with her as she appeals to them for aid.

We were glad to see in the congregation Sunday some of our members who have not been with us recently. Among those were Mr. and Mrs. Spainhour of Pinnacle and Mr. and Mrs. Grady Hemphill of Julian.

Our Sunday school seems to have taken on new life since the "flu" has disappeared and spring has come. We are looking forward and expecting a larger attendance and more interest in the Sunday school.

Mrs. James Pugh, Reporter.

In Memoriam.

Raynor Edward Hardee, born May 28, 1891, died March 26, 1920, age 28 years, 10 months and one day. Bro. Hardee was married to Miss Mary Jones December 26, 1917, and to this union one child was born, and he leaves a devoted wife and the babe, which is eight months old. He also leaves four brothers and four sisters, his parents having preceded him to the spirit-world many years ago.

His first sickness came about four years ago, but two years ago he began to show a decline in health, which finally resulted in his death.

He was converted while Rev. W. L. Harris was pastor under the preaching of Rev. George L. Curry, joined Eden church the same year, 1906, and was very much devoted to his church. Was always on hand unless hindered by sickness. We will miss him much at church and in the community, but most especially in the home, for he was a devoted husband.

When his health reached that stage that he could no longer work, his wife's father took him to his home, where he had every attention human hands could give, and it surely is a great satisfaction to them to know they did their best. His hopes were bright, even after his affliction became great, as I had the privilege of talking with him about this awhile before his death.

To the friends and loved ones we extend our sympathy, and especially do we pray God to bless and comfort and take care of the wife and child.

His body was laid to rest near the church that he loved so well.

A few more years shall roll,
A few more seasons come,
And we shall rest with those who sleep,
Asleep beneath the tomb.

But thank God for the glorious resurrection that awaits His children. N. G. Bethea.

M. Causey Spoon.

On March 26, 1920, M. Causey Spoon passed from time to eternity. Brother Spoon would have been sixty-nine years old if he had lived until next July. For seventeen years he had been a member of the Asheboro Methodist Protestant church, and his good wife testifies that he was a consistent member. He also left with his loved ones the assurance that all is well with him now. He leaves behind a widow, four daughters and a large number of relatives and many friends to mourn his departure. May the Lord bless and comfort those who are bereaved.

The funeral service was conducted in the Asheboro Methodist Protestant church, Sunday afternoon at two o'clock, by the pastor assisted by Rev. Mr. Smith, pastor of the Ramseur Methodist Episcopal church. The great company of people that could not be seated in the church testified to the high esteem in which this man was held. The Asheboro Masonic Lodge, of which Brother Spoon was a member, took charge of the service from the church, and interment was made in the Asheboro cemetery.

L. W. Gerringer, Pastor.

Westmoreland.

Little Lois, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Montie Westmoreland, was called home at the early age of 12 years, 10 months, and 20 days. It was during the sickness and death in the writer's own home that the child was taken, and so he was unable to attend the funeral; yet I believe that a word of comment and consolation concerning her life should be given here.

Lois was, first of all, filled with determination and high ideals of life. She was always looking ahead toward a life of usefulness and service and was anxious to prepare for it. For almost two months she was sick, but went to school and church as long as possible, and was confined in bed only two days. The Sunday school was dear to her, and she said to her father: "Next summer we can go to Sunday school every Sunday and ride." Her disposition was such as to make friends with every one she knew, and was a friend to all.

To the parents it will seem strange that the very gem of the home—one of hope, aspiration, patience, and love should be taken, but "He doeth all things well." Her life was brief but pure. She leaves for us her example as she embarks for:

"A land of little faces—
Very little, very fair;
And every one shall know her own
And cleave unto it there.

"O, grant it, loving Father,
To the broken hearts that plead!
Thy way is best—yet, oh! to rest
In perfect faith indeed."

C. C. Lindley, Pastor.

Mrs. W. H. Bailey Dead.

Mrs. W. H. Bailey departed this life on January 12, 1920, aged about 45 or 46 years. She leaves seven children to mourn the loss—Mrs. John Cloninger, Mr. Knox Bailey; the rest are small children, the baby just three months old. But it is kindly cared for by Miss Janet Thompson, a friend of Mrs. Bailey. Miss Thompson is only 18 years of age, but we hope she will rear the child in the way it should be. She also leaves a husband and her aged father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. John Osborne.

Mrs. Bailey was a member of our Methodist Protestant church, and has been for some time. The writer fails to be personally acquainted with the deceased, therefore cannot give the details of her daily life. We trust she is at rest since she has left the troubles of this world. We also extend our sympathies to the bereaved ones. Ruth. O.

TERRIBLE CONDITIONS IN EUROPE.

The American people know and have confidence in Mr. Henry P. Davison, head of the American Red Cross. A hard-headed banker used to affairs, he is accustomed to base his conclusions on facts and not on unverified reports.

In a statement cabled from Europe Mr. Davison warns the American people of the terrible state of Europe in the matter of disease, and of the danger that infection will spread to this country. He calls this "the mightiest danger to all humanity since the Deluge." "More people are daily dying now than during the war," he says.

Red Cross Chairman's Warning.

"America is just as unsafe as Europe from typhus and the white plague now spreading over the world with lightning rapidity.

"Two million three hundred thousand infected Russian refugees are now pressing against western Europe's borders in their mad rush westward, in the hope of escaping death under the most horrible conditions.

"Conditions as bad as in Russia prevail in Hungary, Serbia, Austria, Montenegro, Turkey and Syria and throughout the Near East. Poland is especially severely stricken.

"A ship carrying two full-fledged generals, seven brigadier-generals, twenty-four colonels and 700 troops from Russia is even now roving the Mediterranean, rejected at every port like a hopeless pilgrim, unable to land her infected cargo. The ultimate fate of this modern ship cannot be foretold."

Entire Populations Dying.

"Whole populations are being wiped out. The fatal germs pass from one country to another, owing to the lack of sanitary devices. The American, British and Italian Red Cross organizations are doing their very best, but it is impossible to combat this immense danger by private means. It is a matter to be handled by the governments. They handled the war, and this is worse than war.

"Unless quick relief is provided the world will see a tragedy greater than that of the last five years.

"Montenegro, for instance, with its population of 430,000, has only four doctors, no hospital supplies and no medicines. The same applies to the whole of eastern Europe. . . .

"The International Red Cross has officially laid the situation of Europe before the League of Nations, and is willing to become the League's agent, provide volunteers and aid to every country and supervise the distribution—in short, to do everything in its power to prevent the world becoming a victim of the greatest cataclysm in history."—Current Events.

ONE GIRL'S STORY.

What beautiful long green rows of vegetables! And surely there is a bed of flowers at the far end. A little girl with two long black braids hanging down her back is stooping over to weed her flowers. That is, she looks like a little girl though she is seventeen. Seventeen years old and out in the garden alone! Surely this is not Chinese custom?

It is unusual, but this care-free and happy Chinese girl is one of three daughters, well beloved by their father. Mr. Tsoong loves his girls as dearly as if they were sons. Tshe Faung loves to work with her father in the garden. He is with her now, and together they water the green vegetables. It is a pretty picture and how much better and happier for Tshe Faung than to sit all day long in a dark, damp room with a mud floor. That is where she would be if her father and mother were true observers of their neighborhood custom. This is such a pleasant picture we should like to linger with Tshe Faung and her father, but alas! we cannot, for the picture is only an introduction to the sad chapter that followed so quickly the happy one, that year when Tshe Faung was seventeen.

Mr. Tsoong went away for more water, leaving his daughter alone for just a few minutes. It was enough, however, for a group of men to appear from behind the [illegible] [illegible] could [illegible] [illegible] her behind the fence. [illegible] she was put on the back of a pony and hurried away before her father was back from the house. When he came he was not at all disturbed, nor did he search for his daughter. He thought she had joined her sister in the house. While the father thought Tshe Faung was safe in the home, her mother thought she was safe in the garden helping her father with the flowers and vegetables. It was all as simple as that, and not until the day's work was over was Tshe Faung missed. Then began a frantic search for her through house, garden, and the little garden house that had been built by her indulgent father for her. All the time they were searching Mr. Tsoong was fearing and dreading what might be true. For Tshe Faung was betrothed. She had not wanted to go away and be married. She was only seventeen and her fiance only a boy of thirteen. But for some time the boy's relatives had been very impatient, demanding the bride. Her indulgent father had pleaded her youth and begged for a postponement of the marriage, but the relatives had made dark threats that if the bride were not sent to the home of her future husband, they would send and take her away by force. This was what had happened.

So Tshe Faung's father and mother went to bed with heavy hearts, Mr. Tsoong planning that early the next morning he would walk the many miles between the two homes to be assured his little girl was safe and try to comfort her heart. He would assure her she would be very happy in such a comfortable home, where everything was much better than he could give her.

Poor little Tshe Faung! Her care-free days were over and she was like a caged bird in her new home. A little slave girl was set to watch her and see that she did not escape to the yard. She was very unhappy and cried all day for her father. Finally hearing from the little slave girl that he had come she dried her eyes and waited for him to come in, for she thought he would take her home. But she waited in vain. There was no kind father. At last she learned that the family would not allow him to see her.

Tshe Faung was in despair. She resolved to run away and make her way home. It was hard, for the little slave girl was with her all the time, but finally when she was sleeping Tshe Faung slipped away in the night. Poor child, she did not know which way to go, she only knew she must walk very fast and keep walking all night. The next day she hid in a grain field. Her bare feet were bruised and bleeding and swollen and she grew very hungry. But worse than the pain in her feet and the pain of hunger was the terror in her heart for fear her boy-fiance's family would find her and compel her to go back. At night she crept out of the grain field and began to walk and run again, crossing canals and little streams. By this time she was very hungry and wished she might find some garden where she could eat raw turnips or beans. If she could only get to the river she would know she was on the right road toward home! She could not find the big river and she could not find a garden. She ate a little green wheat, which helped some, but that second night she was very cold and wet and miserable and hungry.

The second day came and again she hid herself, wishing she dared go to one of the little houses and beg for food. She did not dare, for she thought she would rather die than be sent back to the dreadful house she had left.

When she heard voices she was terribly frightened and lay very still in the grain until they had passed. She ate more green wheat and drank water from the canal and finally slept from exhaustion. That third night she was so tired and weak, and kept calling softly for her father to come and lead her home. She began to be afraid of the shadows. Perhaps there were evil spirits in the grain fields waiting to sieze her. She dared not go near a tree for fear of a bad spirit and once she was sure that one came down from the moon and grasped her shoulder. She ran on, not daring to look at the moon and stars for fear they would see her and tell her enemies where she was. When it was light again she resolved to be brave and ask at some house for food—surely she had come a long way and must be near home. There were dancing spots of color before her eyes. She came up to a cottage door, thinking she would knock softly and ask for food. But just as she was about to knock she heard a noise—the tramp of a horse's feet in the distance. She turned and ran and again hid in the fields all day. On the fourth night she could hardly stagger along, but she managed some way to get on, believing that she was at last on the road toward home. In the morning she found herself in a village, the very one near her own home. The farmers were all bringing in their produce to market, and Tshe Faung was so encouraged by the familiar sights that she struggled on until she reached the door of her own dear home. She ran in and fell into her father's arms. She had been four nights on the road, three long days in hiding without proper food. A long fever followed. Tshe Faung was delirious, begging constantly for a little food and for her father and her own home. When the delirium and fever left her, such a pathetic, weak, wasted little figure, her father resolved that she should not be forced to pay the penalty of his sin in betrothing her when she was so young. He had received a sum of dowry money which he took back to the family, hoping for Tshe Faung's release. The family would not hear of a release and demanded Tshe Faung's immediate return.

Returning home the father took his daughter and went with her to Shanghai, where he placed her secretly in a mission school. Then began a series of persecutions by the enraged family which have never ceased to this day. They carried their case to the nearest Mandarin, who decided that the marriage should be postponed for five years, until the groom was eighteen. He also gave it as his decision that the girl should be allowed to live in her own home with her parents. The boy's family appealed to a higher official, who sustained the first decision.

In the meantime Tshe Faung spent three years in school, where she learned to know her Heavenly Father. After this we took her into our Margaret Williamson Hospital, where she has become a nurse. She loves children, and is such a faithful worker. She is a favorite with everyone. But there is a shadow over her life and a haunting fear. When her fiance became eighteen he demanded his bride. Tshe Faung had become a Christian and refused to abide by her father's contract

A FAMOUS COUNTRY CHURCH.

"The Country Gentleman," a farmers' paper of large circulation, gives the Methodist Protestant Church some gratuitous advertising in its issue of April 3, 1920. It has a lengthy illustrated article concerning the Methodist Protestant Church in Kasbeer, Ill., which has become an important center of community work. Its pastor is Rev. Frederic Baylis. This man at our last General Conference told the story of his life in a lecture entitled "From the Bread Line to the Pulpit." He was then spoken of as an evangelist, and the pastor of Grace Church made partial arrangement for his coming to Greensboro for evangelistic work, but the work in Illinois held him back. Since that time interest in his church work has developed wonderfully.

We expect to reprint the "Country Gentleman"'s article in our next issue.

The case of Mr. Baylis is instructive in several ways. It shows the disposition of the Methodist Protestant Church to give opportunity to merit irrespective of former demerit. The fact that Mr. Baylis was once a gutter drunkard did not close the door of opportunity against him in our church. We think our church is open as few churches are to the man who has only his purpose to do well to recommend him.

Again, the Kasbeer case shows that opportunity for great service may exist where little suspected. Kasbeer was but a little place when Baylis went there. He has "put it on the map," making it a center for people for miles around.

In view of such a work as Mr. Baylis has done, let no young man say there is no opportunity for him.

A FEW WORDS FROM BROTHER CECIL.

The editor visited Rev. C. A. Cecil at his home in High Point last Sunday afternoon. We found Bro. A. H. Evans and family and others just leaving. They had brought for the Shiloh people expressions of sympathy and a bouquet of beautiful flowers to add cheer to the sick-room. We found Bro. Cecil in bed, but able to sit up part of the time. His trouble seems to be seated in the digestive tract causing great pain at times. This trouble tends to reduce flesh and strength. However his eyes look strong and his complexion is good. He had a similar trouble twelve years ago, and we hope he will escape from this as he did from that though in the nature of the case it will take some time. We hope he will be well enough to attend General Conference. He says he is trying as hard as he can to get well.

He asked us to express his appreciation of substantial contributions from Mr. and Mrs. Jeff Berrier, Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Yokley, and Mr. R. E. Leonard, Jr., and of letters and cards received from various members of his charge. He also asked us to request the people of his charge to co-operate with his temporary substitute, Bro. T. F. McCulloch, and help to carry on the work of the church just as though the pastor were present.

Let Brother and Sister Cecil have the earnest prayers of the people, that they may be and may they be conscious of the divine pres-and may hey be conscious of the divine presence and favor, and may this more than compensate them for what they must temporarily endure of affliction.

Rebuked by a Child. She was a woman of some years and should have had better sense, but she had been taking part in one of the dances that frequently disgrace the O'Henry Hotel in this city, and had gone to a drug store to cool off. She was sitting at a table eating ice cream. The four-year-old son of the druggist, a very observant little boy, walked up to her and said in a low tone of voice:

"You forgot to dress."

Had she been prudent, she would have tried to divert the child's attention but she pretended not to hear. Whereupon the boy shouted out so that everybody in the store could hear:

"You forgot to dress."

Rev. W. C. Kennett in speaking of selling his house in Liberty, spoke of it not as a question of how much he could get, but how much his conscience would let him accept. He is no profiteer.

—The venerable Charles Case died this week, aged 86 years. He was the "grand old man" of Oak Ridge community universally esteemed for his excellence of character. Two of his daughters married Rev. W. A. Bunch and Rev. J. W. Frank. We believe another married Rev. Mr. Craven.

—Rev. W. C. Kennett has decided to move from Liberty to Greensboro. This he does at the request of his son and daughter living in Greensboro. He dislikes to give up his Sunday school class in Liberty Methodist Protestant church—that is his greatest objection to moving. We understand that he has bargained for a cottage near the end of Asheboro street car line. We will be glad to have him for a neighbor. He has had some eighty-odd summers and very few winters. His temper is still mild and sweet.

—Bro. Hightfill reports three accessions to the church at Denton last Sunday night.

—Rev. H. F. Fogleman passed through Greensboro Tuesday. He was on his way to attend the commencement of the Pleasant Garden High School. His sister, Miss Essie Fogleman, and Miss Pearl Trogdon, both of our Tabernacle church, are among the graduates. He reports that religious life of Reidsville have been quickened by the recent Culpepper revival, and that his work is moving along nicely. Seven new members were added Sunday night and the attendance is on the increase. The church building is not going as fast as he would like, but this is not from want of money or enthusiasm on the part of the people, but because of scarcity of material, etc.

—Mr. Walter Glass and Miss Lilian Sharpe, of Moriah church, were married last night. The wedding took place in the church, and was witnessed by many friends of the young people, who are among the most worthy of the community.

SOME MISTAKES.

We do not mean to be hypercritical, nor captious, in calling attention to a few mistakes that seem to be inexcusable in those filling the place of teachers of the word of God. The first is misreading the Scriptures and commenting thereon, and, of course, drawing wrong conclusions. We heard an ordained preacher and pastor, some years ago, in reading the 42nd Psalm, in the 4th verse, where the word "holy day" occurs, he read "holiday," and then based an argument in defense of holidays and amusements for the young people on the word in question. A few years later we heard another ordained preacher read the same psalm, making the same mistake, reading holiday for holy day, but in his comments instead of using this in defense of holidays, &c., he took occasion from it to condemn holidays and worldly amusements in general. It seems to the writer that such mistakes are inexcusable in those assuming to be teachers of the word.

We heard one of these same men, in reading the word, call special attention to a word printed in italics, that it was to be specially noticed and emphasized, showing him to be ignorant of the fact that the italics in our English Bible are to indicate that there is no word or words in the original corresponding to the words in italics. The italics being supplied for the sake of euphony or clearness.

Not long since we heard another preacher in commenting on John 4: 3, 4, on the words, "And he must needs go through Samaria," say that Jesus had a special need to go throu' Samaria to meet the woman at the well and lead her into the light. That somebody had said that Jesus went 75 or 100 miles out of his way just to do this great work. It was quite evident that he did not know the meaning of the word "needs," confusing it with the word "need"—saying he had a special "need" to go through Samaria—and that we ought to do likewise—go out of our way to save sinners, when, if he had consulted his dictionary, he would have seen that "needs" means "Of necessity; necessarily; indispensably," i. e., unavoidably. There was no other way for Jesus to go to Galilee, unless he crossed the Jordan, or took shipping on the Mediterranean. Instead of Jesus going 75 or 100 miles out of his way, he went the most direct way, as flying machines had not been invented. So much for some explanations of the Bible that do not explain.
